3. "Forbidden of the Holy Ghost." "The Spirit suffered them not." These statements indicate that in some unmistakable way the mind of the Spirit was revealed to Paul and his two traveling companions, Silas and Timothy. This exercise of the Holy Spirit's authority was made known to these men either by strong, unshakable impressions, wrought in their minds, or by the placing of some plain, providential barriers, or hindrances, in the way to the forbidden fields of service. Perhaps both methods were used.

4. At Troas, a seaport opposite the Macedonian coast of Europe, the reason for the Holy Spirit's restrictions became evident. Paul was called to preach the gospel upon another continent. In a vision a man of Macedonia appealed to Paul for help. This was understood to be the call of God to labor in that field.

5. Here Luke, the beloved physician, and the author of the Acts of the Apostles, joined the company. It is thought by some that Dr. Luke was a resident of Macedonia and that he was the man that Paul saw in the vision. He now became Paul's companion in most of his journeys until his career ended at Rome.

6. Philippi, the chief city of Macedonia and a Roman colony, was the first town of Europe to receive the gospel, and Lydia was the first convert.

7. There were likely very few Jews in Philippi, not enough to have a synagogue. A few women were accustomed to worship God upon the river bank on the Sabbath, that is, the seventh day Sabbath. Paul and his company attended these open-air prayer services. Upon invitation he preached to this company of praying women.

8. Lydia's conversion bore immediate fruit. 1. She was obedient to the faith in that "she attended to the things which were spoken by Paul." 2. She joined the church by undergoing the ordinance of baptism. 3. She persuaded her children or household inmates, also to accept Christ and join the church. 4. She constrained Paul and his three companions to be her guests during their stay in Philippi.

Practical Points.

1. God the Father planned salvation, God the Son purchased salvation, God the Holy Spirit dispenses salvation. These three in One,—Sovereign, Agent, and Administrator of redemption—are working together to save and uplift the fallen race.

2. There are quite a number of departments in the Holy Spirit's administration of salvation. He is Teacher—"shall teach you all things," Mentor—"bring all things to your remembrance," Comforter—"walking. . . in the comfort of the Holy Ghost," Convictor—"will reprove the world of sin," Regenerator—"born of the Spirit," Witness—"shall testify of me," Guide—"will guide you into all truth," Prophet—"will shew you things to come," Fruitbearer—"the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance," Sanctifier—"God hath. . . chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth, and personal Director—"for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

3. Prayer is the most essential part of public worship. Such service is profitable to the extent that it is characterized by earnest, prevailing prayer. "And all things, whatever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."

4. Prayerlessness is the common cause of spiritual poverty. "Ye have not because ye ask not."

5. Selfish, injudicious, and faithless prayers are little better, if any, than no praying at all. "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts."

6. Prayer is one of the fundamental laws of the Kingdom of God, and therefore one of the delightful duties of man.

"Prayer is appointed to convey The blessings God designs to give."

7. Prayerlessness is a great sin against God and fellow mankind. "God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you." 1 Sam. 12:23.

—The Tobacco Record publishes a lengthy article signed, "A Well-wisher of the Tobacco Trade," in which is attacked the practice of many tobacco dealers in permitting small gambling in their place of business, saying it is arousing the mothers of communities to a state of mind that is not good for the tobacco business; that there should be no shaded back-rooms, no games of chance, no pandering to petty ugliness in the retail cigar store. The same writer says that even habitual tobacco users "may be persuaded to make the manufacture and sale of tobacco unlawful, if they can be convinced that cigar stores in which boys can play games of chance and form habits that will lead to crimes that later may land them in jail."

"I AM NOT AT LEISURE."

I have read of one that presented Antipater, the king of Macedonia, with a book that treated of Happiness. He refused it, saying, "I am not at leisure." Many have the Book by them, yea, presented to them by Christ, that treats of everlasting happiness, but they slight the present. "I am not at leisure," say they. They have opportunity of hearing the Word opened on week days, as well as Sabbath days; but they are not at leisure. They have means of knowledge for hearing the same Word; but they are not at leisure. They have many precious seasons of grace, seasons of prayer, seasons of duty; but they are not at leisure. They take leisure to their own work, their worldly work, yea, for idle conversation; but they have no leisure for God's work, their soul's work, eternal work! Reader, have you leisure to be saved? or, are you willing to continue in the bustle of the world, neglect salvation, and be lost?—Ralph Erskine.

Saxapahaw.—Brother Isely filled his appointment here the second Sunday evening. His subject was, "The Neglected Vineyard." He brought us a good message as usual.

Our revival meeting began the second Sunday evening in July and continued about two weeks. Dr. and Mrs. A. G. Dixon were the pulpit help the first week. They did some good preaching. The Men's Federation from Graham came the last week of the meeting. These people did some good work. I do not know the number of conversions. Seventeen united with the M. P. Church. The Men's Federation held service at the church Sunday evening. This federation was organized since our revival meeting.

..Kistlers Church, Cleveland Ct.—Our meeting embraced the first Sunday in August. Brother Bingham was pulpit help. He did good preaching. His sermons were plain and helpful. We were glad to have him with us because of his consecrated life. We are proud of our boy preachers. We had a good meeting. The interest was good from the beginning to the close. There were about 25 converted or reclaimed. We think there was untold good done. We feel sure that as a church we are better prepared to go forward in the discharge of our duties and do the work that is assigned to us with the help of our good pastor and by trusting the Lord we will be able to go forward in the discharge of our duties in a way that will be well pleasing in His sight. CHRIST AND BIBLICAL CRITICISM.

Does Biblical criticism recognize the authority of Christ? For a while it did. It dealt with the Old Testament harshly. It had little respect for Paul's writings; it said, turning away from Paul and the other New Testament Epistles, "Back to Christ," and assumed to subvert everything to him. But now the Higher Criticism is higher than Christ—frankly and outspokenly so. Professor George Jackson is quoted as follows:—"It is now admitted on all hands—the few dissenting voices do but emphasize the general consent—that Christ's authority cannot be invoked to invalidate the findings of modern Biblical criticism; neither do we explain his language as an accommodation to the ignorance of his contemporaries. We must maintain the limitations of the knowledge of Jesus in the interests of a true Christology and of intellectual liberty." Commenting on this, R. B. Jones, of Wales, the new president of the Bible Witness Union of Great Britain, quotes the old and true Bible expositor, Professor Franz Delitzsch, who long ago said to his students: "Young gentlemen, the battle is now raging round the Old Testament. Soon it will pass into the New Testament field—it is already beginning. Finally, it will pass forward to the citadel of your faith—the Person of Jesus Christ. There the last struggle will occur." Professor Jackson's blasphemous position is logical. When once we begin to give the lie to the written word of God, we must, if we are consistent, go on and give the lie to the Living Word, Christ Jesus Himself. This is the end of which God forewarned, that "for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie." May we be saved from this, and "believe all that the prophets have spoken," and "all things . . . which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms concerning me (that is, Christ)."—Sunday School Times.

THE HOME OF THE SOUL—WHERE?

There are but two homes for the soul, one is heaven, the other hell. Your conscience tells you which would be your home, were you to die tonight. There are those, to be sure, who claim that there is no such place as hell. They even laugh at the minister who warns against this terrible place. Their real objection is not to the preacher, but to the Bible. The New Testament tells us there was a man who "lifted up his eyes, being in torment."

HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

Catalogue and application blank will be forwarded upon application. Those desiring further information should address The President, High Point College, High Point, N. C.

If eternal punishment is not true, then the Bible is untrue and altogether unworthy of belief. He who rejects the fact of hell must likewise reject the fact of heaven, and to reject these is to discredit Christ and reject the Scriptures. Some time since a scoffer said to me, "In the course of time, the fires of hell would have to burn out." I reminded him that we had positive proof of the fact that Vesuvius had been burning for about two thousand years, and that the probability was much longer. And just here I offer it as my deliberate opinion that I never knew a man who did not believe in hell, who was not traveling the path that led there. It is more or less natural for one whose life logically leads to eternal punishment to deny eternal punishment.—J. W. Porter, D. D.

SECOND TIMOTHY 2:15.

When Paul wrote his last letter—that to his son in the faith, Timothy—he gave him some splendid suggestions. One of them was in this verse:

"Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth."

Which word is the most important in that sentence? Is it study, or approved, or God, or ashamed, or workman, or handling aright? Isn't it the first? You must study to be approved unto God, you must study to be a workman that needs not to be ashamed, you must study to be able to handle aright the word of truth.

UNEXPECTED INTERRUPTIONS.

Do they ever come to you? We have a great number of them. We make our program for the day and are working hopefully for its complete carrying out when suddenly something happens to interfere. It may be the breaking down of a machine. It may be the coming of a visitor that I am glad to see. It may be a call to go somewhere to do some service for somebody. It may be any one of a number of other things. The effect of them singly and combined is to make impossible the completion of the day's program.

But what of that? My program was arbitrarily made. I did not know of the needs of other people pressing for my attention. I simply considered my known engagements and did not allow any time for new engagements that the life and movements of the day would bring me and impose upon me.

We have no right to make arbitrary programs. We have no right to live to ourselves. Every one of us is to look not simply on his own affairs but also on the affairs of others. No one of us can truly say, My time belongs to me, I can do what I please with it. Our programs should be made subject to constant revision as the events of the day require.

If any one insists on taking too much of our time, politely excuse yourself by reminding him that you must be about your Father's business.

—Mrs. Trolinger, mother of Rev. J. L. Trolinger, of Albemarle, died of paralysis a few days ago. She lived near Greensboro. He and the others bereft will have the sympathy of many friends.

—Rev. George L. Curry is preaching for Bro. Burgess this week at Moriah church. Bro. Manning, of the M. E. Church, South, preached the afternoon service on Sunday, the pastor having preached at eleven o'clock.

—Calvary church people were pleased to have Perry Lee Gibbs preach to them last Sunday night. Brother Gibbs is a student at Wake Forest College, working his way through, and expects to go to our Seminary before he enters the ministry regularly. He is a young man of good promise, and we are glad to look forward to his coming into our Conference.

—The new rally day program is very neat and pretty with its two-color cover page. We congratulate Secretary Stephenson. It will be just a pleasure to hold rally day with such a program to guide. It has songs with musical notes, recitations, dialogues, greetings, etc. It also has pictures of some of our educational institutions, including High Point College. Let us have many observances of rally day by our North Carolina conference churches. Parts of Virginia and South Carolina are included in the North Carolina District.

Mr. John McNair Pate was a patient in the institution eight years ago. He had been entirely cured and was one of the most successful young business men in his community. His accidental death last year brought grief to his host of friends throughout the State.

TIRED OF EVOLUTION.

A good sister writes that she is tired of hearing about evolution. She has our sympathy. We are tired of much that we hear on the subject. If some man would produce an argument that proves or disproves evolution we would gladly read it and publish it. When atheists argue for evolution, we know what their object is. They are trying to escape from a painful sense of responsibility to God. When Christians argue for evolution, telling how greatly it has blessed their souls, we are disposed to class them with men who give glowing testimonials in favor of some worthless nostrum advertised in the papers which they have been induced to take into their stomachs and then because of some temporary feeling produced have imagined they were greatly bettered.

—The Eastern Conference of the North Carolina Lutheran Synod will be held at Melancthon Lutheran Church, Liberty, N. C., on Sept. 1st and 2nd. Twenty or more ministers are expected and many delegates and visitors. The public are invited. In the afternoon of Tuesday Sunday school work will be discussed by Prof. Daniel Holt, John A. Kellenberg, and Rev. S. White Rhynes. Then on Wednesday there will be a special historical session beginning at ten o'clock. The speakers in this meeting will be Dr. W. T. Whitsett and Rev. F. L. Conrad.

OUR SAVIOR.

B. F. M. Sours.

Our Jesus came down on an errand of love
To the cold, weary world from the glory above;
He came, Man of Sorrows, to hunger and cold,
To gather the wandering lambs to the Fold.

He came to this world in the form of a child,
Humble and tender, and gentle and mild;
To a toiler he grew, of compassionate voice,
And the weary and careworn have made him their choice.

Then baptism, trial, and throngs at his feet,
Till scarcely for rest could he find a retreat:
Then his power, and his miracles,—O they refuse

Their Prince and their Savior! O desolate Jews!

They crucified him! But he rose, and on high,
As our Shepherd, our King, is enthroned in the sky;

All he bore,—all the sorrow, the shame, want and cold,

To gather my soul, and yours, friend, to the Fold.

He reigns! And the purified, washed in his blood,

Arrayed in white robes, and passed over the flood,

Give him all the glory, and honor, and raise,
With our hearts—and forever—love's anthem of praise.

NOTICE.

The annual Home-Coming Day will be held at Speight's Chapel, Whitakers Charge, the first Sunday in September at 11 o'clock. Dr. C. L. Whitaker will deliver the address.

The special meeting will begin on that day also. There will be two services. Everybody cordially invited. Come and bring a basket.

NOTICE TO PASTORS.

Return postal cards of delegate's credentials will be mailed next week. I have waited until the third quarterly conferences are about over to mail the cards, so I would be sure of getting them back. No card is being sent for the conference president. I shall send him a list of the delegates in ample time for him to appoint the committee.

I shall indicate on the cards the amount due from charges for conference journals. Please look for this, and if your charge owes anything, please let me have it. It took a good deal of my time last conference to run down preachers who owed for journals. I don't want to have to do it again this year.

Reports blanks will be sent out about the first of October. Be on the lookout for them.

C. W. Bates, Secretary.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?

By Rev. Charles R. Brown.

Here were three men busily engaged with mallet and chisel in a stone quarry. There came a man who had a head on his shoulders and two good eyes in it. He said to the first man, "What are you doing?" The man replied, "I am working here for five dollars a day." He passed on to the second and said, "What are you doing?" The man replied, "I am cutting stone." He passed on to the third—"What are you doing?" This man also had a head on his shoulders—he looked up and said, "I am building a cathedral."

You may, if you choose, spend all your years working for so many dollars a day, or for so many thousand a year, making a living—it may be a good living—but never making a life. You may, if you choose, work all your life doing something as honest and as monotonous as cutting stone. You may, if you choose, build cathedrals. And cathedrals, as we all know, are not always built of stone. The cathedral is a meeting place, a place where the divine and the human meet and touch and are mutually enriched. There are cathedrals which are buildings of God, houses not made with hands, habitations of the Spirit, eternal in the heavens. Let each man by the way he shapes up his own philosophy of life and orders his action, build for himself a cathedral and dwell in it forevermore!

TOBACCO EXPOSITION EXPOSED.

Will H. Brown.

If a member of the No-Tobacco League should criticise the National Exposition held in New York last February as severely as the tobacco men themselves have done he would undoubtedly be called prejudiced. To begin with, the exposition fell short of expectations. Before it came off, the Tobacco Leaf warned friends of the weed in these words: "We in the tobacco industry know that the trade is constantly on trial before public opinion. We know that legislatively and hygienically it is always walking on thin ice."

After the exposition the same publication said that tobacco men and their families comprised over fifty per cent. of the attendance, adding: "As an industrial exposition it fell far short of the mark." Then the statement is made that there were less than twenty different firms represented in the tobacco exhibits—six cigar manufacturers, three cigarette manufacturers, five leaf tobacco and two pipe manufacturers. The remainder of the exhibits were confined to the allied industries. So small was the exhibit, compared with what had been anticipated, that "less than two-thirds of the floor space was occupied, and the exhibits congregated within the confines of the space required."

A reader of the same paper begins a letter to the editor, relative to the exposition, as follows: "I went to the tobacco show prepared to be agreeably surprised. I came away ashamed, disgusted."

Verily the Tobacco Leaf editor told the truth when he said: "the tobacco trade is always walking on thin ice." Some day the ice will break.

—WHY DO YOU GO TO CHURCH?

ON SOLID GROUND.

By Rev. Luther K. Long.

On the first page of the July 23rd issue, the Editor of the Herald made a very wise and discriminating statement. I think that neither he nor any reader who accepts it in good faith will ever have occasion to modify it. Here is the statement:

"No one should make the mistake of supposing that in order to find the way of salvation in the Bible he is compelled to believe that Eve was literally made out of Adam's rib, or that Jonah was really swallowed by a great fish in whose stomach he lived for three days."

By this statement my good friend shows his recognition of a great fundamental fact concerning the Bible—which fact is, The Bible was given to show us how to go to heaven, not to tell us how God made woman or to enlighten people concerning the way of a great fish with a man.

This statement also brings to the front the fact that if we would understand the Bible it is necessary to use the approved methods of literary criticism. That is to say: As the Bible is literature, and contains all sorts of literary forms, the reader needs to question, concerning any particular passage, as to whether it is poetry or prose, fact or fiction, parable or true incident, legend or history.

Besides the cases of Eve and the rib, and of Jonah and the great fish, there are many others—and some of them quite puzzling. Because of the perplexities that arise I do not wonder that some persons become confused. Thinking it must all be true or none of it is true, they make what seems to them a safe and sane venture of faith, and rest in the belief that it is all literally true.

One of the foremost Christian scholars and preachers in this country was on a train journeying to a great university where he was to preach the following day. He read from a small pocket Bible the lesson he was intending to use. As he put the book back into his pocket, the working man who shared the seat with him said courteously, "Do you believe it all?"

"No," replied the preacher. "I do not believe it all. I believe all that is true."

"How can you tell," asked the working man, "what is true and what is not?"

"By the use of my moral judgment," the preacher answered, "and by the test of experience."

Then came from his seat-mate a question which seems to some people to require an unqualified negative. "Have we any right to believe any part of it unless we believe all of it?"

Dr. Charles R. Brown was the preacher, and we will let him go on. Dr. Brown tells us: "I assured him that in my judgment we had that right; that indeed the only possible attitude for a thoughtful mind was one of wise discrimination; that we are expressly told in the Bible to study to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." The obligation is laid upon us to separate that which is merely local and temporary in the Bible from that which is universal and abiding, that which is incidental from that which is vital and essential. Then we talked together until we reached our destination about the truth or falsity of the teachings of the Bible."

Dr. Brown in an enlightening lecture on "The Use of the Bible," speaking on the truth of the Bible, has these wise and convincing things to say:

"Here is the vital question today—Do the teachings of the Bible, not as judged by some insignificant detail in statement or by some stray reference caught out of its setting, but as judged by the main conclusions to which they bring us, afford us those conceptions of God, of man, of duty, of destiny, which reason and conscience may accept as valid beyond any other competing conceptions? Do the teachings of the Bible afford us helpful guidance when we would think upon the obligations and high privileges of human life at its best? Does the Bible prove itself 'a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path' when subjected to the pragmatic test by those who are seeking to walk in those ways of thought, feeling and purpose which tend upward? In a word, do the teachings of this book make men wise unto salvation and furnish them thoroughly for all good work? If the Bible does this in satisfying measure, then its teachings are true,—true to life, true to our deepest needs, true to our highest aspirations, true in the sense that they get us where we ought to go."

I am quite sure that the Editor of the Herald—along with Dr. Brown—has his feet on the solid rock. Jesus himself tried everything by the use of his moral judgment, and by the test of experience. So should we. Truth is truth to us only when it reaches us, awakens us, and commands our moral allegiance. At times the followers of Christ may stumble, but if they are morally honest their stumbling is in the right direction.

LANDMARKS AND PIONEERS.

Earliest Information about North Carolina.

It must always be interesting to recall the first knowledge that was obtained by white people about this particular part of our country. All intelligent people in Europe were awake to the news of the New World soon after its discovery in 1492 by Columbus. As the years passed more definite information was secured through various agencies. We can note only a few: Sir Walter Raleigh's expedition of 1584; John Lawson's travels in 1700; various explorers and expeditions at different early dates, and more especially for this part of central North Carolina, the results following the settlement of Jamestown, Va., in 1607. The question as to why the people of the Lutheran, Reformed, and Moravian faiths came into central North Carolina is in part answered when we learn how they secured information of this particular territory. Lutheran and Reformed people poured into this Alamance-Guilford-Randolph section from 1720 to 1770, and during this fifty-year period thousands came for permanent settlement. Moravians came in 1753 and in large numbers in the years after, making settlements in adjoining Forsyth county to the west. How did all these people learn of this favored section? Certainly they did not come blindly without any previous knowledge of their destination. All these—Reformed, Lutheran, and Moravian—were originally from the same section of Europe; closely related by habits, kinship, occupations, and religious teachings and ideals. The information possessed by one branch was the common property of all. These early North Carolina settlers came in most part from that region known as "The Palatinate" which country lay on both sides of the Rhine river, sections now belonging to Bavaria and Baden. As loyal Protestants they had suffered terrible persecutions. In 1622 the chief Palatinate city, Heidelberg, was burned by General Tilly, and the immense university library robbed of its treasures. Their only sin was their Protestantism. If we may believe the great historian, Seckendorf, the greater number of Palatines were Lutherans. From such a stock as this came the North Carolina settlements of the Lutheran, the Reformed, and the Moravian people. To remain in Europe and believe in the Augsburg or the Heidelberg confessions of faith was simply to court a violent death. No wonder, then that all information about the advantages of the New World was eagerly desired. Some of these sources we know well; let us now learn about one of whom we seldom hear, but who by the knowledge he spread of this region exerted much influence in determining the trend of the earlier settlements.

John Lederer in North Carolina, 1669-1670.

On Dec. 19, 1607, the vessel, Susan Constant, Commanded by Captain Christopher Newport, a craft of one hundred tons burden, sailed from England, and on May 13, 1607, landed at Point Comfort, pushed on forty miles up the river which they named the James after King James, and laid the foundation for the first permanent English settlement in the New World at Jamestown, Va. Later Capt. John Smith was made president of the colony, and did much to make it a success. In 1608, Capt. Smith made a map after exuloration, wrote a short account of the country, and sent them to England. Capt. Smith was followed in his rule of the colony by Lord Delaware, by Sir Thomas Dale, and in 1649 after the execution of King Charles I. Sir William Berkley was made governor of Virginia.

John Lederer, a Lutheran from the Palatinate, had come into the colony about 1660. He was a good Latin scholar, and well posted for his day on geographical matters. He soon attracted attention by his ability, and Governor Berkley selected him to lead an expedition for further explorations. Three expeditions were sent out during 1669-1670 to explore the regions that lay south and west of the James river. Dr. Hawks, the historian, tells us: "Berkley commissioned Lederer to make explorations, and three several expeditions were made. The first, from the head of York river due west; the second from the falls of the James west and southwest, which bro't him into Carolina; the third from the falls of the Rappahannock westward towards the mountains." He passed through North Carolina, and into South Carolina as far south as the Santee river. At this time there were two small colonies in eastern North Carolina, one on Albemarle sound, the other on Clarendon (now Cape Fear) river. No whites were in South Carolina. Lederer's journal of his travels written in Latin was translated by Sir William Talbot, Governor of Maryland, who praises the literary ability of Lederer. Gov. Talbot published Lederer's journal of his explorations. Lederer's start is thus described by himself in his journal: "The 20th of May, 1670, one Maj. Harris and myself, with twenty Christian horse (horsemen) and five Indians marched from the falls of the James river in Virginia towards the Monakins, and on the 22nd we were welcomed by them with volleys of shot. . . . Here inquiring of them the way to the mountains, an ancient man described with a staff two paths on the ground. . . . The 3rd of June we came to the south branch of the James river."

Space forbids further quotation from this most interesting description of conditions in 1670.

John Lederer's explorations in 1669-1670 when known through his journal which as stated was published by Sir William Talbot after translation from the Latin in which it was written must have exerted great influence upon those back in Europe who were looking and longing for a home in the New World. The fine climate, the wonderful opportunities, and the hope of greater religious freedom, turned many eyes in this direction, and in 1680, only ten years later, a tide of emigration to America began which during the decades following drew tens of thousands to these shores from the very region from which John Lederer himself had come. Beyond doubt, Lederer's journal was the prime cause for hundreds of Lutherans, Reformed, and Moravian people turning their eyes to that land "south and southwest of the James river" that we now know as Piedmont North Carolina. True history seeks for causes and effects, and it seems strange that so few historians even mention such men as John Lederer, Louis Mitchell, John Lawson, Colonel William Byrd, and others who wrote journals of exploration and accounts of conditions as they found them in this Western World in the earlier days. These early accounts were powerful in their effect in turning the attention of home-seekers to the regions described. Nothing could be more convincing than the words of an eye witness, and Lederer's account earned great weight for this reason. We have no doubt that many a man sitting by his Rhine river fireside hundreds and hundreds of miles away was fired with the desire and the determination to find his permanent home in Piedmont Carolina by the glowing accounts of some of these earliest explorers. The turmoils of European governments, especially the evils outgrowing from the Thirty Years' War (1618-1648) forced sober-thinking men to look for more desirable homes. Many a home was finally established on the Yadkin, the Catawba, the Haw, and the Eno, because of the information spread by John Lederer and others who like him braved a trip into new and hitherto unexplored territories.

We can never know just how much influence was exerted by the reports of these earliest explorers, but we do know that settlements rapidly followed. Without going into particulars we may mention settlements as follows: The Dutch Lutherans on James Island, South Carolina, in 1674; the Palatinate colony at Newbern, N. C., in 1710; the Swiss at Purysburg, S. C., in 1732, and at Orangeburg, S. C., in 1735, followed by the Saxo-Gotha settlement in Lexington county, S. C., in 1737. Then came many others, among them the Lutheran colony in Abbeville county, S. C., in 1763-64. While these Lutherans were coming in such numbers, the Reformed people were also pouring in, and the Moravians at Savannah in the years between 1735 and 1740, and then that splendid Moravian effort at Wachovia (now Salem, N. C.) in Forsyth county in 1753, after the purchase by Bishop August Gottlieb Spangenberg of nearly one hundred thousand acres of land, from Lord Granville's part of the interest he held in the lands owned by the "Lords Proprietors of the Carolinas."

When this exploring party consisting of Bishop Spangenberg, Lord Granville's surveyor, William Churton, and others came through what is now Alamance and Guilford counties in 1752 seeking desirable location for the Moravian colony they found what is now Alamance and Guilford counties, or rather what is now located between Greensboro and Hillsboro already occupied by the homes of Lutheran and Reformed settlers who were still pouring into this section by the hundreds every year. Bishop Spangenberg records in his journal on Sept. 25, 1752, this observation:—"Having crossed the length and breadth of North Carolina we have found that towards the mountains (now Alamance, Guilford, etc.) many families are moving in from Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and even New England; in this year alone more than four hundred families have come with horse, wagon, and cattle. Among them sturdy farmers and skilled men and we hope they will greatly help Carolina."

Interesting Events in Local History.

The student of history can find much to reward his efforts in the particular locality in and around this church. This St. Paul's Lutheran Church, located here in southern Alamance Co., N. C., was long known as "Grave's Church" because of the original ownership of lands on which it is located. Although the church now possesses only eight acres of land, originally there were sixty acres in the church tract. The early settlers gathered for worship on or near these grounds many years before they formed a church organization. They were directed in their worship by devout and consecrated men and women of their own number, and by occasional visiting mission preachers and workers of their own and other denominations. The first formal organization took place in 1773.

We forget too easily our debt to the past. "The pyramids themselves, dotting with age, have forgotten the names of their founders." What we term the present is only an outgrowth of the past. Yonder splendid ancient rock wall, surrounding St. Paul's Cemetery and enclosing a space of near two acres, is silent witness to the great and patient industry of those who slumber within its sacred enclosure. Thousands of dollars would not today equal or replace this wall, still it was

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS

Among the Churches.

After organizing a Methodist Protestant church near Chase City, Va. on Sunday August 16th, I drove to Wesley's Chapel and remained there in a meeting with Rev. H. L. Powell for four days. It was a good meeting, and will, we think, mean much to the kingdom in that community. The people attended well, and the Christian people had a mind to work, but there were only a few conversions. We are hoping that several will unite with the church at Wesley's within the next few weeks. They are a splendid people, and can have a very strong Methodist Protestant church there if all their forces will unite to that end. We spent Friday night very pleasantly with Bro. Powell and his interesting family.

Spring Church.

Saturday evening August 22rd wife and I drove to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Robinson near Spring church and found a royal welcome. Then on Sunday morning we went to Spring church where great crowds of people gather on the fourth Sunday in each August.

Dr. F. R. Harris was present and presented the College, and took a $5.00 cash offering. Several responded.

It was my privilege to preach to this splendid audience at the morning hour and to hear Dr. J. D. Williams in the afternoon. He preached a great sermon, as he always does. Pastor Thompson seemed assured of a good meeting because of the attitude of the people toward the meeting. We trust that he and they will not be disappointed. Rev. D. A. Fishel and Rev. H. L. Powell were in the congregation.

Spring Valley.

The Sunday evening hour found us worshipping with our people at Spring Valley church on Vance Charge. Pastor Chambliss had called a meeting for that hour to lay plans to enlarge the church rooms, and to build Sunday school rooms. They appointed a building committee and also a soliciting committee to lay plans for enlarging the plant. The membership here is not large, but they are very progressive.

We spent the night in the home of Mrs. Lucy Baskett, a longtime friend.

The people on all three of these fields have abundant crops, for which I am sure they are profoundly grateful.

The Budgets.

Somehow the budgets are being paid surprisingly slow. Church extension work, the superannuates, missions, and Christian education are all dependent upon the budgets. What we do this year must be done speedily because about seventy days will bring us to conference.

Appointments.

August 28 to 30—Democrat charge, and Mt. Zion on Weaverville.
Sept. 6 to 10 Philodelphia on Greenville.
Sept. 13th—Creswell.
Sept. 20th—Asheboro.
Sept. 27th to Oct. 1st—Union Grove.
Oct. 3 and 4—Connelly Springs.
Oct. 10 and 11—Yarborough.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

Union Grove, Orange Ct.—We are still in existence, have a fairly good Sunday school, could have great deal better if more would attend; have the Auman-Minnis Mission band which meets every third Sunday after Sunday school.

Death has been in our community. On July 6th Mr. Neal Pearson, one of our community, a Baptist but attended our church. The funeral service was held in our church by his pastor, Rev. J. F. McDuffie, and body laid to rest by loved ones in Union Grove cemetery.

On July 23rd the funeral service of Mr. Esau Garrett of Knoxville, Tenn., was held at the home of his mother, Mrs. Sallie Garrett, and body laid to rest at Union Grove. He spent his boyhood and young manhood near Union Grove. He was 47 years of age; was a brother of Mrs. Henry Wright, of our church. May God comfort the sorrowing ones.

We were delighted to have our own Rev. J. D. Williams with us the 1st week in August. He did the preaching which it seemed to us was good as could be and we feel that God will use it for His glory. Our church and community need a revival, but we did not seem to want, or be ready for it. We hope Rev. J. D. will not stay away so long any more. We are always glad to have him come home. Our pastor, Rev. B. M. Williams, is very much liked by all the people and we trust conference will let us keep him. He seems to be the right one for this work, and is always at his post.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Shiloh.—Sunday school report for August 23rd: Attendance—officers and teachers, 5; departments—adults 8, senior 10, junior 9, beginners 21; visitors, 2; total attendance, 55. Collection $1.78; number of chapters read the past week 745.

Service was held Sunday night at eight o'clock; a large crowd attended. We are hoping to have good attendance all the time.

Liberty, Davidson Ct.—We have been wonderfully blest since we reported last. Many good things have come to us. Also some sad.

Our revival meeting began the third Sunday and ran till Thursday night. We had a real good meeting. Yet not so good as we had hoped and prayed for. There were eight conversions and Christians were wonderfully blessed. It seems that almost all tried to do their duty. Rev. John Hulin was the pulpit help. He did wonderful preaching. There was a large attendance, especially at night—more than could be seated.

Our hearts were made sad by the death of Mr. H. L. Johnson. He was able to attend the service Monday morning, gave a wonderful testimony and prayed a good prayer. Before the night service he was stricken unconscious and lived only about 24 hours; funeral service was held at New Hope church Wednesday at 3 P. M., by Rev. C. E. Ridge, pastor, assisted by Rev. J. W. Hulin and Rev. Bro. Routh. He will be missed as a leading member of the church. He was a teacher and class leader of our church. He will be missed as a companion, a loving father and a good neighbor. He leaves a good wife, eight children, ten grandchildren; namely, Rufus, Jonah, John, Jasper, and Nivan Johnson, Mrs. Effie Lyndon, Mrs. Louie Davis, and Miss Grace Johnson. May the dear Lord comfort and bless the bereaved.

Our pastor, Rev. C. E. Ridge, will not be with us the next third Sunday, as that is the time set for the Chapel Hill camp meeting. He will be with us the third Sunday in October. Sunday school at 9 A. M. Prayer meeting on Saturday night before the second and fourth Sunday. The work has been moving along very nicely.

COL. BRYAN AND COL. INGERSOL

We are in receipt of a letter from a consecrated layman in the M. P. Church, in which he refers approvingly to an article on page 2 of the M. P. Herald of Aug. 13, 1925, from the N. C. Christian Advocate, in which Col. Bryan is discussed in a Christian spirit, giving a deserving portraiture of the great Commoner. But in the same letter he refers to another article on page 5 of the same paper, "The Passing of Mr. Bryan." In his letter he has this comment on the second referred-to article: "I wonder how about his respects (writer of article) for 'Bryan'; and I wonder whom he admires most, Bryan or the able stranger that he tries to hold up as a clean object lesson."

As Sam Jones used to say, Them's my sentiments. Perhaps the writer of said article thinks most of Ingersol, as Ingersol was a "modernist."

But the idea of associating the two colonels together unless it be for contrast must be truly repulsive to all true children of God. What could be the object of the writer of said article? Was it to lower Col. Bryan, or to elevate Col. Ingersol? Was it an effort to make an agnostic appear the equal of a Christian? It would seem so. But what of the religious condition of persons who attempt the impossible task, the making bed-fellows of infidels and Christians?

The article under review contains the following: "That they may rest in peace and awaken in the light is our sincere wish for the two Colonels, and for all seekers after truth." . . . but they honestly sought to do good to their fellowmen."

On what ground can we hope or expect an agnostic to awaken in light? "What part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" "What concord hath Christ with Belial?" "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins, and whither I go ye cannot come." "He that believeth not shall be damned." (Condensed.) Col. Ingersol cannot plead ignorance. Brought up in a Christian country, and if i mistake not, in a Christian home, (he was a son of a Presbyterian minister.—Ed. of Herald). He was a rejecter of the Christian religion, divine revelation, and the true God. A rabid blasphemer! In some of his utterances he even defied God. His shocking utterances were enough to make one's hair stand on end, and chills creep up one's spine. Talk about such a man as this "awakening in light"? When a man of indid all he could to destroy their only hope. there can be only "a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." And to say that Col. Ingersol "honestly sought to do good to his fellow men" is far from the truth. He did all he could to restroy their only hope. His hellish influence is at work today. Where is there any good remaining or being perpetuated, by his blasphemous tirades against the Bible, Christianity, and God? Then try to put this prince of blasphemers in the same category with Col. Bryan is an unspeakable insult to all true children of God. And to put Col. Ingersol in the category of truth-seekers is far from the truth. He rejected with bitterness the only source of truth, he turned away from the Truth, Jesus Christ. "Because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie." 2 Thes. 2:10, 11.

The entire category of skeptics, agnostics, infidels, &c., ad infinitum, who prate so much about seeking the truth have rejected the truth and are after some will-o'-the-wisp that they call the truth, or try to believe to be the truth, or wish to be the truth, because the real truth does not suit them—they reject it, and "delusion" comes instead of the truth.

We could say more, but earnestly protest against trying to lower Col. Bryan to the level of Bob Ingersol, or to exalt Ingersol to the heights occupied by Col. Bryan. There's no thing in common between them.

J. F. Dosier,

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

The boy stopped short and glanced about quickly. The pocketbook lay on the pavement where it had fallen when the owner, well known to him as a prominent banker, stepped from his car. The chauffeur had driven on; the banker was ascending his front steps and feeling in his pocket for the latchkey. Would he miss the pocketbook and turn back? But no, the door opened and closed silently, and the man disappeared within the hall, his shadow visible for a moment on the glass. The house was a retired one a little off from the city's main artery; the street for the time was deserted. Hurried boyish footsteps echoed faintly from the house walls, a brown hand reached down, a limousine whirled past, and the echoes faded.

It was Saturday, and the shadows were deepening on the street as seventeen-year old Ralph Horliss entered his home and hurried up to his room. With hands that shook he emptied the contents of the pocketbook on his bed. The money and the checks staggered him. He had never before held so much wealth in his hands. Then, hastily restoring all to the purse, he stood in a chair and hid it far back on a top shelf of the closet that held his few clothes and went down to supper, but with no appetite. The tremendous thing he had done suspended all craving for food.

"What is it, Ralph? Why don't you eat your supper?" The watchful little mother had discerned a mind trouble.

"I'm not hungry, mother. I ate some—some—apples over at Bill Thomas's, and I reckon they took my appetite."

The man at the foot of the table swept a glance over him and resumed his meal in silence. He was the stepfather, and between the boy and him was almost open warfare. A merchant, a hustler, his whole mind on business, he had no thought for children, certainly not for another man's cub. Once, years before, there had been a blow passed; the boy's insolence had angered him beyond control. The boy had never forgiven that insult. It was the only blow he had ever received, and the memory of it was as a coal of fire in his heart. From the day of the tragedy—for such it really was—he had lived with a silent determination to leave home. He would go West—to Alaska or California—or maybe South to Florida, lands familiar through many books and moving pictures—anywhere to get away from Atlanta. Two things only held him back: love for the little mother, whose unhappiness he sensed, and the absence of money to pay railway fares.

It is not common greed, but the thought of liberty that swept away all moral standards at sight of the pocketbook on the pavement.

He said good-night in his mother's room with tears upon his cheeks that moistened her own. Her arm loosened, and she turned his face. "Why, sonny boy, what is it?"

His head went down on her shoulder, and a sob shook her. "I just can't forget he—he hit me. And I know he isn't good to you."

Her hand patted his sturdy shoulder. "O, yes, he is, baby boy; but he is busy and worried at times and forgets."

He broke from her arms and rushed upstairs. The lovelight was in her eyes as he vanished, but she did not follow. It was better that he fought it out alone. He had always been high-spirited, but of a cheery nature, that conquered his dark moods in the end.

But later when he should have been asleep she entered his room and found him lying awake staring at the ceiling. Sitting by him unquestioning, she silently stroked his hand stretched out to hers; then on an impulse she took from her bosom a thin gold watch, detached it from its chain, and slipped it into his hand. "I told you I would give it to you when you were grown, sonny boy, but maybe it will make you happier now. Grandfather gave it to me years and years ago. Keep it safe, dear, and some day maybe you will earn the money and we shall have his portrait painted from the little picture of him inside. It is the only likeness of him left, and you have always loved it. He was the bravest man in Jackson's army, they say, and General Lee made him captain and shook hands with him in front of the whole staff."

It was an old, old story; he knew it by heart; but he never tired of it. Now with it ended, her lips were on his for a long moment. When he opened his eyes, shut tight against the unmanly tears, she was gone.

But the tremendous pull of liberty and push of resentment conquered in that long fight in the dark. On his wheel before daylight, fearing the marvelous memories of the Terminal officers, Ralph Horliss was spinning northward, planning to abandon his wheel at a railway station and take a train. In his pockets were the checks and money, the pocketbook hidden in a clump of roadside bushes.

Yet Ralph Horliss did not go to Alaska nor to California. That night he entered his home after dark and went up to his room, dazed almost to death. There was a new note in his voice, a note of strong manliness, and a new light in his eyes when to the anxious mother who followed him he told the story of the pocketbook—and of the day just ended. When it was finished, shaken to his soul, she drew him to his knees, her arms about his curly head as she had when he was a little child, her own eyes shining with happiness, her lips moving in prayer. What matter now the trials of an unhappy marriage? Her boy was safe.

The next day, walking with the stride of a soldier and the courage of a martyr going to the flames, Ralph entered the banker's office and laid the pocketbook on his desk.

Then, standing there in proud humility, he told his story simply and without sparing himself. As the strange tale developed, the erect, stern man of business relaxed in his great chair. His fingers interlaced, sympathy and comprehension softened the lines of his face, and a flash of youth lit it to almost beauty. He spoke at length slowly and very gently: "I thank you for the return of my purse. Under the circumstances it was a fine thing to do, a very brave thing to do in the way you have. Men have gone down to history in this Southland of ours for victories less nobly won." And then smilingly: "I am something of a crank on heredity and the transmission of great qualities from sire to son. I should guess that you have somewhere a lot of good old Confederate blood in your veins."

The boy stepped forward in sudden excitement, the fire of battle in his eyes, his voice elevated in triumph. "There is, sir; there is! My great-grandfather was a captain in the Stonewall Brigade. They called him the bravest man in the army, and General Lee shook hands with him before his whole staff." He drew the watch from his pocket and sprung the lid. "There is his picture, sir."

"Tom Martin!" murmured the banker, taking the watch and looking on the soldier pictured there. "Old Tom Martin!" And then to the boy: "No wonder you won your fight, my lad; you couldn't lose with old Tom Martin's blood backing you up. I understand, I think. Tom's watch with Tom inside brought you back."

"No, sir. I got to Stone Mountain at day-break and dropped down on the grass to rest. All of a sudden the sun rose, and I saw General Lee and Stonewall Jackson up there. I couldn't pass General Lee and Stonewall Jackson with your money in my pocket—and that watch!"

The hands of the man dropped to the chair arms and gripped them. He leaned forward and stared over the boy's head at a vision, and perhaps a vision was there. Then they closed for a space and opened on the astonished youth. He spoke very gently: "You have taught me something rather wonderful. I never before caught the spirit of the great Confederate memorial. Now, in the light of a new knowledge I am seeing the beautiful picture as for the first time, the apotheosis of Southern ideals, the Mecca of the Southern soul for all the ages. In all reverence men will know it some day as the new Sermon on the Mount." Then the banker, hesitating a moment, lifted a paper. "I advertised for the pocketbook, offering a liberal reward." His eyes held a question.

Ralph's gaze sank before his. Presently he smiled and met the other eye to eye, drew out the watch, sprung the lid, and exposed its picture. "Ah, I thought so! Son, shake! Your place is waiting for you back there in the bank. Come when you wish."—Harry Stillwell Edwards, in the Atlanta Journal.

Hunter.—The little son of Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Hunter, "Billie Reed," passed away on July 27, aged two years, four months and five days. His going was quite a shock to the parents as he was sick only a few hours.

Weep not, dear parents, as those who have no hope. While Billie can't come to you it is possible for you to go to him. Think of him as living, not dead, but basking in the sunlight of God's flower garden, beckoning to you to come up and be with him.

Lord, give me faith to leave it all to Thee. The future is Thy gift, I would not lift The veil Thy love has hung 'twixt it and me.

RALLY DAY PROGRAMS READY.

The sample copies of the Rally Day Program have been sent to our pastors, Sunday school superintendents and other interested people. We hope you not only like the appearance but the material as well. Like it so well, in fact, that you will hold the Rally Day service. The summer vacation will soon be over and a special effort is really necessary if we succeed in rallying our people to the work of the church and Kingdom for the coming months. You will find the material offered in this program of such nature that it will give you the help and lift you wish. We must look to our pastors to see that their church observes Rally Day. If they will arrange for the selection of a committee and then give a reasonable amount of encouragement there is no reason why a splendid service cannot be held. The superintendent can do as much as the pastor. But if neither of these good people take an interest we will have to depend upon some faithful member of the church. Otherwise the entire plan will fail.

It will be a great help if you will send in your order at once. Use the card if possible, which accompanies the sample. If that is not suitable or at hand drop a line and tell us what you want and we will do the rest.

Our ambition last year was realized. We hoped the church would contribute at least $15,000 for the work the Board of Education is trying to do—educate our young men for the ministry and to provide Christian institutions where our young people may pursue their higher education under the right influences and the right kind of teaching—and they did. We are asking for $25,000 this year. Every cent is needed. We will use all you will give, for there is a place for every cent.

But just now send in your orders!

Frank W. Stephenson,
Executive Secretary, Board of Educ.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

The Executive Committee of the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration met in the North Carolina Avenue church, Washington, D. C., May 22, and organized by electing Rev. Dr. J. C. Broomfield, chairman, and Mrs. S. W. Rosenberger, recording secretary.

A change was ordered made in the manual as to terms of service for new missionaries. Permission granted the pastor under General Feng—the Christian general—to build a house on lot just outside the boys' school compound in Kalgan, regret was expressed that Rev. Dr. C. S. Heininger stated he felt he could not return to China now, and his aid was sought in securing a competent man, and minor matters were attended to.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Executive Committee of the Union Board was held in the Baltimore Book Concern Building on August 12th, with all the members present.

Announcement was made that Miss Alice L. Coates, devoted and successful missionary at Hamamatsu, Japan, had reached her destination in America in good health, on her well-earned furlough.

She has the distinction of being the first missionary of our church to be honored by the Imperial Government of Japan, and, on the silver wedding anniversary of the Emperor and Empress, was requested to appear in the assembly hall of the public school, and was the first one called, and received from the mayor of Hamamatsu a beautiful silver vase, and an elaborately written certificate commending her for her long, faithful years of social service and educational work in the city of Hamamatsu.

Mr. Suzuki, Dr. Maruwo, Mr. Kamo, and her pastor, Rev. Mr. Ito, among others, commended her meritorious service to the Imperial House, children of the first three having graduated from Miss Coates' kindergarten.

We are sure that all Methodist Protestants will rejoice to learn of this splendid recognition of the valuable service rendered by our faithful missionary, Miss Alice L. Coates.

The Board expressed its sincere regret that Miss Elizabeth Dawson felt constrained, her furlough being due, to retire from the work in Japan, after rendering very efficient service in the educational department, and as treasurer, and in other spheres of missionary enterprise, but has not despaired of her ultimate return to the field, after suitable sojourn in America.

The financial reports received were audited by the committee and all were found correct, and the work reports were duly considered, and it was gratifying to note the progress being made in all the departments in the three fields.

The enrollment of the Yokohama Girls' school was 424, that of Nagoya College was 1128, and of the five kindergartens 284. The Blind School, 30.

The Jpan Mission Conference, for the quarter, reported, including the Mission, 33 adults baptized and 8 children, and 27 applications for baptism; 84 full members were received and 33 probationers, with 266 enquirers enrolled.

There were 2,122 full members on the roll, 350 probationers, and 3,045 enrolled in the Sunday schools.

The statistics from China and India were probably on a slow ship.

Regular routine business was transacted, including recommendations of the missions, and relief was provided for the India missionaries necessitated by the fall in the rate of exchange, and the duties of the lady missionaries there were defined more fully.

Dr. Heininger, having decided to continue in the pastorate in Indiana, and his furlough period having been prolonged several months, wrote that it is perfectly satisfactory to him that his relation to the Board and his salary should cease September 1st, his eventual return to China being a matter for future consideration.

It was reported that 999 Sunday schools had ordered the Children's Day supplies to date, and the hope was entertained that much larger offerings will be received this year.

It was decided to call a special meeting of the full Union Board for November 20th, in the Pittsburgh Book Concern at 9 A. M.

THE PLACE OF AMERICA IN GOD'S PLAN.

In the last article we discussed some of the obligations and opportunities of the church in the city at the present time. Today we wish to note that while many of the facts presented are uncomplimentary, they present a challenge to which the church has not been slow to respond. The facts outlined here, which summon the church to the bar of justice, are facts which the church herself has discovered, to the correction of which she is giving herself in service with an abandon of consecration never before known.

It is a recognized fact today that the individual can only be saved by obedience to the first commandment, and the community by obedience to the second, the first involving our relationship to God, the second our duty to our fellowmen. Never before have the messages of the church been so insistent upon obedience to these two great commandments. Larger programs are being projected, not only for the local parishes but for whole cities, and a splendid spirit of co-operation is being developed among the Protestant denominations.

The forces at work include the local church in the particular community, as well as the special agencies of the present day. The local church is the point of contact between the problem, the local missionary societies, and the denominational Boards. The local church must have a program which will include every class and every individual within the parish bounds. Classes and individuals may change, but the church should be kept in the field with a changing program as the changing times and conditions may demand. There is no handicap which an intelligent understanding of the problem will not remove. Many churches have closed their doors and moved to other parts of the city when intelligent consecration and a seven day program would have made them vastly more successful in kingdom service in the old locations.

There is a growing appreciation of the fact that we should no longer discuss the problem of the downtown church. Rather we should consider the downtown problem of the church. The first statement is that of the pessimist and is unworthy of the church of Jesus Christ. The other is the outlook of the optimist, and announces a determination to solve the problem.

Solutions must depend upon the problems themselves. In some communities there is need for rescue missions, and evangelistic programs, in others social centers, and special missions to unusual types and classes of population. They must be approaches to working men, business women, the boys and girls of the community, distribution of religious literature in the language of the people of the district, and many other lines of work adapted to the needs of the particular community being served.

The workers will need much initiative. Every field will present its own peculiar problem, and must be studied separate and apart from every other community. Often a new trail must be blazed, but every problem can be solved, and every need and condition can be met under the leadership and direction of Him who said, "Lo I am with you always."

Given, the co-ordination of forces, a co-operating group of trained workers under competent leadership, with an adequate budget and unlimited faith in Jesus Christ, the downtown church will become an asset to the kingdom. The up-town church also has its problems, not so difficult to solve, perhaps, and the leading churchmen of the day are working diligently at their solution.

THE UNFAILING COMPANION.

Rev. W. A. Ledford.

This subject finds a responsive chord in the universal heart as loneliness is a common experience of the race. Since Jacob rested his head on a stone for a pillow and had the sky for a cover, while passing through a strange land, and the Prodigal came to himself in his loneliness in the far country, because he had no one else to go to, mankind have had their lonely periods. Some have suffered loneliness because of their ideals, others for great causes, as Paul for the Gospel's sake, while others have been lonely in the crowded cities and yet others in the lonesome forests. David Livingstone's loneliness in the jungles of Africa, or that of any timid, country lad in the crowded cities, is not comparable to that of Paul, during his second imprisonment in Rome, when all forsook him.

In Paul's second letter to Timothy and last to the world, he wrote, "At my first defence, no man took my part: all forsook me: but the Lord stood by me." His Lord said, "Behold . . . ye shall be scattered, every man to his own and shall leave me alone; and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me." Paul's loneliness was aggravated through the hostility of Alexander, the coppersmith and the desertion of Demas, who preferred the ease and the fleeting pleasures of the world to the things of Christ. Demas went to Thessalonica, such an unlikely place to live the Christian life in. Necessity led him to send away his faithful helpers on missions among the churches, leaving only Luke, the beloved physician with him.

Truly "Man's extremity is God's opportunity" was never more true than during the last days of Paul on the earth. When men forsook him God came forward as Friend and Advocate to encourage, strengthen and comfort him. The Unfailing Companion, who extended the ladder from heaven to earth for the lonely Jacob and anxiously watched for the return of the prodigal, never forsook Paul nor withdrew his divine assistance. Not one time did He say, "I am through." This faithful, loving soldier of "The Old Rugged Cross," learned that he was never less alone than when he was alone with God, and that "one with God is a majority." He was a living witness that God never left His own comfortless in this unfriendly world. How near and sustained was the powerful presence of God!

When the shadows grow long, the sands of time begin to give way, the enemies of righteousness shortening their lines, preparing for their worst, the strong Son of God comes forward, strengthening His own. How cheering the presence of the Captain of our salvation: the Author and Finisher of our faith, as He lifts the veil of time, so that the heavenly Kingdom becomes visible, with all its indescribable glory and unsearchable riches. He who promised that he will never leave nor forsake is the unchangeable God and the unwearyed comforter of the saints. Solomons, Md.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

Pine Ridge Mission.

Dear Co-workers:

This letter comes from the Woman's Home Missionary Society to thank one and all for splendid help during past years. With this help we have built up the Mission in the last six years as follows: Acres of land, from 42 to 125; buildings, from 4 to 12; value of property, from $10,000 to $35,000; workers, from 2 to 11; boarding students, from 12 to 110; total enrollment, from 64 to 154; the total number of boys and girls who have attended our school in the past six years 351, coming from six states and sixteen counties.

This great advancement is to us a proof that God is blessing the work. Another evidence of His blessing is the fact that we now have more students than we can take care of and there are still more wanting to come to our school—more who need the school. To meet this call of God to do greater things for Him we are planning this year to build a new High School Building. We should have had this building last year but by many sacrifices of our workers and also of the work we got through last year but this year we will have another class to house and it cannot be done in the present buildings. Last year we had to partition off school rooms in the church auditorium in which to hold high school classes. We must put up a High School Building. It will cost about $20,000. It will be a brick building, plain, but large and convenient, with class rooms, a large assembly hall, a basement for general use, and rooms for laboratory work.

We are asking that each church whether they have an auxiliary or not will do all they can to help in this splendid work. We will need all the help possible to put over this big undertaking. We are confidently expecting the Branches and Auxiliaries to raise their apportionment. This with a good collection from the churches that do not have an auxiliary will put up the building and care for the work. We know that you will help and we thank you. If this comes to a church that does not have a Woman's Home Missionary Society, please take the collection and send it in and then organize and so help permanently. Send all money that is to be counted on the General Conference Budget through the Branch. Mrs. H. A. Garrett Treasurer, for N. C. Branch, or direct to Mrs. W. B. Gilligan, 3406 Elgin Ave., Baltimore, Md., if your conference has no Branch. All free will offerings should be sent direct to Rev. T. R. Woodford, D. D., Pine Ridge, Ky.

Will all auxiliaries please gather the money together rapidly and send as soon as possible to Mrs. Gilligan from all Branches. We are needing money badly as the work has begun on the building and workmen have to be paid and so do materials.

Thanking all who have and who will help, I am

Yours in His service,

Margaret K. Dixon, Pres. W. H. M. S.

One of the most loyal members of Grace church, Mrs. W. W. Hunter, has the sympathy of many friends in the church and the Missionary Societies in her recent great bereavement. Only a few weeks ago Mrs. Hunter's mother, Mrs. Crews, passed away and last Saturday her sister, Mrs. John Warren, was buried at Piney Grove.

In this double loss we wish Mrs. Hunter to know we are thinking of her and bearing her up in our prayers.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR AUGUST 30, 1925.

What Is The Gospel?

M., Aug. 24. Good news about God. John 3: 14-21.

T., Aug. 25. Good news of the Kingdom. Acts 8: 5-12.

W., Aug. 26. Good news about heaven. 1 Peter 1: 1-9.

T., Aug. 27. Preach to a lost world. 1 John 5: 19.

F., Aug. 28. Preach to save men. Luke 4: 16-21.

S., Aug. 29. Preach because commanded. Matt. 28: 16-20.

Sun., Aug. 30. Topic—What is the Gospel? Why Preach it? 1 Cor. 15: 1-11; 9: 16-23 (Missionary meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

The heart of the good news is that Christ died for our sins and that there is forgiveness; lay plans for us with God (v. 3).

If there is no resurrection there is no gospel, no message of good tidings from God. If Jesus is risen, then eternal life is ours (v. 4).

The heart of the gospel is grace. It is the love of the Father of all prodigals for the wanderers, the story of a welcome for all (v. 10).

The man that has received blessing and refuses to pass it on is sinning against his fellows. We must share our blessings (v. 16).

The Best Story Ever Heard.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the best story ever heard. No one has ever written a more beautiful one, even in fiction. It is the best news for all mankind. It brings man to an appreciation of Jesus and begets in him a desire to become like his Master. The gospel comprehends the life, and the death, and the resurrection, and the ascension of Jesus; and also the outworkings of these facts in the life of mankind. It is the most complete story the world ever heard. When people hear it they are charmed by its beauty, its pathos and its power. No greater privilege is granted to any of us than the privilege of preaching the gospel. Every Christian should be a preacher of the gospel. A genuine Christian Endeavorer is always alert for opportunities of telling the gospel story to others.

The Daily Readings.

The daily readings in the lesson are a wonderful commentary on what is in the gospel and what to do with it. Study these references closely for this meeting.

Paul preached the gospel because he could not help it. According to his own language he had to preach the gospel. He asked no credit for it, and he made no apologies for it. It had done so much for him that he could not refrain from telling it to others. He was willing to make himself all things to all men for the sake of saving some.

The Lesson in Every Day Life.

Perhaps the most beautiful part of the gospel story comes in precious promises which are to be enjoyed by Christ's followers. He promised the Holy Spirit to guide us; He promised to go with us always, even unto the end of our days; and the association of the very best people is vouchsafed unto us in this life, and in the life to come. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

The good news must be told because Jesus commanded it. His "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature" means just what it says. The good news must be told because it does for mankind what nothing else can do. Culture is good; education is certainly worth while; and good business is essential; but they are not Christianity. These are needful, but Christianity is necessary. The world always has needed and always will need the gospel.

A Poem Worth Knowing.

"God, in the gospel of His Son,
Makes His eternal counsels known;
Where love in all its glory shines,
And truth is drawn in fairest lines.

"Here sinners of a humble frame
May taste His grace and learn His name;
May read in characters of blood,
The wisdom, power, and grace of God.

"Here faith reveals to mortal eyes
A brighter world beyond the skies;
Here shines the light that guides our way
From earth to realms of endless day."

Thoughts for Thanksgiving and Prayer.

1. Thank God for the gospel story in the Bible.

2. Thank God for the early followers of Christ who taught us so well how to preach the gospel.

3. Ask God for courage to do our part in spreading the gospel story.

4. Ask God for spiritual power to help us win others for Christ.

5. Ask God for power to help keep the fires of evangelism burning brightly in our church and community.

THE POWER OF HABIT.

In discussing this subject writers too often lay the stress upon physical habit rather than the training of the mind. The following article taken from Good Housekeeping, and condensed for the Readers' Digest so well emphasizes the development of mental habits that it will be found to be not only worth reading, but worth practising.

"There are three habits that lay men low. Drink and gambling may destroy thousands, but these destroy millions.

1. The habit of worry. Napoleon planned his battles with minute thoroughness. He arrived early on the field and set everything in motion. Then, with the guns thundering the attack, he spread his blanket on the field and quietly dropped asleep. He said of himself that his mind was like a cabinet—each drawer containing the essential information on a certain subject. When he had finished the day, he pushed in all the drawers and promptly slept.

2. The habit of selfishness. Many men make brilliant beginnings in business. But something happens. They stop. They never learn that really big business success demands a capacity to use outside forces—the loyalty of associates; the good-will of the public; the cordial support of many friends. They think that this is a foolish bit of sentiment—"it is more blessed to give than to receive." It is not sentiment but fact. Only those who give generously ever receive in the largest way.

3. The habit of quitting. A wise old preacher in Brooklyn saw many thousands of young men come to New York to enter business. He watched them. And he said this: "If you should ask me what is the chief qualification for success, I should answer, staying power. Even a mediocre man can win an honorable place for himself if he will pick his work and stay with it. The most tragic failures are those brilliant men who are forever flitting from place to place—never seeing anything through."

Of course, a man should cultivate the common virtues. But the very fact that these virtues are common makes them cheap in the business market. Beyond the horizon of these common virtues lie some that are much more rare and accordingly more high priced. I will name three:

1. The habit of independent thought. I had the pleasure once of interviewing a great scientist and inventor. He began his talk in a novel way. "The hunting wasp," he said, "is one of the most interesting of the species. It lives its brief summer existence. As fall draws near, it catches two big beetles and paralyzes them with a sharp thrust. Between the two it deposits its eggs, covers them, and, having fulfilled its life work, lies down and dies."

"In the spring its children are hatched by the warmth of the sun. On either side of them is the food that will carry them through to self-support. They live their summer lives and in the fall they repeat the story of their parents. When the ruins of Pompeii were uncovered, the work of the hunting wasp was found—two beetles, stung in precisely the same way, laid on their backs in the unvarying way. No improvement in all the ages. No single evidence of thought. "That," said the scientist, "is typical of the great majority of us humans. There is no thinking in our processes—only instinct. We move in grooves. Not once in a year do most of us sit down quietly and say to ourselves: 'I am going to think out a new path and pursue it. I am going to see whether there is not some other way to do this thing than the way in which it has always been done.'"

That scientist is a good proof of the value of his own philosophy. Millions of us live and move in larger comfort because he asked questions and knitted his brows in thought.

2. The habit of courage. A while ago I was reading the autobiography of James J. Corbett. When Corbett was preparing for his fight with John L. Sullivan, not even his closest friends believed that he had a chance. He was alone against the world in supporting his courage. Over and over again he repeated his warning to himself: "If you lose your nerve, you won't win this fight. If you lose your nerve you won't win this fight." He kept his nerve, and the championship of the world passed from the giant, who had seemed unbeatable, to the slender youth.

In 1833 a clerk in the Patent Office at Washington handed in his resignation. The director questioned him. The clerk said he had been well treated, and that he thought the work was fascinating, and that it was not a question of money. "But," he said, "I have been here several years and the number of patents increases every year. Things can't go on at this rate. In a few years the office will be practically useless and all of us out of work. Everything will have been thought of; there will be nothing left to invent."

On the threshold of the greatest advances in scientific achievement which the world has ever known this young man threw up his hands. Business is full of men who give up before they are beaten. They are easily discouraged. They sell out at the bottom, when if they held on just a little longer the turn would come. So large is the army of the faint-hearted that courage commands a tremendous premium.

3. The habit of faith. In the winter of 1920, when business was very bad, a friend of mine called taxi-cabs and drove a gloomy group of salesmen in New York to a certain corner. He pointed to a vacant lot.

"I have brought you here to show you this vacant lot," he said. "All around us are immense office buildings. Only this one piece of land is vacant. Why? I'll tell you. Less than a hundred years ago an old man had his farm house here where we are standing now. He died, and in his will left this direction—that this one bit of land must be kept forever vacant as a resting-place for his bones and the bones of his wife. All these years that provision has held, until only last week a court set it aside.

"But stop and think," said my friend. "Less than a hundred years ago this whole island was farms. Land so far away from town that the owner of it believed it would always be idle is now worth millions. And all in less than one hundred years. With such a record, can any man be a pessimist? Go back to your hotels and get your order books. Go out to your customers with the picture of this vacant lot in your minds. Tell them that America is only beginning—that more shoes, more bread, more iron, more automobiles will be sold in this land than even the most optimistic dares to dream. We were only vacant land a hundred years ago, and we are a nation of 115,000,000 today. And we have only begun!"

That is not "inspirational talk." It is a cold scientific fact. J. P. Morgan expressed it when he remarked that no man could ever build a fortune unless he was a "bull on the United States"—an unwavering believer that greater, more glorious days are always just ahead. The greatest fortune-building habit of all is the habit of believing that almost anything is possible; of expecting great things from your business, and your country, and your fellowmen.—Selected.

ALWAYS BE ON TIME.

"I like the lad who is always on time," said Mr. Archer one morning, in praise of his office boy. "He is worth two boys who start out late in the morning and have to spend the whole day in catching up. The boy who is always on time can always be depended upon. By forming a habit of being prompt when he is a boy, he will become a man who deserves respect."—Selected.

AN OLD TALE.

An old man and a boy were walking together through the woods. The boy was a careless, good-natured little fellow, full of mischief and fun. The old man was wise and thoughtful. It was a delightful day for a walk, and both the old man and the boy enjoyed the cool shade of the wood. The man listened to the music of the pine trees while the boy was wondering why, in a wood where there were so many things to be thrown at, there should be so few stones, and why all the bits of wood should be so rotten. He tried to hit a bird and the stick he had thrown fell back, broken into twenty pieces.

"Dear me!" said the old man, startled by the sound, "is that rain?"

"No, sir," said the boy. "It was I who threw a bit of dead wood. So it has rained umbrella handles, sir. Here is one of them."

"Always throwing, eh?" said the old man. "What pleasure do you find in trying to hurt the poor birds? I dare say you think yourself quite strong."

"I can throw ever so far when I have a good stone," said the boy.

"I don't mean that, but if you are so strong, let me see you pull up that old tree."

"You are laughing at me, sir," said the boy; "not all the king's horses, nor all the king's men could do that."

"But try," said the man.

"It's no use," said the boy, whose arms could not reach around the huge trunk of the tree, "I can't do it."

"I knew you could not," said the old man, "now I'll try you on an easier task. Are you able to pull up one of those stinging nettles yonder?"

"Yes, sir," said the boy, "of course I am strong enough for that, but they hurt one's fingers. I'd rather not, sir, if you please."

"Well, well, we will leave both the oak you cannot pull up, for it was old, when your grandfather was yet a boy like you, and has grown stronger in all the years. And you do not wish to pull up the nettle because it hurts you to do it. It is thus, my boy, with all bad habits. Either we cannot get rid of them because they are strongly rooted in us, or else we do not wish to touch them because it hurts our feelings. You do not understand this very well now, but remember it, and try to root out, when they first spring up, the ill weeds of your character. There's a touch of cruelty in all our natures, boy. Left to itself it may in time be as strong as the oak and as stinging as the nettle."—Selected.

SOME BOYS' MISTAKES.

It is a mistake for a boy to think that a dashing, swaggering manner will commend him to others. The fact is, that the quiet, modest boy is much more in demand than the boy of the swaggering type. More than one boy has lessened his chance of success in life by acquiring in boyhood a pert, smart, dashing manner, particularly offensive to men of real intelligence and refinement. Modesty is an admirable trait in a man as in a woman and the wise boy will find it to his distinct advantage to be quiet and modest in manner.

It is a mistake for a boy to put too high an estimation on his own wisdom. He will find it to be to his advantage to rely on the far greater wisdom of those much older than himself. And he will find it still more to his advantage to rely on God's Word for direction in all the important affairs of life.

It is a mistake for a boy to feel at any time in all the days of his boyhood that it is not his duty to be respectful and deferential to his father and mother. The noblest men in the world have felt this to be their duty, when boyhood days were far behind them. It is a bad sign when a boy begins to show signs of disrespect to his parents.

It is a mistake for a boy to suppose that there is any better or safer place for him than his own home after nightfall. The boy who forms the habit of running the streets at night is sure to fall in with evil companions, for the better class of boys will be in their homes at night. Records of crime prove that many a boy has begun a criminal career by strolling the streets at night. There is no better place for young people than the "sweet safe corner of the household fire."—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

LUCKY PATTY.

Elinor Allison went to school one morning very proud and happy. Under her arm she carried a box. It was a very precious box, judging from Elinor's carefulness. On her way to the schoolhouse she met Lucille Patterson, one of her little friends.

"I suppose I'd better give you yours now," Elinor said as she opened the box and drew out a tiny pink envelope with "Lucille Patterson" written on it.

Lucille opened it and carefully spelled out an invitation to Elinor's birthday party. She hugged Elinor happily and the little girls hurried along to catch up with Marjorie Dempsey. When Marjorie received her invitation she cried out for joy.

All the little boys and girls in Elinor's room at school received pink envelopes. That is, all but one. Patricia Benning sat quietly in her seat and waited for Elinor to bring her invitation, but Elinor did not come. Patricia felt very much hurt and would not speak to any of the boys and girls that whole morning. Every one called Patricia the teacher's pet because teacher sent her on errands and allowed her to explain things to the class. Poor child, she could not help that.

Patricia walked home with Bobby Ellsworth who lived next door to her. Bobby was very much surprised to find that she was not invited to Elinor's party. He said that he didn't see why Elinor had missed her. Tears came into Patricia's eyes, but she said bravely that she guessed Elinor did not want her.

Elinor, Lucille, Marjorie and Lewis Dempsey and Ralph Carson talked rapidly as they walked the other way. Elinor said that she did not invite Patricia because Patricia had everything she wanted anyway.

"She could have a party every week if she wanted to," declared Lewis, and the others agreed.

Preparations for the party went on rapidly and Saturday came. All morning Elinor took care of her little sister, Kathleen, who was four years old. She played with her and told her stories. Right after dinner the children were dressed in their party best. Elinor, leaving Kathleen in the front part of the house, went out to the kitchen for one last look at the big birthday cake. Then the door-bell rang. Elinor ran gaily in to open the door. It was Bobby and Lucille. The children kept on coming and soon they were playing games merrily in the sitting room.

Presently Elinor's mother came into the room and asked where Kathleen was. The girls and boys said they had not seen her.

"Oh, mother," cried Elinor, "I left her in there alone while I went to the kitchen and I don't know where she is. It's my fault," she wailed.

The birthday party changed into a searching party. The children searched the house and the yard and even the grove of trees back of the house, but nowhere could they find the lost Kathleen. Elinor had stopped to rest on the window seat and big tears were rolling down her cheeks when the door bell rang again. She hurried to the door. There was Patricia Benning holding Kathleen by the hand.

"Oh! Oh!" cried Elinor, and she pulled the two children inside the house, although Patricia wanted to go home right then. Elinor kissed and hugged them both and sent Dicky Elliot to tell the others that Kathleen was found and was safe at home.

Patricia explained that she had been out in her aunt's garden thinking about the party and wondering what she had done so that Elinor had not wanted her at the party. While she was thinking she saw a little girl all in white running down the street. She went to the front yard and found Kathleen sitting on the step. Patricia said that Kathleen was crying and said she was going to run away because Elinor would not let her see the birthday cake. Then Patricia had taken her in hand and told her she must go back home. But Kathleen had shaken her head, so Patricia had to take her home herself.

Every one was laughing and romping when Mrs. Allison brought in the birthday cake. Somehow Patricia seemed to be the center of the group and she was saying, "You know I haven't any mother and I've never been to a party or had one. Aunt Alice would never allow me to, but maybe she will now. And call me Patty, won't you?" she added. "Just plain Patty."

"Lucky Patty, I think," said Bobby Ellsworth. "Hurrah for Lucky Patty." And all the rest agreed.—Lutheran.

A JOURNEY.

By Adeline MacGilvary.

"My goodness!" exclaimed Mother Sanders. "Are you ready? Why, you don't have to start for two hours. I'd take off my hat and wait awhile, if I were you. Go and sit in the hammock and keep clean. I will tell when to start."

Bobby Sanders was going on his first journey alone to visit a boy named Bill Crane, who lived in a town fifty miles away. He knew the train did not start until ten-thirty, and the depot was only a fifth of a mile away, but he figured on being on time.

"I'll go and sit in the station," he said, nervously.

"All right," said his mother. "Now, be careful. Don't get off while the train is moving, and do not do any thing you know I wouldn't approve of. Here's the cookies and your satchel and your umbrella. You'd better just wear your rubbers, it'll save carrying them. I couldn't get them into your satchel."

Bob put on the rubbers without a murmur, although the sun was shining brightly.

"Good-by, Mommer," he said, feeling like crying. He had never been away from her for over-night before.

"Good-bye, dearie, have a good time!" called his mother.

Bobby walked to the depot and sat down on the bench outside. It was very hot and the flies buzzed round and round as if trying to cool themselves with their wings. Bobby ate a cookie, then he made two piles of the crumbs and played a game with himself, guessing which pile would attract the most flies and the first fly.

Suddenly he heard the whistle of an engine and a long train of cars drew up. He jumped up and boarded the train, getting on the very last car. He was hardly on board before the train started off.

"Guess she didn't stop for mail or water or anything," he said to himself.

It was fine on the back platform. Bobbie decided to stay there. Whew! It was great seeing the tracks unroll and unroll like a long, long, long stair carpet, and watch the trees and fences rush together away off, only you knew they didn't really come together, they just looked that way!

"Whiz!" a station went gliding off. That would be Joycetown. Pretty soon they passed Proctorsville. Then, before you could whistle a bar of Yankee Doodle, Bill's station went whizzing past.

"Oh!" thought Bob. "This train must be running way. She isn't stopping for anything!"

Then it occurred to him, that it might be the Express he was on. He knew the Express wouldn't stop until it got to some big city, probably Albany. He tried to get into the car, but he could not get the door open. Well, he would just stay and enjoy his ride, then, since he couldn't help himself, he thought. Anyhow he had money to get back with. He felt for the five-dollar bill his mother had pinned into his breast pocket.

Bob had been to Albany once before and had seen the State House. Nobody came to take his ticket, so when the train stopped he got off and walked into the big station. He stopped a moment to get his bearings, when suddenly he felt himself grabbed around the neck and kissed. He looked up and saw a very stout old lady with a little cape on and a black bonnet with strings.

"Well now, honey," she cried, "I thought thee would be coming on this train."

"You've made a mistake, Ma'am," said Bob.

"Yes, love," replied the old lady, "she's at the house waiting for thee."

She took his satchel away, and began to walk to the door, and of course, Bob, being a thifty Yankee, ran along to keep his property in sight.

"Lady! Lady!" he panted. "I don't know you. I'm the wrong boy. I—I was goin' somewhere else and got on the Express 'stead of the local."

"Well, ain't that nice!" beamed the old lady. "Betty will be so glad to see thee."

"She must be crazy," thought poor Bobbie.

They boarded a street-car, and Bobby saw a policeman and thought of calling him, but it seemed very rude to have a nice old lady taken to jail. He was sure his mother would not approve of sending old ladies to jail, so he tried explaining to his companion.

"You see," he said, "I'm Bobbie Sanders. Now, was that the boy you expected to meet at the station?"

"Yes, yes!" nodded the old lady.

"Well, but I didn't mean to come here at all," protested Bobbie, staring out of the window and trying to remember the location of a certain church, so he could use it for a guide in getting back to the station.

"Yes," said the old lady, "that's the old Episcopal Church. Your Aunt Polly attends that."

After that Bobby gave up trying to explain. One did not seem to get anywhere talking to the old lady.

Pretty soon they got out and walked to a neat red brick house trimmed with white marble. The steps were white marble and there was a pretty iron railing. As they came up the steps, the door opened and there stood a little red-headed girl with the cutest face Bobby had ever seen. She looked strangely at Bobbie, while the old lady said: "Well, Betty dear, here he is. I found him wandering about the station like a lost lamb."

Suddenly Betty's eyes began to dance. She grabbed Bobby's hands and cried: "I'm so glad to see you, Brother! Come in and I'll show you Auntie Ann's garden I've been writing to you about."

"Aw, say!" exclaimed Bobby. "You know I'm not your brother, I'm Bob Sanders, but I'd be glad to see the garden."

They raced through the house and came to the back yard which was very pretty, with two bushes and a tree and some flowers.

"Did you ever see anything so lovely?" asked Betty.

"Of course," said Bobby. "You ought to see Mommer's garden. She's got peonies as big as your head and larkspur and all sorts of things."

"My!" exclaimed Betty.

"What's the matter with Auntie Ann anyhow?" Bobby asked. "You can't seem to talk to her somehow."

Betty's eyes sparkled, but she tried to look sad as she explained: "Auntie is getting a little deaf."

"Well, can't you explain I'm the wrong boy?" Bobby asked. "Maybe your brother is at the station waiting."

Betty had made up her mind that it would be a good joke to keep Bobby for awhile, but when he said her own brother might be waiting at the station, she decided to explain to Auntie. She ran into the house, followed by Bobby. She took a large instrument like a tin coffee pot from the shelf, handed it to the old lady, then she said very fast: "Auntie, this isn't Walter. It's Bob. Will you write to his mother and ask if he may visit us? He's very nice."

The poor old lady was much upset when she realized her mistake, and she insisted on going at once to the station and putting Bob on the right train. She even bought his ticket. Walter was found waiting patiently on a bench.

Bobby had some yarn to tell when he reached his friend's house late that night! But the story did not end there, for before school opened Bobby and Walter and Betty visited him, and he was showing them his mother's garden, also the swimming pool by the dam, and the big blueberry patch, and the tree house he had made, and all his other treasures.

"Gee!" he said to his mother, "I'm glad Auntie Anne made a mistake and forgot to bring her ear-trumpet along, because I've got acquainted with Betty and Walter, and they have invited me to visit them during the Christmas holidays. Isn't it queer how things happen on a journey?"—Selected.

Other gifts: Mrs. Garmon, of Charlotte, watermelons for the boys; Mrs. S. F. Spoon, of Burlington, four sheets; Mrs. Fleming, of Middleburg, clothing; R. W. Pumpelly, of Samarcand, C. C. Bennett, of Candor, and other friends, a truck load of peaches. These peaches were solicited by J. E. King, of Seagrove. J. S. Richardson, of Seagrove, hauled the peaches for us.

Additional gifts make a larger bank account, and a large bank account is a good thing to have in feeding, clothing and educating near eighty people in an institution like this. Please remember the number when the collection plates are passed. Thank you.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Caroleen.—It has been some time since a report has been made from this place, but that does not mean that we are dead. Many things have been happening that prove there is yet a reserve of spiritual life in our church.

The pastor has been sick for the past several days, and on last Saturday night, while he was in bed sick and helpless, the people of the Caroleen church came in and took charge of the parsonage. Did much singing and joyful noise-making, but the pastor freely forgave them when he got a view of the dining room with its great decoration of many good things to eat.

We have been holding cottage prayer meetings in preparation for our coming revival. The Lord has wonderfully blessed us. About 8 professions have been made in these prayer services, and we feel that all this points to a gracious revival in our church. Yet with all these great blessings, we feel our weakness, and would ask the good brethren and sisters to pray for us. We are looking for Brother R. S. Troxler to be with us in the revival services which begin the second Sunday in September. T. G. McAllister, Pas.

Gibsonville and Fountain Place.—We have been too busy to report on our work for some time. I take it that most pastors have already taken their vacation and by this time are getting ready for the fall and winter work. I have been so beset with opportunities for work that I have not nor will I be able to take a vacation this year.

In addition to trying to keep up our own growing work I have taken time to assist Rev. T. A. Williams at Haw River the first week in July in a revival meeting, and I greatly enjoyed the services with them, resulting I believe in nine additions to the church. I also assisted Rev. H. L. Isley at Salem Church in a few days meeting this month, resulting in twelve additions to his church. I also greatly enjoyed being with them. For the past three weeks we have been in an interdenominational meeting here in Gibsonville resulting in more than two hundred conversions and for the past two weeks our church here has received thirty-nine into membership as a result and had as many more to receive later. This great work here has been made possible by the close co-operation of all the religious forces of the town assisted by the Burlington Men's Federation.

I will leave within a few hours for Halifax where I am to assist the Rev. C. L. Spencer in a few days meeting at Hollister Church.

Work on the Sunday school building of Fountain Place Church is progressing nicely and within the next thirty days we expect to have it completed and then—

We have not done as well on our general interests thus far as we had hoped to do, but still we are to bring up all claims.

Our Sunday schools are doing fine work. Gibsonville has an enrollment of a fraction less than four hundred with an attendance of a little less than three hundred, this school has stood the summer slump fine. Fountain Place school is also doing well and as soon as we enter the new building we are planning for larger things. When in Burlington look over this plant. Cordially, G. H. Henry.

Bethel Church, Flat Rock Ct.—The meeting of Bethel Church, of which Rev. J. B. Trogdon is pastor, was one of the greatest that has been held in this community around about Stokesdale this summer. Rev. W. F. Ashburn of Liberty, N. C., preached during most of the meeting, and every one liked and enjoyed his preaching very much. His sermons were all very impressive. It is said by about every one who attended the meeting that it was the greatest revival that has been held at Bethel in several years.

It is thought by the people that the spirit of worship was great, and that it excelled any that has been at Bethel for quite a while. The members of the church and also members of other churches were very enthusiastic and energetic in the meeting. There were large crowds at the services, and ministers of other denominations also attended them.

Billy Sunday's Club of Winston Salem conducted the services on Wednesday night, and there were many converted. There were forty-six conversions and reclamations during the meeting which lasted from the first Sunday in August until the second Sunday, twenty-six joined the church with probably others to follow. The meeting not only helped just the members of the Church, but it also helped most all the people who live in the community around.

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely with good attendance, also our Singing School seems to be a success, the people are attending in goodly numbers at this busy time of the year.

Salem, Saxapahaw Circuit.—On last second Sunday in August we began our special meeting. Pastor Isley gave us a fine sermon in the morning service. In the afternoon Bro. G. H. Hendry came and was pulpit help and delivered some wonderful messages. We feel that the Lord was with us in this meeting and many have been drawn closer to the Master. On Thursday evening the Federation came and gave us some inspiring services. There was a good number of conversions and reclamations. There were eleven accessions to the church. Our Sunday school is doing fine.

Midland Charge.—We have held two of our special meetings. Our meeting at Love's Grove closed on the 14th. We had a very good meeting. There were eleven converts, and twelve renewals; eleven united with the church, and more are coming in later. Rev. J. J. Waldrop was our pulpit help at this place. Our camp meeting at Mill Grove closed on last night. We also had a very good meeting at this place, there were fourteen converts, and thirty-one renewals. All of the fourteen converts united with the church. Both churches are greatly revived. Rev. C. E. Phillips was our help at Mill Grove, church. Our meeting at Pine Bluff church will begin the 23rd. Rev. J. W. Hulin will be our help at this place. Pray for us that we may have a great meeting. All three of my churches have pounded me this year, Pine Bluff began the good work and the other two followed. And I can assure you that they gave me every thing that a preacher needs. It would take too much space to mention all that was brought and who gave it, but I am truly thankful to each and every one. May God bless you all.

J. M. Ridenhour.

Haw River.—Our third quarterly conference will convene at Friendship church on Saturday before the 1st Sunday in September at 2 o'clock P. M.

The Ham-Ramsey Federation of Burlington will put on an evangelistic campaign at Brown Summit beginning September 7th at 8 o'clock P. M. The public cordially invited to attend these services.

W. D. Reed.

Hebron, Orange Ct.—On second Sunday in Aug. we began our special meeting here which ended on Thurs. night.

Rev. D. R. Williams did the preaching after Sunday morning. His sermons were enjoyed by all.

Several reclaimed, some new converts, four joined the church; for all this we are thankful.

Our Home Missionary society is doing better; the younger members are getting up a play in interest of the work in the church. Sunday school is doing fine; good attendance two new ones joined today.

We hope to finish our church before long.

Mr. Tommy Pender led our singing for our meeting part of the time; when he could not be there our pastor led for us. We enjoyed both singing and preaching and feel that lot of good was done by both.

Pray for our success at Hebron.

Enfield Charge.—Our third quarterly conference was held several weeks ago. Mr. Hubert M. Whitaker was elected delegate to the annual conference.

Our revival meeting was held at Whitaker Chapel the second week in August. The pastor did the preaching except one sermon by G. H. Jonnson, pastor of Enfield Baptist church. Mrs. Charles Miller assisted in the singing five members were received. Dr. and Mrs. A. G. Dixon paid us a very pleasant and helpful visit the second Sunday in August. We were glad to have Vista come with them. Mrs. Dixon spoke to our Whitakers Chapel congregation and Mr. Dixon spoke to the Enfield people. Both congregations were highly pleased with their visits and messages. Our Whitaker Chapel congregation seems to be growing and our C. E. at that place is doing much for the spiritual and social life of the church. The Sunday school at Enfield is growing fast and is perhaps larger than it has ever been.

The Enfield church raised fifty dollars and Whitaker Chapel thirty-five dollars for the Laymen's college emergency fund. Dr. F. R. Harris paid us a pleasant visit and took pledges for the fund.

The Home coming service will be held at Whitakers Chapel next Sunday. Everybody is invited to come, bring lunch and spend the day. We understand that the first annual confer nce ever held in the M. P. denomination was t that church and surely some of the foundation stones of the denomination once lived round there.

Dr. and Mrs. C. L. Whitaker have been visiting on the charge the past week. Dr. Whitaker ave Enfield congregation an excellent sermon n Sunday morning.

Miss Bettie Whitfield, sister of Mr. Samuel Whitfield, of our church, has had an attack of aralysis and is in a feeble condition.

Crops are fine in this part of the State and e hope to pay up our claims before conference. There are only about one hundred fifty members on this charge, but many of them re willing and progressive. Among the out of wn visitors at church last Sunday were: on. and Mrs. Forest Whitaker of Lynchburg, a. Miss Lula Whitaker, of Winston Salem. r. Walter Mathews of Randleman, Miss Le-a Parham of Rocky Mount, Mrs. Logan Barnill of Hamilton and Mrs. Bernard Rigshée of urham.

Looking forward to a good annual conference.

R. C. Stubbins.

Shelby.—We had the usual attendance at ur services last Sunday with the exception e the Sunday school. The Sunday school attendance was lower than usual. The school eided to hold the Rally Day service in October, and the committee to train the children or the service will be selected next Sunday. At the morning service last Sunday a special selection of music was enjoyed, a mixed artette, the singers were Misses Risberth ate, Verda Ramsey; Mr. Merton Beam and e pastor. "The Old Rugged Cross" was the ection rendered. The subject of the sermon as, "The Glory in the Cross of Christ."

At the night service we were delighted and eatly helped by a sermon by Rev. J. O. Fry, young preacher of the M. E. church of Kings ountain. The subject of his sermon was The Greatness of Salvation."

Our third quarterly conference was held a Wednesday night, August 19, and was attended by a majority of the official members e the church and a number of the members. Everything was done in a spirit of harmony. he financial report revealed a deficit of about $50.00 on the pastor's salary at the present me. A total of $590.00 was the balance of e salary to be raised before the Annual Conference meets. Brother J. T. Ramsey was eared elected delegate to the Annual Conference. The Quarterly Conference decided to limit the Caroleen church to the Shelby charge for next year provided an agreement ay be reached in regard to the parsonage of e Shelby church. We understand that Caroen has voted favorable to being attached to helby and be served by the same pastor for ext year. A meeting of the representatives e each church will be called soon to consider e proposition and reach an agreement if possible.

We thank Brother Amos Gantt for a big t hen which he brought to the parsonage st week; also Mrs. J. T. Ramsey for a basket e beans and tomatoes.

We will have our regular services next unday.

C. B. Way, Pastor

Burlington.—Our third quarterly conference was held on the nineteenth, following our mid-week prayer service. The vote of the church for delegate, taken previously, was counted, and Bro. J. Ed. Ausley was declared elected. Bro. Ausley is a new man in our church, and is proving a good worker. Bro. L. E. Anthony was the other nominee. The election of either of these brethren would have been a good choice. They are both good and earnest workers.

Steps were taken last Sunday to organize a church federation for evangelistic work. A quick and earnest response was made to the suggestion; the church was ready for it, and we expect good results.

On the last Sunday in September we are to begin a series of revival services to continue for ten days or longer. We are to be assisted in these meetings by our local church federation, and by the city federation. Our faith is strong for a good meeting.

Several of our people have recently undergone hospital operations, some of which were very serious; others are sick in their homes. Our deep sympathies go out to all of them, and we pray that they may be given continued and permanent restoration to health.

We attended yesterday in Greensboro the funeral and burial of Mrs. Trollinger, the mother of our Bro. J. L. Trollinger. May he and the other members of the family be divinely comforted in this sorrow. Sister Trollinger was a good woman, and this fact gives cause for assurance and comfort.

Conference comes on apace. Who's ready for it?

S. W. Taylor.

West End, Greensboro.—Leading the Christians to rededicate their lives to Christ, the backsliders to be reclaimed, and the sinners to repent and accept Christ as their Savior, Rev. Joe. H. Lynch, pastor of the first Methodist Protestant Church of Lynchburg, Va., has just closed the greatest revival the West End community has ever had. A scene not often, if ever, witnessed was that of an entire family of five being converted and uniting with the church. Mr. Lynch, affectionately known as "Joe," is so full of love for his church, his gospel, and his God, that he fairly bubbles over with enthusiasm and eagerness to tell others the story. Gifted with a strong body, keen mind, magnetic personality, mastery of the English language, and knowledge of the Bible, he can paint word pictures so real that even the smallest child can see and understand. There were approximately sixty conversions, eighteen of which have already united with the church, and others will join Sunday.

We were glad to see in our congregation, from time to time, Revs. R. A. Hunter, L. W. Gerringer, A. G. Dixon, D. D., N. M. Harrison, Jr., J. H. Moton, J. L. Trollinger, J. F. McCulloch, D. D., T. F. McCulloch, H. F. Fogleman, C. L. Whitaker, D. D., and W. L. Carson.

We regret very much to lose for several months our beloved Mrs. W. H. Bonkemeyer, who left Tuesday to spend some time in Florida. She is one of our most faithful workers, especially in the missionary societies, and we shall miss her greatly.

Rev. George J. Murdock gave a very interesting talk to the Senior Christian Endeavorers at their meeting last Sunday evening, using as his subject, "Why I am going to be a missionary." He and Mrs. Murdock, who was before her marriage Miss Cordia Thompson, are spending several days with relatives and friends in Greensboro before sailing for India, Sept. 6th. We wish them much joy in their noble work.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society held its August meeting on the lawn of the church. After the business session, a delicious picnic supper was spread. The families of all the members were invited guests.

At the August meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, a motion was carried to give a scholarship to High Point College. Under the efficient leadership of Mrs. J. K. Osborne, this society is doing a splendid work. It recently sent a number of bed spreads to Bethel Home, and the ladies are now making quilts for sale, the proceeds of which will also be sent to Bethel Home.

The Ladies' Aid Society is also busy carrying out the plans and programs so carefully mapped out by the president, Mrs. P. A. Burns. The pews in the church have been paid for, and the society is working now to have them painted.

Chapel Hill, Davidson Ct.—Bro. Ridge preached for us the third Sunday in July, a good sermon. We like our pastor, he preaches the gospel. We have stopped our Sunday school for awhile on account of special meetings. Our prayer meeting has held up well.

Our camp meeting will begin on Saturday night before the 3rd Sunday in September. We ask the prayer of all Christian people that there may be great good done. We need a great revival in this community. There are people both old and young that are out of Christ. O may they turn to Christ before it is too late. Tents that the storm tore down are being rebuilt. Would be glad that more would build new ones. We have bought gas lamps that add much to the night services. Bro. Ridge taught us a good singing; glad to have him sing for us. We also have new song books. Lizzie Cranford.

Canaan, Denton Ct.—Our protracted meeting started the third Sunday in August. Our pastor, Brother Loy, preached two very interesting sermons on Sunday. Bro. Whitaker came on Monday and did the preaching the remainder of the meeting, which closed on Friday night. We had an old-time revival in which almost every one seemed to rejoice. There were 29 converted, of whom 19 joined the church at this place. I think more will join later. We were very thankful for the presence and personal work of the Rev. C. H. Hill and wife of Richland Ct., A. Ridge and wife of Stanly Ct., and C. E. Ridge of Davidson Ct. It is encouraging to know that these friends are interested enough in us in the cause of Christ that they will give the time to come and labor with us. We are having a good Sunday school and prayer meeting at this place.

—WHY DO YOU GO TO CHURCH?

built more than a century ago, and even tradition fails to keep the names of the willing hands that must have labored so long and faithfully to erect it. Travel far and wide and one will seek long to find so workmanlike and enduring a piece of work as this fine work in stone. Let us not forget, "Dies diem docet" (one day teaches the other) and as the Earl of Shannon has said: "Vivit post funera." (Virtue lasts beyond the silent grave.)

Settlers came into this and all the surrounding regions in great numbers beginning in 1720, and continuing in increasing numbers until about 1770 when the tide of emigration ceased on account of the brewing troubles that culminated in the Revolutionary War. These settlers brought with them their religious ideals, and their Protestant zeal. At first one place, and one house of worship served for both the Lutheran and the Reformed people, but as soon as they were able, they separated for worship upon different locations. There was no quarrel or disagreement as is sometimes supposed to have been the case; nothing of this kind, simply on the other hand each denomination became able to look out for its own interests. The Reformed people went to Old Stoner's Church, now unhappily a forsaken and deserted spot, and also to Der Klapp Kirche which became later known as the present Brick Church, and which was in the earliest day called "The Church on Beaver Creek" as referred to in the earliest records in our possession. Original church records still survive as kept by their very first religious leader, Rev. Samuel Suther, a name well-known among the Revolutionary records of the Reformed people of North Carolina. Some assumed historians have gone so far as to state that Whig and Tory differences between the Lutheran and the Reformed people account for separations; such is not the case; and a magnificent record for loyalty to the cause of freedom and liberty can be reliably established beyond any question for both denominations. If there be any other minister in all American history who attempted the wonderful work with his entire denomination that was attempted and so successfully carried out by Henry M. Muhlenburg, beginning his efforts in 1743, we have been unable to find record of such. Rev. Henry M. Muhlenburg attempted and largely succeeded in stirring up the entire American Lutheran Church to foresee the coming War of the Revolution, and to take a bold and resolute stand for independence. Those unfamiliar with his work and his successful efforts will be astonished to read his record in the quarter century that went before the Revolutionary War. His work and his success in his patriotic efforts constitute an imperishable record for the loyalty and patriotism of the Lutheran Church in the Revolutionary War. If it has any parallel we fail to recall it. Certainly a people who have been native to the soil of North Carolina and of the United States for two hundred years, and who help set up the very Temple of Liberty itself may justly claim to be classed as genuine and original American citizens. No well-informed student of American history can deny this class. There is glory enough for all in the story of the winning of American Independence in those days of 1771 to 1781, but American Lutheranism deserves its full portion based upon the undeniable facts and records of history.

St. Paul's and Adjoining Sister Churches.

In 1801 St. Paul's became wholly Lutheran; at that date the Reformed people ceased to worship in connection with this congregation. In 1803 St. Paul's Church, joined with her near neighbors, Friedens Church, and Low's Church, in helping to form the North Carolina Synod, the very oldest Southern synodical body. This present building was erected in 1893; two buildings have stood here before this. St. Paul's once owned a half interest in the Friedens Church parsonage; this was sold, and the connection severed with Friedens; it is now a part of the Guilford pastorate. Well-known early pastors here have been Rev. Charles Eberhard Bernhardt, Rev. Philip Henkel, Rev. Ludwig Markert, Rev. Jacob Scherer, Rev. William Artz, Rev. John D. Sheek, Rev. Samuel Rothrock, Rev. Charles H. Bernheim, Rev. Whitson Kimball, Rev. E. P. Parker, Rev. Charles B. Miller, and Rev. H. M. Brown which brings us down to recent days.

Just over yonder hills at Low's church the following Lutheran ministers have been licensed to preach: Rev. Michtael Rauch, 1812; Rev. John Yost Meetze, 1812; Rev. John W. Meyer, 1812; Rev. Philip Roth, 1812; Rev. Jacob Miller, 1812; Rev. Adam Grimes, 1821; Rev. Andrew Seechrist, 1821; Rev. John Reichert, 1821; Rev. William Artz, 1830; Rev. David P. Rosenmiller, 1830; Rev. Jacob Kaempfer, 1830; Rev. J. E. Fesperman, 1868; Rev. R. L. Brown, 1868; Rev. W. R. Ketchie, 1868. At Low's church ordination services have been held as follows: Rev. Jacob Scherer, 1812; Rev. John P. Franklow, 1812; Rev. Daniel Scherer, 1821; Rev. Martin Walther, 1821; while at Friedens church with which pastorate this St. Paul's was once connected there have been either licensed or ordained the following Lutheran ministers: Rev. Daniel Scherer and Rev. Daniel Welcher in 1816; Rev. James P. Sykes, 1861; Rev. E. P. Parker, 1872; Rev. W. J. Smith and Rev. B. S. Brown in 1878; and at Burlington in Macedonia Church only a few miles north, Rev. C. L. Miller and Rev. G. A. Riser in 1898.

Rev. C. E. Bernhardt, well-known early Lutheran minister, came into this St. Paul territory in 1789 and labored here until 1809 when he left for work in South Carolina.

Rev. Adolph Nussman who began his work as the pioneer Lutheran minister of North Carolina in 1773, labored and traveled over a wide territory, often more than one hundred miles from his home, and his missionary work brought him into this very community, and over this surrounding territory. In this work he was joined by Rev. John G. Arndt who came over from the mother country as a teacher, but became a minister on account of the pressure for more ministers in the wide territory to be covered.

This church, St. Paul's, also came under the influence of the well-known Scherer family, one of the most notable in all the history of the Lutheran church in this State. Here on these grounds labored once Rev. Jacob Scherer, later his son, Rev. Simeon Scherer. Beginning in 1810 the arduous labors of Rev. Jacob Scherer placed this field of the Lutheran church in the very forefront of the work in the entire state. From this same local Scherer family has gone out a grandson of Rev. Jacob Scherer to occupy one of the very highest offices in the power of the church to give; Rev. M. G. G. Scherer, D. D., general secretary of the United Lutheran Church in America with headquarters in New York City.

Lutherans in North Carolina, United States,

As we today recall the coming of Rev. Adolph Nussman and the teacher-preacher, Rev. John D. Arndt, to North Carolina in 1773, marking the beginnings of organized church effort in the Old North State, we naturally look to see what progress has been made from that date down to 1925. To-day the Lutheran Church has in North Carolina 110 active ministers, and a membership of about 30,000. In these United States she has 18 different bodies of Lutherans with a total membership for 1924 2,465,841. Taking the entire world in view, the Lutheran Church today has from 60 to 70 million souls under her spiritual care, and from 30 to 40 millions enrolled as communicants at her altars. According to Dr. Carroll's careful figures there are in the United States 46 denominations with a less membership than the Lutheran Church, and only three denominations that exceed her enrollment. (See page 63, Year Book.) For the United States alone the total benevolence of the Lutheran church exceeds ten millions yearly; and the total expenditures exceeds 40 millions yearly.

One outstanding event in Lutheranism in North Carolina arose in 1819 when the Tennessee Synod was formed from those withdrawing from the North Carolina Synod. Rev. Gottlieb Shober was the leader of those who remained with the North Carolina Synod, and Rev. David Henkel of those who formed the Tennessee Synod. Without going into a discussion of the course of events, the personal differences, the various views, that resulted in the separation it is enough to say that in the main the separation no doubt resulted in greater efforts by both bodies with the generous rivalry that resulted than would have been possible with no separation. This separation is lost sight of in the great fact of the merging in 1918 of the General Synod in the United States, the General Council, and the United Synod of the South, into that wonderful body now known as the United Lutheran Church in America. After living apart for more than fifty years, at one stroke they caught the spirit of the times, and united for larger activities. This fine action won more praise from the Christians of our country than anything that has ever occurred in the long story of the Lutheran Church in these United States. Here was Muhlenberg's ideal at last coming to fruition; and a example set for other great Christian bodies that are yet divided by minor differences.

Lutherans as Revolutionary Patriots.

This particular section of the country during the Revolutionary War affords an interesting study in the reaction of certain denominations to war and the bearing of arms. Here were Lutherans, Reformed, Friends or Quakers, and the Presbyterians. In the distinctive views of the Friends or Quakers outstanding ideas were a refusal to take oath, lack of professional ministry, recognition of woman, and positive testimony against war and the bearing of arms. Hence, the Quaker preacher, Herman Husbands, who from 1765 to 1771 preached and argued with these people was not found on the battle-field of Alamance on May 16, 1771, when shots were to be fired. Only a few miles west were the Moravians who also did not fight in the War of the Revolution but took the oath of allegiance to North Carolina, and the United States, and paid a triple tax. If then the mother country was to be opposed by arms it remained for the Lutherans, the Reformed and the Presbyterian people to do the fighting. And they rose to the occasion and did it nobly! Their church grounds became meeting places for the militant, and their pulpits sounded the calls to arms. The names of these Piedmont Lutherans were signed to the Petitions of Grievance sent to Gov. William Tryon, and they were, almost without exception, patriots. It was the spirit of Lutheranism,—freedom from oppression. At Charleston, S. C., in old St. John's Church a company was raised whose captain fell at the siege of Savannah. Salisbury, N. C., Lutherans were patriots with Beard, Barringer, Beekman, Mull and others fighting for freedom. (See Wheeler's History.) From Saint John's Church, Cabarrus county, N. C., one family furnished seven sons for the Revolution. Capt. John Paul Barringer remained at home to oppose the Tories. One or two Lutherans from this section signed the Mecklenburg Declaration. Rev. Christian Streitt for his activities for freedom was made a British prisoner. At Frieden's, and Low's, both Lutheran churches; and at Stoner's, and Brick Church, both Reformed churches, there was co-operation always for the efforts of Alamance, Haw Fields, and Buffalo, all Presbyterian churches, looking to the success of the American colonies in their determination to be free, and to secure justice and liberty from England. Captain Peter Summers who entered the War of the Revolution as an eighteen year old boy from Frieden's Lutheran congregation where he had joined as a charter member, and who rose to become captain of the First North Carolina Battalion in the War of the Revolution, giving to his country years of distinguished military service, is typical of the Lutherans of that day, and of the spirit that prevailed among them.

These Lutherans had come into this region during the years from 1720 to 1770, and in all these fifty years had no other thought but to make of this region a permanent home. They were ready with their material supplies, and with their arms and lives if necessary, to lend every possible help in the establishment of the new form of government, and to assist in wresting all power from the British government over the American colonies.

If there are any original Americans on our soil and in our land today, certainly these people who came here from 150 to 200 years ago, may claim to be among the original, and genuine American citizens. We would not detract in any measure from any glory due to any other of the early settlers, but too long has history neglected to pay just tribute, and accord due place and recognition to the Lutherans from the Palatine region who became the first and original settlers of certain sections of North Carolina, taking the lands that became their homes direct in many cases from the hands of the Indians themselves. While they had no criticism to offer the two other faiths and denominations that were their close neighbors, still with the light of their conscience to guide them they were ready if need be to die for their faith in freedom's cause. These people had the faith of one of their own heroes, Muhlenburg. Let us see as to him.

The House of Delegates in Virginia in December, 1775, appointed Muhlenburg colonel of the Eighth Virginia Regiment. George Bancroft says: The command of another regiment was given to the Lutheran minister, Peter Muhlenburg, who left the pulpit to form out of his several congregations one of the most perfect battalions in the army.

The American poet, Thomas Buchanan Read, tells the story in vivid verse of how Pastor Muhlenburg in the church of Berkeley Manor rose in his pulpit and so stirred his congregation that they then and there enlisted for the fight for freedom.

"The text, a few short words of might—
The Lord of hosts shall arm the right."
He spoke of wrongs too long endured,
Of sacred rights to be secured;
Then from his patriot tongue of flame
The startling words for freedom came.

"Who dares?—this was the patriot's cry,
As striding from the desk he came—
"Come out with me in freedom's name,
For her to live, for her to die?"

A hundred hands flung up reply,
A hundred voices answered "I!"

The humble Lutheran preacher, Peter Muhlenburg, became brigadier general, then major general; later a representative in the first and third and sixth congress, and finally United States Senator from Pennsylvania. He won the approbation of his countrymen including Washington, Gates, and Greene, and our gallant helper, LaFayette.

No wonder that such societies as the Daughters of the American Revolution, and the Sons of the American Revolution are today carrying so many names of members who join by right of ancestry connecting them with the pioneer Lutheran families that contributed so largely towards the setting up of the American government in the years 1771-1781. These people had endured all the trials that gave to the world the Protestant Reformation of the 15th and 16th centuries, and they took their stand for civil and religious liberty in the spirit of their own Martin Luther who had cried out: "Here I stand; I cannot do otherwise, so help me God!" Concerning liberty they sincerely felt:

'Tis liberty alone that gives the flower
Of fleeting life its luster and perfume.

A BIRD WITHOUT WINGS.

There is a curious bird living in New Zealand, called a Kiwi, that is a great-great-great-great-grandchild of a monster bird that lived in that country thousands and thousands of years ago that was known as a Moa. Of course, no one living ever saw a Moa, but they were certainly there, as their bones have been dug up and studied. By measuring the bones we know that the living bird must have been about eighteen feet tall when it stood up straight. Just think of it, a bird three times as tall as a six-foot man! If there were any people in those days, they would know exactly how a little bug would feel when a big old rooster reached down and gobbled it up.

Glad there are no birds as big as that now, for they might mistake us for some kind of two-legged insects, and gobble us up too.

The Kiwi as it is today is a harmless sort of bird, about the size of a hen, and is always ready to run. The queer thing about a Kiwi is, that it has not the least sign of wings, and has not even a bump, or a scar where they used to be. At one time they did have wings, but they never used them, and so they got smaller and smaller, and weaker, and at last disappeared entirely.

But it does not make much difference, as they really do not need wings, as they find all the food they want right on the ground, and in the land where they live, there are no natural enemies, so it is never necessary for them to fly. Their feathers, if they are feathers, are different from those of other birds, being long, loose and stringy, really more like coarse hairs than any kind of feathers you have ever seen.

He is not pretty, and looks more like a big wad of shoe-strings with the ends all hanging on the outside.

He is an awfully slouchy looking fellow, and acts as if he were ashamed to let any one see him; so he hides under bushes, or in the tall grass during the day, and does not come out until it is too dark for any one to see him.

They are very shy birds and afraid of people, so they stay away from them far as possible in the jungles and thickets; and at the least sound they hide, and don't move until things quiet down.

You might walk through the forests where thousands of these strange birds live, and never catch so much as a glimpse of a single one. After being silent all day long, when dusk comes, they slip out of their hiding places, and gather in companies, and make a great to-do calling ki-wi-ki-wi to each other, and then they scatter, and begin looking for something to eat. They are not at all particular about their food, but will be thankful for anything they can find in the way of bugs, worms, lizards, frogs, young snakes or anything alive that they can catch and kill.

Their bills are long and strong, and instead of the nostrils being placed near the head, as is the case with most birds, they are located right at the end of the bill. Why this is, no one knows, unless they like to smell what they are eating. Their feet and legs are something like those of the ostrich, and the legs are not nearly so long. As awkward and dumpy as they look, it is said that they can run as fast, or faster than most dogs, and that it takes a speedy one to overtake them. They are hunted by a special breed of dogs that are trained to hunt them by smell, and then run them down. As they have no wings to get in the way, they can squeeze through thickets that would almost stop a weasel, and while one is looking for them, they are far away and still running.

The book name of this bird is the Apteryx, but Kiwi is easier to remember, and does just as well. They tunnel in the ground, and there scratch out a shallow nest for their two big white eggs.

As they are so persistently hunted by the natives, and as they increase very slowly, it will not be many years before the last Kiwi will go to join his forefathers, the Moas, and the world will know them no more.

—U. S. Department of Agriculture explorers have brought from the Andes Mountains some rare varieties of potatoes that are said to have flesh as yellow as butter and a rich, nutty flavor.

—A flier was fined $25 for flying under the 2,000-foot altitude when he flew in his airplane over the stands on Yale field, New Haven, Connecticut.

—From a total of 40,000 children and young men who have been before Judge Ben B. Lindsey in the past twenty-five years, only one case has graduated to the capital criminal class.

MARRIED.

The First Methodist Protestant Church in High Point was the scene of a pretty wedding at 7 o'clock this morning when Mr. Leonard Honeycutt and Miss Pearl Reynolds, both of this city plighted their troth. The church was beautiful with decorations of dahlias and asters in tall baskets and graceful ferns on either side of the pulpit, all bathed in the dew and sunlight of early morning. Just preceding the ceremony Miss Elizabeth Oakes sang "The Sweetest Story Ever Told." Miss Lucille Pickens rendered Lohengrin's wedding march while the young people advanced to the altar, and were met by the pastor, Dr. George R. Brown, who in the sweet and solemn ring ceremony of the church united the young hearts and lives. During the ceremony Miss Lucille Pickens softly played "Song of Love" on the pipe organ, and rendered Mendelssohn's wedding march as a recessional. After the ceremony the happy young couple left in their car for a honeymoon trip to Wilmington and Wrightsville Beach.

The bride is the eldest daughter of Rev. and Mrs. George L. Reynolds, and is very attractive and popular. She received the B. M. degree from Elon College with the class of 1921, and has taught ever since her graduation. The groom is a well known and highly esteemed young man, having been reared in High Point, and is one of the city's firemen. This young pair possess a large circle of

THE NAGOYA CHURCH FUND.

You are perhaps wondering what has become of the canvass for the Nagoya College church. The explanation is simple—I felt constrained because of the press of our own college debt to get out of interfering with the campaign for that interest. And I do not propose to resume the appeal for funds for the Nagoya college church until we shall have gotten our own affairs in a little better shape. My purpose in writing now is to make a statement of the account to date. The receipts have been as follows:

"Two Friends of Nagoya College," $475.00.
The following $5 each—W. L. Ward, J. N. Wills, W. S. Jones, E. L. Douglas, T. C. Amick, J. H. Allen, E. G. Finch, D. E. Walker, E. C. Kittrell, Mrs. L. M. Whitaker, Rev. N. G. Bethea, Geo. B. Harris, Mrs. J. J. Crawford, R. W. Harris, J. M. Cutchin, Jr., E. C. Harris, Rev. F. W. Paschal, J. E. Swain, Rev. N. M. Harrison, J. W. Boyle, Rev. A. G. Dixon, Rev. C. L. Whitaker, H. A. Finch, T. —Let every charge seek to have a good closing.

FOREVER.

Forever—O blessed promise!

Forever—O blissful word!

There's a shelter for every tempest
For all who will trust the Lord.

No danger can ever befall them;
No want shall they ever know;
But always in perfect safety
And peace, shall His loved ones go.

Whatever the danger nigh us;
Though sin should our hearts beguile,
His strong arm will ever shield us—
Doubts melt 'neath His loving smile.

Though oft'times our footsteps falter,
He'll guide them in paths of peace;
And if we but follow humbly,
His mercy will never cease.

THOSE SUNDAY RIDES TO DEATH.

Nearly every Monday morning's paper reports the death of one or more persons in automobile wrecks. Sometimes it is whole families wiped out or nearly so. These reports are shocking, or were until we became accustomed to expect them. We should not, however, permit ourselves to become reconciled to needless death. Life is precious and should be so regarded. What can be done about this mad rushing into the jaws of death on the part of so many? Of course none of them expects to be killed. But the fact remains that many enter upon courses known to be fraught with danger. They gambol with death, and should not be surprised when death wins. They take chances with their lives that they would not take with their money. Some of course are killed wholly through the fault of others. Accidents that could not be foreseen destroy the lives of some. But it is not to be doubted that more caution on the highways would lessen the number of accidents and reduce the number of deaths. Are the laws of the road the best possible? Are they properly enforced? But after the State has done all it can do to make travel safe it will not be safe until individuals take more care. The person who drives a car should constantly realize that his own life and the lives of others are more or less in his hands. He assumes a great responsibility who ventures forth on the public highway in charge of a machine that may easily become an engine of destruction.

—Pastor Gerringer is preparing for another evangelistic meeting at Calvary to begin the third Sunday in October. He will have Mr. Hess of Greensboro to lead the singing. A Burlington federation is expected to be present at least one night.

—Again we request contributors to send in matter as early as possible. This week we received more on Wednesday morning than we could possibly get in. We regret to defer publication, but sometimes have no alternative.

THE STORY OF JONAH.

Deep students of the Bible see a much deeper meaning in portions of the book than does the casual reader. The story of Jonah is one of these portions. To the casual reader it is a wonderful story of how God brought an unwilling and fleeing prophet to the fulfillment of his mission. It also reveals the mercy of God to those who are sincerely penitent. Jonah manifests an ignoble spirit both in trying to flee from his task and in his desire that the city whose destruction he had predicted should be destroyed on schedule time. He has a controversy with God over the matter, and when God protests that there are in the city "More than sixscore thousand persons that cannot discern their right hand from their left hand; and also so much cattle," we almost wonder that Jonah did not repay, "But, Lord, why didn't you think of the infants and the dumb brutes in the first place."

Jonah holds his own honor in higher regard than he does the lives of the people in the great city.

Some Bible students see in the story of Jonah much more than a simple narrative of Jonah's career as a prophet. They regard it as a parable designed to represent the Jewish people in their attitude and relation to the Gentile world. It was the purpose of God to bless all nations through the Jewish nation. They were chosen as God's missionary people. But they were not true to the divine purpose. They regarded the heathen as dogs and did not recognize them as brethren. They failed to carry to the heathen world the spiritual lessons God had given them. They did not preach the preaching that God gave them. The great fish that swallowed Jonah in the mind of these interpreters represents the nations that led Israel into captivity until God delivered them.

In the view of these scholars the book was written to help bring the Jewish people into right attitude toward the other nations, to lead them to understand that God cares for all men and is not willing that any should perish. The book is supposed to have been written long after the time of Jonah the facts of whose life furnished the foundation for the story given in the book. The great truth of the book is that God loves all men. We are not to infer that God by His providence drives all men to the performance of their duties.

Jesus refers to the preaching of Jonah and the repentance of the people of Nineveh. This we therefore regard as a fact, though some writers have no difficulty in thinking that Jesus might have referred to it in the way He did, knowing that the account was not historical.

—Prof. Paul S. Kennett is preaching to the Asheboro congregation once each Sunday.

—Miss Margaret Hartsell, Calvary Church organist, is visiting relatives in the eastern part of the State. Her place at the church is taken by Mrs. Mary Bissett.

—Some of Uncle Sam's holidays seriously interfere with our business, as they stop mail delivery. Last Monday, "labor day," stopped the work of thousands of people, including mail carriers, but it brought no rest to poor printers, but on the contrary made their work in some respects more difficult. What is the use of "labor day," anyhow? All American citizens should be laborers. Why stop from work one good Monday in the year and call it "labor day?" We protest against this sop to working people. Instead of showing respect for them, it seems to show contempt. Yet we presume the American Federation of Labor is responsible for the observance of the day and the law authorizing it. But what Congress really has the right to stop people from work on one of the six work-days of the week?

—In a certain town in North Carolina where the Methodist Protestants are trying to organize a church, people of the established churches are trying to discourage the effort, saying there are churches enough already, though there are more than five hundred unchurched people in the town. These objectors remind one of those who forbade a man to cast out devils in Jesus' name because he "followed not with them." Who is to decide whether a band of Christians should work to establish another church in a place, this band themselves or those who have no interest save a competitive one? Where people cannot unite because of conflicting views, shall not all be permitted to work for the cause of Christ in the way they think they can best work? The new enterprise may in the long run cost many thousand dollars, but if it succeeds in saving one soul that would not have been saved, won't it be worth the money, especially if it is your soul?

—Mrs. M. S. Ray who rotates between Eagle, Idaho, and Troy, Oregon, in remitting for the Herald says she is the only pioneer member of Mount Zion church in Buncomb county. She doesn't mind telling her age. She says she is past ninety. She has long been a faithful member of the Methodist Protestant Church. She is to be highly commended for her loyalty.

—Be patient with the man who disagrees with you about a matter. It may be that after he has thought about it more, he may come to agree with you; and it may be that after you have thought about it more, you may come to agree with him.

—The town of Shelby is rejoicing in a rapid growth. In 1920 it had 3,609 people, now it has 8,854. Bro. C. B. Way was one of the enumerators in the recent census.

SMOKERS ENTITLED TO FACTS.Will H. Brown.

Prof. John Robertson, who says he had been a smoker for years, was quoted in the Los Angeles Sunday Times at considerable length. He began his letter by saying:

"I noticed on a billboard the other day these words emblazoned: 'The Smoker Is Entitled To The Facts.' The facts were that this advertiser's brand of cigarettes are being sold in large quantities. It occurred to me that there are some other facts not stated in this advertisement, to which the smoker is entitled. He gets a dark-brown taste, dirty-looking teeth, impaired digestion, and a jumpy heart. He is entitled to know that it is a poor habit, a rather nasty habit, a habit that costs a great deal more than it is worth. He is entitled to know that tobacco is a Drug and that the steady smoker is a Drug Addict—the steady smoker who asserts that he can leave off tobacco without a struggle is either lying or kidding himself.

"At the same time, any Real Man can quit it short off, if he has a genuine desire to do so, at the expense of more or less acute discomfort, lasting from two days to two weeks. He is also entitled to know that it is easier to quit smoking Right Now than it is to taper off; the taper-off nearly always tapers on again."

Here are some more facts that smokers should know: Of 205 students dismissed from the University of Ann Arbor, Mich., in the early part of 1925, because of poor scholarships, only twenty-five were girl students. Just about the proportion of boys to girls among smoking and non-smoking students. Among 201 students at Clark University, only 18.3 per cent. of the smokers won academic honors, while 68.5 per cent. of the non-smokers won the honors.

"OUR CONVERSATION IS IN HEAVEN."

(An Address by Bishop W. A. Quayle. Reprinted from Zion's Herald.)

I wish you would read this with me. I did not say it; I could not; and if I had thought it up, I should not have dared to say it. I would have thought it was poetry and that it had better not be talked. Here it is: "Our conversation is in heaven." I would read on, but I cannot go further. I guess we will stop there: "Our conversation is in heaven." The American Revision says, "Our citizenship is in heaven." I love the American Revision as a subsidiary voice, but I love that great old music box of the other version, because when we read it out loud it is like having John Milton at an organ, playing on the organ and singing. "Our conversation is in heaven."

Now, some one is saying, "Let us be careful how he has his exegesis." Some people never can get further than exegesis. Exegesis is a good place to start, but a poor place to conclude. Let us pay attention to the lift of the voice of God. It would seem that "in heaven" is the end of this strophe; and "in heaven" is where the stars are, and the mornings, and the suns that we cannot see but know they are there. It would seem as if, according to this poet, we were amongst the heavenly bodies, and it would seem as if we were a part of the celestial geography, and a part of the divine astronomy.

It is said that we talk about heaven too much. My mind and observation are that we do not talk about it enough. The ground is good—oh, it is good ground. I am like John Burroughs in one matter. Whenever I see newly ploughed ground, I want to eat it, it smells so good, and I think it might taste better; but out of deference to the crops I forbear. Oh, it is a blessed ground! It bringeth forth violets and sweet-william by the flowing waters, and it bringeth forth daisies on the hill, and it bringeth forth sunflowers on the prairie. The ground is good; but there is not enough of it for the kingdom of God to house its folks in. This world is not big enough for God to hold a love feast in. We have got to have a bigger country and we have got to have a longer life together. This country is going to quit after a while. I do not remember the date, and if I did I would not mention it this morning; but it will not stay long enough.

Was not beloved Bishop Bishop Smith here four years ago? Yes. Where is he now? In heaven. Was not Bishop Walden here four years ago, with his stooped shoulders and his strange, keen eye? Where is he now? In heaven. Was not Bishop Warren here, with his stalwart figure that looked as if he could walk across the landscape of eternity and never get tired? Yes. Where is he now? He is on the landscape of eternity, taking his walk. Was not Robert McIntyre here four years ago, with his dreamy, far-away look? Yes. Where is he now? He is where he looked. Was not Bishop Moore here with the spirit of a soldier and the heart of an angel? Oh, yes. Where is he? He is over where soldiership and angelhood are one. Was not Naphtali Lucecock, that crystal soul and winsome personality, here? Where is he now? He is with the crystal Christ. Ah, that company of bishops, brethren! They were here but a few years ago, and are they not here now. But we have to get acclimated to the country where we are going to be forever. "Our conversation is in heaven."

What is conversation? Well, I am sure it is all we are in the long run. If you listen to a man talk long enough, you will hear all he knows—plus. "Our conversation is in heaven." Ah, brothers, whether it be exegesis or no, let us know this, that whatever we say ends in heaven. Why? This end of the sentence is here, but the other end of the sentence is always in heaven. A woman, a preacher's wife—and her husband is here this morning—said to me with a strange quaver in her voice like music beginning, "You know, Brother Quayle, that our daughter, our only daughter, is in the glory land." Ah, me! She began talking of a daughter here, and she ended talking of a daughter there. The other end of our conversation is always in heaven, thank God! We are all orators when we get religion, because the other end of our talk is heavenly eloquence.

Some one says, "This word means 'occupation.' Yes, it does, thank God! it means 'occupation'—our occupation is in heaven. You say, 'No. It is in Dover. It is in New York. It is in Kansas City.' Where are Dover, New York, and Kansas City? They are down at the foot of the hill called Zion, right down at the foot of the hill; and if you look up, when the smoke lifts you will see the glittering of the holy towers, and hear the voice of God as He looks over and says, down to the world, "Good-morning, occupation. Good morning." Down at the foot of the hill the job goes on, but up at the top of the hill the job concludes.

Money—I heard that word once, although I am not strictly familiar with it. I have heard the word. What is money? Something to be earned on the ground and invested in eternity: That is money. And as we work at our work, what are we doing? "Oh," said a woman, "I am just an ordinary woman, and I am taking care of the baby." Thank God, God is mothering the baby.

A woman who is rearing a baby, what is she doing? Rearing somebody for eternity. Our occupations are all not only under the eye of God, but they are in the territory of eternity. Our occupation is in heaven, thank God. Man, you who sweep the street, sweep it well, and maybe God will give you a job sweeping the golden pavement after a while, if you do your work well here. He will need somebody to do that sort of work, when some of the saints come in and walk over the pavement; He will need some one to sweep the dust away, I should not wonder! You be busy about it. Man, who who are a statesman, get eager for God, and maybe He will call you into His cabinet in heaven. Our occupation is in heaven, thank God!

But our friendship, where is it? Oh, it is in heaven, too. You know, I am one of the vagabonds of God, by the grace of my brethren. They said to me, "Brother Quayle, you go as an itinerant; and out in places where people are not careful what they hear, you speak." So there I am; and do you know, people sometimes say to me, "Why, Brother Quayle, do you not get tired of going around and seeing people?" No, praise God! Why? Because I am making some friendships for eternity. I am just picking up some new friends, so that if I get to heaven, with God lifting a lot and myself lifting a little, when I come to the door of eternity maybe a great company will say, "Brother Quayle, welcome." Our friendships are in eternity. Here we are, all together, and the next time we meet we will be in heaven. Thank God. We must not miss it. In heaven is our appropriate country. Robert Browning talks about our appropriate country. Our appropriate country is in heaven and we are in it, but in which end? The north end. Oh, listen, brothers!

The north end is where the eternal cold stays, where the spring winds have no warmth, where the winters are all the year round wild and tumultuous. What is the south end? Where everlasting spring abides. In the south end of heaven we are going to be put. We are in the north end of heaven now, but flowers are even blooming here on the snowdrifts, thank God!

There was a man I knew who had a daughter, and that daughter had never been away from her home at all, to speak of. There came a time when she was going to be married. Her father's custom had always been to tuck that girl in bed at night. No matter how late he got in—and he was out late of nights on the Lord's errands—the door was left ajar and he was ordered by his child to come and tuck her in bed; and so always, whatever time of the night he came in, he would go in softly and tuck her in and kiss her; and sometimes she would partly awake, and say, "Hello, daddy." And he would say, "Good-night, sweetheart." And so it came to the last night that she should be under his roof. He went in, and his heart was full of aching and full of tears, but he neither showed heartache nor tears. He smiled at her, and she said to him, "You are going to tuck me in"; and he said, "Yes, I will tuck you in." So he went in that last night that she was to be under his roof and under the shadow of his love, and he tucked her in, and she put her arms around his neck and drew him close, and he put his arms around her and said, "Oh, my daughter"; and she just said, "Daddy"; and he tucked her in. I wonder if God, in the last night that we are to be in our home on the ground, will not come down and tuck us in. When our eyelids droop, and our voices falter, and we can hear no sound, some one will be there, and it will be God, and He will tuck us in; and He will say, "Sleep sweetly," and then He will stay right there, and will not go away, and by and by He will awaken us with a kiss and say; "It is morning."

O Christ, blessed be God that our conversation is in heaven: We do not want it to be anywhere else. We belong to Thee, and Thou belongest to us, and we belong to heaven. Oh; give us a long, sweet springtime and summer in the land of eternal life. For Christ's sake.

THE ALL-SEEING CHRIST.

In every page of the gospel story of the incarnate life of Jesus shines his yearning love for a lost world. Whether he manifested himself in word or deed, and whether his spoken message took the form of parable, sermon, commandment, or wayside conversation, his love for mankind was always uppermost, looming above all the teachings of the ages in its evident hunger for the responsive love and faith of human hearts. Even in the Old Testament we catch prophetic glimpses of this divine compassion, and we hear prophetic whisperings of the yearning love soon to be embodied in the earthly life of the Son of man. In the eighty-seventh Psalm we are told that "Jehovah loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob"; and in the progressive manifestation of God's love for mankind, this yearning after his chosen people is unveiled as an all-embracing passion, which longs to win, to save and to glorify at once our universal humanity and every immortal soul for whose sake Jesus lived and died.

When Jesus was choosing his disciples, and discovering at the same time those worthy to form the larger circle of his divine friendship, he found Nathanael, and exclaimed: "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!" Nathanael was astonished at the tribute paid to him by a stranger; and he inquired of Jesus: "Whence knowest thou me?" And Jesus answered: "Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the figtree I saw thee." Then Nathanael, being favorably moved toward the Master by the testimony of Philip, and being now convinced by the Lord's intimate knowledge of his innermost heart and life, while he was yet a stranger in the flesh, exclaimed. "Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel!"

The one great lesson of this incident is to be seen in its revelation of the man-seeking mission of Jesus Christ. Diogenes, the Greek philosopher, carried a lantern through the streets of his ancient city in broad daylight, knowing that a thousand tongues would be ready to ask the reason of this eccentric conduct. And when he answered that he was looking for a man, the people understood his object-lesson and the fulness of its meaning. They recognized his act as being at once a rebuke to his generation and a symbol of hope of a better Athens and a better world.

But how infinitely superior was the approach of Jesus to the problem seen by Diogenes! Jesus was no cynic, despite the almost universal wickedness of his age. He saw the good in every heart that held even a remnant of righteousness; and he immediately proclaimed abroad the virtues he discerned. And Jesus carried no feeble, flickering light of an artificial kind. He brought to his mission of man-seeking a light so divine that neither good nor evil could mask itself from his all-seeing eyes. And, best of all, he accompanied his every approach with a yearning love for the true and the good which was so intense that every glimpse of righteousness gave him heavenly joy, and every glimpse of sin gave him compassionate sorrow. In a word, he was the full embodiment of every virtue he sought in the hearts of others.

He was the ideal of humanity realized and exemplified, and this to such a degree of perfection that his very example became an encouragement to like virtues and graces in the character of his followers. He was the very embodiment of goodness and purity, of righteousness and truth. And he was so in love with every quality of the perfect man that he was goodness itself, yearning after goodness, righteousness yearning after righteousness, truth yearning after truth, love yearning after love.

And even as Diogenes, the man-seeker, visualized in his loving parable, a greater and better Athens, so Jesus, the Messiah of God, was looking not only for the Nathanaels of humanity, but for heroic peoples and nations.

And the search-lights of heaven are abroad in all the earth to-day seeking the moral hero among the nations; seeking every nation wise enough and brave enough to overthrow the idols of the ages and rally around the Bethlehem banner of the Prince of Peace.

It is doubtless true that the noblest virtues shine forth on the battle field, and that patriotism, the sacrificial patriotism which leads men to give themselves to their country whether in peace or war, whether in life or death, has always been at once the cradle and the crucible of manhood. But courage and honor are not cultivated by war; they are simply made manifest by the trials of war, precisely as they would be made manifest by any moral crisis in the career of human life. The stuff that heroes are made of, and all the primal virtues of humanity, are qualities apart from circumstance and environment, and they are so inherent and fundamental that they grip and hold the real hero in all the crucibles alike of peace and war.

The virtues displayed in war have been latent in peace, and were invisible only because the eyes of men were too dull to see them; and the lurid glow of the battle field is the searchlight in which they rise and shine, for those who were blind to the gentler manifestation of these same noble qualities in the arena of the home.

The people of the whole world are hungering for peace; for that final and perpetual peace foreseen by the prophet when he said: "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more."

In the realm of peace, however, the greatest battles of life are lost and won; and not only the perpetuation of peace, when once established, but even the very dawn of peace, depends upon the moral courage of the people of God.

In the warfare of the sword, every battle field must bring at once victory and defeat. The victor implies the vanquished. And, even when contemplating the holiest wars of human history, this reflection must beget a degree of sympathy and of sadness in every noble heart, not alone because the wrong is sometimes triumphant over the right, but because, through moral contradictions in human nature and in human society, a little of the right goes down with the destruction of world-wide wrongs, and a little of the wrong prevails with the right. So weak and fallible, indeed, is human judgment, that the good man often goes up to victory or down to defeat on the wrong side in a military conflict, while the man essentially bad is often marshaled, by the sheer force of environment, on the side of righteousness.

But the moral questions of life are clearly individualized, and every Christian is free; with the sure legacy of final accountability, to take the side of truth and righteousness. And to the moral victor in the battle of life, all the world pays tribute, whether in the applause of his own generation or in the oracles of history. And to those who have already fought the good fight and won the victory; to those who rest from their labors, while their works do follow them; to the heroes of the home and the city; to the crowned heroes of the church, the state and the school; to the heroes of art and science and literature; to the heroes of trade and commerce; to the heroes of the factory and the field—to these departed moral heroes in the battle of life the God of love has given a sure reward. Many of these died for their country; but others simply lived for their country! But they lived for their country in a spirit of self-sacrifice which made them always ready to die, at the call of patriotism; and they lived for humanity, always ready to die at the call of civilization; and they lived for God, always ready to die at the call of God.—Editorial in The Methodist Recorder.

—Brother W. C. Jones, of Franklinsville, who was killed by a stump puller last Saturday, was the man who led in the building of the Methodist Protestant church near Franklinsville some years ago. The building was destroyed by a storm and was never rebuilt. His funeral on Sunday was attended by a great concourse of people.

—It is not often that we are called upon to publish the marriage of one of our ministers, but we are this week. See column of marriage notices.

—Mrs. Rea of Charlotte and her daughter, Mrs. Terrell, of Greensboro, were among the visitors at Calvary church last Sunday night.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES FOR SEPTEMBER 16.

Topic: "The Harvest of our lives—what shall it be?" Gal. 6:7-10; Proverbs 11:17-20; 2 Cor. 5:10.

Daily Bible Reading.

M. Sept. 7—Harvest of disappointments. Gen. 27: 1-13, 43-46.

T. Sept. 8—Harvest of tears. Ruth 1: 1-6, 19-22.

W. Sept. 9—Harvest of joy. John 4. 31-38.

T. Sept. 8—Harvest of tears. Ruth 1:1-6, 19-22 31-40.

F. Sept. 11—Harvest of punishment. Matt. 25:41-46.

S. Sept. 12—Harvest of peace. Phil. 4: 1-7.

Dr. John F. Cowan suggests the following
Topic Text Teachings.

Gal. 6:7—The harvest inevitably follows the seed.

Gal. 6:8—The harvest is like the seed.

Gal. 6:9—The Spirit furnishes good seed.

Prov. 11:17—We can anticipate harvest joys while yet sowing."

Sowing and Reaping.

In farm life a man sows for the express purpose of reaping. The harvest is the result of his sowing, and he reaps of the same kind that he sows.

In our lives we should also sow with the express purpose of reaping. And we should remember that we must reap of the same kind we sow. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap" is a fundamental law that runs through the entire universe. It is true in the physical, mental, and spiritual realm.

Jesus taught in Matt. 7:15-20, that a tree is known by its fruits. He said, "Ye shall know them by their fruits. . . . Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. . . . Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."

A human being is known by what he does. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he," and as he is so he speaks and does. His words and his actions are the evidences of what he is.

Notice the Daily Readings.

Monday—A harvest of disappointment—This shows a disappointment in parents of their children, and this disappointment came because of double dealing on the part of the parents toward their children.

Tuesday—A harvest of tears. The tears were the result of affliction, and the affliction came about because of disobedience to the commands of God.

Wednesday—A harvest of joy. This harvest of joy came because of obedience, and the resultant success. And Jesus said, "He that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together."

Thursday—A harvest of praise. Praise because of duty well done. Read Matt. 25:31—40, and find what leads up to the statement of the Master when He said,—"And the king shall answer and say unto them, verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Friday—A harvest of punishment. This immediately follows the above, so read on in Matt. 25:41-46, and see the results that follow in a life of selfishness.

Saturday—A harvest of peace. "Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, Rejoice." "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

The Deeds Done in the Body.

You will find that some object to having one say, "A man shall be judged according to the deeds done in the body." But what is the judgment but the harvest? And 2 Cor. 5:10 says, "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."

Things To Pray For.

1—Thank the Lord for the assurance that we shall reap as we sow.

2—Thank the Lord for the assurance of a harvest of joy and peace to His true child.

3—Pray the Lord that He will direct in all our sowing.

4—Pray the Lord to help us to so sow and reap that in it all He may be glorified.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

All boarding students should register Wednesday, September the 16th, day students register Tuesday, the 15th. Dormitories will not be open for students before the 16th.

Dr. McCulloch has been compelled to resign as professor of mathematics on account of his duties as editor and publisher of the Herald and Prof. W. F. McCanness, A. B., A. M., University of N. C., has been chosen to take his place.

Mrs. P. E. Lindley, B. S., Flora Macdonald College, succeeds Miss Robertson as teacher of Home Economics.

Rev. N. M. Harrison, Jr., has decided to do graduate work at Chicago University for a year and is on a leave of absence. Mr. H. A. Garrett succeeds him as Bursar of the college.

Books, Books.

While we did well last year in getting books, as we now have more than 3000 volumes, we are still wanting books. We want to get a full set of all standard fiction. Any one who has a set of standard fiction he or she is willing to give the college, drop me a line stating what it is and I will tell you whether we have such a set or not, if not we will be glad to pay freight on all such books. While we will be glad to receive any good book for the library, and be still gladder to receive money for good books; we are just now trying to have a full list of all standard fiction for our library.

Let us know what you can give us.

Dr. A. T. Allen Reassures Us.

In a conversation with the State Supt. of Public Instruction, last week he reassured me that his board would give full credit for the work done at High Point College. This removes or should remove all doubt in the minds of any who feared that credit would not be given for work done here.

October First Last Call.

On the first of next month the last payment to the college building fund is due. We greatly appreciate the faithfulness of those who have kept with us all the way. It was a big thing we set out to do and it is a great pleasure that so many of our people have been interested enough to pay to this cause. And we hope that no one will now fail us. We must have funds and ought to have all that is now due the college at once. Please, please pay us what you promised and pay it Now.

Fraternally yours,
R. M. Andrews.

Bess Chapel and Bessemer City.—We have not reported in so long that we hardly know where to begin. Bess Chapel held children's day service the 2d Sunday in July. It was one of the best services of the kind I have witnessed lately. Much credit is due Miss Velma Beam and others who assisted her in training the children. We had printed programs which added to the service. Miss Annie Hull collected money and ordered some much needed offering plates.

During July we taught a vacation Bible school for eight days. We began in the morning at 8:30 and closed at 11:30. One of the teachers conducted the chapel service each morning. The children were given favorite scripture verses to quote each morning. After the chapel service one of the teachers told a missionary story. We then divided the school into three classes and all studied the catechisms. The two classes of the smaller children studied the children's catechism published by Dr. Lewis, and the older ones studied the larger catechism published by Dr. Tagg. We then gave the children half an hour to play. The smaller children were told Bible stories during the last period, while the older ones studied the life of St. Paul. We enrolled 101 in the school and had an average attendance of 60. The principal helpers in the school were Mr. Doras Beam, Miss Annie Hull, Miss Velma Beam, Mrs. J. C. Beam and Mrs. Essie Bess. We thank each one who helped to make the school possible. All were well pleased with the school. We feel that much good was accomplished. It prepared the way for our revival that started the second Sunday in August.

Rev. H. F. Surratt came to us on Monday and did the preaching during the meeting. The services continued for ten days, closing Tuesday night after the third Sunday in August. We had a good meeting. The church was greatly revived. There were 66 conversions and 41 added to the church. As an appreciation for the noble service of Bro. Surratt we presented him a purse of $61.00. We welcome him to come and be with us again. We were pleased to have Rev. John Tharpe of the M. E. South to preach for us at Bess Chapel fifth Sunday morning in August. He married Miss Anna Brown whose father and mother belong to our church at Bess Chapel.

Things are moving along about like usual at the Bessemer City church. Interest has been a little better for a couple of Sundays. Both churches are somewhat behind with the finances, but are trying to catch up as fast as possible. We are planning a meeting for Bessemer City this fall. May God bless and prosper the work at each of the churches.

E. A. Bingham.

Randleman News.—All of the churches are going right on with the regular services in spite of the hot weather and dusty roads.

Our revival at Mt. Lebanon which was to have begun yesterday has been postponed until the third week in October on account of blocked road. Revival at New Salem begins 3rd Sunday in September. We are hoping and praying for great meetings. Miss May Parsons has returned to her home here after attending both sessions of summer school at N. C. C. W. We are glad to have her back. She is church pianist, president of missionary society and treasurer of the ladies' aid society; also teacher in the graded school here. Misses Mary and Winnie Dosier after spending their vacation here with their parents, Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Dosier, have returned to their schools. Miss Mary went to Henderson where she has taught for a number of years in the High School, and Miss Winnie went to Drexel where she taught last year.

Miss Esther Brookshire has returned to Elon College after spending the summer with her parents Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Brookshire. Miss Brookshire is one of our Philathea girls and we will miss her very much, but our good wishes go with her.

Mr. A. B. Caudle and daughters Misses Sallie and Bartie have returned from an automobile trip to Russeville and other points in Indiana. They visited Mr. Caudle's daughter, Mrs. J. Carl Swain, of Russelville, Ind.

Mrs. Marshal Hughes, one of our members, is rightly sick, but we are praying for her speedy recovery.

Mrs. J. F. Dosier has returned home after spending her vacation in Baltimore, where she visited her son, Mr. A. N. Dosier. Mrs. Dosier has a number of brothers and sisters in Baltimore whom she visited also. She reports a nice trip.

The Ladies' Aid Society are still hard at work. Right now they are getting ready for their Dahlia show which will be held before long. They have recently paid for screening back porch of parsonage. This adds much to the comfort of the preacher's family.

The last thing they did was to present this writer with a nice dress ready to wear. This was very much appreciated.

The Baraca and Philathea classes have not been idle either. A few days before going away to Sanatorium Miss Nora Hughes came to see me and handed me some money, saying, "Our class wanted to do something to help and the Baracas did too." The two classes had sent their best wishes backed up with dollars and prayers.

I am glad to be back among such loyal people, and I am hoping and praying to soon be well and strong and able to do something for those who have done so much for me.

On August the 29th the new Salem Sunday school went on a picnic to Hayworth Springs near Mitchell's Grove.

There were plenty of folks, plenty of dinner and plenty of watermelons. Everyone seemed to have a good time. On our way home we stopped a few minutes at our Children's Home.

We were glad to have with us that day Mr. and Mrs. Ogburn Wall of Jacksonville Florida, who were visiting Mr. Wall's sister Mrs. Chas. Hayes of New Salem.

Rev. J. F. Cosier and Mr. Julius Hanner and son, are visiting in western N. C. for a week.

Mrs. W. H. Neese.

Friendship.—This is the name of our new Methodist Protestant Church located about two miles southwest of Chase City, Va., on the Clarkesville road. For some time our people here have been looking forward to the day when they would have a Methodist Protestant Church home. That day has come and they now have a nice country church building and 103 members, a good Sunday school, and a ladies' aid society, with every member of the church belonging to it.

After being appointed pastor of this new work we made our visit as such in May. The Black Branch Baptist people opened their door to us and we held service there on the night of the third Sunday in May. On this trip we made plans to get our church building ready to open for service the fourth Sunday in June, which we did and we had a good day. Then on the second Sunday in August we went into our revival meeting which was carried on just 15 days. These were 15 days of service, pleasure and profit for which we are thankful to the Lord. In the midst of these days our president came and preached three wonderful sermons and organized the church with about 89 members; but at the close of another week we had 103 members enrolled.

We have some splendid people here and have reason to believe they will be heard from in the future for their good works.

James H. Trolinger..

—Why do you go to church?

Asheville.—The work of the church is going along generally about as usual. There are encouraging signs, however, indicating improvement. The congregations have been larger the past three or four months than at any time since I have known the church. This applies especially to the morning service. There are a considerable number of visitors at each service.

On the third Sunday in last month, while the pastor was down the country, Miss Verda McIntire's class of young ladies had their graduating exercises, having completed the course in Teacher Training. The exercises were very interesting, I am told.

Finances are a bit slow, but doing mighty well considering the extraordinary amount of sickness and consequent expense the membership has been to this year. We hope to meet the full Budget both for the local church and for the conference claims, and with a little extra effort will do so. The Ladies Aid Society is keeping up ahead on its payments on the improvements. This will be out of the way about conference time; and they will be ready for some thing else.

Our sick folks are about all well again. Bro. George Bates is still hobbling about on crutches as a result of an automobile accident, but will be able to get back to work shortly.

Bro. J. B. Hyatt was greatly surprised and delighted a few days ago when the man for whom he is working as building contractor, presented him with a beautiful 17-jewel gold watch.

Bro. E. H. Pratt and family have been visiting his parents on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. They returned to-day.

We are planning for Rally and Home Coming Day the next fourth Sunday.

C. W. Bates, Pastor

THE HYMNS WE LOVE.

The First Church Durham, N. C., has recently held an interesting voting contest, the object being to find the hymns that are best loved by the people. The Church Bulletin sums up the results as follows:

"Out of the 87 hymns voted as 'favorites' last Sabbath the following dozen received the highest number of votes:

How Firm a Foundation. Ye Saints of the Lord.

All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name.

The Son of God Goes Forth to War.

O Beautiful for Spacious Skies.

Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty.

Immortal Love Forever Full.

Day Is Dying in the West.

The Church's One Foundation.

Majestic Sweetness Sits Enthroned.

Nearer My God to Thee.

Lead Kindly Light.

O Zion, Haste.

Note.—The following were close seconds:—Jeus, I Live to Thee; Safely Through Another Week; The Day Thou Gavest Lord Is Ended; In the Cross of Christ I Glory; Jesus, Lover of My Soul; A Charge to Keep I Have; Hail to the Brightness; Savior, Like a Shepherd Lead Us; Faith of Our Fathers; In the Hour of Trial; Love Divine; Onward Christian Soldiers; Abide With Me."—Selected.

THE WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

"The Past at Least is Secure."

The enrollment last year was the largest in the history of the Institution, classified as follows: Special 5, Juniors 13, Middlers 12, Seniors 12, and Post-graduates 13.—total 55. The numerical growth has not been spasmodic or rapid but constantly increasing, and every year witnesses new growth in every activity of the Seminary. In every section of the Church where its work is known it is appreciated and its friends have multiplied with every passing year.

The Present is Pleasing.

It is a delight to every loyal Methodist Protestant to stand upon the campus and witness all the architectural beauties which have recently appeared. The New Seminary Building, erected at a cost of $190,000, was dedicated in December, 1920, but it appears as fresh and attractive as the day it was dedicated. No stranger passing by ever fails to pause, look with intense pleasure, and make use of the most vigorous adjectives expressive of his joy. Competent critics have testified that from their knowledge of ecclesiastical structures no denomination can boast of a more beautiful Seminary. Side by side with the New Seminary there was built last summer a New Home for the President. The style is that of the Seminary, and the furnishing is all that could be desired for comfort and convenience. No Methodist Protestant visiting the Seminary will ever be other than proud of the provisions made by the Church for the residences of the President and other members of the faculty. The North Carolina and West Virginia Cottages have been recently painted and they appear almost new.

The Future is Radiant with Hope.

The regular Curriculum has been recently enriched by the addition of several New Courses of Study. They include Religious Education, Comparative Religions, Evangelism, and Church and Country Life. This preparation for advanced study in the most modern lines of Church activity is making its appeal to a larger circle of would-be religious leaders, and plans are already being made to minister to an ever-increasing number of such. Moreover, the Post-graduate Course, also recently established, is not only meeting the demand of our own Alumni but is attracting more and more ministers of other denominations. In the different courses last year there were Methodist Protestants, Methodist Episcopal, and Episcopalian, and their personal influence will enlist more of their faith in the days to come.

The Faculty are on the Job all the Year.

To dissipate a delusion that exists in spots throughout the Church I notify all victims of this delusion that vacation from May until September does not mean for the Faculty a season of loafing. They are working for the interests of the Seminary and the annual conferences during those months. Every summer the demand increases for their expert services and they are rendered gladly and unselfishly. Professor Shroyer was a teacher in the Maryland Conference Summer Institute at Westminster, giving instruction in The Daily Vacation Bible School and in Religious Education of Adolescents. He was also engaged by the Ohio Young People's Conference to teach their Classes in Churches of Distinction in Town and County and in The Teachings of the Prophets. And the ubiquitous Dr. Forlines has been in Ohio serving Seminary interests, and assisting Summer Conferences of Young People in North Carolina, Indiana, Illinois, Maryland, Pittsburg, Ohio, and Iowa-Missouri. He also lectured to the preachers in their Summer Institutes in North Carolina and Indiana, and also to the Indiana Conference in Annual session. And as for the President of the Seminary he is ready to answer the call of any pastor who may need his services and to be "a troubler in Israel," for money in season and out of season. The next Semester will begin September 22nd and a fine class of new students will matriculate. A catalogue will be mailed and any other information given by addressing the President, Westminster, Md.

WHAT IS THE MATTER?

Rev. C. P. Nowlin, the treasurer of the Maryland Conference, reported that in the month of July, this year, he received from the charges of the Maryland Conference only $2,236.54, as Children's Day offering.

He now reports that in the month of August just closed, he received from the charges of the Maryland Conference as Children's Day offerings only $1118.17.

Some of the Maryland Conference Sunday schools held Children's Day in May, many of them in the month of June, and others later, but it is very likely that practically all the schools held the service before the end of August.

What has become of the other Children's Day offerings, for by special notices in the church papers, and in our weekly articles we appealed to all our pastors and Sunday school superintendents to kindly send in to their annual conference treasurer the offering at the earliest possible date.

The reason for this is that the Board is paying interest on loans, and urgently needs all the Children's Day offerings to meet the heavy monthly demands upon its income, and to meet its obligations assumed when receipts were delayed and insufficient.

The Children's Day offerings were contributed for a specific purpose, and that is Foreign Missions, and the Union Board, being charged with the administration of the entire foreign work, and entirely dependent upon the contributions of Methodist Protestants, has banked upon this year's Children's Day offerings, and did its utmost to enlist all our Sunday schools in holding a service, and in making as large an offering as possible in commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the service, and to honor the memory of Rev. Dr. F. T. Tagg who introduced the first Children's Day Service in our schools in 1885.

We again earnestly appeal to our pastors and superintendents to see at once that their Children's Day offering is sent in to your Annual Conference treasurer that the Union Board may have the use immediately of the money contributed for its work abroad.

There is no need to hold the offering until conference meets, and it certainly ought not to be used for any local purpose, but should be sent where it belongs.

The Maryland Conference paid in as Children's Day offerings last year over $12,000.00, but we will be painfully disappointed if the Sunday schools do not contribute this year much more than that.

But quite a large part of that was paid from January to the meeting of the Conference in April.

Brethren, this ought not to be. You seriously embarrass the Union Board by withholding the Children's Day offering. Please send it in now.

Latest News From India.

In sending her report, Miss Miskimen adds "We have been having such an epidemic of influenza among the girls in the school that there has been little time for any outside work. Mrs. Hite had it, and Miss Perley just escaped it with a heavy cold. There have been over sixty girls sick altogether, and at one time there were thirty in bed at once. The worst is over now, but there are still a few new cases almost every day. Miss Perley has been very busy, and has done wonder see how a doctor could have done more. One girl died, but the others are all getting better."

MY MOTHER'S GOD.

At a fashionable party, a young physician present spoke of one of his patients whose case he considered a very critical one. He said that he was very sorry to lose him, for he was a noble young man, but very unnecessarily concerned about his soul, and that the Christians increased his agitation by talking with him and praying with him. He wished Christians would let his patients alone. Death was but an endless sleep, the religion of Christ a delusion and its followers were not persons of the highest culture and intelligence.

A young lady sitting near, and one of the gayest of the company, said: "Pardon me, doctor, but I am not a professor of religion; I never knew anything about it experimentally; but my mother was a Christian. Times without number she has taken me to her room, and with her hand upon my head she has prayed that God would give her grace to train me for the skies. Two years ago my precious mother died, and the religion she so loved during life sustained her in her dying hour. She called us to the bedside and, with her face shining with glory, asked us to meet her in heaven, and I promised to do so. And now," said the young lady, displaying deep emotion, "can I believe that this is all a delusion? that my mother sleeps an eternal sleep? that she will never waken again in the morning of the resurrection, and that I shall see her no more? No, I cannot, I will not, believe it." Her brother tried to quiet her, for by this time she had the attention of all present. "No," said she; "brother, let me alone; I must defend my mother's God, my mother's religion!"

The physician made no reply, and soon left the room. He was found shortly afterwards pacing the floor of an adjoining room, in great agitation and distress of spirits. "What is the matter?" a friend inquired. "Oh," said he, "that young lady is right. Her words have pierced my soul." And the result of the conviction thus awakened was that both the young lady and physician were converted to Christ, and are useful and influential members of the Church of God.

Readers, stand up for Jesus at all times and in all places wherever you hear His name reviled, or His counsel set at naught. Rather, let the language of your heart be, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.—Selected.

SIN HINDERS THE WORK OF GOD.

It is too well known to need repeating, that sin harbored in the heart and life of God's professed children can do more to defeat and hinder the progress of the work of God than can any outwardly opposing force.

We need not to go back to the history of ancient Israel where Achan brought defeat to the army and caused the death of many by his sin of covetousness and the theft of forbidden wealth. There are examples all about us of a languishing and defeated Zion because of unfaithfulness on the part of one or more of the members.

When Dr. Wilbur Chapman, the great Presbyterian evangelist, was one holding a meeting in the State of Indiana, the people thronged the place of meeting night after night, but the unsaved were unmoved and unresponsive. After laboring five or six days, Mr. Chapman could see no signs of either blessing or victory, and so he called together the pastors of the cooperating Churches to request his release from the engagement. At that meeting, one of the ministers said: "I know where the difficulty is, and I will try to correct it." One of the chief ushers in the meeting, a member of the Church in which this minister was the pastor, a judge of high standing, was living a double life. His conduct was a reproach to the cause of Christ. Whenever he walked down the aisle a spiritual chill seemed to sweep over the audience. His pastor left the meeting to go to the judge's office, and when alone with him he said, "Judge, it is reported on the street that your life is not right, and that you are a hindrance in the prosecution of this work. If this is true, I want to help you; and if it is untrue, I want to befriend you." The old man's face became pale and his eyes filled with tears, as he said, "It is all true, and more, and I am the most miserable man in the world." They fell upon their knees, the arm of the minister upon the judge, and when the prayer was ended, he had the consciousness of God's forgiveness. At the next public service he was present. The sermon was ended and the hands of the evangelist were raised to pronounce the benediction, when the judge rose and said, "My friends, you have long known me as a professing Christian. I rise to say that I have dishonored my Lord and injured His cause. I ask your forgiveness, as I have asked and received His." The confession was ended with a sob. There was no benediction, but a baptism of tears instead. That was the beginning of a mighty victory. The first invitation to the unsaved brought at least fifty to Christ, and ten days meant the salvation of hundreds.

Let us be faithful in dealing with the sin question. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Wesleyan Methodist.

GETHSEMANE.

Dark, dark the night, the world at rest;
Bitter the anguish in the Savior's breast.
The Father's eye alone in pity there
Sees His dear Son bowed to the earth in prayer.

Behold the Savior in His hour of grief,
As loud He cries for succor and relief—
"Let this cup pass if possible it be!"
'Tis midnight now in dark Gethsemane.
The silent stars above, their watches keeping,
The faithful three outside the garden sleeping,
When suddenly, in saddened tones, yet clear,
The Savior's gentle rebuke they hear:
"Could ye not watch with me one little hour?"
Tho' needing naught of earthly love or power,
His stricken spirit longed for sympathy
That midnight hour in dark Gethsemane.
Gethsemane! O Gethsemane! the years
Have lessened not thy holy power to calm;
Gethsemane! O Gethsemane! thy tears
Have brought to many a heavy spirit balm.
No grief too great to say: "Thy will be done!"

Thus spake of old, God's best-beloved Son.
Oh, comfort sweet for all humanity,
That Christ for us endured Gethsemane.

GOD'S PLAN.

"I just cannot understand why we have to have so many vexations in life, things so so dreadfully—contrary sometimes," said Mrs. Bemis as she sat down in Aunt Ruth's room for a little chat and rest before it was time to get supper.

"It certainly seems very often as if the world was buttoned up wrong, as somebody puts it, for I get what you want and some one else wants what you get. For instance, I had a fit of wanderlust this morning. It seemed to me I just could not stay here at home and work all day but I had to. Mrs. Ames across the street said she was all tired out and did not feel as if she could stir out of the house, and she was invited for an all-day auto trip!

"As for me, the day has been full of miserable petty vexations, one after another, and in a way, I think they are the hardest to bear. If called upon, I might be able to meet even martyrdom heroically, but I go all to pieces if the cereal is burned, or I miss my trolley when I am going to town marketing as I did this morning. That put me back half an hour, and I had to hurry to have lunch on time. Billy took my best umbrella down in the orchard for a tent and broke the handle. Tom forgot to give me a letter so I missed seeing Esther Deane when she went through the city on her way East.

"Those are just samples of the day's happenings. What I cannot understand is why such things have to be so much of the time. Why aren't the events of our daily life so ordered that they move along as they ought instead of going astray? If it did any good it would be different, but it does harm to my disposition. I am sure I could be lovely if I did not get upset so often, so, as I said, I cannot understand why we have to be so tried."

"I know, dear," said Aunt Ruth sympathetically. "I felt very much so myself, but years ago I happened to strike a quotation from Horace Bushnell, and it has been such a help to me that I will get it and read it to you:

"The simple thought of a life which is to be the unfolding of a divine plan is too beautiful, too captivating to suffer one indifferent or heedless moment. Living in this manner, every turn of your experience will be a discovery to you of God, every change a token of His fatherly counsel. Whatever obscurity, darkness, trial, suffering, falls on you; your defeats, losses, injuries; your outward state or relations; what seems hard, unaccountable, severe, or vexations—all these you will see are parts, or constitutive elements in God's beautiful and good plan for you. Take your burdens and troubles and losses, if come they must and will, as your opportunities, knowing God has girded you for greater things than these."

"Isn't that good and a real help? All these vexations are often all helps on our upward way. They aren't just mere happenings; they are a part of God's plan to help us grow."

"What good could my losing the trolley and having to wait in the hot sun, or Billy's breaking my lovely new umbrella, do me?"

"I remember reading once," answered Aunt Ruth laughingly, "that Henry Ward Beecher said a woman prayed for patience and the Lord sent her a green cook!"

"I—see," said Mrs. Bemis. "Hereafter I'll try to let the green cooks in my life fulfill their mission. And if you will let me take that quotation from Bushnell I'll copy it for my Commonplace book. I like it. It sort of glorifies things, doesn't it? Poor Billy, it would have been more comfortable for him if I had understood his mishap as an opportunity to acquire patience. Five o'clock! Dear me! it is almost time to 'eat tea,' as Mr. Oliver used to say, so I must run. Thank you for your good talk, auntie dear. I'll not forget it, I promise you."—Kate S. Gates, in Zion's Herald.

CORNER-STONE LAID AT PINE RIDGE.

The corner stone of our High School Building was laid with appropriate exercises Sunday, August 9th. Rev. J. L. Nichols of Westminster, Maryland, preached the sermon. The attendance and interest were fine, as well as the sermon.

The offerings coming direct to me up to and including the corner-stone laying amounted to $2,040; of which Kentucky folks contributed $715. We are very grateful for every friend and every dollar, but we are longing for more.

The stone foundation of our building is finished; we are now putting up the steel frame and will begin brick work in a few days. In order to pay for material and labor so far, we have had to borrow $4,000.

I am not worried, but undoubtedly we have reached a critical point in our Pine Ridge work. The strain is terrific. Besides all the details connected with the building program, I had to attend our Kentucky Annual Conference August 20-23; High School opened August 24 with an enrollment of 42, and now our grades are beginning work with boys and girls filling every available space, and you can imagine the details.

We are having a dreadful drought and lack of water supply is causing considerable inconvenience.

Friends, we feel the need of your prayers and co-operation more than ever before; please do your best and we will try to do the same.

Sincerely, Thos. R. Woodford, Supt.

BUILDING THE GREAT PYRAMID.

The Pyramid of Cheops, or the Great Pyramid; was at one time included among the seven wonders of the world and is still regarded as one of the greatest engineering feats ever performed by man. Owing to its exposure to the action of the elements for thousands of years, and the convenient quarry that its material provided for the nearby city of Cairo, its dimensions and sharpness of outline have deteriorated, but it still remains the most remarkable monument of antiquity, and attracts wondering pilgrims from every part of the globe.

The Great Sphinx, which stands not far off, would, if it were not for its inviolable silence, tell much of what the Pyramid of Cheops means, but in the absence of this the following account of the building of the pyramid will be found to give the main facts. It is in the words of Herodotus, the "Father of History," who lived in the fifth century before Christ:

Down to the time when Rhampsinites was king, they told me that there was in Egypt nothing but orderly rule, and Egypt prospered greatly but after him Cheops became king over them and brought them to every kind of evil. for he shut up all the temples, and having first kept them from sacrifices there he bade all the Egyptians work for him. So some were appointed to draw stones from the stone quarries in the Arabian mountains to the Nile, and others he ordered to receive the stones after they had been carried over the river in boats, and to draw them to those which are called the Libyan Mountains; and they worked by a hundred thousand men at a time, for each three months continually.

Of this oppression there passed ten years while the causeway was made by which they drew the stones, which causeway they built, and it is a work not much less, as it appears to me, than the pyramid; for the length of it is five furlongs and the breadth ten fathoms and the height, where it is the highest, eight fathoms, and it is made of stone smoothed and with figures carved upon it. For this they said, the ten years were spent, and for the under-ground chambers on the hill upon which the pyramids stand, which he caused to be made as sepulchral chambers for himself in an island, having conducted thither a channel from the Nile.

For the making of the pyramid itself there passed a period of twenty years; and the pyramid is square, each measuring eight hundred feet, and the height of it the same. It is built of stone smoothed and fitted together in the most perfect manner, not one of the stones being less than thirty feet in length. This pyramid was made after the manner of steps, which some called "rows" and other "bases"; and when they had first made it thus, they raised the remaining stones with machines made of short pieces of timber, raising them first from the ground to the first stage of the steps and when the stone got up to this it was placed upon another machine standing on the first stage, and so from this it was drawn to the second upon another machine; for as many as were the courses of the steps, so many machines there were also, or perhaps they transferred one and the same machine, made so as to be easily carried, to each stage successively, that they might take up the stones; for let it be told in both ways, according as it is reported. However that may be, the highest parts of it were finished first, and afterward they proceeded to finish that which came next to them, and lastly they finished the parts of it near the ground and the lowest ranges.

On the pyramid it is declared in Egyptian writing how much was spent in radishes and onions and leeks for the workmen, and if I rightly remember that which the interpreter said in reading to me this inscription, a sum of one thousand six hundred talents of silver was spent; and if this is so, how much besides is likely to have been expended upon the iron with which they worked, and upon the bread and clothing of the workmen, seeing that they were building the works for the time which had been mentioned and were occupied for no small time besides, as I suppose, in the cutting and bringing of the stones and in working at the excavation under ground?

This Cheops, the Egyptians said, reigned fifty years; and after he was dead his brother Chephren succeeded to the kingdom. This king followed the same manner of dealing as the other, both in all the rest and also in that he made a pyramid, not indeed attaining to the measurements of that which was built by the former (this I know, having myself also measured it), and moreover there are no underground chambers beneath nor does a channel come from the Nile flowing to this one as to the other, in which the water coming through a conduit built for it flows round an island within, where they say that Cheops himself is laid; but for a basement he built the first course of Ethiopian stone of divers colors; and this pyramid he made forty feet lower than the other as regards size, building it close to the Great Pyramid.

These stand both upon the same hill, which is about a hundred feet high. And Cephren, they said, reigned fifty and six years.

But Cephren was not a monarch of the caliber of Cheops. He acted very meanly with his daughter, causing her to earn money at the price of her degradation. But the girl took an exceedingly novel revenge. She secretly importuned her friends for money and materials to build a pyramid for herself. After her death the structure was duly erected, and although it is very much smaller than that of the great Cheops, or of her father, it remains a very tangible protest by a weak woman against the tyranny of man.

I AM YOUR CHURCH.

Make of me what you will—I shall reflect you as clearly as a mirror throws back a candle beam.

If I am pleasing to the eye of the stranger within my gates; if I am such a sight as, having seen me, he will remember me all his days as a thing of beauty and service, credit is yours.

Ambition and opportunity call some of my sons and daughters to high tasks and mighty privileges to my greater honor and to my good repute in far places, but it is not chiefly these who are my strength. My strength is in those who are content with what I can offer them and with what they can offer me. It was the greatest of all Romans who said: "Better be first in the little Iberian village than be second in Rome."

I am more than wood and brick and stone—more even than flesh and blood—I am the composite soul of all who call me Home. I am your Church.

"JESUS WEPT."

I'm glad that he stilled the wind and wave

On boisterous Galilee;

I'm glad that he robbed the cruel grave

And set friend Lazarus free;

I'm glad for all that our Saviour wrought

By God's own mighty power,

And for all the truths his lips have taught

I praise to this very hour,

But I'll tell of a thought more sweet to me,

(God grant I may ne'er forget)

'Tis the thought of that hour in Bethany

When Jesus wept.

If your soul is bent 'neath the heavy load

Of some great earthly woe,

And the clouds hang black o'er the stony road

God's voice still calls to go,

I know that you need Christ's mighty power,

The power of the Deity,

But I'm sure that an equal need of the hour

Is the Master's sympathy;

Ah, methinks that to doubt it can only mean

Our troubled minds forget

That sweet and wondrous Bethany scene

Where Jesus wept.

APPEAL OF THE CROSS.

A German student, who had strayed far into doubt and sin, went one day in a fit of desperate levity to see the aged pastor who had been in years past his spiritual guide. "My son," said the saint of God, "tell me your sins that I may show you how to be delivered from them." Immediately the young man began to recite a shameful list of wrong-doings, and again and again, with passionate emphasis for each sin, pronounced the words: "But I don't care for that." The other listened patiently until he had done, and then quietly asked him to comply with a simple request. "Tonight," he said, "and every night when you retire to rest, kneel down and say this: 'Oh, Lord Jesus Christ, Thou hast died upon the Cross for me, that my sins may be forgiven; but I don't care for that,' and come back at the end of a week and tell me your sins again." Consent was lightly given and for three nights the words were said. The fourth saw a penitent, white and trembling, at the old man's door, asking for admission. "I can't say it, and I do care," was his faltering confession. The appeal of the Cross had reached his heart.—F. B. Macnutt,

THE GREATEST OF THESE IS LOVE.

By Rev. L. K. Long.

Saint Luke relates that "when the days were well-nigh come that he should be received up, Jesus steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." The residents of a certain Samaritan village, through which he was to pass, did not receive him favorably. When James and John saw this, they said; "Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down and consume them?" But Jesus turned and rebuked the disciples. The Authorized Version adds that Jesus said further: "Ye know not what spirit ye are of. For the Son of man came not to destroy men's lives but to save them."

The revisers may be right in omitting these words from the American Standard Revision, because they are not found in some of the ancient manuscripts. But the same idea is in Luke 19.10, "For the Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost;" and in John 3:17, "For God sent not his Son into the world to judge the world, but that the world should be saved through him"; and in John 12:47, "If any man hear my sayings, and keep them not, I judge him not; for I am not come to judge the world; but to save the world."

The Apostles John and James had been surnamed by Jesus, "Boanerges; which is; Sons of Thunder." Although they had heard Jesus give the parable of the Good Samaritan and had come upon him talking with the Woman of Samaria at the well, they had still retained the old race and religious prejudices and were ready to punish a show of disrespect toward their Master with fire from heaven.

There has always been a decided tendency among devout Christians to harshly condemn whoever may differ from them in opinion—the more pious the person, the more real the tendency. This arises, in part at least, from the fact that a person is apt to think that his most intimate spiritual experiences and the foundations of his character are so closely related to his opinions that to separate them would be to destroy them. Not finding the same opinions in another person he cannot imagine that such a person has the same or any worthwhile spiritual experience and foundation for character. I venture to assert that neither an editor nor a preacher who thinks for himself and expresses his thoughts, gets through without encountering adverse criticism from some of his readers or hearers. Often this is given and received in good part, and with mutual advantage. But when one threatens to stop the paper or to quit paying his subscription to the support of the church, or calls the editor or the preacher bad names, or invokes the consuming fire of heaven in the shape of charges of heresy; it is time to listen to the words of the Master, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." It is entirely possible that our Lord is no more pleased with violent condemnation of others than with fulsome praise and flattery of himself.

In these days would it not be well to keep in mind Paul's great words, "And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; and the greatest of these is love"? The less important is often over-emphasized to the detriment of the all-important. Among Christians opinion is not so important as love.

Opinion separates people, love draws them together. The greater the divergence of opinion, the more necessary it becomes that love be increased.

Mr. Bryan and Mr. Darrow were arrayed against each other at Dayton. Neither of them was particularly well informed on either science or religion; but there they stood, one as the champion of conservative religion, the other as the advocate of scientific freedom. Many people thought of them as inveterate foes. But they had much in common. Both were intensely human. If you followed the photographers at Dayton you saw these two antagonists forgetting their differences, sitting together in their shirt-sleeves, cracking jokes and hugely enjoying their friendly fellowship. It is a mistake to take lawyers, and other people, too seriously. Apparently there are those who regard Bryan's address—prepared for the jury and the general public, and printed after his death—as his supreme effort, almost equal in value to sacred scripture. Darrow, being a lawyer himself, could see through it. He characterized it as simply a lawyer's address to a jury. I think Bryan, in a sober moment, would have agreed with Darrow on that point.

Any person who has spent much time in court rooms listening to lawyers will appreciate the situation. Bryan wanted to win his case with the jury and with the general public, to which also his plea was addressed. In true lawyer fashion he made use of whatever he thought might serve his purpose. He appealed to the prejudices of his readers. By partial representations, and by misrepresentations—intentional or otherwise—of the positions of the exponents of theistic evolution, he took advantage of the ignorance of those that he addressed. This is quite the accepted style among lawyers who are set on winning their cases. However, it would be well if all lawyers under like circumstances could hear the Master say, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of."

As to the reference to the similarity and the dissimilarity between Colonel Bryan and Colonel Ingersol, to which a correspondent of the Herald recently objected. There was no desire on the part of the present writer to put the two colonels where they did not belong, or in company in which either would be uncomfortable. Each colonel had placed himself, and there was surely no harm in calling attention in a kindly way to a situation not difficult to perceive by an unprejudiced mind. The attractive oratorical gifts of these two men were much alike. In limited information and in more or less unconscious misrepresentation of the position of their opponents they were as like as two peas. Their inability to command the full confidence of voters was similar. Ingersol could not reach high office because a large section of the people did not have confidence in his views on religion. Bryan could not be president because a large section of voters did not have confidence in his social and economic views; and he could not reach the Moderatorship of the Presbyterian General Assembly because the commissioners of that body—conservative as they were—were not willing to trust its destiny to the guidance of one so erratic and unbalanced in his thinking as was the Great Commoner. Ingersol hurt many a Christian believer as he shamelessly attacked and misrepresented the Christian system which he so inadequately understood. And he justly suffered in the loss of the good opinion of multitudes of people. Bryan struck viciously at ministers and teachers who did not accept his interpretation of scripture bearing on disputed questions, he attempted to create in the minds of youth the feeling that they must reject either Christianity or the conclusions of scientific scholars, arrived at through long years of patient investigation. This was in spite of the fact (which was already well known and which he admitted at Dayton) that he had very limited information on those subjects. And he justly suffered in the loss of the good opinion of multitudes of thoughtful people.

I have just read an article by Bishop F. J. McConnell of the Pittsburgh area of the M. E. Church. The bishop writes appreciatingly of Mr. Bryan's ability as a speaker; and recognizes his great influence for good in American life along the line of temperance and the rights of the common people. In the concluding paragraph he takes occasion to make a discriminating criticism of Mr. Bryan's recent activities. Bishop McConnell says:

"The closing months of Mr. Bryan's career were given to the advocacy of Fundamentalism—so-called—and in that advocacy Mr. Bryan said some incredibly foolish things. It was clear from the start that he knew nothing about evolutionary theory, and that he had read practically nothing about it. Here again the fault was not altogether Bryan's, but was in part that of the church. In the last fifty years the theologically trained ministry of the church has made its adjustment to the scientific view of nature and of the Bible. Once adjusted themselves the ministers have done precious little through serious church class-room instruction to help others to an adjustment, so that the present generation of laity is not largely informed on the matters now being debated. They are theologically ignorant, ignorant, that is to say, as to how to reconcile science and theology, and they are afraid. Bryan voiced both the ignorance and the fear."

A few words as to the expressed wish that the two Colonels—Bryan and Ingersol—"may rest in peace and awaken in light." Why should such a wish be so disconcerting? True, the time was when zealots were ready to call down from heaven fire to consume those who dared hold an opinion different from the common view—and their tribe is not yet wholly extinct. But that is scarcely the spirit of Jesus. He pictured the Father waiting and watching for the return of the wayward, mistaken boy. Jesus also said, "What man of you, having a hundred sheep, and having lost one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, Until He Find It? If every person guilty of holding mistaken opinions must be condemned to outer darkness, what will become of Col. Bryan—and all the rest of us? Surely our Heavenly Father is not watching for excuses to cut off his erring children!

—Why do you go to church?

TWO'S COMPANY.

The family was collected round the tea-table, and, as usual, there was more fun and noise than decorum.

"My word, Gobbie, you will have to mind your p's and q's!"

"But don't get putting on airs, if you are going to visit the aristocracy!"

"We musn't call her Gobbie now; she'll be the elegant and dignified member of the family!"

General hilarity greeted the suggestion, for poor Miriam was anything but elegant and dignified, hence "Gobbie," short for hobgoblin, because, they all declared, she looked just like one!

"Don't shake hands with the butler."

"Don't muddle up the fish knives and pudding forks."

"Don't take everything that's handed to you!"

"I'll leave out the wines," said Gobbie.

"Oh, for goodness sake, don't parade your vulgar teetotal ideas!"

"Notice what the other ladies have," suggested Mrs. Lynton; "there are some quite light wines that couldn't possibly hurt you."

"But don't you see, mother, it's not only that; it's a matter of principle!"

"Yes, my dear, but a girl so young as yourself is liable to change her views, and some day you may come to see that moderation is the most sensible course. I certainly should not like you to make yourself conspicuous by persisting in a fad of that kind, immature as you are."

"But mother—"

"Besides," interrupted Gussie, with some heat, "what business have you to set yourself up against us? Why should you be right any more than us?"

"What will you wear?" asked Helen, anxious to divert the conversation into safer channels. She knew that the family temperature was apt to rise to fever heat when Gobbie's temperance ideas were discussed.

"Yes," said Mrs. Lynton, "she would need new things, and I don't like asking your father for the money; it's as much as ever we shall do to pull through this year."

"Mother, do say I may go!"

The upright furrows deepened on Mrs. Lynton's careworn face as she looked at her eighteen-year-old daughter.

"Well, Miriam, I am afraid it will have to be you, since Helen can't go, though it would have been more—"

"Yes, mother, don't be afraid to finish," put in the Hobgoblin, with imperturbable good humor. "Helen's good-looking, and would do more credit to the family physiognomy."

"Well, my dear, Helen's more formed, you are still as irresponsible and lacking in dignity as a child."

"Mother, I promise you I'll behave myself nobly. I'll be as proper as a schoolmarm and as dignified as an alderman."

"Well, we must see what father says."

The family broke up. Helen and Gussie went off to their evening classes, and the younger members settled down to their lessons, while Gobbie and her mother seated themselves beside a great heap of stockings, which had just come in from the wash, and, as usual, seemed to consist entirely of holes.

When Mr. Lynton came home, the matter was put before him. Sir Charles Brabant, who had been greatly favored at the outset of his career by Mrs. Lynton's father, now bethought himself, somewhat late in the day, that he might repay that kindness by bestowing some attention on Mrs. Lynton's children, and had sent an invitation for one of them to spend a few days at Brabant Hall. Helen, who was pretty and refined, would have represented the family with the greatest credit, but she was a music teacher, and could not leave her pupils. Gussie, handsome and clever, was busy with his finals, and Gobbie was the only member of the family not at school.

"I think we ought to manage it," said Mr. Lynton, when he had seen the letter of invitation.

"If Sir Charles had some thought of helping the children, we can't afford to throw away such a chance for them."

And so the matter was decided. A simple evening frock in cream, a neat costume and one or two pretty blouses were added to Gobbie's wardrobe, and when Mrs. Lynton placed in her hands a beautiful old sapphire necklace of exquisite workmanship, Gobbie felt equipped for meeting on terms of perfect equality all the aristocracy of the empire en masse.

When the exciting moment of departure arrived, it was agreed that, after all, she didn't look half bad, and if only she would mind her manners and not chatter, there was just a remote possibility of her safe return without hopeless disgrace to her family. To prevent such a painful contingency, Gobbie was presented with more advice on such delicate matters as deportment and etiquette than any mortal could be expected to assimilate.

A footman was waiting to meet her train, and when, in a few moments, Gobbie was bowling along the smooth, country lanes behind a pair of splendid horses, she felt more than a little elated. But the elation soon evaporated when she arrived and was accorded a lukewarm greeting by a supercilious hostess. "Hopelessly lacking in style," was Lady Joeceyney's inward criticism when she saw Gobbie, and Gobbie herself suddenly felt small and insignificant and homesick as she was led over thick-carpeted floors, through an endless labyrinth of passages, to her room.

Lady Joeceyney's maid appeared just as she was looking at her cream frock and wondering how she was going to fasten it by herself.

"Can I help you, Miss?" asked the maid.

"Thank you," replied Miriam, shyly, "will you fasten my frock for me?"

Gobbie had a pleasant way of speaking, and the maid's face lighted up in response, as she proceeded to give the welcome help.

"This is my first dinner party," confided Gobbie to the kindly woman, "and I do feel so nervous."

"Do you, Miss? Oh, you'll be all right if you do as the other ladies do and keep quiet till you feel sure of yourself. That's what I heard my former young mistress say to a school friend who, same as you, hadn't been to one before."

"And did she get on all right?" asked Gobbie wistfully.

"Yes, Miss, she was very beautiful, and made a good marriage. Are you going to wear the necklace? May I fasten it for you? It will give you the touch of color you're wanting, Miss."

When the maid had gone, Gobbie took up her hand-glass and examined her features with unmerciful candor. "That other girl got on all right," she thought, "but she was beautiful. No one could think me beautiful! My nose is too short, and my mouth is too big, and my skin is freckled all over, and my hair never will look tidy! But, thank goodness, my ears don't stick out, or I should be a hobgoblin and no mistake!" She put down the glass, having quite failed to notice that the sapphire necklace matched her eyes, and gave that touch of distinction which poor Gobbie would have been the last to suspect.

Her host greeted her with a kindly condescension.

"Ah, yes! poor Sam's granddaughter—we called him poor Sam because he couldn't tell on which side his bread was buttered; he was always so busy buttering other people's. Well, well!"

A Captain Wilson was to take her down to dinner, and was duly introduced. He treated her with a condescension which was as obvious as it was galling, and Gobbie was quite thankful when the move was made for the dining-hall. She was tired of confessing that she hadn't read the latest society novel; that she couldn't play golf; knew nothing of bridge, and had never ridden to hounds in her life. She would have liked to explain that they were all too busy at home earning their livings, or preparing to do so, for such diversions, but refrained, out of deference to the family.

It was quite a small dinner party, but it seemed very formidable to diffident Gobbie, and she was more than willing that her companion should devote himself to his other neighbor—a very pretty girl of her own age. Soup was safely over, and Gobbie was preparing to enjoy, as best she might, the next item on the menu, when she happened to glance across the table, and her attention was immediately arrested. She was vis-a-vis with a young man of slight build, whose unattractive features were lighted up by an expression of keen intelligence. He paled to the lips as he turned toward the man who was offering him wine. The man, obviously dissatisfied, passed on at length to the next guest, and the incident might have ended there, had not Sir Charles happened at the moment to glance down the table.

"What! Not taking anything, Wilfrid? Surely we have something in the cellar to suit!"

"Thanks, uncle, I'm off everything in that line, nowadays."

"What! Not keeping up that ridiculous nonsense? Come, come, man, you must be sociable, and do as the rest of us. Symonds! Fetch Mr. Harcourt some of that claret that's just come in."

"Really, uncle—"

"I insist!" blustered Sir Charles, who liked to have his own way, and was always doubly obstinate if opposed. "A glass of that claret wouldn't hurt a baby!"

"Surely Mr. Harcourt isn't afraid?" insinuated a lady in honeyed accents, with an underlying malice that Harcourt did not fail to notice. He flushed crimson.

"I dare assert," continued Sir Charles looking round the table, "that there's no one else here with such fanatical notions!"

"There's me!" said Gobbie, throwing to the winds both grammar and family.

There was a momentary, dreadful pause.

"Oh, indeed!" then said Sir Charles, with sarcastic emphasis, "I had no idea we had imported another teetotal fanatic! May I inquire whether this is due to your father's influence or your mother's?"

"Neither," confessed Gobbie, with cheeks red as fire. "They don't approve of me; oh, please don't think they do! But I joined a temperance society last winter with a friend, signed the pledge; and—"

Gobbie suddenly realized that every one was listening, and subsided into frightened silence. Captain Wilson gazed at her through his eyeglass with detached curiosity, as though she were a new kind of beetle of distinctly bourgeois species.

"How interesting!" he murmured; "won't you tell us some more?"

Harcourt, who seemed to have lost his embarrassment, turned to Sir Charles with a frank smile.

"At least you must agree that two's company," he said.

But Gobbie was miserable. "Oh, dear!" he thought, "I've done it now; I've disgraced the family, and Sir Charles will never speak to me again," and much more to the same uncomfortable effect.

If possible, she was even more unhappy when the ladies retired to the drawing-room. Lady Jocelyne regarded her with marked displeasure, and the rest left her severely alone, or glanced at her with insolent amusement. She sat on the edge of a settee, as completely isolated from the laughter and chatting which surrounded her as the Man in the Moon; and far more miserable than she had ever been before in her life. Indeed, the tears were not far off.

But when the men came up, Wilfrid Harcourt's eyes traveled round the great room till they spied her in her remote corner.

"You look like a maiden all forlorn," he said, with his friendly smile; "you don't mean to say they're boycotting you for that little speech?" But the tears, which only pride had kept back, began to overflow.

"I say! Don't do that!" exclaimed Harcourt, genuinely distressed. "I was just going to tell you what a brave little brick you are! Now, look here; cheer up! And I'll tell you all about myself, then you'll understand how grateful I am to you for backing me up just now. Do you wonder why I'm an abstainer? Well, grim necessity! Yes, it does not sound nice, but there it is. I'm a civil engineer, and once I had a splendid post in the I. C. S., but the work was very responsible, and the climate didn't suit me. I kept having touches of fever, with consequent depression, and I did the worst thing possible, with the idea of keeping myself in form—whisky! The habit grew, and mastered me, and at last I got the sack—my brilliant prospects ruined! I felt like blowing my brains out—drink and the climate together have caused more than one suicide in India! But there was a fellow in our camp who was an out-and-out temperance man. It was he who saved me. It was his staunch faithfulness which enabled me to fight the craving of those first awful weeks. I determined never to touch the drink again, and never have done so, and never will! But the longing to indulge still sweeps over me at times—it did tonight when Sir Charles was pressing me. And, moreover, I did not want to offend my uncle; he was very good to me when I first came home from India and found me my present post. But, you see, you stepped in just at the right moment!"

"But doesn't your uncle understand that—that—you—"

"Yes, of course! he knows all about the Indian fiasco; in fact, I don't suppose there were many at the table who didn't know my past. But moderate drinkers cannot sympathize with a fellow like me; they simply despise him. They mistake discretion for cowardice. There! I've made a clean breast of it; now tell me why you are an abstainer."

And so Gobbie poured out her soul to this friend, and told him all about the dear, rampaging family of which she was only an ugly and stupid member, and how she darned the socks and baked the pies while all the others were going to do wonderful things at college, if only father could afford to send them, and how Sir Charles had hinted that he might help, for the sake of the past, and how that would never happen now, because she had offended him and disgraced them all!"

"And the worst of it is," she said, the tears threatening to reappear, "they're always teasing me about being an abstainer; and now they'll say it's ruined them into the bargain! Sir Charles will never speak to me again, and Lady Jocelyne says it was most forward of me!"

"Oh, does she indeed! Perhaps she means that it was not quite conventional. Well, I hate conventionality myself. What is taking alcoholic poison with your dinner but a convention, and one that's ruined many a life, too?"

So the two made excellent friends, and perhaps it is not surprising that when it was time for Gobbie to return she electrified her family by safely bringing with her not only the sapphire necklace (a feat which they declared she would never perform), but also a diamond and sapphire ring, which she wore on the third finger of her left hand.

"And, mother, I feel just blissfully happy, now that you've given your permission, and he wants to marry me as soon as ever you can spare me; and Sir Charles didn't seem to be so angry, after all—he talked to me a lot, and asked all sorts of questions, and he says Wilfrid's sure to get on, because he's amazingly clever, and some day he thinks he will stand in the front rank of his profession. And Wilfrid says I'm not ugly a bit, and even if I were, it wouldn't matter, for he's not good-looking, either, and two's company!"

A few years later, when a baby Wilfrid had arrived on the scene, and also baby Gobbie, whose features promised to be an exact replica of her mother's, the last will and testament of Sir Charles Brabant was published in the London papers, and it was noticed that a handsome legacy had been apportioned to two young people who, so it said, "had the courage of their convictions."—Eleanor Temple, in White Ribbon Signal.

MARRIED.

Totten-Tarkenton.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Davenport, in Albermarle neighborhood, was a scene of great festivity on Tuesday evening, for one of the best beloved women of this neighborhood after years of single blessedness was joined in holy wedlock on that evening to the pastor who had taken her into the Methodist Protestant church thirty-nine years ago. The house was beautifully decorated with fern and early autumn flowers carrying out the color scheme of green and yellow. In the centre of the spacious living-room was a yellow bell with an electric light for the clapper and beneath this bell promptly at nine o'clock Miss Callie Tarkenton of Albermarle neighborhood and Rev. W. T. Totten of Statesville, N. C., were married, the ceremony being performed by the bride's pastor, Rev. R. L. Hethcock, of the Creswell Methodist Protestant church. The bride wore a beautiful ensemble costume of tan-bark twill "sheen", with accessories to match and corsage of white snap-dragons, old fashioned pinks with fern.

Mrs. Totten is a native of Washington County, her ancestors were some of the first settlers to cross the Sound. She has hosts of friends here and over the entire state. She is a conscientious Christian and an ardent church worker. For years she has taught a class of the young ladies and gentlemen of the Rehoboth Methodist Protestant church near her home. Her entire class were special guests at the wedding.

Mr. Totten is the pastor of the Methodist Protestant church at Jennings, N. C. for years he was president of Yadkin College and did untold good for the church in the state.

The hostess gave a reception for the guests after the wedding. Lemon ice and chocolate wafers were served. Mr. and Mrs. Totten left on the midnight train that night for the western part of the state where they will make their home for the present.

—Rev. C. E. Phillips writes: "You will notice by my address I am in Pageland, S. C. We began a revival meeting here Monday and expect to run through this week. The meeting has started off well. Last night (Wednesday) we had eleven conversions. The church is packed to capacity each night. We expect a great meeting."

"Last week we were at New Hope Methodist Protestant Church near Monroe, N. C. 56 were saved or reclaimed there. We organized a camp meeting there, a new arbor is to be built soon and the time was set for the first camp meeting to begin there the third Sunday in July, 1926."

"Next week we begin a tent meeting at Denver, N. C. We expect to run there three weeks."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON SEPT. 13.

Paul at Thessalonica and Berea.

Lesson Text: Acts 17:1-12.

Golden Text: 1 Thess. 5:21.

The Central Truth: The Holy Scriptures offer the Light of the world to the darkened understanding, the Bread of life to the perishing soul, and to every rational being the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

Scriptural Points.

1. Paul was governed by a holy passion to plant the gospel in large centers of population. It was a wise passion. Not only would he minister to more people, but from these centers of influence the new revelation would likely radiate to surrounding communities. And so, leaving Philippi, he passed by the smaller towns of Amphipolis and Appolonia and came to another important city, Thessalonica.

2. Here were more Jews and a synagogue. It was the apostle's custom to preach first to the Jews, because, first, he had a passionate love for his own people, and secondly, the Jews were well-versed in the scriptures that revealed the Christ and His great salvation.

3. For three successive sabbaths he bore testimony out of the scriptures "that Christ must needs have suffered and risen again from the dead: and that this Jesus, whom I preach unto you is Christ."

4. The word preached was mighty and prevailed. Quite a number of the Jews accepted the new faith, a multitude of Greek proselytes were converted, and not a few of the more influential women believed to the saving of their souls. It was quite unusual that this revival broke out among the upper class of society.

5. But the unbelieving members of the synagogue were keenly jealous of the spontaneous uprising of this new religion. It was taking away many of their own number. They trembled for the ark of their fathers. There was danger of Christianity absorbing the greater part of the adherents to Judaism. To prevent such, they got busy. They quickly gathered a mob of "lewd fellows of the baser sort" to attack these messengers of the cross. While the storm was brewing the friends of Paul and Silas had taken them out of the danger zone to a place of safety. Failing to find them they arrested Jason who had entertained them and arraigned him before the city magistrates.

6. The leaders of this mob accused Paul and Silas of having turned the world upside down, that is, they had turned upside down the mob's ideas of what the world ought to be. They couldn't bear to see their own belief and way of living supplanted by the new religion. They had received startling and distressful reports of the work of the apostles in other towns.

7. They sought judgment against Jason for having entertained these men; but the rulers let him go upon security or bail for his reappearance before them if his case should be called up at any future time.

8. The brethren who had delivered Paul and his companions now sent them away secretly, lest the wrath of the mob might light upon them.

9. And so they came to Berea and at once began a campaign for souls in the synagogues of the Jews. These were more unprejudiced and open-minded than the Jews at Thessalonica. They became earnest searchers after truth. They read the Scriptures daily to find proof for the doctrines taught by Paul. Theirs was a noble and commendable turn of mind. And many of both Jews and Greeks turned to the Lord.

Practical Points.

1. Paul was a wise master-builder. He set up the new truth concerning Christ and His salvation upon the revealed and accepted truth of the Old Testament. For the New Testament truth was simply fulfillment of Old Testament law, type, and prophecy.

2. It is charitable, and even profitable, to worship with those with whom we may not agree on all points of doctrine. It is well to get their view-point now and then. It seems to broaden our vision of the kingdom of God. And then it promotes and strengthens "the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace."

3. The Holy Scriptures are inspired of the Holy Spirit. It is not likely that He inspired the divisions in chapters and verses. But these are a great convenience for reference. To be sure, the Holy Spirit did not inspire the small mistakes of translators and copyists. But the truths, facts, prophecies, and promises are inspired; and therefore they are most valuable and uplifting.

4. The Bible is itself its best defender and interpreter. Read its sacred pages with an open mind and an eager heart, and you will soon become taught of God to love it most ardently. "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."

5. The arch enemy of God and man has always consistently opposed the spread of truth. He is determined to defeat it, if possible. He persecutes its loyal defenders and propagators. He embraces every opportunity to mix error with truth, and sow tares among the wheat. And he attracts people away from the Scriptures by unwholesome literature, salacious movies, indecent theatricals, and meaningless follies of various kinds.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Spring Church.—We haven't reported for some time, but we have been busy. On the 1st Sunday in July the county Sunday school convention was held at Spring Church. A large number present. I am sure all enjoyed the good addresses and were greatly benefited by them. On the second Sunday in July and August we just had Sunday school in order that we might attend church services held at Lebanon.

On the 4th Sunday in July we held our children's day exercises which proved to be a success. Much credit is due Mrs. Dimick, Misses Ethel and Elsie Crew for getting up music and training children. We owe many thanks to the congregation for a good collection.

Our class leader, Mr. Jim Massey, held weekly prayer meetings before the meeting, which came off the fourth week in August.

We were very glad to have with us on the 4th Sunday Dr. and Mrs. Dixon, also Dr. Harris of Henderson, Bro. Fishel of Vaughn and Bro. Powell from Greenville charge. Dr. Dixon preached and Dr. Harris talked for us in the forenoon and Rev. J. D. Williams preached the rest of the week. We certainly enjoyed all of these talks, especially Bro. Williams'. I never heard him preach better.

The church was greatly revived; we had about twenty-two conversions and reclamations and twelve to join the church. We welcome all. And especially Mrs. R. C. Crew who comes from the Baptist church. Mrs. Crew is always ready to do what she can in church.

There was a Sunday school picnic held at Spring church last Wednesday. Part of Lebanon and Pleasant Hill Sunday schools joined with us. I am sure all enjoyed it. We had plenty dinner and cream.

We feel very sad to see so many of our young people leave for school, as we miss them so much in our Sunday school and prayer meetings.

I must report about our well at the parsonage. I feel sure that our former pastors will rejoice with us over it. Well, we have a well one hundred and thirty-six feet deep furnishing plenty of good water. Guess Bro. Thompson will be around home for a while enjoying cool drinks.

Mrs. R. M. R., Reporter.

September 5.

Orange Charge.—While the pastor was away assisting Rev. G. W. Holmes in a special meeting, 4th Sunday in August, Rev. T. F. McCulloch filled his appointments at Hebron and Chestnut Ridge. Am glad Bro. McCulloch could come and see his old friends again and preach for them. His sermons were well received. Bro. McCulloch is held in high esteem on Orange Charge.

Come again, Bro. McCulloch.

The pastor and family spent a week visiting in Sumter and Florence counties, S. C. By having this little vacation we feel refreshed for the work which lies before us.

Announcements:

The revival meeting will begin at Effland Friday afternoon, September 18th. Rev. H. F. Surratt of Charlotte is to do the preaching. We expect to have three services Sunday, 20th. 11:00 A. M., 2:00 P. M., and 7:30 P. M. Two services the other days, about 3:30 and 7:30 P. M.

The revival meeting will begin at Chestnut bridge 4th Sunday in September. Rev. N. G. Bethea of Lexington to do the preaching.

Pray for the success of these meetings.

Bro. O. E. and C. A. Bivins of Hillsboro have placed about $150.00 worth of furniture in the new parsonage.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Effland have about $50.00 on hand to invest in parsonage furniture. We thank these people for their thoughtfulness in providing for the comforts of the parsonage family.

B. M. Williams.

Harmony, Yarbrough Charge.—Altho' no report has been sent in from Harmony for some time, we are by no means idle.

Rev. E. F. Root who has filled the pulpit here for more than a year, while South for his health, has returned to his home in Ohio, leaving us without a pastor. We liked him and his wife very much, regretted having to give them up. His health being restored he felt a call back to his work and home in the north. Our Sunday school has met regularly each Sunday this year with good average attendance and good collections.

We have bought a piano for our church which adds greatly to our services.

The W. F. S. has been doing splendid work. Let with Mrs. Mary Wood this week with an interesting program. We pledged $25.00 on the budget for general conference claims, have already collected $28. We are sorry to report the continued illness and confinement to her bed of our beloved Mrs. Martha Medlock, the eldest member of our church also the eldest resident of the community. Mrs. Medlock celebrated her 87th birthday last October by presenting the church an individual communion for which we the members extend sincere thanks.

We were delighted to have our former pastor, Rev. N. G. Bethea, and wife pay us a visit and preach one of his good sermons for us while on their vacation.

Rev. O. B. Williams, also a former pastor, came to visit Mrs. Medlock. He left this charge when he moved to Seattle, Wash., taking up some missionary work there.

West End, Greensboro.—Results of the recent revival continue to present themselves in every hand. Speaking along the line of his own experience in answering the call of God, Mr. Ballard made a strong appeal Sunday night for all-time Christian workers, and three lives were dedicated to God. Miss Lula Mae Sullivan is soon to go into training for a nurse, and Messrs. J. C. Edwards and L. E. Eagle have responded to the call to the ministry.

At the Sunday morning service Mr. Ballard administered communion to the largest number that have yet communed at West End. Such services as these make us realize what wonderful things God has done and is doing for us, and make us more humble and more willing and determined to serve Him as best we can.

Among our welcome visitors Sunday was Miss Effie Coburn, a cousin of Mr. Ballard's, and a member of Christ M. P. Church, in Baltimore. Miss Coburn is connected with the Bird chain of stores, and has been transferred from Gastonia to Greensboro.

We regret to say goodbye to one of our most faithful members, Mrs. Effie Belle Edwards, who has gone to make her home with a sister in Norfolk, Virginia. Our very best wishes go with her to her new place of abode.

A number of our young people will be returning to college in a few days. Annie Lively and Laura Thomson will return to High Point College, and Clea Routh and Emily Ward to North Carolina College for Women. We miss the efficient services they render during the summer months, yet we rejoice in the fact that they are taking advantage of the opportunities to better fit themselves to serve.

Two of our members are patients in hospitals, Francis Nelson at St. Leo in Greensboro and Mrs. Thomas Dean at Dr. Barrus' hospital in High Point. Both are recovering nicely.

Our pastor, Rev. E. L. Ballard, is directing the music for Rev. R. A. Hunter in a revival meeting at Winston this week.

The members of the Ladies' Aid Society were delightfully entertained at a lawn party at the home of the president, Mrs. Paul A. Burns, on Monday night.

The eighth anniversary of West End will be celebrated Sunday, September 20th. The program committee is planning a program fitting for the occasion, and all members and friends of the church are urged to attend the service. This is an annual event, and the review each year of the progress that has been made since the church was organized reminds us of our indebtedness to Him who has done so much for us.

Plans for Promotion Day in the Sunday school are under way, and all of the little folk are looking forward with eagerness to being promoted. The Sunday school will also observe Rally Day, using the program outlined by the Board of Education of the Methodist Protestant Church.

Community Church, Thomasville.—The work is progressing very nicely. We have been very busy in the church work since last November and have not taken the time to blow our own horn much this year, through the Herald. But now as the conference year is nearly finished we feel like giving our community church horn just a little "toot."

We have received quite a number of good members during the year. We have organized our workers so that nearly every member has a personal responsibility at Community church.

We have an assistant pastor, Rev. Dwight L. Fouts, a graduate of Duke University. He is a young man of real value to the Methodist Protestant Church. He is director of religious education, general superintendent of our young people's work at Community church and is also pastor of the Junior church. He also has an office in the church and helps do the office work of the church. We have a fine Sunday school, home and foreign missionary societies, ladies' aid society, two live Christian Endeavor societies, a fine choir, a good orchestra, 21 pieces, a boy scout troop, a free public library and reading room, with nearly a thousand books, with nearly 400 people now registered readers. We have a weekday kindergarten school that opens in September and closes in June. There are many other religious, social and athletic activities at Community church. We expect to begin very soon to hold an every-day prayer meeting at the altar in the church at 9 A. M. We print a weekly church bulletin, thus keeping the program of Community service ever before the people. The following is a quotation from the Sunday Bulletin—

"Don't rush out of the church, but speak to somebody, feel at ease, see how many people you can get acquainted with at Community church, they are your neighbors and friends, they are at Community church every Sunday, learn their names and where they live, they are interesting people and are interested in an interesting church."

With best wishes to the Herald, and requesting YOU to pray for us, we are yours in the service of our church in the Kingdom.

O. B. Williams, Pastor.

Spencer.—Last Sunday Rev. W. L. Carson with several of his members from Lexington came over. Bro. Carson preached a good sermon. We thank them all for coming. Rev. D. A. Braswell will preach for us and organize our church here next Sunday, 4:00 P. M. Carolina Ave. and 6th St., 600, and we do hope all our people in Spencer and Salisbury will be present, for we need all. So please come. We hope to have several of our preachers with us Sunday and that we will soon have a church.

We now have 14 members in our W. H. M. S., so we are growing some.

Mrs. A. L. Moore.

"I presume you carry a memento of some sort in that locket of yours?"

"Precisely, it is a lock of my husband's hair."

"But your husband is still alive?"

"Yes, but his hair is all gone."—London Tit-Bits.

Palestine, Flat Rock Ct.—Pastor Trogdon filled his appointment third Sunday. We always enjoy hearing his good sermons.

Mr. and Mrs. Jeff Landreth united with us Sunday, making 14 from our revival meeting. We welcome them into our church.

Our Sunday school does not increase much. Seems that the change to afternoon, was a change to decrease instead of increase as was hoped for. Hope the people will soon begin again.

Yes, we must say a word about our Sunday egg club. Early in the year Mrs. Trogdon organized an Egg club at all the churches on Flat Rock Charge.

Mrs. Trogdon being sick it was the third Sunday in April before she got to organize at Palestine.

Third Sunday in April Mrs. Trogdon organized with Mrs. Dolly Sharron to solicit members, and Mrs. J. C. Tucker secretary and treasurer. Third Sunday in May our secretary began her first collecting.

Report for May, amount $5.64. Report for June, amount $3.00. Report for July, amount $4.87. Report for August, amount $4.25. Amount for four months $22.76. We give one half of this to our general interest. The other half goes monthly to our children's home. We may not get but a very few eggs each Sabbath, but it's the little things which make big things. Just a few cents each month given by a great number of interested members will count into dollars real fast.

If the other four churches on the circuit have collected $22.00 a piece the circuit collection for Sunday Egg club will amount to $113.90 for four months, and for one year at this average it would be $341.70. Wouldn't this make our "Budgets" look quite different. We are proud of our Sunday Egg club. It's no trouble and one never misses the small amount each month. Best wishes, Grace R. Tucker, Reporter.

Shiloh.—Our Sunday school August 30th was extra large.

We are surely glad to say the meeting that was held last week was good. Eight new members were welcomed into the church Sunday night. They were baptized at the Yaddin Grove church Sunday afternoon at three o'clock.

The gas lamp which was purchased for the church last week was enjoyed by all during the meeting. We heartily thank all who helped to buy it and all that came and sat in its light and helped with the singing and listened to Rev. Mr. Gertner's interesting sermons.

We are looking forward, to Mr. Gertner's return at his regular meeting time. But let us be patient and faithful. When the Savior was about to be separated from His disciples, He comforted them in their sorrow with the assurance that He would come again. "Let not your heart be troubled. In my Father's house there are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself." "Behold He cometh with the clouds, and every eye shall see him." "Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." Galatians 3:7.

Macy A. Martin, Reporter.

Fallston.—Our protracted meeting started the third Sunday in August, and closed on Tuesday night after the fourth Sunday. We had a glorious meeting. I don't know the number of conversions but there were many, some young, some middle age, and one man, Mr. Peter Costner, who was seventy years old, professed and joined the church. There were thirty-eight joined in all.

We should all be thankful for this meeting and for what the Lord has done for us.

I hope all these new members will attend church and Sunday school and keep Jesus with them always.

I think the church was greatly revived, but still there is much to do.

Our pastor did all the preaching, and I am sure he did his best. He certainly did some good preaching and worked faithfully all through the meeting. I hope we will heed his warning and live close to Jesus. We thank Brother Morgan very much for his faithful work.

Our Sunday school is still growing in number, we have from two hundred to two hundred and seventy every Sunday.

August 31.

Bethel, Alamance Ct.—Our special meeting was held at Bethel the third Sunday and following week in August Brother Holmes was sick and unable to come on Sunday. We had a glorious prayer service in the morning. Bro. S. W. Taylor came in the afternoon and we enjoyed one of his good sermons. Brother L. W. Geringer came on Monday and preached for the remainder of the meeting. His sermons were soul-stirring and effective. We had a splendid meeting. The church was much revived. Eight were converted at the church and at home. This we considered good, as we had just had the Burlington Federation conduct a meeting at Bethel a few weeks before and had many converts then. The meeting to us was especially good, as some of the converts were ours. If only one soul is saved and that one is our son or daughter, the meeting to us is a success. Everyone is somebody's son or daughter; so we praise God from whom all blessings flow for the meeting and the glorious revival spirit which is now so evident at Bethel. We are holding prayer meeting every Wednesday night, our meetings are good.

On Saturday, August 21, 1924, a number of the Bethel members, about 42, assembled at the home of Bro. G. W. Holmes and gave him a surprise dinner, and also presented him with a nice rocking chair, as a slight token of the high esteem in which he is held among us, and our appreciation of his untiring efforts for the last eight years. Before we left, we were again invited to the table. This time by the Holmes family, and we found it covered with delicious watermelon. This, to us, was better than the dinner. We enjoyed it much.

Mrs. J. M. Foust, Reporter.

Shelby.—We had very good attendance at all of our services last Sunday. There was an increase in the Sunday school attendance, and the indications point to a gradual improvement of the Sunday school as we near the fall months. Plans for a rally day service have not yet fully materialized, but we are hopeful that the service will be held.

The Lord's Supper was observed at the morning church service last Sunday with the usual number of our people participating.

In the afternoon at 3:30 o'clock a joint conference of Shelby and Caroleen churches was held in our church here for the purpose of discussing plans for the work for next year and the possibility of the two churches becoming a charge or being served by one pastor instead of two as it has been for the past three years. Several of the members of the Caroleen church together with pastor McAllister, were present. The discussions centered around the question of the parsonage and where the pastor should reside as Caroleen and Shelby both have parsonages. A final agreement was reached whereby the delegates-elect of both churches were instructed to request the annual conference to place the two churches on one charge or be given one pastor to serve both churches. The writer was chairman of the conference and Rev. T. G. McAllister acted as secretary.

The Shelby church was afforded a very pleasant and delightful visit from Rev. Lawrence C. Little, field secretary of our Young People's Work, on last Sunday. He delivered a very interesting and inspiring address at the night service, using as a theme, "Five agencies by which the young people may be trained for Christian service and leadership." The five agencies discussed were (a) the home, (b) the Sunday school, (c) the summer conference, (d) the Christian Endeavor, (e) the High Point college. We were very glad indeed to have Bro. Little with us and we feel sure that his timely address stimulated the interest of our people in the work of the young people of our church. Brother Little spoke at the Caroleen church Sunday morning and came to our church Sunday night.

A telegram was received by the writer from Rev. H. F. Fogleman Sunday afternoon stating that he would be with us on Sunday, September 20, to begin a series of evangelistic services in our church in Shelby. We are looking forward to his coming and to a successful revival meeting. Will the readers of the Herald pray for our meeting? Bro. Fogleman is a former pastor of the Shelby church and our people are glad that he is coming back to preach for them again in the revival meeting. We had engaged Rev. H. L. Isley, of the Saxapahaw charge, to help us, but he found that he could not be with us, so we secured Bro. Fogleman for the meeting.

We will have all of our regular services on next Sunday.

C. B. Way, Pastor.

St. Paul.—The Evangelistic services will begin Sunday, September 13th. Preaching at 11 A. M. and 7 P. M. Services during the week 7-30 P. M. Rev. T. A. Milliams of Glen Raven will do the preaching, coming to us on Monday, 14th.

Public cordially invited to attend these services.

J. H. Moton, Pastor

—Moriah church had a missionary pageant last Sunday night which attracted a number of people from Greensboro.

SPREAD THE LIGHT.

There is darkness, still, gross darkness, Lord.
In this fair house of Thine.
Where are prisoners still in the prison-house,
Where never a light doth shine.
Where are doors still bolted against Thee,
Where are faces set like a wall,
And over them all the Shadow of Death
Hangs like a pall.
Do you hear the voices calling,
Out there in the black of the night?
Do you hear the sobs of the women,
Who are barred from the blessed light?
And the children—the little children,
Do you hear their pitiful cry?
O brothers, we must seek them,
Where there in the dark they die!
Spread the Light! Spread the Light!
All earth's remotest bounds have heard
The glory of the living Word;
All those that see not have their sight;
All all the fringes of the night
Are lifted, and the long-closed doors
Are wide forever to the Light.
Spread—the—Light!
Then shall dawn the golden days
To which true hearts are pressing;
When earth's discordant strains shall blend
In one true God confessing;
When Christly thought and Christly deed
Shall bind each heart and nation,
In one Grand Brotherhood of Men,
And one high consecration.

—John Oxenham.

KIND WORDS.

Kind words do not cost much. They are quickly spoken. They do not blister the tongue at uttering them. They never have to be re-entreated of. They do not keep us awake till midnight. It is easy to scatter them. And, how much good they may do! They do good to the person from whose lips they fall. Soft words will soften the soul. They smooth down the rough places in our nature. Care to say kindly things will drill our natures in kindness. It will help to pull up all the roots of passion. It will give us a spirit of self-control. It will make the conscience delicate and the disposition gentle. A woman cannot make a bit of speaking kind words without augmenting her own gracious temper. But better will their influence on others. If cold words freeze people, and hot words scorch them, and bitter words madden them, so will kind words produce themselves and soothe and quiet and comfort the hearer. They make all the better elements of one's nature come trooping to the surface. They melt out stubbornness. Let us say a kindly word. No one can tell how many hardened hearts may be relieved, how many discouraged souls may be inspired. Say it every day; to the one who disturbs you while you are busy, asking for work; to the one who has almost lost hope; to all. Remember kind words can never die.—Review.

A GOOD MOTTO.

"Look up and not down,
Look out and not in,
Look forward and not back,
And lend a hand."

This is the motto of the Anti-Can't class in one of our large churches. Let us make this our motto. "Can't" is one word that ought not to be in the Christian's vocabulary. "We can and we will" ought to be our slogan as we face the tasks that are just ahead of us. One of the greatest workers in all the world said, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." Our Master when He outlined His great world program to his feeble band of disciples said to them. "Lo, I am with you." On to victory in His strength and we can put our church and kingdom program over.—Belmont Baptist Bulletin.

THE TRUE PREACHER'S MASTER PASSION.

Text: I Cor. 5:15—The love of Christ constraineth me.

Young Gentlemen of the Graduating Class: I beg the privilege of giving you as a class motto the striking words of Paul in explanation of his own ministry and service as a preacher and apostle. "The love of Christ constraineth us." I cannot resist the impulse to say to my brother moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., whom I also claim as a beloved friend, that I find in his noble address tonight as well as in his splendid pastoral service, and his wonderful and arduous work for the last twelve months as moderator of his great church, an impressive illustration of the theme which I would now seek to impress—that the true preacher's master passion is a supreme love for the Lord Jesus.

We were all made for love and to love. The human soul was built to pour the tides of a ceaseless and mighty affection upon worthy objects; upon the one object most worthy of a love which knows no limits to the worth of the beloved and recognize no limits as restraining the amount of love due to this infinitely worthy object. We are not only reconciled to God in Christ; we cannot ask for anything higher or better for ourselves, our world, the universe, than that God should be exactly like Jesus whom we know so well; and so we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and love for Him makes it a delight to live with Him and for Him in the service He appoints to us as preachers of His gospel and grace. There is one activity which never tires; the more intense the activity the profounder the rest and peace which fills with blessedness the busy spirit. Thought wearies the exhausted brain, volition unnerves the baffled and puzzled spirit; imagination's flight is soon paralyzed by the lethargy of prosy commonplace; but the heart can love with a fervor and ecstasy which unifies all the force of the personality into one mighty passionate tide, and instead of exhaustion comes rest and instead of diminished energy increased capacity and intensified activity. The more we love the more we can love, especially when the worth and loveliness of the divine object grows before our rapt and ever-enlarging vision. The vision of Christ and the love of Christ keep pace with rhythm and majesty which marries heaven to earth in the real true preacher's soul. This explains the wonderful career of the typical preacher who swept like a cross of light and fire across the continents and seas to all the great world centers of population and culture without weariness or exhaustion, because driven by a force mightier than that which holds the Pleiades in place or guides the suns in their orbits, a passionate love for Jesus which valued Him at His true worth and made it easy and genial to live for nothing else than to know Him and make Him known. The preacher who bears this master passion on his bosom will find it a delight to preach and watch and pray and seek for souls and, instead of complaints, of difficulties, and hardness of task, will abound in hallelujahs and abundant thanksgivings.

Courage is the product of this love. Who can imagine Paul compromising or hedging, hesitating or dicker when the name or the claims or the character or the "truth as it is in Jesus" was concerned. Love is a combination of all the forces, sometimes as quiet and yet as resistless as the gravitation which rolls the planets, sometimes as tumultuous as the cyclone which tears the forest into shreds sometime a flaming weapon "sharper than any two edged sword." The man who said "The love of Christ constraineth me," also said, "If any love not the Lord Jesus Christ let him be anathema." Love for Jesus and for the souls and for the Gospel and truth of God is not shown by a passionless pacifism or indifferent neutrality which sometimes seeks to disguise itself as Christlikeness, because the real likeness to Christ is lacking, but it is reflected in the blazing love, in the wellnigh infinite passion of affection, of this most wonderful and successful of all the preachers of Jesus and His Gospel the world has ever known, who has said of himself, "So fight I not as one that beateth the air," and whose exhortation is, "fight the good fight of faith." "Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus." "Take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day and having done all to stand."

My dear young brethren, my hope and prayer of every one of you is that you may so exercise your ministry that you may deserve these inscriptions over your quiet resting place:

"The Love of Christ Constraineth Me."

"A Good Soldier of Jesus Christ."

"Love and Loyalty to Jesus Inspired Him."

CHURCH SERVICE.

Every one needs at least once a week the uplifting and spiritual nourishment which we receive through attending church service. There are 168 hours in each week. How many of these hours do we spend in idle moments? How many of these hours could be saved by planning our work and eliminating the unnecessary things? One of the divine commandments is to "remember the sabbath day to keep it holy." How many of us keep this one commandment? Sunday by divine command was established as a day of rest and worship. This day was set aside that we may rest . . . from physical and mental care, contemplate the works of the Almighty God and worship God according to the divine command. Our attendance at church services is the first step in keeping God's command.—Daily Northwestern.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Dodson.

Thomas F. Dodson died August 31, 1925. Funeral services at Chestnut Ridge church September 1st.

Bro. Dodson had been a faithful member of Chestnut Ridge church for several years. He lived to be nearly 75 years old. In the absence of the pastor Rev. T. M. Johnson, D.D., of Mebane conducted the funeral service.

In the passing of Bro. Dodson, Chestnut Ridge church loses one of its oldest, and most faithful members.

May God comfort the bereaved ones.

B. M. Williams.

Pittard.

August 14th at his home Mr. J. B. Pittard passed away. He lived out from Littleton a few miles and was 68 years, six months, and seven days of age. Bro. Pittard had been in poor health for some time, but had hopes of getting well until a few months before he died. Everything was done for him that could be done. He did appreciate so much the effort of his family and friends, made in nursing and trying to help him to get well. He said no man ever had better attention than he had.

He joined Corinth M. P. Church since we came to Littleton Ct. He was a good man, good neighbor, and good citizen. He was very much devoted to his family and they to him. He talked of heaven and tried to sing not many hours before he passed away. His wife, two sons, six daughters and three grandchildren survive him. These have the sympathy of the church and community. Funeral was held from the home, and his body laid to rest in the family burying ground near by.

J. B. O'Briant.

Barnes.

Mr. Geo. L. Barnes, one of oldest and best men of Corinth church, passed away on 25th day of Aug., 1925. He was lacking one day of being 82 years of age. We placed his body in the burying ground at Corinth church, on 26th day of August; his 82d birthday.

Bro. Barnes was a highly respected citizen of Halifax county, N. C. A good man in the community, a true and loyal man in his church. He was his pastor's friend and his doors were open always for him. He was afflicted and in poor health when we came to Littleton Ct., and we had occasion to visit him often. He well said that his home was one of our appointments, for so it had come to be. As we went to Littleton and Vanglin we did not feel that our round was complete until we had seen him. No one knows how he suffered during the last year of his life, yet he did not complain. We believe his mind and heart was fully surrendered to God and God kept him sweet in spirit. He often talked of heavenly things rather than his suffering.

About a month prior to his death he spoke of his 82nd birthday which would be he said 26th of Aug. He said, "I do not think I will live through Aug. or to see my birthday." He talked of this very bravely. The only time we ever saw him break down and weep was once not long ago when we were going away to be gone for a week. We felt that maybe we would not see him alive again. I felt in my heart that I loved him and I told him that I loved him. It was then that he wept. He said "I thank you and I am glad you had heart to tell me so." He paid his pastor every month up to the day he left us. This was a part of his religious life and it gave him great pleasure to do this. He was a steward in his church for 20 or 25 years, and was secretary of the quarterly conference for 13 years or more.

He was a soldier in the Civil war at 18 years old, was in many battles, was wounded and suffered hardship as only those who endured it can tell; but the Lord kept him as his own. He was present when Gen. Lee surrendered and heard him speak.

Bro. Barnes was a good soldier for his country and just as good a soldier for Christ and his cause. He is gone but his sweet spirit will continue to live among us.

Aug. 26th funeral was in Corinth church by his pastor assisted by Rev. R. C. Stubbins; a former pastor.

He leaves behind one son and two daughters, several grandchildren and great grand children and many friends. We bow in humble submission to God and thank Him for good people who have blessed the world by their lives.

This Father in Israel lived so well,
He in glory will forever dwell,
We may with his God take refuge and hide,
While his spirit with us will abide.

J. B. O'Briant.

Alamance.—We held our special meetings for this charge during August, beginning the first Sunday at Sapling Ridge with Brother Suits as our help. This was a great meeting resulting in thirty-one conversions and recommitments, and four additions to the church.

Bro. Shelton assisted me at Center. This was a wonderful meeting. Thirty-three professed to be saved and twelve united with the church.

At Bethel Bro. Gerringer was our help. The Burlington Federation had held meetings here for fourteen evenings, and had many professions of faith. I had received three into the church. Our meeting resulted in much additional good. Several claimed to be renewed.

We began our meeting at Rock Creek the fourth Sunday, with Bro. B. M. Williams as pulpit help. There were eight who professed, all of whom united with the church.

The preaching at all the churches was exceptionally fine, and the people were greatly edified and revived.

A surprise party of thirty-five from Bethel came to our home the 22nd of August and spent the day in social enjoyment. At noon they spread upon an improvised table on the lawn a sumptuous repast which all seemed to enjoy. Bro. Lon. McPherson for the party in a few appropriate words presented to the pastor a beautiful, finely upholstered rocking-chair, which was accepted with expressions of gratitude and thanks. The gift was valued at $21.75.

Bro. C. N. Lindley is delegate to annual conference.

KINDNESS.

One never knows
How far a word of kindness goes;
One never sees
How far a smile of friendship flees.
Down through the years
The deed forgotten reappears.

One kindly word
The souls of many here has stirred.
Man goes his way
And tells with every passing day,
Until life's end:
"Once unto me he played the friend."

We cannot say
What lips are praising us today.
We cannot tell
Whose prayers ask God to guard us well.
But kindness lives
Beyond the memory of him who gives.

THE DEFECTIVE THEOLOGY OF THE TIME AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

Man's conception of the First Cause of the world shapes all his other conceptions. What are the differences between the philosophy of a man who believes the First Cause is personal and that of a man who regards the First Cause as impersonal. There is in our own time a great effort being made to substitute in the mind of the world an impersonal First Cause for a personal First Cause. It is because men see that such a change would involve certain consequences the most disastrous effects in the moral life of the world that they strive such a change with all their might. What would be the consequences of such a change in the fundamental idea?

First, all worship would cease. Places of worship would not be needed, religion would be a thing of the past.

Second, there would be no fear of a future punishment, no fear of divine punishment, and the evil propensities of men would have no restraint other than the feeble restraint of the law of other men. Morality would have no basis, or nearly none, and human life would reach its lowest depths of degradation and degradation by present moral standards.

In view of such a calamity, do you wonder that Bryan and others have lifted up warning voices against the manifest tendency and effect of the times? The effort in Russia and other countries to legislate religion out of existence is but the fruit of this changed conception of the First Cause or Fundamental Fact of existence.

The logic of history sets itself so strongly against this conception of the First Cause as impersonal that it seems very improbable that the effort to make it the dominant or prevailing conception will ever be widely successful; and it may produce great mischief in the world in the minds of a few, especially if these few attain to positions of authority in human society.

But God may be greatly misconceived by those who admit His personality, and our time is suffering far more from those who misconceive and misrepresent God in the domain of personality than from the propaganda of those who would remove God to the realm of impersonality.

Fifty years ago or thereabouts Dr. James McCosh lifted up a note of warning against the tendency to rob God of the attribute of justice. What McCosh feared has come to pass in large measure. Many pictures of God are presented that inspire no awe. Nobody fears a God that takes no account of iniquity, that smiles benevolently upon all men, regarding them as His children, no matter what their conduct or their character. Jesus represented God as a father; He said nothing to justify the thought that God may be truly represented by an indulgent mother who can see no evil in her own children, though in the eyes of others they may be as bad as children can be. One set of religious people today actually address God in prayer as "Our Mother."

This elimination of the attribute of justice from the character of God is having a very marked effect upon the morality of the time. Crime waves sweep over the world because men do not fear the justice of God. Since God is thought of as too kind to condemn and punish, the only thing to be feared is the wrath of man, and that may be escaped by covering up tracks and concealing crime.

The effect of this misrepresentation of God is seen not only in the world of crime, but also in the world of religion.

It especially affects the view taken of the person and work of Jesus Christ. To one who believes in the essential justice of God, the substitution of Jesus Christ on the cross as a necessity to salvation. The vicarious atonement is to him a doctrine of infinite worth. Only at the foot of the cross can he lose the awful weight of guilt that presses him down.

But deny the justice of God, and then what did Jesus die? There may be various answers given, but no answer that reveals a sense of complete dependence on the merits of Christ's death in procuring salvation.

When men lose sight of the necessity of Christ's vicarious suffering, they next lose sight of his divinity. If he was simply to be a prophet in the world and an exemplar, then he need be only a man. He need have no virgin mother. An ordinary man could perform the tasks assigned to him.

Having reached this low view of the person of Jesus, it of course follows that he had the common lot of men, he died and remains dead to this day. His resurrection is not called for in this scheme of thought, and is inconsistent with it. Therefore the logical thing is to deny the resurrection of Christ.

Take a minister to task who is preaching this false notion of God, and he will try to justify himself by quoting those scriptures that speak of the benevolence of God. It requires an effort to combine the attributes of love and justice in the same person, but it can be done. The two attributes are not inconsistent with each other. Our great thinker, Asa Shinn, wrote a book on "The Benevolence of the Supreme Being" in which he argued that God is just because He is good. The common thought perhaps is that God is loving and also just. Shinn's thought was, God is loving and therefore just. Whether justice flows from goodness, love, or whether it is a distinct and independent attribute, the Scriptures clearly and repeatedly ascribe justice to God.

Jesus did not give ground for the easy-going view of today. He declared that the sword of justice hangs over all of our heads. "Except ye repent, ye shall all perish," was his express declaration.

The early preachers of the Gospel were evidently moved by a consideration of the terrible justice of God. "Knowing the terror of the Lord," they persuaded men.

Let God be presented to men as He has revealed Himself, with all attributes of His character duly presented, and men cannot continue to ignore God. God is not a contingency of little import, He is the Great Certainty that every man must encounter.

"YOUR FOOL RELIGION."

When Darrow at Dayton hissed those words at Bryan, the other day it was nothing new.

Ever since Christ came with His Gospel of sacrifice and love, that religion has been to the unbelievers perfect foolishness.

Paul found it so. He found that "the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness." He found that to preach Christ crucified was to philosophical Greeks foolishness.

To the unbeliever to give up self-indulgence was foolishness. To give up the gratification of carnal appetites was foolishness. To give up power and riches was foolishness.

To care for the poor and weak and afflicted was foolishness. To give up the extra coat and go the second mile was foolishness. To take up a cross and follow a Galilean peasant was foolishness.

So it has ever been. So it will ever be. To Darrow, narrow, unscrupulous, unforgiving, living for this world, hesitating at no trick of professional chicanery to clear the guilty for huge fees, the religion of Jesus Christ is a fool religion.

But what would our country be if it were made up entirely of men of the type of Darrow?

But if Darrow thinks that the religion of Christ is "a fool religion," what does God think of Darrow. We do not bear to imagine. We can turn to pages of God's Word and find out. The expressions are as clear as if made for him alone.

There is the fourteenth Psalm. There God says "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God." And He repeated it in the fifty-third.

When it says "there is no God?" It

When it says "there is no God?" It is a statement of the soul, they laugh at. The weakness of the soul, they mock at. Sin that disgraces the soul, they jest at. Sin, that death of the soul they mock at.

Yonder is an able criminal lawyer. His great powers are given for hire to saving criminals. How he belittles murder. How he whitewashes theft. How he condones impurity. How he laughs at, jests over, makes light of sin and crime. And the great God looks down and says: "Fools make a mock at sin." Darrow, you mocked at sin—thou fool.

There is the twelfth chapter of Luke. A certain rich man is there. Prosperity is his. Riches increase. Great crops are coming in. He lives only for this life. He cares nothing for the future. He will build greater barns. He will heap up more wealth. He says, "I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry."

But God said: "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee."

Yonder is an able lawyer. He never loses a case. He clears the vilest criminals. He saves the most consummate swindler. He charges large fees. He got $100,000 for saving the necks of Leopold and Loeb, two of the worst criminals that ever cursed our land. He must build bigger barns. He is rich. He says to his soul: Take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry. Before long God will say to Darrow: "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee."

Darrow calls the religion of God, "your fool religion." God long ago took Darrow's measure. He said of the atheist, "The fool hath said in his heart there is no God."

He said of the mocker at sin, "Fools make a mock at sin." He said of the materialist—living for this world alone, "Thou fool."—Selected.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.Christian Courage.

Text. Be strong and of a good courage. "Josh. 1:6.

There is no trait of character more indispensable for young people than courage. So many thousands fail at this point, and in consequence their entire lives become miserable failures.

There is much evil in the world that must be overcome. And it requires strong courage to conquer these evil approaches and influences. There is much hardship and tribulation to be endured, and none but courageous souls will be able to bear up under it successfully. And there are many hard tasks in life to be performed, and it is the brave soul that will perform them bravely and satisfactorily.

Let us first consider

The Courage to Resist Evil.

Sin in a thousand forms is abroad in the land. The tempter, like a roaring lion, is going about and fro seeking whom he may devour. Or, an angel of light, he is deceiving the nations. He makes sin so attractive, so much like wisdom and beauty, that if it were possible he would deceive the very elect. His snares catch unwary feet are set on every hand. He offers the deceitful pleasures of sin for a season to entice the youth away from the path of virtue and rectitude. He offers unholy gain to those engaged in business affairs. And he offers revenge or retaliation to those whose feelings are hurt.

It requires strong courage to say no to all such proposals of sin. Joseph said no to the proposal of an ungodly woman. Daniel said no to the plan to drink wine and eat forbidden meat. And Jesus said no three times to the devil who tried to lead Him to sin.

It requires much stronger courage to keep on resisting the temptations of life. So many lose patience after the first and second resistance and yield their souls to their greatest enemy. Perversion in Christian courage is so necessary. Just keep on fighting the battles of the Lord against the powers of darkness. And the first victory will make you strong to face the next conflict. And the oftener you overcome the stronger you will become. The soul thrives and fattens on moral victories. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you."

Next let us consider

The Courage to Endure Hardship.

This is not an easy world in which to live. There are no flowery beds of ease upon which to be wafted to the skies. This world is a wilderness of woe. Thorns and thistles grow every side. "Man is born to trouble, as sparks fly upward." Toil has its hardships and privations. Sickness and bereavement the common lot of all. Heart-aches and headaches come to so many. And "man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn."

It takes strong courage to stand patiently, sweet, and immovable in the face of the hardships. "If thou faint in the day of adversity thy strength is small." The Psalmist found strong courage through faith in God. He said, "I will go in the strength of the Lord God." Again he said, "What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee." Add to your faith courage in the superlative degree and you will be able to put to flight the armies of the aliens. And you will be able also to endure as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

In the last place let us consider.

The Courage to Perform Duty.

Some duties are hard to perform. Most duties run contrary to inclination. The selfish nature is quite out of harmony with the will of God, which is the law of life. It demands strong courage to resist depraved inclination and do right in spite of them. To follow the straight and narrow path of duty means that the self will must be denied and God's will enthroned. Jesus said, "If any man will come after me let him deny himself, and take his cross, and follow me."

Paul was one of the most courageous figures of history. He performed the arduous tasks of apostleship to the Gentiles in the face of told hardship and opposition. But he had the courage of ten ordinary soldiers of the cross. His courage was born of God. He said, "I do all things through Christ that strengthen me."

And Jesus Christ is the all sufficient Source of courage to do right. "Through Him we shall do valiantly." Implicit trust in Him makes man brave and irresistible." Nay, in these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us."—Word of Life.

Father, I do not ask

That Thou wilt choose some other task

And make it mine. I pray

But this: let every day

Be moulded still

By thine own hand; my will

Be only Thine, however deep

I have to bend Thy hand to keep.

Let me not simply do, but be content

Sure that the little crosses each are sent

And no mistake can ever be

With Thine own hand to choose for me.

MEETING HIS NEEDS.

I shall not count my life as vain
If only in some quiet way
I find my chance to serve my Lord,
My debt of love for him to pay.

An unnamed man supplied the beast
Whereupon the lowly Savior passed
Along the way triumphantly.
Acclaimed the promised King at last.

An unnamed man supplied the room
Where once the Savior broke the bread
And gave the wine—his flesh and blood—
His life—by which our lives are fed.

And unnamed crosses mark the spot
Where common soldiers chance to lie,
Who for the world's true brotherhood
A sacrifice, feared not to die.

O grant me, Lord, the grace I pray.
If I the quiet paths must lead,
To give my humble gift to thee,
And know I, too, have met thy need.
—Philip H. Ralph, British Weekly.

THE UNALTERABLE CLAIMS.

It is not for any Christian to say whether he will support foreign missions.

He is under solemn obligation to render all the support in his power.

When he became a member of Christ's kingdom he pledged loyalty to him, and to help carry out the purposes of that Kingdom.

Since Christ's Kingdom has as its supreme aim the conquest of the world, every Christian must hold that uppermost in his thought and life work.

The plan of the campaign is set forth in the Word by plain teachings, by convincing examples of the course followed by the early Christians, by world-influencing results which followed, and also by the fruitless searchings after God through worldly wisdom of men, and by the continued need of all peoples for the Saviour and salvation.

From the beginning all believers shared in the work of publishing the glad tidings to all people, reach even to alien peoples among whom they were scattered by persecution. The same obligation rests on all Christians, for it has never been repealed.

The agencies of the campaign are also set forth in the Word the essentials of which include the application of the principles of procedure being subject to change for racial and other considerations.

The agencies are the preaching and teaching of the Word leading to the organization of churches and their uplifting agencies, the teaching and training of the young for service, and each "owes the world a life," and they can best render it after Christian education has enriched mind and heart, the ministering to the body as an avenue to reach the soul, and have eternal life accepted, with the restoration of physical health, the support of allied organizations which strive to lessen human suffering, establish social order and justice, and improve all conditions of less favored peoples.
The conquest of the world is to be a spiritual one, because the Kingdom is spiritual, as our great Head declared, and while trade, commerce, government, civilization are immensely benefited by its world-emcompassing benevolent operations they are but secondary to the one supreme purpose to win men and nations to the benign sway of the Christ through accepting him as Lord and Master.

Not, therefore, upon such considerations do the claims of foreign missions rest, but upon the steadfast loyalty of Christians to Jesus Christ, their obedience to his commands attested by faithfully devoting, their talents, their lives, and the money they hold at stewards to the extension of the Kingdom, because for this purpose they were brought into it.

One has said "The question is not whether the heathen will perish at the last; the urgency lies in the fact that they are perishing now, Their darkness, their degradation, their despair witness to their lost condition. The message of the Cross is a message of salvation, consolation, and life." God expects us to give it to them, since he had others give it to us, and we promised we would obey, and work and give to extend the Kingdom.

Those Japanese Banners.

Dr. Layman sends word that the order was put in for the banners a month ago, and
"these banners will be the best I have ever sent you," and those who have seen any of the former banners awarded to the Sunday schools know that they will be beautifully embroidered and of rich material, etc.

So many Sunday schools have delayed sending in their Children's Day offering, despite our earnest appeal and great need of the money, that awarding the banners must be delayed.

Fred. C. Klien.

WE ARE ENCOURAGED.

The orders for the programs for rally day are coming into headquarters in numbers sufficient to give real encouragement. They are being filled as rapidly as possible. If there is any delay we will appreciate it if the matter is called to our attention at once. In most cases the orders are filled the day they are received. We are doing our utmost to give prompt attention and satisfactory service.

Possibly it should be otherwise but we are compelled to depend upon our pastors and superintendents to see that the rally day service is held. It is one of the three special days ordered by the General Conference and every Sunday school and church in the denomination is expected to observe it. It furnishes a splendid opportunity to present the denominational interests, to educate and interest our people in the great work the Methodist Protestant church is doing, and last but not least it means an offering toward the General Conference Budget. It is the Budget which makes our missionary, educational and benevolence activities possible. The men commissioned with the task of overseeing these interests can do only as they are given funds with which to "carry on." You strengthen their hands and promote the program by observing rally day and taking the offering.

If you have not sent in your order yet, please do so without delay. Send to

Frank W. Stephenson, Secretary.

JUST WANTS A CHANGE.

A few years ago a cowboy in the West went into an eating place and called for a cup of coffee. The girl behind the counter poured out a cup and the cowboy sipped it. "Say Miss, if this is coffee give me tea, and if it is tea give me coffee. Anything for a change," the fellow bawled.

A few years ago down in the state prison at Raleigh another incident occurred which illustrates the same point as the Western cowboy. A delegation of negro convicts got together, selected a spokesman and called on the Supt. demanding a change of Supervisors.

"What's the trouble?" asked the Supt.
"No particular trouble," the speaker replied.

"Have they been whipping you?" the Supt.
asked.

"Naw, Sir, never teched any of us," the spokesman said.

"Give you plenty to eat?" the Supt. persisted.

"Yas-Sir, all we wants," the negro replied.
"Well, then, what's the trouble?" asked the Supt. somewhat querulously.

"Not any trouble at all," the black man answered, "We just wants a change."

These colored people had been treated all right by their supervisor, and to save their lives they could study up no reason for a change, yet their spokesman doubtless expressed the desire of the hearts when he said, "We just wants a change."

Our annual conference is rapidly approaching, and of course some of our pastors will be changed. Sometimes it is better for both pastor and people, yet I sometimes wonder if some folks are not like the Western cow-boy or the delegation of convict prisoners. "Anything for a change," "No reason." True that some pastors very often demand that they be changed thinking they deserve a better pastorate. This writer wishes all pastors could have better places to serve; he also thinks that both pastor and people should be content with what they have in many cases. We already have too many "man promotions."
Let's allow God to do the promoting and better results will follow. Let the pastor stick to his people and the people to their pastor and we will have longer pastorates and more good will be accomplished.

In some churches pastors serve as long as 35 and 40 years and there is no demand for a change. If these same pastors had been in our church, 40 years of service would have carried them all over the state. What's the matter? Recently, a man of another church asked certain M. P.'s why they changed pastors last conference. The reply was, "the man we had was not big enough for us." This pastor is educated and one of our best preachers. He preached the gospel with power.
What's the matter? Can churches have the big head? Is any man, called of God to preach and then educated and trained for the ministry too little to preach to folks, many of whom have never graduated from high school? I repeat, "What's the matter?"

All preachers do not preach alike, I will admit. The style and manner of presentation differs. Some read a verse or verses from some book in the bible and then proceed to give to the audience a line of stories and personal experiences, occasionally repeating their text. They leave the sacred text in the obscurity in which they found it. As some one else has said, "this comes very near handling the word of God deceitfully." The only thing that saves it from doing that is the absence of a wrong motive. It seems to us that these good men; men called of God to preach his gospel, should be willing to put the necessary toil in it to do it well. At the same time we admit that such exhorting is more appreciated by some, than a real gospel sermon, filled with valuable explanations of his holy word. It is difficult for some folks to know the difference between a sermon and an exhortation.

Then, again, we have another class of preachers who denounce sin in high places as well as in low places. They have no compromise to make with the devil. Of course this does not suit many church members who enjoy the dance, the card table, and many other places where the devil works. Such folks are likely to want a change of pastors quite often. In conclusion, this writer cannot understand why a consecrated christian minister cannot serve a christin congregation longer than a year or two. Is it because the people "Just Wants a Change?" Or, is it the pastor who "Just Wants a Change?"

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Among The Churches.

September 6th was spent at Philadelphia church on the Greenville Charge with Rev. H. L. Powell and his people. It was the occasion of the annual revival at this church, which from point of location is the center of the charge. Here the folks gather in great crowds on the first Sunday in September each year. There were three or four times as many people gathered there as could get into the church. Many were there to worship reverently, while others were there to have a good time as the world counts a good time. These are fine people, and they love their pastor, and the charge seems to be developing splendidly.

Rally Day.

The rally day programs are ready for distribution, and if you have not received a sample copy you can get same by dropping a card to Rev. F. W. Stephenson, 613 West Diamond Street, N. S., Pittsburg, Pa. Or better still just ask him to send supplies for your Sunday school, and get busy at once and prepare the rally day program to be given around the first of October. The offering on rally day goes to Christian Education, and counts on your General Conference Budget. If every Sunday school in the conference will hold rally day services it will help in two ways. It will help to boost your local church work, and it will help to secure your share of the G. C. B.

The Budgets.

See another column for the standing of your charge on the budgets. And remember that the list as now being published in the Herald, when completed at conference, will constitute the honor roll of charges. This will be published in the Journal as the honor roll. About six weeks will bring conference, so what we do must be done quickly.

Yours in the Master's service,
A. G. Dixon.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

To Presidents of Auxiliaries.

Mrs. Stephenson requests me to mail to each Auxiliary President a Missionary Prayer Calendar. The president should announce at each meeting what the Calendar suggests so there will be special united prayer for our work and workers. Be personal, call the name of the missionary, and ask God's blessing on them and those they are teaching.

The Calendar for October is—Dr. Fleagle (now on furlough) and Miss Maud H. Lawson, in charge of work for women and girls, and the Women of China.

I am mailing them out and if I miss any one, please drop me a card. Please use these calendars at each meeting.

Dr. Harris Glascock,
Secy. Tithers' and Intercessors' League.

Alleghany, Davidson Ct.—Brother Ridge yesterday preached us another good sermon.

We will have no Sunday school until the second Sunday in Oct., at which time we expect to elect new officers. All come and help elect the one that you want.

I don't think that our superintendent has missed a Sunday that has been fitting to go; he has stuck to his place and tried to do his best. Let us all try to do our best.

Bro. Ridge will preach again the second Sunday in Oct. At the last time before conference he will open the doors of the church for any that want to join. If you are not a member you ought to join some where and work for the Lord.

Let us help our pastor by praying for him that he may do his best.

The Lord will answer prayers. Pray for us all.

Abigail Coggin.

Lexington, State St. Church.—Our pastor gave us two fine sermons Sunday. Sunday school is growing so rapidly that we will soon have to have more room. New scholars are added every Sunday and we have visitors almost every Sunday.

We are all looking forward with great pleasure to Mrs. Dixon's coming next Sunday. All Christians who read the Herald are requested to join us in prayer for a successful revival meeting.

Two new members were added to our number Sunday A. M. Mr. and Mrs. Rodgers who have recently moved here from Burlington moved their church membership from Burlington M. P. church to State St. We are also pleased to have these fine people join us. They are enthusiastic workers, "helpers" in every sense of the word. Our number is now more than twice what it was at the beginning of the conference year.

Laurel Hill, Fallston Circuia.—That there has been no report from this place for some time is not because we have been altogether idle. There have been so many good meetings going on for the last two months that we have been attending them when sickness did not hinder. Although we have been some what careless about reporting, I guess it is not too late even at this late hour.

Yesterday, Sept. 13, Bro. Morgan delivered a most wonderful message. On the second Sunday in July the union meeting at Toluco began and continued for three weeks; it was for Laurel Hill, Hebron, and Macedonia, and all other churches that would come. The attendance was good with a large congregation at every service. It was one of the best revival meetings ever held in this community, with more than 200 professions. I don't know how many gave their names to join the different churches in the surrounding community. Our beloved pastor, J. M. Morgan, did all the preaching except five sermons, three of which Rev. C. E. Phillips from Lincolnnton preached. They were most excellent sermons. We were glad to have Bro. Phillips and his wife sing for us their campmeeting song of forty years ago.

We were also glad to have the opportunity of hearing Rev. Jas. Green of Mocksville, the Holy Ghost filled man. He delivered the other two messages.

Bro. Morgan did some excellent preaching, for he is a man that is out and out for God as you all know that know him. We have never had a more able, Bible-knowing, soul-winning man on our work than Bro. Morgan. We feel that we have been fortunate to have such a man with us. We know that the effective work he is doing will be felt in the churches for years to come. His whole heart seems to be in his work. The collection for the tent meeting expenses amounted to $250.00 and a free will offering of $153.00 for Bro. Morgan.

The community is planning to erect a tabernacle at Toluca in the near future.

WHAT BENJAMIN FRANKLIN DID.

Here is a long list of the good deeds of Benjamin Franklin.

This catalogue has been summarized by Curtis Guild, who was present at the unveiling of the Franklin statue in Philadelphia 66 years after the patriot and philosopher's death:

He founded the Philadelphia Library, the leader in the field of hundreds of others of similar character.

He edited the best paper in the colonies, and gave a start to the press of America.

He exemplified the value of advertising in modern business.

His "Poor Richard" maxims were wit and wisdom that brought home valuable truths to readers, such as they could understand and make of practical service.

He founded the American postoffice system.

It was he who caused Philadelphia to be paved, lighted and kept clean.

He invented, when fuel was scarce, the Franklin stove, which economized it; and made a free gift of his invention to the public, besides suggesting various other heating inventions, later on, in which this country leads all others.

He was the remover of the once universal nuisance, smoky chimneys.

He was the first effective promulgator of the gospel of ventilation.

He made important electrical discoveries, and, as is said, robbed thunder of its terrors, and lightning of its power to destroy.

He was instrumental in founding the very best high school in Pennsylvania; he protested till his death against taking the funds of that institution teaching the youth the languages of Greece and Rome, when French, German and Spanish were so much more required in regular business transactions.

He founded the American Philosophical Society, the first organization of friends of science in this country.

His aid was valuable in founding the Pennsylvania Hospital.

He led that State in its struggle of thirty years against the tyranny of the Penns.

When the Indians were carrying on bloody marauding expeditions within 80 miles of Philadelphia, he commanded and led the troops of the city that were sent against them.

He was the author of the first scheme for uniting the colonies; his scheme contained many features that bind the States in the Union to-day.

More than any other man, he was instrumental in causing the repeal of the Stamp Act; and, more than any other man, he educated the Colonies up to independence.

He discovered the temperature of the Gulf Stream, and that northwest storms begin in the southwest.

He directed attention to the advantage of building ships with water tight compartments, getting the idea from the Chinese.

He labored earnestly for the abolition of slavery towards the close of his life, and in aid of those who were emancipated.—Selected.

IRRATIONALITIES.

(From the Boston Transcript)

Ain't any reason in bein' proud,
Feelin' too fine to go with the crowd.
Ain't any reason in bein' shy—
World ain't waitin' for you to go by.
Ain't any reason in bein' a shirk—
Gazin' at sombody else at work.
Ain't any reason in not bein' glad—Ain't this life the best you have had?
Ain't any reason in not forgivin'—
You must keep on lovin' to keep on livin'.
Ain't any reason in not bein' true—
Make a beg'nin' an' carry it through.
Ain't any reason or joy or beauty
In doin' anything less than your duty.

A PRAYER.

"Father, we thank Thee for the night,
And for the pleasant morning light,
For rest, and food and loving care,
And all that makes the world so fair,
Help us to do the things we should
To be to others kind and good;
In all we do and all we say
To grow more loving every day.

Amen."

Iowa-Missouri. A basement has been built under the church at Ladora at a cost of $1,500. . . . A like improvement has been made to the Millersville church. . . . The Mt. Moriah church, Luray circuit, was dedicated on August 16. The entire cost of the new building was provided for before the time for dedication.

Maryland. Maryland Conference folks are noted for the care they take of their parsonages. The following improvements at Sharps town is a fair sample: New bath room with Delco water system, every room in the house papered, new furniture in the living room, new rockers, new bed room suite.—The St. James church has just observed its 93d anniversary.—The Harper's Ferry church has been improved on the inside at a cost of $1,500. More than enough is in hand to paint the exterior.—Payson Street church, Baltimore, has been having community services during the summer. A portion of the street is roped off, and the services held in the open air.—The Young People's Institute had an attendance of more than 400, with more than 300 enrolled in classes.

Michigan. Evangelist A. R. Corn has just closed a meeting at Kalamazoo with more than 50 conversions. This is a new organization, with fine prospects.—Adrian College is making preparation for the opening of the 67th session with the most encouraging prospects in many years.

Mississippi. The Mt. Olive church on Ovett charge, has just closed a splendid meeting. As a result 16 members were added to the church. The church building which was destroyed by a cyclone last year has been replaced with a much better building.

Ohio. The Ohio Conference has placed a $1,000 insurance on each pastor. A part of the premium is provided by the pastors, the balance comes from the Conference Aid Society.—The New Harmony church held its ninth annual Home Coming service recently with a large crowd present.—The Young People's Conference, held at the Sabina Camp Grounds, registered more than 400 young people.—A hall for the young women has been built at a cost of several thousand dollars.—The young people of the Ohio Conference support their own foreign missionary in the person of Horace Williams, who is now in the language school at Peking, in preparation for the work at Kalgan, China.

Pittsburgh. Rev. J. C. Broomfield, president of the conference, has been appointed a member of the Winona Lake Assembly—Rev. John Henderson, pastor of the Hoboken church, has for thirty years been Chaplain of the Allegheny Home and Work-House. The Pittsburgh Press recently carried an interesting account of his ministry.—The People's Temple at Fairmont is to be enlarged by an addition to the Sunday school section. The auditorium of the church is being renovated. The total cost of the improvements will be above $30,000.

West Virginia. Rev. I. A. Barnes is preparing to issue a book on the history of the Methodist Protestant Church in West Virginia. The sketches that appeared in the church papers are exceedingly interesting.—The community in which the churches of Lewis Circuit are located received the highest score in the West Virginia County Life Standards, including the goals set for the churches.—The salary of the South Morganton charge has been advanced from $500 to $925.

TO AND FROM THE "LAND OF THE SKY."

A few thoughts suggested by a trip in a Ford to Asheville in company with Bro. J. A. Hanner and son, Adrian. Adrian was the driver, and did it well. Of course we older ones had plenty of advice to give about being careful, for which we charged nothing.

We pulled out from Randleman about 9 A. M., September the 3rd, stopping at Statesville to eat our lunch. About a quarter to six o'clock we drew up to Mr. Wilson's, at Nebo, McDowell Co., Mr. Wilson being a brother-in-law to Mr. Hanner. Here we spent the night very pleasantly. Why the town is called Nebo we do not know, for it is not on a mountain, though in sight of the mountains.

Still there is something suggestive and romantic about the name, carrying one back, in imagination, to the mountain in Moab whence Moses viewed the Promised land, and on which he died. The name is euphonious. It's easy to speak. Quite a contrast between it and Kamechatka, Popocatepetl &c.

While Nebo is a small town, it has a fine school building and large dormitory adjacent, for teachers and boarding students.

After supper Mr. Wilson drove us out to see the Catawba dam, constructed and owned by the Southern Power Co. This is an immense affair. But how many persons in N. C. know anything about it? We read in the paper and magazines of the great dams in the far west, but we seem to be ignorant of the great works in our own state. Why is this?

It is called Catawba dam, but there are really two dams, one on the Catawba river, and one on the Linville river, and a creek, the name of which we forget. The two rivers are connected by a canal, and thus form one immense artificial lake, covering thousands of acres, with a shore aggregating 150 ms., with a depth of water in places of 200 feet.

The Co. has built a fine sand-clay or top soil road on the very back-bone of the hills—almost mountains—encircling the lake. From this you have a fine view of the double, or triple, lake as it lies in and out, and round about, these high, romantic, mountain-like hills. And not the lake only, but the immense sweeping valleys that are far below, and the country for many miles beyond. It can't be described. It has to be seen. To any one who has an appreciation of the sublime in nature and in construction, it will pay him to visit and see for himself.

There is a fine steel bridge spanning the Catawba, just over the concrete dam. A look down from this bridge, to the empty river bed below makes one almost dizzy. Some say it is 150 feet to the river bed. We did not attempt to measure it.

But you say how did you see all this at night? The full moon gave light enough to render the scenery weird, wild, and sublime.

But we went out next morning and saw it all again, by daylight—and more than we saw the night before, for we extended our visit to the Linville river; where the Power House is located. This is a good sized two-story brick building. About the first question that arises is, where does the water come from? You see the water below the house as it flows out from under the house, but that is all. But you see a hill just above the building, higher than the building. We surmised that the water passed under this, and upon inquiry we learned that this hill(?) was a part of the dam on Linville, and that a 20-foot flume passed under this dam, carrying the water to the turbines. A Mr. Regan, a relative of the High Point Ragans; kindly showed us through the plant. Two six foot turbines drive the two immense dynamos, producing, or capable of producing, 42,000 horse power. This power, we were told, is distributed in N. C., S. C. and Georgia.

One thing that surprised us was the amount of heat given off. Seemingly equal to that given off by large boilers and furnaces.

Returning to the main high way, we are off for Asheville, arriving there in due time. After spending some little while here, we cross the French Broad, arriving at a Mr. Gooch's, some five miles out. The rest of the afternoon we spent going out to Sulphur Springs, some five miles from Mr. Gooch's, passing through West Asheville, which extends out to the Springs, or practically so. We were surprised to see so much town beyond the river.

Returning, we spent the night with Mr. Gooch, an old friend of Mr. Hanner's. We found it very pleasant here, receiving a royal reception, as we did at Mr. Wilson's at Nebo.

Mr. Gooch said that land in his neighborhood would bring $500. per acre. Some price, it would seem! Has the world gone crazy on prices? Lost all sense of proportion?

In the morning Mr. Gooch accompanied us out to Buncombe Co. county home, a very pleasing, artistic brick home, surrounded by shade trees and beautiful lawns.

We will not attempt a description of the grand mountain scenery. To those who have seen it; such an effort would appear tame, and to those who have not seen it, we would fail to convey anything like an adequate picture. So we must content ourselves in making a few general statements. From the top of Sunset mountain there is practically an unobstructed view in all direction—north, south, east; west—of mountains piled on mountains as far as one can see. Here language fails.

t which is the more to be admired; this view the succeeding panoramas that greet the between Old Fort and Ridgecrest, as one ends and crosses the Ridge, is hard to describe. One can see much from the train; but views from the state highway are much better. The R. R. runs much of the time down the bottom, or near the bottom, of the gorge, while the state highway winds and zigzags around the sides of the mountains, giving a far view for hundreds of feet down to the bottom of the gorges. While at the same time I see to the top of the mountains on the opposite side of the valley and gorges, as they rise and frown almost perpendicular in their dizzy heights. But all this must be seen—hands fail. But when you go, if you have not a camera, carry a tourist's glass and a camera. The state highway ascending and crossing the Ridge is fine—hard surface and easy to drive. We used to hear it said forty years ago that one of the finest pieces of engineering in the world was carrying the R. R. over the Ridge this side of Asheville. The engineering of the state highway must be the equal of that of the R. R. In one place the highway is several feet above, and over the R. R. tunnel.

We could speak of many things but time and space forbid. We will say this, however, that we have read articles by those who have traveled in Europe and other countries, to the effect that the scenery in the "Land of the South" is equal or surpassing anything seen elsewhere. If you can, go and see for yourself. Now we must come to the common-places—the sublime to the ridiculous. On our way we detoured at Morganton to Statesville via Lenoir and Taylorsville. Somewhere between Morganton and Lenoir we stopped at a store, filling-station, a well being there, to get some water. At the well we asked a boy, apparently 12 or 14 years of age, what country some mountains were in, far to the west, and he said, "North Carolina." We asked him what county we were in; there at the well, and he said, "North Carolina." The boy had the appearance of at least average intelligence, but he seemed to be "off" in his knowledge of counties. This reminded me of what my father used to tell more than 50 years ago, that during the civil war, when a number of men from Randolph and Watauga counties first went to the state Salt Works down on Masonboro Sound, south of Wilmington, N. C., some of them asked a citizen, a fisherman, by the name of Craig, what county they were in, and he replied, "North Carolina." To this the men replied, "O, we know N. C. is the state, but what county is it?" To this Mr. Craig replied with warmth, "I don't know—I never study such foolishness." This seems unbelievable. But truth is stranger than fiction. We, when a boy, used to see Ben. Craig the fisherman, that did not know the county in which he lived. But he knew how to sail his boat and catch fish. And perhaps the boy who did not know the county in which he lived, may have been useful. We do not judge a community by exceptional cases. In the same neighborhood where Mr. Craig lived, were Mrs. Everett, Mr. Brockett, and Mr. Hollis, well-to-do and well-informed persons. One thing that disgusts us is for some

New England reformer(?) to make a flying trip to the mountains of Dixie, and meet a case or two like the boy at the well, and see a few of the cabins in the coves and gorges of the mountains, and go back and write a magazine article of such a nature as to make the impression that such ignorance and poverty was the rule, and not the exception. All such is grossly misleading and needs a sharp rebuke.

We've found both ignorance and intelligence in every section in, and out of the state, where it has been our privilege to go.

This sketch has grown to a length we did not intend when we began to write. We could tell of other things by the way. A crowd gathered by the side of the road to see a flying machine "go." We stopped a few minutes. They were trying to start it. Finally the propeller started. My, what a dust it raised as it passed a few yards from us, as it started, took to the field, then to the air—and away it went. But it soon returned and landed on the spot where it started. Carrying persons at $5.00 a ride who had the money and the nerve to ride.

We had no puncture, blow-out, turn-over, collision, nor break-down, but melted a bearing by letting the oil give out. But this we replaced with a new one, and went on our way rejoicing, Adrian being our machinist.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON, SEPT. 20.

Lesson Text: 1 Thess. 2:1-12.

Paul Writes to the Thessalonians.

Golden Text. 1 Thess. 5:18.

The Central Truth: The gospel of salvation is the highest, holiest, and most imperative trust ever committed to instrumentalities of flesh and blood.

Scriptural Points.

1. Paul was happy in the recollection that his preaching of the gospel at Thessalonica was not in vain. The organization of a prosperous and promising church there filled his heart with joy. "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy." 1 Thess. 2:19, 20.

2. Notwithstanding the painful and shameful imprisonment that he endured at Philippi he was "bold in our God" to carry the message of life to both Jews and Gentiles at Thessalonica. He held aloft the banner of the cross in the face of much opposition at this place also, till he was compelled to leave.

3. He might have escaped persecution if he had compromised the truth as it is in Jesus Christ. He might have advocated circumcision as a harmless rite, and pleased the Jews. He might have pointed out and commended some of the good features of the Roman mythology, and escaped the opposition of the Gentiles. But he hewed to the line of gospel truth "For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor of guile."

4. With such a sacred trust as the world's redemption weighing upon his conscience, he could not afford to tickle the fancies of men. His supreme ambition was to please God, who had imposed such a sacred responsibility.

5. In verses five and six Paul makes it plain that he did not seek popular esteem, nor material gifts, nor the glory of the world, but he strove only to win souls and the glory of God.

6. He was as gentle, affectionate, and self-sacrificing in ministering to sinsick souls as any nurse could be, attending upon the needs of a most helpless patient.

7. He loved lost souls with such earnestness and self-abandon that he could cheerfully yield his own soul, or sacrifice his own life, in their behalf. In Rom. 9:3 he wrote, "For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh." And he loved the Gentiles with an equal measure of devotion.

8. Paul paid his own expenses by hard labor. He had no missionary board to defray his expenses. It is likely that he made tents to get money to pay for meals and defray traveling expenses.

9. This great apostle lived the gospel that he preached with such zeal and effect. He was a bright, living testimonial of the grace of God. He called upon the people among whom he moved, "and God also," to bear witness "how holily and justly and unblamably we behaved ourselves among you that believe."

10. Paul's interest in the new converts was as tender, anxious, and constant as that of a father in his helpless children. As a father in the gospel he earnestly exhorts, "that ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory."

Practical Points.

1. There is irresistible power in the gospel preached in the demonstration of the Holy Spirit. "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please; and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." Isa. 55:11.

2. Faith in God and love for souls yield Christian courage in every ordeal and crisis. "Add to your faith courage." "But the people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits." Dan. 11:32.

3. An uncompromising and aggressive attitude in regard to any moral question will surely awaken opposition and persecution. "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." 2 Tim. 3:12.

4. To the extent that any believer indulges the selfseeking spirit, to that extent does he lose out with God. "Seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not." Self glorying imposes the abasement of self. And it robs God of the glory due unto his name. "For thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory."

5. The most becoming sermon is that of a humble and holy life. "Ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshly tables of the heart." 2 Cor. 3:3.

—The Word of Life.

Asheville Times.—Some so-called open minds should be closed for repairs.

—Dr. Spahr was absent from his pulpit last Sunday, attending the Pittsburgh Annual Conference of which he is a member. Some of the members of Grace church took advantage of his absence to attend service in Calvary church.

MIRACLES.

I have been pained, astonished and humbled to witness the offending, insolent, skeptical opinions advanced on all sides respecting the rejection of God's divinely stated account of his own creation, and the grievous, prevalent tendency to set the individual will, with its corresponding materialistic interpretation, in vivid opposition to the Divine will, taking the pure, plain, accurate truth, as simply laid before us in the Bible, for vague magnificent imagery and delatable hyperbole, of a nature too ambiguous to be defined. This to me wears a dark and ominous aspect.

Do we presume to arrogate for God? To reason Him off his throne as an impostor who by surreptitious means secured the seat? Have mankind attained the stage when they are at liberty to play at precedence with God? Do we wish to reduce His inconceivable majesty to the level of human feebleness and deny Him the power of sustaining the life of man in a fish's carcass?

I have long past resigned the hope of determining why the miracle of Jonah should be received with such incredulity, astonishment and faithlessness when there are other miracles recorded calculated to stir our senses and imaginations far more wondrously.

Imagine to yourself a man with the dew of death upon his brow—lying rigid, cold, white, still—unperceiving, feelingless, spiritless—numb heart neither contracting nor dilating; whose blood is still; whose nerves will crumble; whose brain is nascent dust: extend your imagination further, and place Christ beside that lifeless thing bidding it arise! Further—and simultaneously with that divine command what secret hand stirs that limp, settled blood to movement? Who opens the portal of mortality that breath and life they enter therein—to toil; to reason; to fear; to die? Is this not miraculous beyond your extremest conceivability even in imagination?

Or of Christ rebuking the wild, turbulent waves in all their ferocity into the calm placidity of a mirroring lake! Or of Christ walking on a volatile, transparent, aerial fluid; the lightest element known mingling with another which is as our breath. He walks on this! This transparency His fortification and stronghold. His support and defense through miles and miles of depths of dark folding waters! From the accumulations of science, can any known operation of physical law explain this fluid resistance? Or when God "bowed the heavens", conceived not metaphorically, for it would be meaningless, but literally. Can any modern law of attraction, high branch of mathematics, or differential calculus explain the origin or gradation or media of this process?

All ratiocination, deduction, disputation, how insolently futile! How basely ignorant! The attempt to give plausibility to iniquitous decision. Yet how fearful is this imperturbable stiffening, disregard, and frigidity towards God's eternal omniscience. How designant of decay and doom! Its adherents have either incapacitated and emasculated their understandings and in a deep, lightless vacuity shrouded and imbrued with skepticism, circumscribe, ignorance, mockery and perfidy, fixed not with real alienation of the heart from God but in pitiful, pitiful ignorance, resulting from the adoption and formation of ignoble, sinful ideals, referable to those who by overwhelming, inimitable vanity, choose their vantage ground, and place their extempore being on a dust-grain of human knowledge and presume to penetrate and explain away the divine, prodigious, inconceivably wondrous works of Him who goes forth upon ways which are not our ways and retires into thoughts which are not our thoughts, and who is perfect in knowledge.

As the Creator of worlds we cannot understand Him. His majesty, excellency, and all-sufficiency; His august designs—all transcend the limits of the most enlarged imagination. We cannot understand the miracles performed of old, neither their parallelisms of today, that confound and baffle and awe. The balancings and sculptures of cloud-vapor that daily floats in the body of the air is a miracle. Infinite space,—the contemplation of which overpowers, subdues, and fatigues the imagination, is a miracle. Or lightning, which can smite the Alps into dust, and gather itself into the width of a trembling, golden wire. Or the wind, whose soft floatings scarce stir the bloom of tenderest flowers, then collects and thickens into bleak power that snaps and snuffs, as a magic demon, cities to destruction! The miracle of Thought, Feeling, Memory; the utter mystery of those undistinguished waves that silently go out of the mind into oblivion, while others are charmed or suffered again and again into fond or poignant returning. Or the transcendent mystery of the growth of a child in the mother's womb, which no converse with truth; the exposition of no abstract principle; no inquisition of reason can evolve out of the human intellect.

I would profoundly desire, therefore, while the clouds course on; the seas beat; the mists gather; the setting suns kindle beauty, while flowers bloom upon the night, and the suckling branches of the heart reach out to Love, Faith, and Charity, I would prayerfully desire that these ineffably sweet suggestions would deepen in our hearts a discernment of the everlasting truth of kindredness, association and inseparable relation between nature and its divine Author, that these should aid us to hear in spirit the sweet concert of God's laws, that it may bring a sound of glory, and tune our hearts to exalt, magnify, praise and worship our Father and our GOD.

A PRAYER TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Thou Who bestowest sevenfold grace

Everymore replenish us.

As the wind is Thy symbol

So forward our goings.

As the Dove,

So launch us heavenwards.

As Water,

So purify our spirits.

As a cloud,

So abate our temptations.

As Dew,

So revive our languor.

As Fire,

So purge out our dross.

Our Neighbors.

It is not easy for us Americans to be convinced that the nations next us are our door "neighbors," and that those on this of either ocean have a special definite claim on us. We like the expression "As goes Arica, so goes the world" but we do not like to take the responsibility to make the "World go right, especially that part closest to our American neighbors. We try to ignore Mexico, hold ourselves icily aloof from Canada and ignore the rest of America. But of these need the strong Christian friend United States could be to either or all of them if we would be true to our Christianity the inheritance that should be ours from Christian Forefathers.

Perhaps one of the most sinful and enervating countries on the globe today is South America. It is largely in the hands of the Catholic priests, and we only need to visit the Philippines after the Spanish war to know what a priest ridden country is.

If we were better acquainted with these people we would find ways for great usefulness to them. If we knew their needs we would be more apt to try to think of ways and means of helping them.

Helpful Suggestions.

There is no friendliness quite like Christian friendliness. It rises above boundaries and race differences, and insists on being helpful to others. Christian friendliness is the real need of the world today. We need an attitude of heart and mind which will compass the nations of the whole earth. Jesus was the greatest friend the world has known. The example of His life is the greatest inspiration to missionary action chronicled anywhere. His matchless teaching brings to our hearts the true Christian attitude toward others. As we catch step with Him we move out into Christian friendliness.

It does little good to urge people to reform their wrong living when they are too brought to them they must be urged to make the darkness and come to the light this way the Kingdom of God, which is Kingdom of light, is ushered in.

Facts About South America.

Latin America, the major part of which South America, is a country of the very poor and the very poor. In some of the large cities there is an enormous amount of luxury and right by its side is the most abject poverty and misery. Nothing but the Gospel of Jesus Christ can clear away this wrong condition, and the sooner Christian people come to the rescue, the better.

Illiteracy constitutes one of the greatest problems in South America, although it has been marked improvement in recent years. All the republics have public-school systems, although in many it is merely on paper, with little attempt to carry it out thoroughly. Where it is developed, it is mainly in the cities.

All of the South American republics, except Argentina, have a union of church and state, which makes all kinds of trouble, just as it does wherever it exists. The Roman Catholic Church, naturally, has its way in educational matters, and it is away behind the times.

In the face of these facts, South America is a coming country. Her population is steadily growing. Her lands are springing up in her cities, and the Gospel of Jesus Christ must keep pace with these developments. South America is growing materially, but what we do, as Christians, will largely determine her spiritual growth.

The missionary opportunities are great. Vast stretches of territory have no missionaries. Much of the effort, thus far, has been confined to the cities. But this is not fair. The country districts need the Gospel just as much. The Christian forces of North America must see that the people of South America are provided with spiritual food.

Things To Pray For.

1. Thank God for the missionary teachings of the Bible.
2. Thank God for the spirit of Christian friendliness which is rapidly growing.
3. Ask God to lead into a better acquaintance between North America and South America.
4. Ask God to bless the missionaries now laboring in South America.
5. Ask God to inspire others to volunteer for work in South America.

MICHAEL PUPIN, SERB IMMIGRANT BOY, HEARS HENRY WARD BEECHER.

By Rev. L. K. Long.

Michael Pupin, a friendless Serbian boy of fifteen, landed at Castle Garden in 1874 with five cents in his pocket. His parents were illiterate peasants, honest, industrious and religious—and he had been well brought up by them.

Perhaps the most important possession of the boy—because of his home-training, or growing out of it—was the power to gain the friendship of worth-while people who helped him to the better things toward which he was always aspiring. Vila and her mother—daughter and wife of the manager of the Delaware farm where he had his first American job—did much to help him with the language and to reveal to him something of the really high ideals for which America stands. Jim shoveled coal and kept up steam in the boiler-room of the New York where they worked. This fellow-workman was a philosopher, in his way, and in his work-room handed out to the boy from a strange land many nuggets of wisdom. Bilharz, the educated German who worked with Pupin in the factory, had missed being a priest because of an unfortunate love affair. He gave the ambitious boy much help in his preparation for college, teaching him Latin and Greek. The Lukanitch family—the father a native of Pupin's own country, the son and daughter brought up in New York—helped him get his bearings among American people.

Young Pupin had, in the old country, read a translation of Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin." In his examination by the immigration officials at Castle Garden his mention of this book and his knowledge of Abraham Lincoln and Benjamin Franklin as great Americans, had made a favorable impression, and prevented his deportation.

During the celebrated Beecher-Tilton trial Pupin saw pictures of Beecher in the shop windows. When he learned that the great preacher was a brother of the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" he became greatly desirous of hearing him. Young Lukanitch and his sister knew of the fame of Beecher and, though they were strict Roman Catholics, consented to go with their young friend on his first pilgrimage to Beecher's Plymouth Church. He afterwards became a regular attendant. Professor Pupin's description of Beecher and the service is most interesting as he gives it in his book, "From Immigrant to Inventor." He says:

"His face looked to me like the face of a lion and his long gray locks, reaching almost to his shoulders, supported the illusion. The church provided a setting worthy of his striking appearance. The grand organ behind and above the pulpit supplied a harmonious musical background to the magnificent singing of the large choir. I felt that the thrilling music was tuning me up for the sermon which the great orator was about to preach, and I was right.

"The sermon was free from involved theological analysis; it dealt with simple questions of human life and its determination by human habits. It was a dramatic and poetic presentation in the Cortland Street boiler-room, but in a very plain form of statement. The fact, however, that I found many spiritual bonds between great Plymouth Church and Jim's humble boiler-room show me today why Beecher touched the heart-strings of the plain people. He helped them to solve some of their problems of life just as Jim tried to help me solve mine. But Jim was not a cultured man and he delivered his chunks of practical wisdom in the same offhand manner in which he fed shovelfuls of coal to the busy fires under his boilers. Beecher, on the other hand, was a great orator and great poet, and every little grain of wisdom stored up in human life was placed before his congregation with all the force of his overpowering personality and with all the embellishments with which the imagination of a poetical nature could clothe it. I felt thrills creeping over my whole body as I listened, and the effect was not only mental and spiritual, but also physical, undoubtedly because of the blood's circulation produced by the mental exhilaration. Bilharz, although a rigid Roman Catholic, admitted after hearing Beecher several times that great sermons are possible even without any theological flavoring. 'But,' said he, 'everything is possible to a poetic soul which is propelled by the wings of a genius.' A remarkable concession for a man of Bilharz's training and mental attitude!

"Jim, who was a strict Presbyterian, rejoiced that I had picked out a Congregational Church for religious worship, and old Lukanitch confessed that if I persuaded his children to go with me to Plymouth Church, very often they might desert the Roman Catholic faith of their ancestors. I felt assured, however, that St. Sava, and the orthodoxy of my mother would never lose me through the influence of Beecher's genius, because Beecher was preaching to all humanity and not to a particular creed. I saw in him a living example of that type of American who, like Hamilton, Jay, Washington, and the other great men of whom I had heard at the Philadelphia exposition, were the spiritual and intellectual giants of the revolutionary period.

"My study of the history of Hamilton's life had shown me that the number of these giants was large; many of them signed the declaration of independence. I did not fail to see in this a most propitious omen of a great future for the country. What a spiritual giant Lincoln must have been, I thought, when I heard Beecher refer to him with humblest veneration! Beecher was the sunrise which dispelled much of that mist which prevented my eyes, just as it prevented all foreign eyes, from seeing the clear outline of American civilization.

"Four years previously I had for the first time attended an American church service in Delaware City, and had carried away the impression that in matters of public worship America was not up to the standards prescribed by the Serbian Church. Beecher and his Plymouth Church changed my judgment completely. Beecher's congregation seemed to me like a beehive full of honey-hearted beings. Each of them reminded me of the Americans who had befriended me at the railroad station in Vienna, and had rescued me from the official dragon who threatened to send me back to the prisons of the military frontier. I firmly believed that Beecher was preaching a new gospel, the American gospel of humanity, the same gospel which his great sister had preached. Every member of his congregation looked to me like a faithful disciple of this doctrine."

It would be a fine thing if every reader of this extract would also read the entire book of Professor Pupin, "From Immigrant to Inventor."

Rene Viviani, noted French statesman and orator, died Sept. 7, at the age of sixty-one. He was Premier of France in 1914, just before the World War, and had been a member of several French Cabinets.

M. Viviani twice visited the United States. He came here in 1917 as a member of the mission sent by France to show this Government how important it was for the United States to help actively in the war as soon as possible. His second visit was in 1921-1922, when he came as one of the French delegates to the Washington Arms Conference.

—The new immigration law which became effective July 1, 1924, seems to be keeping hundreds of thousands out of the United States.

THE KING WHO WISHED FOR GOLD.

Long ago in the days when strange things happened and gods and goddesses roamed the earth in human form, there lived a very rich King whose name was Midas. King Midas was very fond of his gold. He liked to let the gold pieces run through his fingers and he spent a great deal of his time counting it and fingering it. No matter how much he had he was always wishing for more, and it seemed that he could never get enough gold to satisfy the cravings of his heart. One day as he sat counting his gold and wishing that it were twice as much a stranger appeared before him.

"Why do you look so sad?" asked the stranger.

"Oh," answered the King, "if I only had more gold, how happy I would be."

"Well," said the stranger, "if that is really all you need to make you happy, I can satisfy you. From tomorrow everything that you touch shall become gold," and the stranger vanished.

That night the King could hardly sleep he was so excited. He watched the sky for the morning sun to rise, for in the morning he would see if the stranger had spoken the truth. With the dawn King Midas rose and lifted his robe to place it on his shoulder. Instantly every thread was gold. It was so heavy he had to lay it aside. He sat down to fasten his sandals and in a twinkling the chair became golden and his sandals turned to pure gold at his touch. The sight of the gold made him wish for the fresh beauty of the garden and he hastened out of doors. But wherever he trod the path turned to gold. The flowers that he passed lost their fragrance at his golden touch. His little daughter running to greet him, at his kiss became a golden statue. With heavy heart King Midas returned to his palace. He loved his little daughter more than anyone knew and now his greed for gold had lost her to him. Servants hastened at his approach to bring his breakfast, but the water turned to gold as it touched his lips, and the food turned to gold in his mouth. With all his gold the king would have to starve to death!

With tears in his eyes the king turned from the table. "Gold!" Gold!" he cried, "take it away!" At that moment the stranger appeared at King Midas' side. "Are you not happy?" he asked. "Has not your wish been fulfilled?"

"I am the most miserable of men," cried the unhappy king. "I have lost the joy of life. My little daughter has been turned to a thing of gold, the flowers no longer hold their beauty. Take away this golden touch, give me the beauty of life, and I shall be content with little wealth so great will be my wealth of spirit."

"So shall it be," said the stranger, "Bathe yourself in the waters of yon pure stream and sprinkle a little of the water on everything that your touch has turned to gold," and again the stranger vanished.

King Midas hastened to do as the stranger had said, and the cool water of the stream refreshed his fevered brow. Then he took a flask of the water into the garden and the first thing he did was to sprinkle some of it upon his little daughter. With a sigh and a shudder she came to life, and as her father embraced her he explained what had happened. Together they went through the garden reviving the flowers and as each one nodded in the breeze the greed departed from King Midas' heart and love and content took its place.

WEBB GRAHAM'S PATIENTS.

It was early in the spring and Webb Graham had spent two weeks trying to get a job. But wherever he went it was the same story, "We've help enough at present;" or "Times are too hard to warrant our taking any extra hands till business picks up a bit."

"I'll tell you what you can do," suggested Mrs. Graham one evening after Webb who had trudged unsuccessfully all day looking for work, had eaten his supper.

Webb looked up inquiringly.

"You can doctor our back yard tomorrow."

"What! Doctor what?" Webb wondered if he had heard correctly.

"Our back yard," repeated Mrs. Graham, smiling. "When I was hanging out some towels this afternoon I realized how much it needed it."

"Being doctored?"

"Yes; and I'll give you 15 cents an hour till its cured."

"The back yard surely does look—pretty—bad," Webb acknowledged, slowly. "I've noticed it, too. Well, tomorrow I'll pay my first professional call there and see what I can do to make it well!"

Before Webb had quite finished with his new job, Judge Kilgore, who was negotiating the purchase of the lot next the Graham's, chanced to look over the dividing fence and discovered what the boy was doing.

"Webb" he exclaimed, "you've transformed that back yard of yours into a regular park—almost. I wish mine looked as well. What will you charge," he asked suddenly, "to come over and clean mine up for me?"

"Fifteen cents an hour," replied Webb in a businesslike tone.

"Very well. I'll give it. You can start in any time."

"All right: I'll come tomorrow," promised Webb.

"Good! You'll find enough to keep you busy."

The next morning Webb stopped abruptly in the midst of carting away a wheelbarrow load of tin cans from the Kilgore back yard.

"I believe I can do it!" he exclaimed suddenly, straightening his back. "I've got to get money for a course in telgraphy somehow, and I believe this is just the thing."

"It will be some expense advertising, but I can borrow from mother if I need more than I have. I can't mor'n fail."

"Fifteen cents—is cheap—enough," reflected Webb later, as he began shoveling up a pile of ashes. "That's less than other doctors ask," whimsically, "and theirs isn't half the work my job is."

Webb stopped work in the middle of the afternoon, hurried home and changed his clothes.

"Mother, could you loan me a little money, if I should need it?" he asked eagerly.

"What for, dear?"

"Oh, a little plan of mine, which"—

"Which my boy wants to keep secret from his mother for a little while?" interrupted Mrs. Graham, smiling. "I guess I can let you have it, if it isn't too much."

"I don't know how much it will take," replied Webb. "I can tell tonight though."

An hour later Webb entered the Daily Herald office.

They told him the ad would cost five cents a line, each issue—on an average of seven words to the line.

"That will be," reckoned Webb, "50 cents a day, for I'd want 10 lines."

"Have you the copy with you?"

Webb held up the paper and read over what he had written:

"Webb C. Graham, Doctor of Back Yards, is ready to respond to emergency calls, or otherwise. Specialty, ill-kept and disease-producing back yards. Only medicine, vigorous arm and hand action. If patients don't immediately improve in looks after one day's treatment, no fee charged. Two dollars a call—each call to last full working day. Office, 233 Oxford St."

Mr. Traxler, the clerk, laughed. "No question about that bringing you patients," he said approvingly. "And, by the way, I'd like to have you call on my back garden immediately. Come to think of it, it's looked sick for a long while. I think it will take two calls, at least to make it attractive enough to receive callers, and then 'twill need professional attendance all along during the summer to keep it in a healthy condition. Can you attend to it?"

"Sure."

"Very good; my number is 324 Millbridge Street."

"Now I'll pay," and Webb thrust his hand into his pocket for his money. He had just enough to pay for one week's insertion.

"No; we'll let that go toward my bill," and Mr. Traxler waved back Webb's money. We'll settle later, after we see how your patient gets on. And I hope you'll have as many others as you can attend to," added the advertising manager, encouragingly. "Good-bye."

"I didn't imagine I'd get my first patient so soon," said Webb to himself, as he started jubilantly towards home.

The next evening, when Webb got home from Mr. Traxler's, his mother met him at the door.

"Any calls for professional services?" asked Webb, expectantly.

"Three," replied his mother.

"Three—already!" exclaimed Webb, incredulously.

"Yes, and from very prominent families, too," rejoined Mrs. Graham. "One came from Mrs. Downing, 978 Atlantic Street; one from Dr. King, 2 Ashburton Square; and the other was from Mr. Greeley, president of the Union Trust Company."

"Mr. Greeley! Why, he said only last week that he had no work for —"

"It's professional service he wants" interrupted Mrs. Graham.

"Hurrah for my patients!" and Webb hurried into the house to wash and get ready for supper. "My! but I'm hungry."

That week so many calls came in for Webb that he had to engage two boys to help him.

"I don't know what will happen if this keeps up," he said proudly. "I'll have to restrict my practice, or engage more assistants. Who would have thought there was so much work to be had—and so near home, too! I see now my course in telegraphy is a certainly—if I don't get sick myself or lose my patients."

"It's great—being in demand like this; I only wish I'd thought of advertising before."—Ex.

THE RED FEATHER.

Lottie came scampering into the house with something clasped in her hand.

"Louise! Louise!" she called. "Do red feathers grow on mulberry trees? I thought only mulberries grew on them."

She was staying in the country for the first time, and she saw so many wonders that it seemed to her almost any marvelous thing must be true.

"No, feathers don't grow on mulberry trees," Louise answered, laughing. "Show me what you have."

Lottie opened her hand and showed a slender little feather brilliant in color.

"I found it under the mulberry tree," she said. "Perhaps it dropped out of a doll's hat. How beautiful it is going to look in Arabelle's new sailor."

"I know who lost it," said Louise.

Lottie's face fell. "Oh, do you?" she answered. "Then Arabelle can't have it, of course; it belongs to some other little girl's doll."

"If you would like to see the owner," Louise went on, "take a walk with me this afternoon, and you shall."

After dinner the two cousins set out for their walk. Lottie kept thinking about the owner of the feather.

"Is she pretty," she asked, "and about my age?"

"Younger than you," was Louise's answer. "And she's very, very pretty."

At length Louise turned out of the road and into the woods. "Follow me, but be very quiet," she said. Lottie obeyed wonderingly.

After they had walked a little way they sat down on a fallen log. Lottie looked questioningly at her cousin, but Louise put her finger to her lips in a signal for silence. Lottie was trying hard to keep quiet when all at once a clear, sweet whistle rang out somewhere near.

"Is that the little girl?" Lottie asked. "Why, she can whistle loud as a boy!" Then she added suddenly, "There she is! I saw her red hair ribbon flash behind a bush."

Suddenly there was a flash of red just over their heads. An instant later a beautiful red bird lighted on a branch just beyond them.

Lottie gasped; she thought she had never seen anything so beautiful. Then her glance fell on the feather in her hand, and she understood.

"Why, it's not a girl at all," she cried. "It's a wonderful, wonderful bird!"

At the sound of her voice the brilliant bird gave one flutter and was gone.

"I've driven him away."

"Never mind," Louise answered "we'll come back some other day and watch him. His nest is in a tree near by; I watched him and his mate as they were building it."

As the girls walked back to the highway Lottie suddenly gave a little skip. "And now, after all," she said gleefully, "I can have the lovely red feather for Arabelle's hat!"—Mary M. Parks, in Herald and Presbyter.

THE MESSAGE OF THE STARS.

The golden glow is paling

Between the cloudy bars;

I'm watching in the twilight

To see the little stars.

I wish that they would sing tonight

Their song of long ago;

If we were only nearer them,

What might we hear and know!

Are they the eyes of angels,

That always wake to keep

A loving watch above us

While we are fast asleep?

Or are they lamps which God has lit

From His own glorious light,

To guide the little children's souls

Whom He will call tonight?

We hardly see them twinkle

In any summer's night,

But in the winter evenings

They sparkle clear and bright.

Is this to tell the little ones,

So hungry, cold and sad,

That there's a shining home for them

Where all is warm and glad?

More beautiful and glorious,

And never cold and far,

Is He who always loves them—

The "Bright and Morning Star."

I wish those little children knew

That holy, happy Light!

Lord Jesus, shine on them, I pray,

And make them glad tonight.

"SOMEBODY FORGETS."

A little boy living in the most poverty-stricken section of a great city found his way into a mission Sunday-School and became a Christian. One day not long after, some one tried to shake the child's faith by asking him some puzzling questions. "If God really loves you, why doesn't he take better care of you?" Why doesn't he tell somebody to send you a pair of shoes, or else coal enough so that you can keep warm this winter?"

The boy thought a moment, and then said, as the tears rushed to his eyes, "I guess he does tell somebody, and somebody forgets."

The saddest thing about the answer is its truth. God is not unmindful of His little ones. Whether they are in want of fire or food or advice or sympathy, He calls to supply the things that are needed. He tells us that every act of kindness or helpfulness done to the least or lowest of His creatures, He will count as done to Him. But not all of His purposes are carried out—often because we choose our own pleasure rather than His will; often because somebody forgets.

Somebody forgets! That is one of the reasons for the pinched faces we see sometimes, and which haunt us for days after, for half-clad, shivering bodies and cheerless homes. That is the reason why children in this dear land of ours have never heard Christ's name except in curses. It is the explanation of more than half the sin and sorrow of this world. Is it not high time for each of us to ask the question, "Am I among those who forget?"—Selected.

THE CARNAL MIND.

The carnal mind is more than tendency to sin, more than the power of habit, more than moral depravity. It is the active, irrepressible, and impelling corruption of the human heart. It is the most appalling and dangerous of all moral inheritances. Unrestrained indulgence aggravates it to an alarming degree. It is enmity against God. It threatens the exercise and existence of every virtue. It is the severest handicap to the Christian life. Next to the devil it raises the most formidable opposition to the Holy Spirit's work in the soul. "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would."

Jesus described it as that from within which defiles a man. Paul wrote of it as the law of sin in our members, as the flesh, or fleshly nature, as the old man, or old Adam, and as the festering ego, or self, emitting moral corruption.

The Holy Scriptures reveal two methods of dealing with the carnal mind. One is self-restraint, coupled with the strong assistance of the Holy Spirit. And the grace of God is sufficient to repress every outburst of carnality. But this method is far from satisfactory. For in an unguarded moment carnal inclinations will burst forth in spite of good intentions and spiritual attainments.

The other method is the destruction of the carnal mind by the power of the Holy Spirit. This is a wiser and safer method than the other. A caged lion presents some conditions of danger. There is a possibility of his getting out. But a dead lion is not dangerous in the least. To completely die to sin, to the flesh, and to the world is a most holy ambition of every child of God. The privilege, obligation, and beneficent results of such a death are set forth by the apostle Paul in the following passages:

"Reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. 6:11.

"Mortify therefore you members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry." Col. 3:5.

"I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life that I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." Gal. 2:20.

"And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." Col. 5:24.

"But God, forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Gol. 6:14.

—The Word of Life.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Flat Rock Circuit.—It has been some time since I have asked for space, but I want to let the readers know we are not dead, but very much alive. I never thought a fellow made a very good hand that talked all the time while he was at the job. We have been in the soul-saving business since the first Sunday in July. We started our first meeting at Gideon's Grove first Sunday in July. Bro. Hulin was our pulpit help. He brought the sweet story of the cross and was accompanied by the power of the Holy Ghost, and the church was greatly revived. Seventeen were converted and 16 joined the church. Everybody enjoyed having Bro. Hulin with them.

Our next meeting was at Palestine, third Sunday in July. Bro. C. H. Hill was with us here and did the preaching, and everybody enjoyed his messages. We had 21 converts and 13 joined the church. The church was greatly revived. We just had day services, but the church would not hold the people that came every day.

Our next meeting was at Bethel, first Sunday in August. Bro. Ashburn was with us at this place, and his messages rang out with the old-time power which moved the church and the unsaved. The church was moved to activity and the unsaved were moved to repent. Forty-six came out and took a stand for Christ; 26 have joined the church at this place and more will. The people say it was the best meeting there in 31 years.

Our next meeting was at Bethany, second Sunday in August. Bro. Ashburn helped at this place. He had been pastor of this church two years a long time ago and the people were glad to have him with them again. We had a great meeting: 17 professions and 18 joined the church.

Our next and last meeting began at Flat Rock church the fifth Sunday in August with a home-coming day. Bro. J. S. Williams was with us and preached at 11 o'clock. We had talks from a number of visiting brethren after noon. Bro. T. A. Williams led in the afternoon service and did the preaching for us till Thursday night and everybody enjoyed his fine messages. Bro. D. A. Highfill was with us till Wednesday afternoon. We were glad to have him. Bro. Williams had to leave us Friday, but we ran the meeting on until Wednesday night of this week. We had a great meeting; the older people say the best meeting that has been at Flat Rock in 25 years. There were 48 professions, 24 joined the church and more will join Sunday as we are to have a baptizing at Bro. J. B. Ogburn's mill pond.

On Friday night the entire community joined in pounding the pastor and family, and their preacher had to do a thing that he never did before in the midst of a revival, or any other time that I remember. Now you can imagine a hungry man in the pulpit with every good thing piled around that appeals to the appetite, and just think what you would do. Well, I just asked the people to pray for me that God would take my mind off those things and place it upon Heaven and heavenly things and that these things might be a means of making us love one another better and love God supremely. But that pounding was not the beginning nor the ending of the deeds of kindness, because they are pounding all the time. We have had melons, beans, honey, butter, flour, meal, fruit, milk, and space would not permit me to give names, but God knows each one, and will bless each one. And may God make us just such a blessing to the work as he would have us to be.

We have taken in 97 new members this year.

We as a family want to thank the good people for their many deeds of kindness, and praise God for His blessing upon this people. And may we continue so to live that God may bestow even greater blessings upon us. There are many unsaved about us yet. May we pray on, and labor on until God may lead us to victory in all He would have us do in Christ's name. May God bless our beloved Zion.

Joel B. Trogden.

Porter, Stanley Charge.—We haven't reported for some time, but we have been busy. Our pastor, A. Ridge, filled his appointment at this place Sunday. As usual he brought us a very helpful message, after which the Lord's Supper was administered.

While our Sunday school is small, I think it is doing some good work. Much interest is being manifest by both teachers and pupils.

Mrs. J. L. Cauble has returned from the hospital and is getting along nicely.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Braswell of Concord, N. C., spent the week end with Mrs. Braswell's mother, Mrs. C. F. Marbury.

The relatives and friends of W. H. Marbury gave him a surprise birth-day supper last Saturday night. Quite a number attended and all report a nice time. "Uncle Hat" is one of our faithful members and we wish for him many happy birthdays.

Wishes to the Herald and all its readers.

Pray for us.

Reporter.

Phillip Hartley.

Mr. Hartley was stricken about a week before he passed away, with the second stroke of paralysis, but revived for a short while and then had the third stroke and never revived any more. I have only known him for about nine months, but I have never met a more kind, pleasant man. Mr. Hartley had a wonderful bright and happy philosophy of life. He always had a smile and seemed to greatly enjoy seeing his friends, and he loved his church as few men do. He was always present at all the different services of his church, and performed his duty perfectly. He was greatly loved by his pastor and family, for they realized in him so many noble traits, and the great quantity of beautiful flowers at his funeral showed that his pastor and family were not all that realized that he was a noble citizen, a faithful friend, a loving husband, a kind father, and a fine neighbor. In his death West Lexington church has lost one of the best members, and the neighborhood one of her best citizens, but our loss is his gain, for we feel assured that he is beyond the troubles of this life. He sang while on his bed of affliction, "I am going home to die no more," and "We are going down the valley one by one," and now we feel that all is well with him, that he is enjoying the blessings that God has in store for the Christians. He is gone, but not forgotten.

Mr. Hartley was born August 8th, 1869, died September 9th, 1925. He was twice married. His first wife was Maggie Wilson, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hense Wilson. She departed this life April 12th, 1893. His second wife was Miss Mollie Burton, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Burton. He leaves his noble wife and two sons, Willie and Ernest Hartley, four grandchildren, four brothers, and one sister. His funeral was held in West Lexington M. P. church where he was a member and he loved his church and was always so faithful to his church. His body was laid to rest in the cemetery of Lexington beneath a wealth of beautiful flowers to await the resurrection morning. The service was conducted by his pastor, Rev. W. L. Carson, assisted by Rev. C. B. Way, a former pastor, Rev. Mr. Davis, a Baptist preacher. Weep not, dear bereaved ones, but be consoled and comforted by knowing he has fought successfully and won heaven and is watching and waiting for his loved ones to join him in that beautiful home over there. May God sustain and bless you all.

His pastor's wife, Mae E. Carson.

Bethel, Mocksville Ct.—On third Sunday of August we began our special meeting, which went on until after fourth Sunday, closing Tuesday night. We had a most glorious meeting: the church was much revived, there was a number of conversions and ten joined the church with others yet to join. This makes 24 Bro. Sisk has taken into the church at Bethel this year. Bro. Bethea did all the preaching the first week of the meeting. He gave us some wonderful messages. Sorry he could not stay to the close. We were also glad to have his good wife and their two nieces, Misses Kestler and Warlick, worship with us the first Sunday of the meeting.

Our Sunday school is moving on just fine. Sorry the time is so close at hand when some of our Sunday school pupils will leave for college. Luther Crotts, Billie Howard and Hubert Cartner all will leave for A. & M. College, Raleigh. In two weeks Miss Lucile Martin, another one of our number, will leave for Duke University. These young people will be greatly missed from the Sunday school and community, but our best wishes go with them for great success in life. Bro. C. S. Summers was elected delegate to the Annual Conference by the third quarterly conference held recently at Hulins.

A Reader of the Herald.

Mebane.—Our church is still moving along nicely and we are accomplishing things all the time. About a month ago a daily vacation Bible school began, and this lasted for two weeks. Children from 6 to 13 years of age were admitted. About 40 attended. The instructors were Dr. Johnson, Misses Pauline Nicholson, Grace Barnette, and Pomona Johnson. At the close of this course of instruction an entertainment was given; this was very interesting and gave us some idea of the work that was carried on during this school. We feel that all that attended were highly benefited. Monday evening at 7:30 the W. F. M. S. met at the home of Mrs. Hill Payne. An interesting program arranged by Miss Mary Jobe was rendered; 17 members and two visitors were present. After the business meeting Mrs. Payne served cream and cake.

On Friday night of this week the W. H. M. S. assisted by the choir and others will give a sacred concert at the church. An offering will be taken at this time. Thursday afternoon the Ladies' Aid Society will hold their regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. Albert Sykes. Reporter.

Sept. 8, 1925.

Henderson.—On September 6 we were glad to have Miss Minnie Belle Grissom of Roanoke to unite with our church. She came to us from the old Antioch charge.

Our revival meeting began Sept. 6, and will continue through next Wednesday night. Rev. J. R. Hutton of Greensboro has been doing the preaching and he has been giving us some wonderful sermons. We are praying that souls will be saved and that the church in general will be revived as a result of them.

The Sunday school is planning to have the annual promotion and rally day 4th Sunday of this month. Reporter.

Fairview, Fairview Ct.—I haven't reported recently the work at Fairview, but the work has continued to grow and show a steady improvement. Our annual revival was held this summer at Fairview beginning the 2nd Sunday in August. Brother Abernethy did the preaching. We took in 16 new members and are looking forward to many more soon. Plans have been formulated and adopted by our Building Committee to build four new Sunday school rooms to our church. A canvass is now being made to finance this program and the construction work will soon be started. We are having large attendance at Sunday school and church service, and we are looking forward to a great work in the future. C. G. Isley.

Democrat Circuit.—Since we have not seen an yreport from this work for some time I will take the responsibility of letting the folks know that we are still on the job. There has been some progress made since we last reported.

Our special meeting at Pleasant Gap was in every way a success. While we did not have many conversions, yet the church was greatly revived. Bro. Love came out and preached twice for us, and after this the writer did the preaching until the close. Bro. McClamrock, the pastor of the M. E. C. S., preached the closing sermon. We all enjoyed his sermon very much. We thank him and Bro. Love for the help they gave us in this meeting.

The President's Visit.

Bro. and Sister Dixon spent three days with us on the work. They brought to us some fine messages. We had hoped that more of our people would attend these services, but those who heard were inspired to great er things in the kingdom service.

These were three very pleasant days; we enjoyed their visit, though we would have enjoyed it more if we could have had them in our home, but on account of illness of our baby we could not entertain them in our home. Glad to say the baby is much better now.

It was the privilege of the writer to preach to a large congregation at the Metcalf school house Sunday afternoon. There are some fine people to be found in this community.

Sunday night I met with the good people of the Weaverville church. There we found a fine bunch of Methodist Protestants waiting. After a warm welcome we preached as best we could to them. To our surprise Bro. Fred Edwards took a collection and turned over to us $11.05. We cannot find words to express our gratitude. We can do nothing better than just bow our heads and pray God's richest blessings on you all.

It is to be regretted these good people have not had a pastor this year; these are a loyal people.

We sincerely hope that there can be a good pastor found to serve them, for they are worthy of the best. Pray for us. Yours in the Master's service. L. S. Helms, Pastor.

Calvary.—Many things have taken place at Calvary since the pastor last wrote to the Herald. The Sunday school has had a picnic at the Y. M. C. A. Camp, the ladies' organizations a picnic at Ritter's Lake, the Senior C. E. an outing at the Tar Heel Inn, and the young men's class a melon feast at Ritter's Lake. Perhaps there have been other outings that I do not now recall.

The work has been making progress here in spite of the extreme hot weather. The country revivals have taken a good many of our members from our Sunday school and Sunday services and yet we have not noticed any great slump in the attendance.

At the third quarterly conference it was found that Bro. W. J. Williams is the delegate to annual conference. Bro. Williams is a brother of Rev. J. S. Williams of Asheville.

Our church people continue to show their interest in the temporal welfare of their pastor and his family. Since our last report there have been a large number of good things to eat brought to the parsonage. We have thanked the givers in person so that we think it unnecessary to take the space in the Herald to enumerate articles and givers. We thank one and all for this additional remuneration for the service we are attempting to render. I sometimes think that many church people do not really realize the minister's true situation. He is giving his life to the work of the ministry, therefore, he has no time to engage in other lines whereby he might make money with which to support himself and family. I have never been able to see how people can look upon what they contribute to the support of the gospel ministry as a gift. It appears to me that it is only the payment for service rendered.

Our fall revival campaign is scheduled to begin the third Sunday in October and will continue for about two weeks. The pastor will be assisted by Bro. W. K. Hess, who will have charge of the service of song. The prayers of all who are interested in the work here will be appreciated. It will encourage us to know that you are praying for the success of the meeting.

We are glad to report that Mrs. A. H. Causey and Mrs. J. A. Cox, who have recently taken treatment at the hospital, are improving.

The pastor has had no vacation this summer (would not know what to do with one of those things if he had it) but has enjoyed being with Bros. J. A. Burgess, A. L. Hunter, G. W. Holmes, and W. F. Ashburn in evangelistic meetings.

With prayers and good wishes for every pastor and for every church, I am

L. W. Gerringer, Pastor:

Halifax Circuit.—We began our revival services at Union on the 3rd Sunday in August, and continued until Thursday night. We failed to get any help for this place, so we had to do the preaching. We had good congregations at each service, especially at the night services. The church was revived, and I think much good accomplished.

We began our revival at Hollister on the 4th Sunday in August. Rev. G. M. Hendry, of Gibsonville, came to us on Monday, and did the preaching until the following Sunday. Bro. Hendry gave us a fine lot of gospel sermons accompanied with power, and God honored the preaching of the word, and many were won for Jesus Christ. Bro. Hendry was accompanied by Mrs. Hendry, and my brother J. L. Spencer, of Gibsonville, and his girls, a very good working force indeed. Mrs. Hendry and others added much to the success of the meeting, by their prayers and personal work. Sunday was a great service, we made it decision day in the Sunday school, and a number decided for Christ. We were sorry Bro. Hendry was compelled to leave us on Sunday to begin his meeting. We continued the meeting here until the following Wednesday night. There was between forty, and fifty came to the altar and were converted or reclaimed, and 27 united with the church, and I think that there are others to join yet. We organized a prayer meeting here and it is starting off well. We are looking for a better day for Holister.

We begin our revival at Bethesda next Sunday, Sept. 13th.

They are still pounding us. We want to thank Mrs. L. A. Williams, for chickens, Miss Della Draper for gas for the Dodge, Edgar Whitley for eggs, Mrs. B. F. Willey for groceries, and Mrs. Peggy Lee, for chickens, and apples for the meeting.

C. L. Spencer, Pastor.

Melton's Grove.—Our revival services began the fourth Sunday in August, and closed on Wednesday after.

We had good crowds at night, but the people did not come out much in the day. Rev. D. A. Braswell did the preaching. He gave us some fine sermons.

While the meeting was not what we had hoped for, I believe it did good.

We are still holding on to our Sunday school. It is small yet, but we hope to grow.

Glena Love.

Spring Church Charge.—Our meeting at Lebanon Church was held the week following the second Sunday in August. Bro. Paschall was our pulpit help. He preached well. The congregation was large. The meeting was good. Several reclaimed and converted. Some joined the church.

This is the second year Bro. Paschall has helped in meeting here. The people love him, would be glad for him to come again.

The 4th Sunday in August our meeting commenced at Spring church. A large congregation, quite an array of ministers, Rev. A. G. Dixon and wife, J. D. Williams, D. A. Fishel, H. L. Powell and Dr. F. R. Harris. Dr. H. did not claim to be a minister. At one time in my life all the Harrises I knew were preachers, so I got that fixed. Dr. H. was the first speaker. You know what he was here for, he raised some money, I think between $30.00 and $50. Dr. Dixon preached at the 11:00 hour a good sermon. Dr. Williams in the afternoon. I will just say here, that it was a treat to me to meet these brethren of the ministry. Bro. Dixon and wife, left us Sunday evening. Bros. Fishel and Powell were back another day.

Bro. Williams did the preaching after Sunday till Thursday when the meeting closed. He preached well. We had a good meeting. 25 or 30 reclamations and conversions, 12 or 13 joined the church. It was good to see how the young people here loved Bro. Williams and would be glad for him to come again.

The people have just finished a good well at the parsonage at something near $600.00 cost. We now have good water so come again. We have had two good meetings, good prayer meetings.

H. S. B. Thompson.

Reidsville.—Our pastor is back from his furlough, and is preaching splendid sermons to us.

Sunday evening we had our Children's Day service. The program was splendid; each child did its part well. Much credit is due Mrs. J. H. Allen, and Mrs. E. L. Somers, who assisted her, for making this program possible. The offering amounted to about $15.00.

We were glad indeed to have Mr. and Mrs. John E. Burton unite with our church Sunday. They come to us from the M. E. church.

We are looking forward with much interest to our special meeting which begins the third Sunday in this month. We are hoping and praying that much good may be accomplished during this meeting. Prof. T. O. Pender will be with us, and will lead the singing.

Mrs. H. S. Dixon, Press Reporter.

Mageland.—We have just closed two weeks of revival services on our work. On the fourth Sunday the pastor began a series of services at New Hope where a good congregation greeted him twice on Sunday. Bro. C. E. Phillips came on Monday and stayed until the close of the services the following Friday. Bro. Phillips did all the preaching and a good meeting was witnessed there. He preaches in the clear, plain and convincing way that wins in a place for him in the hearts of all who know him. It was the pastor's first time to listen to Bro. Phillips; however, it took only a short while to convince me that he is a real evangelist. He preaches with power and delivers the plain gospel as he sees it in the Bible. Our congregations were good despite the fact that it was a busy season with many of our people. The church was crowded at night and many were compelled to sit in their automobiles or stand near the windows in order to hear the messages of Bro. Phillips. I think it can be said of him in the words of the poet, "The truth from his lips prevails with double sway, and fools, who come to scoff remain to pray." We had fifty-six people to come forward renewing their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and confessing faith in him. It was a great meeting and the church was greatly revived. Fathers and mothers were won for the Master and many young people were brought back into the service of Jesus Christ. The Phillips Evangelistic Club that was organized by Bro. Phillips last year played a great part in the success of our meeting. These good folks have been meeting twice each week and holding prayer services. On Sunday night they meet at the church and each Wednesday night they meet in some home of the community and conduct their services themselves. They have revivals in these mid-week meetings. Sinners have asked for prayer in a number of them. People, if more communities would do as the New Hope people are doing we would have better revivals and it would not take half the time we devote to revival meetings to get the church to working. When the time comes for a revival to begin and the preacher has to convert the people to have a revival in four or five days time. "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and forgive their sin, and heal their land." 2Chron. 7:14. The church is thinking too much about business and the things of this world and too little about God is why we are not having better revivals. People fail to consider the shortness of this life and are giving too little time to the service of Jesus Christ and the Church. Our people at New Hope invited Bro. Phillips back for a ten day meeting next year to be held under an arbor that we intend to build near the church. Already subscriptions to the amount of near $200.00 have been received and a good amount of the material has been promised by members of the church. We expect to build an arbor that will seat thousands of people and hope to have a great time at New Hope beginning the third Sunday in July 1926. That is the date, so don't you set a date and be busy but plan now to come to our camp meeting at New Hope. To show our appreciation of Bro. Phillips' earnest effort among us we gave him a purse of $50.20 at the close of the meeting. At the close of the meeting three young people were taken into the church. There will be more to join at the next appointment.

Our meeting began at Rose Hill the fifth Sunday morning. Bro. Quick, former pastor, preached at the eleven o'clock hour and the pastor preached in the evening. Bro. Phillips came Monday and preached to a good congregation at night. His messages were delivered with the same earnestness and power as before and good congregations greeted him. Our services were not so well attended in the mornings but the church would not accommodate the people at the evening services. We had hoped to have our evening services in the High School Auditorium but repair work being done on the building would not permit it to be used. Sister Phillips and little Evan Phillips came and were with us in our meeting here. We were delighted to have them come and be with us. Everyone that learned to know these good people learned to love them and it was with regret that they had to leave Saturday night. We closed our meeting here owing to the fact the M. E. Church began a meeting Sunday. We are announcing, the Lord willing, our meeting at Rose Hill will begin next year on the first Sunday night in August. Bro. Phillips has been engaged as the help.

During our meeting here 17 people made confession and were reconsecrated to the service of Christ. The church was greatly revived and much good was accomplished in the few days that Bro. Phillips could be with us. We wish he could have stayed longer. We all enjoyed the singing of Bro. and Sister Phillips, especially the song, "Forty Years Ago." And one who has never heard them sing this song will be willing to go several miles to hear it. One man gave them $5.00 for hearing it one time. We gave them a purse of $71.25 for their services. We all learned to love these good people and many eyes were filled with tears when they had to leave. We wish for them much success in their work.

M. Ivey Crutehfield.

Beulah, Mecklenburg Circuit.—We have just closed a successful revival meeting, which our beloved pastor, Rev. Mr. Short, conducted with the assistance of Bros. Lemon and Foard. The church was greatly revived in general with a large number of conversions. Also there were twenty-one accessions to the church. Everyone seems to be taking such an interest in church work. Our Sunday school has improved greatly. The children seem anxious to come and not alone, they are bringing older ones along. We hope within a short time to have completed remodeling our church. We have added two Sunday school rooms with belfry attached and a recess pulpit, all of which will soon be finished. We have also begun painting the church.

An ice-cream supper was held last Saturday night, at the church, with a net gain of twenty-one dollars and fifty cents ($21.50) which will be used toward finishing the church.

Dear readers, pray for us that we may attain the goal set out for, and that the good work may continue.

A Member.

Shilch.—Rev. J. E. Austin preached for us Sunday night. We are always glad to have him talk for us. Rev. Raymond Gertner will fill his regular appointment Sunday, 13th. I hope we will have a large congregation.

THE WEEDS THAT BOTHERED DORA.

"I don't see who plants 'em, anyway!" exclaimed my little neighbor. She was such a little neighbor that she had squeezed herself through the fence where a picket was broken out.

"Do you do it?" she asked, reproachfully, and I came around to her side of the bed.

"Plant the weeds? Oh, certainly not; they never need planting."

"But how does they come then?"

"Very much like the bad thoughts and ways that come into our hearts—just spring right up and grow and grow and grow—if we don't pull them up until all the dear little lovable flowers are quite choked out."

"Has I any in my heart?"

She had quite left off tugging at those in the ground, and the big blue eyes looked straight into mine.

"Let us see! You shall find out for yourself. If truth is a beautiful little flower, what would a falsehood be?"

"Tellin' stories—lies? Why—I 'spect they's weeds!"

"Yes, indeed, and terrible weeds they are. Now, did Dora or Jack break the vase yesterday? You know you told mamma it was Jack."

Dora hung her head.

"And bad temper is another—a real nettly one. You know how those little sharp things hurt you when you pull them up. When one is angry, they prick everybody that touches them—themselves most of all. If we don't get this weed out when it's little, by and by we grow to be a garden so full of thistles we sting everybody."

"Is kickin' the door, an' screamin', an' slappin' back, weeds—prickles—"

"Would you call them pretty flowers?"

"No, I wouldn't. I guess I's mostly all weeds!" This with a profound sigh.

"That's what I thought of this bed when I came out an hour ago; but you see how many dear little plants we've found!"

"Yes, isn't 'em sweet! We won't let the horrid old weeds sting you to deff' (caressing them). 'An' I'm going to get 'em out o' here too. If I don't tell stories; nor slap Jack; an' mind mamma quick-an'—be pleasant when I don't want to be, will they go away?"

I assured her of this, and it was several days before I thought again of the lesson of the weeds, until the sequel came out in a remark from her much-perplexed mother:

"I never saw Dora so good and sweet-tempered as she has been for a week past. Really, I thought she was ill; but she rambled on continually to herself, her dollies, to Jack, of weeds, weeds, weeds. Jack seemed to understand; but to me she would make no other reply than, 'Oh, it's somefing—I know.'"

ONE LARK.

The train came puffing into the station and Ruth and Dick Hatfield anxiously scanned all the faces of the people coming out.

"There! That must be Marion!" cried Ruth.

A pretty young girl of about fifteen was just getting off the train. The children ran to her. She was Marion, their cousin from the city who had come to spend the Easter vacation with her aunt on the farm.

Ruth thought she had never seen anything as stylish and beautiful as Marion. Dick thought she looked like a good sport, for there was a twinkle in her blue eyes and some freckles on her nose. She brought a trunk as well as a hat box and traveling bag.

"I've brought something nice for each of you," she hinted.

They all got into the buggy—the roads were still too soft for the flivver—and off they set for home. It took them three hours to get home, but in the flivver they could make it in forty minutes. Well, never mind! There was so much to talk about, and Marion wanted to drive, she had never driven a horse and buggy before. It was lots of fun, and seemed only a few minutes before they were creeping in at the gate.

Of course, the children were very curious to know what the "something nice" was which Marion had for them, and they hung around expectantly until Marion opened her trunk and brought out her surprises.

Well, well! You never heard such cries of delight from Ruth and her mother. Dick was strangely silent. Marion had brought Easter finery from the city.

"You see," she explained, "I am taking dressmaking at the high school, and they teach you to sew on real clothes. I had plenty as Mother makes mine and so I made these Easter outfits for you and Dick."

She held up Ruth's outfit first, and Ruth had to try it on at once. There was a pink silk dress, very neatly and stylishly made, and a pink silk hat to match. There was a pale gray coat of some smooth wool material. There was some underwear trimmed with lace. Ruth could hardly bear to take the things off, they were so becoming.

But alas for Dick!

"I was supposed to make a suit in my tailoring course," said Marion. "So I made one for you, Dick."

It was some suit! It was dark brown velvet and had long trousers. Marion said it was a "Kate Greenaway." Kate sounded like a girl's name to Dick. The brown velvet trousers buttoned on to a pongee waist with great white buttons, there was a little jacket to go over it, but it wasn't big enough to hide the shameful sight. They made Dick put it on. Dick was eight and big for his age. He was always a bit grubby, and his stockings were always slack and his shoes muddy and turned up at the toes. Ruth laughed but she wouldn't say why. She said she'd just thought of a joke somebody told her once, but when Dick demanded to know what it was, she said she couldn't remember.

"He looks too dear for anything!" cried his admiring mother. "Dick, you look real classy for once in your life."

"It's the sweetest suit I ever saw!" exclaimed Ruth, stressing the word "suit."

"I hope you like it, Dick," said Marion, doubtfully.

She looked so worried that Dick hadn't the heart to tell his real thoughts. Well, Easter was a couple of days off—anything might happen before then, maybe the end of the world, or it might blizzard. Dick took off the Easter outfit and tried to forget it.

"I made one mistake, Dick," explained his cousin in her sweet way. "I made the back part of the trousers lap over the front part. Don't forget when you are buttoning them, will you? The back buttons over the front. I'm afraid you'd better not try to use the pockets because, on account of my little mistake, the pockets turn backwards instead of forward and if you put anything into them you'd have lumps in the back."

"All right," muttered Dick.

The days continued warm and fair. Robins were everywhere, bulbs were blossoming trees budding. Dick tried not to worry till the time came. Then the time came.

The little church where the Hatfields usually went was only a couple of miles down the mountain, but eight miles off in town was a larger church which advertised special Easter music. Marion thought she would like to go to the larger church, and Ruth did too. Dick thought to himself, that if he must be dressed like a monkey he would rather not appear in the family pew in their own village church. So it was decided that Mr. and Mrs. Hatfield should go to the little church and the three children down to the big church.

Easter Day dawned bright and fair, but the clouds were lively. Dick was used to looking up and figuring on the weather. He looked up hopefully from time to time.

The old horse was so slow, Mrs. Hatfield got the children off real early.

"Don't you think they'll be cold in those clothes?" inquired Mr. Hatfield, mildly.

"Oh, I guess not," replied the proud mother. "Don't they look nice!"

"One lark doesn't make a summer," remarked the father, looking queerly at his son.

"Maybe they'd better take their warm wraps," said Mrs. Hatfield.

"Then we'd have to lug them around," objected Ruth. "Please don't make us. We're plenty warm."

Marion agreed. She hated to spoil the effect of her new suit, an ensemble suit, by wearing her old coat over it.

Off they set set creeping down the mountain. Dick didn't care how slowly they went. He kept warning his cousin not to hurry the horse, which he said was old and feeble. They were half way down when a cold wind began to blow, and just as they reached the town the rain began to fall.

Very blue and covered with goose-flesh, the girls huddled together.

"Cheer up!" cried Dick. "I put some warm things for us in the back."

"Oh, Dick, you dear thoughtful boy!" cried Marion.

But she changed her mind in a minute. Dick had not put their warm wraps in, he had brought three large old crazy quilts of his mother's.

"We can't put those on!" cried Marion. "Oh, dear!"

"Let's not go to church!" said Ruth, her teeth chattering.

"Prince has to rest before he can go all the way back," said Dick, unconcernedly, wrapping himself up in one of the quilts. "Oh boy! this is warm and nice! Dad was right. One lark doesn't make a summer."

The girls were cold and wet in a short time. Marion was afraid Ruth would get sick, she was sneezing so.

"Let's stop at old Mrs. Jenny's," Ruth suggested through her chattering teeth.

They drove up to the little frame house and were greeted by old Mrs. Jenny, who was too crippled up with rheumatism to get out to church. There was a fire in her chunk stove and Easter flowers in the windows. My! she was glad to see them. It had been that lonely! She brought out cake and made hot cocoa. Then Marion sat down at the little organ and played Easter hymns and they all sang.

"I ain't had such a helpful Easter Day in years," said Mrs. Jenny as her guests departed, looking more like a bunch of Indians than anything else.

"I was so worried about you catching cold," cried Mrs. Hatfield when they reached home at last.

"We would have, if Dick hadn't been so thoughtful," said Marion.

"Ahem!" coughed Mr. Hatfield, looking thoughtfully at his son. "Yes, he certainly was thoughtful!"

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Patterson.

Bettie Hester Patterson was born at Julian, N. C., on Dec. 23, 1893. She was converted early in life and joined the M. P. Church at Shiloh. She loved her church, and was not only an attendant but was one of its most active and faithful members. She was also Secretary of the County S. S. Association. For some years she has been a teacher in the schools of this section. For the past six years she has been one of the teachers in the school at Liberty; and had she lived, would have been there again. But pellagra seized her form; and though she was seriously sick only a few days, her spirit went home to God on July 27, 1925. On the day before she died, she gave assurance that she was not afraid to die. Her funeral was conducted by the writer assisted by a former pastor, Rev. W. F. Ashburn, who paid her a high tribute of praise. Prof. D. C. Holt, Principal of the Liberty school, spoke for the school. Mr. J. A. Martin, spoke for the County Board of Education, and Brother Brown, Superintendent of the Sunday school at Shiloh, paid a tribute for the Sunday school and church. All spoke of her in the highest terms. She is missed in the C. E. Society, in the Sunday school, and in the church; but most of all in the home, where her sister and mother miss her so much. Hester Patterson was one of our best young ladies. But an early tomb means for her an early crown for her. We bow to the will of our God. For we shall see her again up there.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

Catalogue and application blank will be forwarded upon application. Those desiring further information should address The President, High Point College, High Point, N. C.

Six hundred wild animals and birds from Africa and India arrived in New York last week on the liner Minnewaska. They will be placed in various zoos of the United States. Besides panthers, leopards, and zebras, there were animals that are not so often seen in American menageries. From Abyssinia came lizards that stand on their hind feet and bark like dogs, it is said. Other passengers on the ship were tortoises more than two hundred years old, ring-tailed monkeys, ant-eaters, and black-faced baboons.

IN THE HIGH PLACES.

Once when President Lincoln was receiving callers at the White House a man and his wife, who had just returned from Ecuador, were among the visitors. Lincoln knew them, and greeted them heartily.

"Did you meet our minister, Fred Hassaurek, at Quito?" he asked.

"Yes, Mr. President," replied the man; "and he told me to tell you that he wouldn't change places with you. In Quito he is more than nine thousand feet above the level of the sea, and he says that he, not you, holds the highest office in the gift of the American people."

"Yes," rerejoined Lincoln, "and besides that, Hassaurek has a much easier job than I".—Youth's Companion.

WHAT A DOLLAR WILL DO IN AFRICA.

Rev. R. M. Harkness, missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Manjacase, southeast Africa, graphically sets forth what a dollar, sent to the Board of Foreign Missions for work in Africa, can be used to accomplish. This will be welcome information for those people who wish to help, but who feel that small gifts are of no use:

"It will maintain a boy or girl in school for two weeks.

"It will pay for two New Testaments in the vernacular.

We Make a Specialty of LOOSE LEAF BOOKS FOR MINISTERS' USE.
WILLS BOOK AND STATIONERY CO.

"It will feed an orphan for one month.

"It will support a teacher-evangelist for two weeks in the midst of a non-Christian area.

"It will pay for 25 first spellers for an out-station school.

"It will supply two Sunday School papers for one year.

"It will buy three slates for some school.

"It will buy medicine to heal many sores.

"It will buy medicine to effect three cures of the dreaded tropical disease, Bilharzia.

"It will support our hospital for eight hours.

"It will support all of the mission work carried by our Church on the continent of Africa for 2 1-2 minutes."

THIS FAITH.

"Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" was the expressed belief of the Father of the faithful, and this declaration of the ancient patriarch has been translated into the faith of the ages. Sometimes "clouds and darkness are round about him," as the psalmist declared, "but justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne." Even when right is on the scaffold and wrong is on the throne, the eye of the Eternal is keeping watch and the scales of justice tarry in his all-powerful hand. It is this faith that girds with strength the chosen servants of the Most High and giveth victory to every righteous course.—Christian Advocate.

—Joseph Tucker, of Calvary church, is among the new students in our High Point College, which opens this week. We hope to hear that there are many new students.

THE APPEAL FOR PINE RIDGE SCHOOL.

We publish this week for the second time an appeal from the Woman's Home Missionary Society in behalf of Pine Ridge Institute. We would be glad to see this appeal taken seriously by all our churches and Sunday schools. A great and good work is being done at Pine Ridge for people that need such help. Dr. Woodford, one of our most valuable ministers, is devoting the best years of his life to this work. The work is growing, making necessary a new high school building, the erection of which has already been begun. All that North Carolina people are asked to contribute toward the erection of this building is $800.00. It ought to be a real pleasure to contribute this money, and will be if all our people will enter into it in the right kind of spirit. Note that the plan adopted by the ladies asks for only a penny for each year of your past life. If we should regard this as a thank offering for the life God has given us, how small would a penny a year seem. Let North Carolina set the pace for other Conferences in this matter and thus lead to the relief of the present building situation and to the accomplishment of much good through all the years to come. Which will be the first church or Sunday school to send to Mrs. Garrett one penny for each year of life given to all the members?

DISQUALIFIED CRITICS OF CHRISTIANITY.

Many of those who are criticising Christianity do not know what it is. The only way to know it in its essence is to experience it, and they have never experienced it. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

From the very beginning Christianity has encountered the criticism of the unspiritual. Our own time is in no way peculiar in this respect. We should not be upset by adverse criticisms of our religion. It only means that there are still men in the world who need it and have it not. Such men may yet be quickened and become ardent witnesses for the faith they are now trying to destroy. Let us pray for them rather than hate them. They may be sincere, but they are very ignorant.

WHAT WAS PAUL'S THORN IN THE FLESH?

This is a question often asked, but never positively answered because nobody knows. There have been many conjectures. Some of them are more plausible than others. That the thorn in the flesh was defective sight caused by the blinding vision on the road to Damascus does not seem to us probable; Paul would hardly have spoken of that as a messenger from Satan. It is not known that the Apostle's vision was permanently impaired by the blinding light of his heavenly vision, though there is a little evidence that his vision was defective. The particular character of the malady was less important to Paul than the spiritual consequences in his life. Jesus' answer to his prayer that the trouble be removed brought to Paul's mind not only a willingness to endure it, but even to glory in it. What the thorn was is a question prompted by curiosity, but one whose answer is not essential to any moral purpose. We regret, however, that we cannot satisfy the curiosity of those who sent us the question. It would be interesting to know which one of the thousand maladies to which human flesh is heir the Apostle had to endure in addition to all his other sufferings.

—Rev. William P. McCorkle, of Burlington, N. C., has done a real service in exposing the unchristian character or rather the anti-christian character of some articles published in the Journal of Social Forces under the auspices of the University of North Carolina. The facts he sets forth in his pamphlet on the subject are such as to make one wonder how they got by the vigilance of the censorship of the University authorities. It surely cannot be true that the president and a majority of the faculty of our university would approve the publication of plainly anti-christian matter. If so, then there needs to be a clean sweep by the people of North Carolina that will result in putting in charge of the University men of a very different type. Mr. McCorkle first protested in newspaper articles. These called forth attacks upon his motives. He has now published a pamphlet justifying the revelation he had tried to make through the newspapers. We advise our readers to read this pamphlet and see for themselves how the teachings of unchristian and anti-christian socialists are finding their way into the minds of our people by way of University publications. It is nothing less than an outrage.

—Calvary Church has been the recipient of another handsome present from Mrs. J. H. Coble. This time it is four beautiful jardiniere for the front steps. These were given in memory of her daughter Lalah, the second member of Calvary Church to pass over. Mrs. Coble intends to fill them with appropriate plants a little later. This present is very appropriate as an ornament to the church front as well as a memorial to a departed loved one, and is highly appreciated.

—Judge C. J. Ramage, of South Carolina, holding court in Spartanburg, denounced the modern swimming pool as a breeding place of vice and immorality, and charged the grand jury to throw some restraints about them. As a result the grand jury recommended that men and women bathe in separate pools, that swimming pools be closed on Sundays, and that a law be passed to eliminate "petting parties" in automobiles parked along the highway at night.

FIT TO RECEIVE.

There is a tale of a king who on his birthday decided that he would set free one prisoner. He went to the prison and asked each prisoner why he was there. They all asserted their innocence and blamed their misfortune on others. At last he came to one poor fellow sitting dejected in the corner of his cell. When asked why he was there he said that he had been guilty of a crime and was suffering the just punishment for his misdeeds. While he spoke the tears streamed down his cheeks. It was to him the king's pardon was given. All the rest were ready to receive the favor of the king. Only this man was fit to receive it. Unless we feel our shame and guilt the grace of God is bestowed in vain. This is the peril of the time through which we are passing. It has lost its sense of sin. God wants to save it and He cannot. His grace is standing before a fast-barred door.—Dr. S. N. Hutchison.

PRAYER.

We doubt the word that tells us: Ask,
And ye shall have your prayer;
We turn our thoughts as to a task,
With will constrained and rare.

And yet we have; these scanty prayers
Yield gold without alloy;
O God, but he who trusts and dares
Must have a boundless joy!

CUCKOO FREEDOM AND INVERTED INTOLERANCE.

The following article with the above title, or heading, by Bishop W. A. Camdler, we wish to commend to the readers of the Herald. Bishop Camdler is always true to orthodox, evangelical christianity. For an unmutated, undiluted, unperverted Bible. He does not spare the Philistines of unsound doctrine, hypocrisy, and sin.

Old-Time Religion.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

Tolerance is a virtue much lauded at the present by many who indulge intolerance toward Christianity and the Church, and who then invoke the law of toleration for their own protection while attacking revealed religion.

With such persons it is entirely consistent with tolerance to apply a corrosive criticism to the Christian Scriptures, charging that those sacred books are filled with absurd myths, childish folklore and bald contradictions; but it is quite intolerant for a Christian to doubt, or deny, any or all of the unproved theories of evolution. Simple faith is characterized as "fool-religion," and all sorts of contemptuous epithets are hurled at the heads of the faithful.

But this acrimonious spirit of liberalism does not mislead as many people as it did once. Men are beginning to see that it is the hollow cant of Pharisaic scepticism.

Recently the Chicago News gave the matter editorial treatment, much needed and well deserved. The editor said.

"There are, of course, two sides to the present contest over 'tolerance.' Certain Presbyterian authorities are denounced because they do not like to entrust a Presbyterian flock to a pastor who will lead it into non-Presbyterian or anti-Presbyterian pastures. This is called 'narrow-mindedness.'

"Certain Episcopalian authorities are denounced because they think that a bishop who every Sabbath repeats the Nicene Creed from the steps of the altar ought to believe with his heart what he says with his lips. This is called 'medievalism.'

"Certain Republican authorities are denounced because they cannot see why a senator should break all the Republican dishes, and then expect to eat from the Republican pie counter. This is called 'hunting political heretics.'

"Various 'enlightened radicals' feel particularly bad about these things. It may be helpful to test the shoe by putting it on their own feet.

"People in this country are perfectly free to form their own clubs and churches and political parties. Freedom to do these things constitutes precisely 'tolerance.' "

"What is now frequently and loudly demanded is not merely freedom to preach one's own beliefs, but further freedom to preach those beliefs with the help of machinery established and maintained by others. This new further freedom is what might be called—without any intended offence—a sort of cuckoo—freedom, the freedom to lay eggs in other birds' nests."

"In fact, tolerance cuts both ways. Therefore, if we are going to have tolerance for people's expressions of their views, we must also have tolerance for the house rules of other people's organizations."

"That is a vivid and just description of the kind of liberty for which liberalism clamors—"a sort of cuckoo-freedom, the freedom to lay eggs in other birds' nests." Liberalists never tire of telling how in "this age of progress the old faiths are dead and advanced thought is advancing victoriously everywhere." Well, if liberalism is so popular why does it not make its own ecclesiastical organizations, build its own churches, and erect and endow its own colleges and universities? Why do liberalists strive to occupy the pulpits and professors' chairs of the evangelical churches, and turn them against the faith of the saintly and generous people whose gifts made them possible? Is such a cuckoo-course quite fair to the dead or honest toward the living?

As a matter of fact which is recorded broadly and luminously on the pages of history, orthodox Christianity has fought its way to power, not by the fierceness of bigotry, but by the fidelity of heroic labors and sacrificial sufferings. From the martyrdom of St. Stephen to the present hour it has not hesitated to die, if necessary, for "the faith once for all delivered to the saints." Its epic conflicts and victories stretch through a long line of fearless soldiers of the Cross, "who through faith have subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, and turned to flight the armies of the aliens." (Hebrews v: 33 and 34.)

If liberalism has with it all "the truth," "reality" and "sincerity," which it claims, why has it not more courage and less cuckooism? Does it hold nothing worth the cost of erecting churches in which to proclaim it and establishing educational institutions in which to teach it? Must it always lay its eggs in the nests of orthodox birds? Can it build no nests of its own in which to hatch liberalistic broods? honestly born and honestly fed?

Liberalism has been particularly addicted to perverting colleges and universities from the purposes of their founders. Some bluntly call it "stealing educational property," and though the words are a bit sharp, they are not without justification. Harvard and Yale in former days were thus alienated from the ends which their founders intended them to serve. The venerable name of John Harvard persists with the Institution that he founded, but his purpose in founding it has been nullified long since.

Recently a distinguished gentleman from one of the Northern States told the writer that all the wealthier colleges and universities of his Church had been shrewdly captured by the liberalists.

It is a significant fact that they never seek to capture an educational institution in the period of its poverty when sacrificial service is required to maintain it. The cuckoos of liberalism pick carefully the nests they aim at occupying.

Herein, southern colleges and universities are now in great peril. Through years of poverty and struggle, heroic men have served and sustained them, and liberalists would not lift so much as a little finger to support them. But now they are in better condition financially. Some of them have become wealthy, having magnificent buildings, excellent equipment and considerable endowments. And, behold, already some cuckoos are nesting in them, and drawing their fellow birds after them.

Our colleges and universities are now in danger far worse than that of poverty; and to save them, much courage, patience, wisdom and fidelity upon the part of their governing boards will be required.

Efforts to eject from them cuckoos of liberalism already nesting in them will elicit from the whole brood cries of "intolerance," "academic freedom," "liberty of thought," and the like. But notwithstanding all such croaking and screeching, they must be gotten out of nests in which their eggs are dishonest intrusions.

It is not too late to save our southern institutions, but delay to save them is most unwise and dangerous. Soon it will be too late to save them. From them will go forth flocks of cuckoo alumni who will be quick to defend the misuse of them as nests for cuckoos. Then the task of cleansing will be far more difficult than if undertaken now.

Moreover, the stream of the cuckoos of liberalism flying toward our colleges and universities, from nests in the north, must be turned away. The cuckoos already nesting in our institutions of learning should not be increased by so much as one more fledgeling of that variety.

The superstition which vainly imagines that every young academic, who has the degree of doctor of philosophy from a distant university possessed of wealth, is fit to teach must be exploded. It was never more easy than now to secure a doctorate, and its possession in its best estate was never proof that its possessor was a real man who was qualified to instruct youths.

In making up faculties for our educational institutions, more regard must be had for native ability and strong personality and less store placed on mere alphabetic decorations that suggest academic degrees.

Let our colleges and universities make and choose their own men; and from them take only such as have clear heads and clean hearts.

This is not an intolerant sentiment, nor does it propose an intolerant policy.

It is simply a sentiment of self-respect, and it suggests a policy of self-preservation for our civilization and our holy religion.

The south is the stronghold of evangelical Christianity in the United States, and it should remain so. This service it owes and should render to the nation. But it will be utterly unable to fulfill this high and holy responsibility if its institutions of learning become infected with liberalism.

THE POETRY OF SCIENCE.

Michael Pupin, the Serb immigrant boy, worked in a cracker factory in Cortland street, New York, before entering Columbia College. He, and several other employes, occupied the loft of the factory as a dormitory. Bilharz—a German of middle age, who had studied theology in the University of Freiburg, in southern Germany, and who would have become a priest had it not been for an unfortunate love affair—was one of the denizens of the loft, and became Pupin's tutor in Greek and Latin. Bilharz dearly loved the classics, and he distrusted and despised science. He was contented if he could earn a meager living and spend his isolated life in communion with his loved authors. Pupin had hoped to prepare himself for a course in science at Princeton College, but was led to choose Columbia College instead. In his most interesting book, "From Immigrant to Inventor," Professor Pupin says:

"Bilharz rejoiced when I informed him of my decision to put extra pressure in my classical studies preparatory for Columbia College, and congratulated himself, as I found out later, that he had succeeded in rescuing me from the worship of what he called scientific materialism. The good old fellow did not know that at that very time I was spending many hours of my spare time reading Tyndall's 'Heat as a Mode of Motion,' and 'Tyndall's famous lectures on Sound and Light,' which he delivered in this country with great success in the early seventies. These popular descriptions of physical phenomena were the poems in prose to which I referred before. Another book of a similar character came into my hands at that time through the Cooper Union library. I have a copy of it now, having received it over thirty years ago as a present from the late General Thomas Ewing. It is called 'The Poetry of Science,' published in 1848 by Robert Hunt. It starts with the following quotation from Milton:

'How charming is divine philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed as dull fools suppose,
But musical as is Apollo's lute
And a perpetual feast of Nectar'd sweets,
Where no crude surfeit reigns.'

Tyndall's and Hunt's writings appealed to my imagination at that time in the same way as Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' or as Longfellow's 'Hiawatha,' or as William Cullen Bryant's 'Thanatopsis.' They convinced me that the plays were not the only people who, as I had been inclined to think, see the poetical side of science, but that everybody sees it, because science on its abstract side is poetry; it is Divine Philosophy, as Milton calls it. Science is a food which nourishes not only the material but also the spiritual body of man. This was my pet argument whenever I was called upon to defend science against Bilharz's attacks."

A LESSON FROM THE DOCTOR.

It was a lovely Sabbath in July, 34 years ago, in an Eastern Carolina town, that the doctor and I sat on the porch, talking, while the church bell was ringing, nearby. He a B. patient and I trying to recover from an attack of malaria and biliousness.

The doctor said, "It's hard to live a Christian." I replied, "One does not know how hard it is until he tries to live it; but I believe in the old Methodist idea that God hears prayer, and will give the needed help, or grace, if we ask him for it." The doctor replied, "I believe God answers prayer." (I knew he had been a skeptic.) His reply sounded like life from the dead. There was a subdued pathos, a sense of humility, a trust, a change, that seemed to come from another world. Nothing works these changes in men but the grace of God.

But the doctor continued, "Six months ago I believed there was little difference in man and a worm, and in God and a worm." This sounds unbelievable, but so he said. "My trouble," continued the doctor, "was on the Divinity of Christ. But there was one thing I never did; I never 'spouted' my doubts around. I kept them to myself." Some of our up-to-date modern 'spouters' of doubt, unbelief, faultfinding and adverse criticism of the bible and evangelical christianity, might learn a lesson from the doctor. The doctor was an honest doubter. He held these doubts in abeyance. He did not try to convert men from an inspired bible to—one knows not what. He did not start on a propagandist rampage, inspired by human pride of opinion and vanity. The doctor was every inch a refined gentleman. Being the son of an eloquent M. P. minister, he had been a member of the church in earlier days, but somehow had drifted from the faith and the church—perhaps through Unitarian influence—there being Unitarians in that town.

We'll never forget the tone of voice, the sincere, determined look on that fine-featured face, as he said, "I never went 'spouting' around." His whole air and manner seemed to show a profound contempt for those skeptics who seem to want to "show off" their supposed "smartness."

God has light for the true, honest, sincere doubter, as the doctor, and many others—as St. Paul. They are real seekers after God, the truth, and the light, and "they that seek shall find;" but such men as Thomas Paine, Robt. Ingorsoll, Clarence Darrow, while professing to love and seek the truth, their whole spirit, attitude, and manner of life contradicts their profession. There was no bitterness, ridicule, nor sarcasm coming from the doctor. When he attended church—for this he often did—he was reverent, attentive, respectful.

We had the privilege and joy of receiving the doctor into the church again, and of administering to him in his own home the Holy Communion. And if we ever "reach that happy place, and be forever blest," we expect to meet the doctor who sat on the porch that lovely morning in July, 34 years ago, and talked of the doubts through which he had come.

We can see those finely chiseled features, the clear deep blue eyes, and hear the shattering, but earnest voice, as he talked of eternal things.

But that which after 34 years comes back to us freshest, was that sense of peace, rest, joy, an assurance that had come to a poor, hitherto restless, doubting, darkened soul. Infidelity does not do this. "Modernism" does not work this change. Who ever heard of an apostate from evangelical christianity realizing profound peace, rest, and joy, as a result of his falling away? Oh! that our writers, teachers, and preachers, who have somehow drifted away from "sound doctrine," would pause, consider, wait, and learn a lesson from the doctor, and cease "spouting around," until they can "touch bottom," or come into the light—keep the matter to themselves, lest they be mistaken, and "subvert whole houses, teaching things they ought not." It will not hurt them to remain quiet, instead of "compassing sea and land to make one proselyte." Remember the doctor and be wise.

SENSIBLE SUGGESTIONS.

Chicago—as well as other cities—is suffering from an epidemic of crime. Many women and children have been attacked. Chief of police Collins—in the interest of public safety—has issued a bulletin in which he tells something of how women and girls may protect themselves. Some of the suggestions are applicable to persons living in smaller cities. Chief Collins says:

"Make every effort to guard your children from being approached by strangers on the street. Warn them repeatedly to beware of persons they do not know.

"Do not allow small children to travel lonely throughfares after dark. This warning applies to women as well.

"Be careful whom you admit to your home at any hour of the day or night.

Motor Moron Deadliest.

"Young girls should never start flirtations in the street with slick shicks in motor cars. The motor moron is Chicago's deadliest criminal.

"When these morons invite you to ride by saying, 'I'm going your way,' take the number of their car, then look around for a policeman and report them.

"Help us to protect you. If you have reason to believe that any criminal of the type mentioned in this article is in your vicinity, call the police department—Police 1313—co-operate with us—we are trying to protect you."

THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD.

I can think it was a day in March, a bitter day of bleak east wind. Under an old tree twisted by the storms crouched the poor lad, ill-clad, shivering with cold, and perishing with hunger.

And about him a set of grunting hogs. The veriest cur that ever crept would have whined its way to his side, and maybe have licked the wasted hand in sympathy. But these pigs—what cared they! He might lie there until the wind whistled through his hollow ribs—what was that to them? Give them their husks, and they would grunt their satisfaction still.

Now come visions to the crouching lad. He sees the old home; the father with his sunny face, a perpetual benediction. There were the well-fed and happy servants who greeted the master with a cheery welcome. Then he flings himself up fiercely.

"If I am going to be anybody's hired servant, I will be his. I will rise and go to my father."

The new purpose puts new life into him. Slapping his sides to get some warmth, he hurries away down over the hill, and presently is passing the door of the citizen who had sent him into the field to feed the swine, bidding him share their husks for his food.

Forth comes the citizen—his face hard, stern, pitiless.

"Here, stop," he cries, "where are you going?"

"Going home," says the lad.

Then, with a snarl—"You going home! You've got no home to go to. You have had your portion of goods and spent every penny of it in riotous living. There is nothing left for you at home. Go back and mind the swine. It is the only job you are likely to get, and it is the only thing you are fit for."

Poor lad! Alas, it was true. He had taken the portion of goods and squandered it all. There was nothing left.

Then a new thought fills him. A new light flashes from his face, and once again he lifts himself, hopeful and strong. "There is one thing left."

"There is nothing left, I tell you," cries the citizen. "Your character is gone. Disgraced, outcast, disowned, there is nothing left for you."

"Yes," persists the lad, "there is one thing."

"What is that?"

"My father loves me." And he turned and hurried on his way.

There is ever the starting point. My Father loves me. All else may be spent, but there is one thing we can never, never spend. My Father loves me.

I have left the English shores, and seen the cliffs sink below the horizon; gone on and on for hundreds of miles until new stars shone over me. But ever heaven ringed me round about. I could never get outside that. As the heaven doth compass the earth so are we compassed about with that Infinite love. There is our strength; our unfailing hope lies in that unfailing love. There is the starting-point for all, for him who has gone lowest down and spent all; it abides forever—My Father loves me.

God loves the worst man living as much as he loves the best of us, every bit.

What, then, is the good of being good?

Is not that what the elder brother said, and says still!

"If my Father is going to love that miserable scamp who has spent all in riotous living, what is the good of my staying at home and doing everything he tells me?"

But how true it was. When some fierce storm swept about the old home, with howling winds and crash of thunder, the father stirred and woke. His first thought was not of the elder son who lay safely in his bed. His first thought was, "I wonder where my poor boy is on such a night as this—what shelter has he?"

While we were yet sinners he loved us. Is it not true, blessedly true? It was for the lost sheep that the good Shepherd left the ninety-and-nine and went forth seeking—seeking, unwearied, hither, thither, until he found it. It was the lost sheep that he laid on his shoulder, the torn, lame, silly sheep that had gone astray, and brought it home with rejoicing.

The son of God has come into the world to seek not the righteous, but to seek and to save the lost.

No man can get outside and beyond that love.

No words but those of the Lord Jesus himself can fitly tell of the welcome that waited for the prodigal lad. They are too great, too wonderful to come from any lips but his. The world has never heard from any other anything like it. No such thought of God had ever come to it.

"When he was yet a great way off his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell upon his neck and kissed him."

Have we not heard that love is blind? Nay, verily. No further vision is there, no quicker, keener sight than love. Love wears no spectacles. Love needs no telescope. His father saw him. He saw not the rags, or if he saw them, it was only to rejoice to think of the best robe that waited for him. His love dwelt not upon the disgrace, the wasted substance. This my son—that was all the father saw—that was all the father thought of—that was all the father cared for.

Note one thing well. The prodigal on his way home said, "I will ask him to make me one of his hired servants." But he never said it—could not say it. That welcome choked those words. He said, "Father, I have sinned"—and could get no further.

And let us learn this lesson, taking careful heed of it. It is perilous to preach repentance apart from the Father's love. Suicide is often, very often the black despair of one haunted ever by the misery of a wasted life; finding no goodness anywhere, in anything, a man becomes his own stern judge and executioner.

There is but one place of repentance. When those arms of love compassed him, when the warm breath of that welcome greeted him, when that great heart of love poured itself forth in that kiss of welcome, then the prodigal could say it as he could say it nowhere else, "Father, I have sinned."

The goodness of God leadeth us to repentance.

Note further in the story, the father's joy. The son is sunk in shame and bitter grief. The elder son is dumb with scorn. It is the father whose voice in fullest gladness cries, "Bring forth the best robe." It is the father who appeals to the elder brother. "It is meet that we should make merry and be glad."

Surely this completes the story. There is joy not only among the angels over one sinner that repenteth. The fullest, deepest, richest joy is in the heart of our Father God.

Long years ago I was standing in a post-office when an old body came in, much excited and clearly embarrassed, holding a letter in her hand.

I turned to her and said, "Can I help you?"

The tears were in her eyes, and her voice choked with emotion as she put the letter in my hand and said, "'Tis from my boy, sir. We haven't heard from him for years. He is just landed in Liverpool, and I want to send him a telegram."

"Let me do it for you," I said. I copied the name and address on the telegram form, and then turned to her. "What shall I say?"

It was with difficulty she managed to utter the words: "Tell him to come home, sir. Tell him to come home."

There is the message of the loving Father to the world. "Tell him to come home. Tell him to come home."—Mark Guy Pearse, in Methodist Recorder.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Sunday, Sept. 20th, was spent in Asheboro and in Thomasville.

Our church in Asheboro seems to be moving along nicely under the leadership of Rev. Paul S. Kennett. Bro. Kennett has been preaching there once per Sunday since the second Sunday in August, and the people are delighted with his preaching. I heard many expressions of appreciation. They desire that, beginning with the first Sunday in October, he preach for them at both the morning and evening services until conference.

It was pleasant to preach to these good people. They gave most earnest attention to the Word. About two hours or more at noon was spent very pleasantly in the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Ward.

Community Church, Thomasville.

I was glad for this privilege of looking in on Rev. O. B. Williams and his people at Community Church, and of studying at first hand once more the workings of this church. It is a most wonderful plant, and will be all the more wonderful when fully completed. The conference appreciates this great church, and the Thomasville community should appreciate it all the more. Any community in this great country should be happy to have such a plant for christian service established in their midst. This church and its program under the careful leadership of Bro. Williams is becoming more and more popular. Bro. Williams is held in high esteem by his own people, and by the people of the community. I am predicting great things for this church within the coming years. May God bless and direct in all its activities.

Pleasant Grove.—It was not my privilege to meet with the people of this splendid country church, nor did I preach while there. But on last Sunday afternoon I did drive by and stop to look and to admire. And while there I did find my way into the church to look through the Sunday school rooms which have just been completed. These are splendid Sunday school rooms, and will be a thing of joy for the years to come. It is fine to see our country churches adding such equipments for Sunday school work to their church buildings.

High Point College.

On my way home Monday morning I stopped at the college for a short while, and was delighted to see so many young people moving about the grounds and I looked through the halls. I was told that more than 200 have already registered. This we think is fine as it is only our second year, and as we have just the freshman, sophomore, and junior classes.

The Annual Conference.

We only have to remind our faithful ones that just a few more weeks will bring the annual conference. Our records for the year will soon be made. For the sake of the dear Lord, and the promotion of His Kingdom, it behooves us to make those records as nearly perfect as possible.

Evangelism.

It is glorious to hear of so many good revivals with such good ingatherings. Surely we will have a large increase in members this year. Let no charge think of cutting its membership list to lower its budgets. I assure you that will not do any good. Besides that no one has a right to do it.

Faithfully yours, A. G. Dixon.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE NEWS.

It looks now like the registration will pass the two hundred mark within a few days. Between 180 and 190 have registered, representing ten different states as far North as Minnesota, as far West as Washington state, and as far South as Louisiana. Denominationally we have 'most every Protestant church represented, and besides these we have four Catholics, and some eight or ten Hebrews. You can see from this that we are already headed toward a cosmopolitan student body. I think the freshman class will go considerably beyond the one hundred mark.

Class work began this week and we are gradually getting down to the type of work we hope to do during the entire year.

Walks have been laid which not only keep the students out of the mud when it rains, but they have added very greatly to the beauty of the campus.

Since our last appeal for books we have received books from Mr. J. Norman Wills, quite an interesting list from Miss Mary Wills, which were the property of her father, and others whose names at this time escape me. We are very anxious for this book list to grow rapidly. We have set our goal for the end of the year at six thousand, and already we have received more than half that number. We believe that with the hearty co-operation of our friends we will have six thousand by the spring of 1926. As I have stated before, we are very anxious to have complete sets of all standard fiction. Any one who has such a set, and are willing to donate it to the college, if they will let us know we will be pleased to pay for transportation.

Let's Pay Up Our Subscriptions.

There are yet quite a number of subscriptions to the college building fund, on which are due more than one installment. You doubtless remember that the fifth installment falls due the first of next month. A letter from Mr. J. Norman Wills today informs me of the very great need of funds. We must have money to pay the debt to the Jefferson Standard Company. You may recall that the money borrowed from them is to be paid in ten annual installments, it being $15,000.00 a year. That installment is now due and we are exceedingly anxious to meet it as soon as possible. Will you not let us have the balance due on your subscription to the college building fund at the earliest possible date?

I am giving for the benefit of the friends of the college a letter from the State Board of Education, written by Mr. James E. Hillman, relative to our present rating. It is gratifying to know that this Board of Education is willing to give credit for the work done at High Point College and which is being done this year. We also have the assurance that if this class work is kept up, the rating will be continued. Mr. Hillman's letter is as follows:

"My dear Mr. Andrews:

"I have conferred with Mr. J. Henry Highsmith with reference to the rating of High Point College. We agree entirely with Supt. Allen with reference to the certificate credit that may be allowed for the first two years' work in your institution. We shall allow full credit for those years. When a student has finished the third year or has graduated, then the credit allowed will depend upon the rating of the institution as a Senior college.

"Yours very truly,

"James E. Hillman,
"Director of Certification."

R M. Andrews.

High Point.—Rally Day was observed by the Sabbath school last Sunday, and the attendance broke all records, there being 501 present. A most interesting program was rendered.

In the Sunday school are found all the departments, the Cradle Roll, Beginners, Primary, Junior, Intermediate, and Senior or Adult.

A Lyceum course of concerts and lectures five in member, will be presented at High Point College the fall and coming winter, and will be a great treat for the students. A decided transformation has been made on the campus, and there are promises of greater changes to follow. The College will shortly be in the midst of a busy and happy year's work, and its influence is already felt in the life of our city.

George T. Stephens and his Evangelistic party have arrived in High Point, and are conducting a great revival in the immense Tabernacle erected for the purpose on the city lot next to the First Baptist church. Mr. Powell Lee of Macon, Ga., who is a splendid singer and leader, has charge of the singing, and Miss Bertie Loes is the talented and efficient accompanist. Immense crowds throng the Tabernacle nightly. It having been filled on Sunday night. A number of prominent ministers, professional, and business men of Gastonia, where Mr. Stephens held a most successful revival last March, came to High Point to testify to the great power of Mr. Stephens in their city. These meetings will continue for several weeks. Cottage prayer meetings are being held in the homes of the city on three afternoons each week, and are proving to be occasions of delightful spiritual communion among friends and neighbors.

The Mission Band, composed of girls from 12 to 16 years of age held a meeting in the church Monday afternoon with Misses Mary Adams and Annette Pickens as hostesses. Mrs. George R. Brown was the efficient leader for the day. Miss Alma Andrews presided as President in a very capable manner and Miss Margaret Opal Neese is the efficient Secretary. These girls are trying to work for both Foreign and Home missions, and are planning to send a box to the children of Alvan Drew School, Pine Ridge, Ky., and will also contribute money for a magazine to be printed for the children in the Foreign work. At the conclusion of the business and study program, delicious refreshments were served by the young hostesses.

A pretty but quiet marriage was solemnized last Tuesday evening, September 15th, at the parsonage, when Mr. Fred. Leonard and Miss Minta Phillips plighted their troth. Dr. Brown, the groom's pastor, was the officiating minister. A small group of relatives and friends was present. Mr. Leonard is a well-known and much esteemed young business man of High Point, as well as being one of our most faithful members and Treasurer of the Sabbath school. His bride is the daughter of Mrs. Nora Phillips, and is quite attractive and popular. The congratulations and best wishes of a host of friends are extended to this happy young pair on the threshold of their wedded life, and may all their fond and tender hopes be realized.

The Junior Mission Circle, of which Mrs. R. M. Andrews is Supt., will meet in the church next Saturday at 3 P. M. This circle is made up of boys and girls from six to twelve years of age.

Mrs. R. C. Boyd underwent an operation for appendicitis last Friday at High Point Hospital, and is improving satisfactorily, her many friends will be pleased to hear.

Miss Mae Kirnman, who played on the Pipe Organ during the summer has returned to Enterprise, Ala., to teach music, and Mrs. Minnie P. Harrell, who has recovered from a recent illness, is now playing the Organ.

Fletcher Cox and Mangum Harrell have returned to Oak Ridge Institute to resume their studies.

Helen Hayes, and Alice Faulkner of Henderson have returned to the College. Miss Thelma Finch of Henderson is one of the new girls.

There are eight members of the Junior class thus far at the College.

Messrs. Roy Montgomery and Holt McPherson have returned to Chapel Hill, Roy is a Senior this year. Fred Pritchard has gone back to State College, Raleigh.

CONVINCING TESTIMONY

Among Japan's great statesmen few ranked as high as the late Marquis Okuma in inherent qualities of heart and mind, in breadth of vision, and in appreciation of the forces potent in building character and life of individuals and nations.

He had in the wide circle of friends and advisers the outstanding missionary, Dr. Herbeck himself a true statesman upon whom the Emperor bestowed high honors, and thus he gained a clear conception of the value and efficacy of the Gospel which reveals the Christ, enjoins the noblest principles, offers priceless gifts, and assures a triumphant end to a consecrated life.

While he never publicly professed to be a Christian, he was so eminently fitted to express a sound judgment that his testimony is worthy of remembrance and propagation.

Intensely, loyally interested in his country for whose development he devoted his splendid abilities and life, and knowing well its history, its conditions, and its prospects, he said: "Development has been intellectual, not moral. The efforts which Christians are making to supply to the country a high standard of conduct are welcomed by all right-thinking people."

As you read the Bible, you may think it antiquated, out of date.

The words it contains may so appear; but the noble life which it holds up for admiration is something that will never be out of date, however much the world may progress.

Live and preach this life, and you will supply to the nation just what it needs at the present juncture."

What could be more applicable to our country, to every country, and while here in America the Christian churches are striving to accomplish it, and through their missionaries and agencies are seeking to do the same in far off lands and isles of the sea, the call is for more prayer, more faith, more devotion and self-sacrifice, more laborers, more money to carry forward the work of the Kingdom in these critical times.

Those Japanese Banners.

Dr. L. Layman has reached me with the word that the two beautiful banners were shipped from Yokohama, and the Japanese firm that made them also wrote, Aug. 26th, that they had been sent. Dr. Layman writes "The banners seemed to me very fine." The firm wrote "We hope these will meet with your satisfaction and reach you without any mishap."

Note how they express themselves as I quote as written: "As you know that we have lost a great deal of whole things materially (by the earthquake,) but our artistic idea never could lose here in Yokohama, so that we have exhibited embroidery Kimono in Paris Exhibition."

In the coming year the grand exhibition will be kept open in the city of Philadelphia, Penn., neighboring state to yours. We have to thank you very much for patronization toward Japan."

The banners will be awarded later, and it is hoped that when the Children's Day offerings were, or are sent to the conference treasurers the number in the schools was or will be added, so the award can be properly made of one.

The other will go to the Sunday school sending in the largest amount.

Fred. C. Klein.

GOOD WORDS FROM DR. GEORGE H. MILLER.

"I wish to congratulate you on the fine Rally Day Program issued from your office and express my hope that the number of orders for this program may exceed that of any former year and that the total offering may be the $25,000 for which you ask and which you have set before the church as a goal. There is every reason why every Sunday school in our denomination should use this program. Respect and love for their own young people should lead them to use this program, interest and loyalty to their own denomination demand that they use it, and the intrinsic worth of the program itself justifies its use."

"For the Methodist Protestant Church Christian Education is immediately and crucially important. Definite commitment to a definite educational program cannot much longer be delayed by our denomination. Throughout all our denominational history we have been blindly groping in the field of Christian Education and what has been accomplished is the work of individuals rather than the expression of denominational desire and purpose. In the work entrusted to your leadership and direction there is the only sure prophecy of denominational perpetuity and efficiency. Through the Rally Day Program you have the opportunity of helping to create an educational consciousness that will soon we hope commit the denomination to an heroic effort in the behalf of our Colleges and Seminary. I wish you joy in your work and pray that there may be given to you the power to awaken the whole church to its own best interests."

"Yours sincerely,
George H. Miller."

SOME ACHIEVEMENTS OF PROTESTANTISM.

Professor John Dewey of Columbia University gave, in 1919, a course of lectures at the Imperial University of Japan in Tokyo. The lectures make a most interesting and instructive volume under the title, "The Reconstruction of Philosophy." Among the important topics discussed Professor Dewey takes up the consequences to philosophy and life of the Protestant Reformation. He says:

"Protestantism marked the formal breaking away from the domination of Roman ideas. It effected liberation of individual conscience and worship from control by an organized institution claiming to be permanent and universal. It cannot truly be said that at the outset the new religious movement went far in promoting freedom of thought and criticism, or in denying the notion of some supreme authority to which individual intelligence was absolutely in bonds. Nor at first did it go far in furthering tolerance or respect for divergency of moral and religious convictions. But practically it tended to disintegration of established institutions. By multiplying sects and churches it encouraged at least a negative toleration of the right of individuals to judge ultimate matters for themselves. In time, there arose a formulated belief in the sacredness of individual conscience and in the right to freedom of opinion, belief and worship.

"It is unnecessary to point out how the spread of this conviction increased political individualism, or how it accelerated the willingness of men to question received ideas in science and philosophy—to think and observe and experiment for themselves. Religious individualism served to supply a much needed sanction to initiative and independence of thought in all spheres, even when religious movements officially were opposed to such freedom when carried beyond a limited point. The greatest influence of Protestantism was however, in developing the idea of the personality of every human being as an end in himself."

"When human beings were regarded as capable of direct relationship with God, without the intermediary of any organization like the Church, and the drama of sin, redemption and salvation was something enacted within the innermost soul of individuals rather than in the species of which the individual was a subordinate part, a fatal blow was struck at all doctrines which taught the subordination of personality—a blow which had many political reverberations in promoting democracy. For when in religion the idea of the intrinsic worth of every soul as such was proclaimed, it was difficult to keep the idea from spilling over, so to say, into secular relationships."

"The absurdity is obvious of trying in a few paragraphs to summarize movements in industry, politics and religion whose influence is still far from exhausted and about which hundreds and thousands of volumes have been written. But I shall count upon your forbearance to recall that these matters are alluded to in order to suggest some of the forces that operated to mark out the channels in which new ideas ran:

"First, there is the transfer of interest from the eternal and universal to what is changing and specific, concrete—a movement that showed itself practically in carrying over attention and thought from another world to this, from the supernaturalism characteristic of the Middle Ages to delight in natural science, natural activity and natural intercourse."

"Secondly, there is the gradual decay of the authority of fixed institutions and class distinctions and relations, and a growing belief in the power of individual minds, guided by methods of observation, experiment and reflection, to attain the truths needed for the guidance of life. The operations and results of natural inquiry gained in prestige and power at the expense of principles dictated from high authority."

"Consequently principles and alleged truths are judged more and more by criteria of their origin in experience and the consequences of weal and woe in experience, and less by criteria of sublime origin from beyond everyday experience and independent of fruits in experience. It is no longer enough for a principle to be elevated, noble, universal and hallowed by time. It must present its birth certificate, it must show under just what conditions of human experience it was generated, and it must justify itself by its works, present and potential. Such is the inner meaning of the modern appeal to experience as an ultimate criterion of value and validity.

"In the third place, great store is set upon the idea of progress. The future rather than the past dominates the imagination. The Golden Age lies ahead of us not behind us. Everywhere new possibilities beckon and arouse courage and effort. The great French thinkers of the later eighteenth century borrowed this idea from Bacon and developed it into the doctrine of the indefinite perfectibility of mankind on earth. Man is capable, if he will but exercise the required courage, intelligence and effort, of shaping his own fate. Physical conditions offer no insurmountable barriers.

"In the fourth place, the patient and experimental study of nature, bearing fruit in inventions which control nature and subdue her forces to social uses, is the method by which progress is made. Knowledge is power and knowledge is achieved by sending the mind to school to nature to learn her processes of change."

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

From all parts of the country Methodist Protestant young people have been wending their way this week to the colleges and universities of the country. We are glad to know that a goodly number of these have chosen one of the schools of their own church.

What information we have been able to secure is encouraging. Every college was expecting an increase in attendance over last year with indications that the seminary would have the largest enrollment in its history. We hope to be able to furnish definite figures very soon.

The extremes in the present situation seem to be at Kansas City University and Adrian. The University was not having quite as large an enrollment as anticipated while Adrian was reporting in the local papers as having prospects of the largest enrollment in its history.

Westminster College, Tehuacana, Texas, reports fifteen young men on hand two weeks before the opening of the year to take part in the preliminary training of the football season. Dr. J. A. Phipps is very hopeful so far as the enrollment is concerned, but the severe drought has halted the financial plans for the time being. This is regrettable as Westminster's outstanding need is funds.

No reports have been received from Western Maryland and High Point. The former, with its many years of success and growth, has a most promising future, while the latter although still in somewhat of an experimental stage, is so commending itself to the esteem and loyalty of the Methodist Protestant constituency its future seems secure. We anticipate a substantial increase in the enrollment of each of these schools.

The orders for Rally Day are approximately fifty percent in number ahead of those received at this date a year ago. The number received from each conference is as follows:

Maryland, 79, Ohio, 41, Indiana, 27, N. Carolina, 19, Michigan, 16, Onondaga, 16, Eastern, 15, Pittsburg, 11, Kansas 10, Missouri, 8, Illinois, 6, Iowa-Missouri, 5, W. Virginia, 5, S. Carolina, 3, Alabama, 2, Arkansas, 2, Texas, 2, Col-Texas, (Colored) 2, Georgia, 1, Kentucky, 1,

In order to meet any possible deficit but more with a view of improving buildings and equipment the Trustees of Adrian College in co-operation with President Feeman are soliciting funds from those whom they are pleased to call the Loyal Friends of Adrian. Cards have been distributed with the caption "L. F. A.," for a bigger and better Adrian. This note follows, "The old college is on the up-grade. Now is the time to push and to prevent the waste of much sacrificial effort. This is not a call to help "pay old debts" but to keep a going enterprise from slipping, to supplement the budget and endowment income." Many splendid responses are being received to this appeal. The pledges are to cover a three year period with the object of securing at least $7000 annually. This is to help prepare the way for an intensive campaign for endowment at an opportune time.

Requests for assistance for non-ministerial students through the Student Loan Fund promise to be larger than in any former year. No one as yet has been refused consideration although nearly twenty applications have been received. Over $2200 were required last year but it looks now though at least $3000 would be needed this year. However, we are not the least anxious for it is a cause most people like to support. The necessary funds without doubt will be in hand before the close of the school year.

The number of Ministerial students who will need help this year will equal or exceed that of last year. Our conference visitations indicated more of our young men than usual were planning to enter college to study for the ministry of the Methodist Protestant church. From what we could learn more have the seminary training in view than ever before. This is as it should be for there is no work nor calling which requires as careful and thorough preparation. We want the ministry of our church to be equal in character and training to that of any other.

Each school in the denomination put forth some special effort during the summer to secure students and to arouse greater interest in its special constituency. The results were evident long before the time for school to open in the number of inquiries reaching the college authorities from prospective students and in the interest manifested by ministers and delegates attending the annual conferences. Christian people are anxious that the youth of the church shall be encouraged in their Christian life and purposes and are well aware that the church college is the safer place to which to send their children. The work and sacrifices of many years can be ruined in a few months if young people fall under the influence of the wrong kind of teachers and associates. Christian ideals must be maintained no matter what it costs.

DO NOT FORGET RALLY DAY

At the time this note is being written we have received nearly 300 orders for Rally Day Programs. This probably represents about 400 Sunday schools. There are 2,000 in the denomination, so we are inclined to ask, Where are the other 1,600? Circumstances sometimes prevent the observance of one or another of our special days, but in most cases few things are apt to interfere at this time of year. To neglect to observe the day in as energetic a way as possible is to help to defeat the very success of the work for which all of us are laboring and praying. The program is distributed gratis, not alone with a view to secure money, but to quicken the life and activities of the church at a time of the year when such an effort can be most effective. The church that fails to observe Rally Day begins the work of the year under a handicap.

Really there should be no question about the matter. Every church is expected to observe the day. The programs are distributed free of charge on the one condition that a free-will offering for the work of the Board of Education be taken. The money is used to support our colleges and seminary and young men studying for the ministry. Please send in your order at once. A card to the undersigned will receive proper attention.

NOTICE TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETIES.

You will note by reference to page 77 of the Annual Conference Journal that, by conference action, "the Sunday schools and Senior and Intermediate Christian Endeavor Societies are assessed $2.00 each and Junior Christian Endeavor Societies are assessed $1 each for the support of the Young People's Board."

We have only about one month more until the meeting of Annual Conference and only 80 Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor societies have sent in this assessment. We want to close up our year's work without a deficit. Won't you please take this matter up at once with your Sunday school or Christian Endeavor society and rush your payment to me and thus have your part in the work our Board is doing for the young people of our church? Thank you!

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.
Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

In view of the fact that North Carolina has not met the apportionment of $800.00 for the work at Pine Ridge, Kentucky, our State President has asked us to send out another appeal through this Department.

Dr. Woodford needs funds badly to complete the building for their High School work. They are crowded for room—the boys and girls must be taken care of—there are 42 of them in High School classes.

Have we, who believe in Home Mission progress, failed in our duty, or is it the hot weather that has caused us to delay in carrying out the suggestion of the Birthday Pennies in all our Sunday schools. That Birthday plan was sent out by our State officers and if every Methodist Protestant in North Carolina will give one penny for each year old that $800.00 will be raised easily. Birthdays surely come, so let the pennies come too. Put this plan across in your church and school for the advancement of higher education, for the children of the Kentucky mountains.

Will we do our best?

Please send all money for Pine Ridge work to our State Treas., Mrs. H. A. Garrett, at High Point. It must go from her to Dr. Woodford for our societies in the state to get credit for it on our budget.

How about asking the children of your Sunday school to collect these birthday pennies—after having some one explain to them what it all means.

That High School at Pine Ridge is a part of the plans of the Home Mission Board for enlarged facilities. If each state would send on her gift to this great undertaking, which was so necessary, Dr. Woodford would not have to borrow money to complete the building.

BETTY BOONE, OF KENTUCKY.

Betty was in a great hurry. She flitted about the little room like a busy honey bee. When at last it was in shining order the little girl smiled.

"Now I can go to the woods," she cried, "in search of the pink flowers that Isaac Smith found yesterday." She clapped her slim brown hands gleefully and scampered out of the low door.

"Betty, child, where are you going?" cried the neighbor in the next cabin.

Betty courtesied politely. "Just for a little walk, Mistress Bliss. My mother is at Mrs. Aaron White's caring for her sick baby and my work is all done."

Mrs. Bliss shook her head. "I am sure your mother would tell you to keep away from the woods. What if a wild-cat should put his sharp claws in you, or worse still, what if the savages should carry you off to Canada?"

Betty tossed her brown curls a little. "Indeed, I am not afraid of wild-cats," she said grandly, "and it would be a brave Indian who would dare to lay his hands on a daughter of Daniel Boone."

"I wish your mother was here," said Mrs. Bliss.

Betty courtesied again and hurried on, half afraid that Mrs. Bliss would stop her. The woods were very cool. Squirrels and birds were everywhere. As the little girl climbed a knoll covered with brown pine needles, she cried out in delight, for there was the pink moccasin flower she was seeking.

She pressed her moist red lips to the flower. "You darling!" she breathed. A little further on she came to a place where a crowd of the lovely flowers bloomed together. Down on her knees went the little maid to pick the treasures.

The twigs crackled behind her. She turned and found herself facing an enormous Indian. The child stared fearlessly into his black, beady eyes.

"What do you want?" she demanded. "Have you come to see my father, Daniel Boone?"

The savage still looked at her without speaking. Betty tossed her curls and went on picking flowers. She really was badly frightened, but she knew better than to let the Indian see it.

Another minute passed. Suddenly he bent over and seized her by the wrists. "Little squaw, come with me," he grunted.

"Daniel Boone will kill you if you touch me," Betty said sternly.

"Ugh," mumbled the Indian, still pulling her along. Somewhat to his surprise, Betty suddenly yielded and came along obediently. "Good squaw," said the Indian, and let the child have her left wrist free. Very deftly she broke a twig here or bent down a bush there. "No," said the Indian by-and-by, as she pulled off a long spray of rhododendron leaves. "No, no," he repeated, fingering his tomahawk.

Betty did not dare to break any more twigs, but she contrived to tear her blue apron on a thorn bush. Then here and there she let fall a shred of blue calico. It seemed to poor little Betty that she had been walking for miles and miles when her captor suddenly brought her into an Indian encampment.

It was a very noisy place. Dogs barked, children shouted, and women chattered. Betty was thrust into a dirty wigwam. She lay there tired and exhausted, fearing that in the evening she would be carried away as Catherine Hatch had been. Then she remembered her father. "Father will find me," she whispered to herself, and flinging herself down upon a pile of skins fell fast asleep.

When Mrs. Boone came home from Mrs. Aaron White's and found her little daughter gone, she was very much frightened. Worst of all, Daniel Boone himself was away upon an exploring expedition.

She walked up and down the kitchen floor. All at once the door opened and Daniel Boone walked in.

"I felt that I was needed at home," he said, "and I came back to see if anything was wrong."

"Betty is gone," sobbed her mother. "Mistress Bliss says that she went for a walk several hours ago."

Daniel Boone kissed his wife without speaking and strode out of the cabin. Five minutes later he, with two other stern-faced men, entered the forest.

Isaac Smith had a bright thought. "I gave the little maid a flower yesterday. Methinks she has gone in search of others."

"Show us where they grow," commanded her father. Together the men climbed the little knoll. There were Betty's treasures strewn upon the ground.

Daniel Boone's gray eyes flashed. "She is in the hands of the Indians. Every minute counts."

Isaac Smith's sharp eyes spied a broken twig.

"They went this way," he declared. "So the little lass has marked the trail they were taking."

The men quickly made their way over the ground. Then the trail stopped, but a rod or two further Daniel Boone discovered the little blue shreds of calico apron and at last the came to the Indian village.

Boone walked boldly in. The old chief came to meet him. He was very much afraid of Boone, so he pretended to be very glad to see him.

Boone looked straight ahead. "I have come for my little maid," he said coldly.

The chief shook his head. "I have not seen your papoose," he said blandly.

Then Isaac Smith walked over to a wigwam and threw back the opening of skin. "Come, Betty," he said calmly.

Betty opened her eyes and sat up. This time she heard her father's voice as well as Isaac's. She came flying out of the wigwam and threw herself into her father's arms.

"O, father," she sobbed, "I knew you would come and get me."

So Daniel Boone and his little maid, with Isaac Smith and the other brave scout, walked out of the camp of angry Indians.

"You were a clever little lass to mark your trail," said her father approvingly.

Betty smiled for the first time since the big Indian captured her.

"The next time that I want to go after flowers I shall ask either you or Isaac to go with me," she said with a toss of her curls.

And to this day in Kentucky they still tell the tale of nimble-witted little Betty Boone of Boonesborough.—Mary Davis, in The Congregationalist and Christian World.

Mebane.—Yesterday we had a splendid number present for Sunday school and church service.

Last Friday night week the W. H. M. S. gave their sacred concert, and by request repeated it the following Sunday night. This was fine and thoroughly enjoyed by all. The collection both nights included amounted to $25.00.

On the first Sunday in October our revival meeting will begin. Rev. L. W. Gerringer, of Greensboro, will be with us in this meeting. We are very glad Mr. Gerringer can be here at this time.

The Ladies' Aid Society met at the home of Mrs. Albert Sykes on Thursday afternoon Sept. 10, at three o'clock; 16 members and one visitor present. The collection at this time was good. After the business meeting Mrs. Sykes served cream and cake. The next meeting will be with Mrs. W. J. Sykes.

Last Wednesday Misses Alta Allen and Elizabeth Nicholson left for High Point college. These are splendid young ladies from our church and we wish for them much success in their college work.

Sun., Oct. 11. Topic—They "First Gave Their Own Selves"—A Stewardship Meditation. 2 Cor. 8:1-15.

Some Bible Hints. . .

It is when we know the joy of the Lord, the happiness of service, that we give ourselves wholly to Him (v. 2).

Real stewards are not pushed to do God's work; they do it "of their own accord," that is, because they want to do it (v. 3).

What we give to God is nothing if we do not give ourselves with the gift (v. 5).

Surrender to God is also consecration to the service of men. They "gave themselves to the Lord, and to us" (v. 5).

Surrender of Self The First Requisite.

Christian service begins with the utter consecration of self. That comes first. No second step is possible until this first step is taken. We need not expect any one to give largely of their means for the promotion of God's kingdom on earth until he has first of all given himself fully to God. The key note of this whole lesson is found in (v. 5), "But first gave their own selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God."

Life itself means a Stewardship. Men must come to see Jesus Christ not simply as the Savior from sin, but as the Lord whose spirit must rule all life. That was the goal of Jesus. That is the vision which is stirring men's hearts today. It lies back of all local church work, of all missionary work and of all social service. "Thy Kingdom Come." That is the end of all church work, that is the meaning of Christ's coming, that is the goal of the ages. And to that end every Christian, as Christian, is pledged with Life and Substance.

The Christian Life means more than going to church, praying and singing hymns and keeping the commandments, and so getting to heaven because we have "been faithful." Life is more than a probation ending in heaven or hell; it is a great trust and a great opportunity. We are co-laborers with God. Thus God has made us partners in His plans for developing a new world. We are not mere spectators, nor are we simply to hold out our hands to take good gifts. We are the friends who know what our Lord is doing. We are those upon whom He depends. He has no other plan but to work through us. That is life's solemn meaning, and that is life's high glory. Life is a partnership, a trusteeship, a stewardship.

The Stewardship of Time, Prayer, Business, and Money.

There are so many books and pamphlets on the subject of stewardship that no one need be ignorant, nor lacking in information on this great subject. The Layman Company, 143 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, will be glad to send you sample copies of leaflets and will sell you just any amount of them at cost. Drop them a card asking about their literature on Stewardship.

Time: The thought of the Stewardship of Life as taught above cuts into our shallow idea of life. This thought of Life as a Great Trust. Something that is not our own to do with as we selfishly please.

Time is also a trust. Certainly one day in seven belongs to God, but men about us seem to be forgetting that we are to "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." So, to too large an extent it is getting to be a holiday rather than a holyday. But all Christians must get a larger vision and remember that not just one day in seven belongs to God, but all days. It is just as necessary to remember Monday and Tuesday and the other days as it is to "remember the Sabbath day." All days are holy because all time is holy, and all time is holy because all life is holy. And life is holy because of the high ends to which it may be consecrated. If young men and young women should consecrate their lives to the ministry, and to mission work of various sorts, then other young men and young women should certainly consecrate a part of their time to helping to pay these workers an adequate living while they work.

Business. It has been only within very recent years that men have even thought in terms of "The Stewardship of Business." William Colgate, William Carey, Geo. Innis of New York, and Golden Rule Nash of Cincinnati, and many others like them have given to the world concrete lessons in the stewardship of business. Their experience teaches without doubt that it pays to take God into partnership.

It should also be remembered that the stewardship of which Jesus taught has to do with man's conduct of the business which has been entrusted to him. That does not simply mean that we must make our money honestly, it also means that the work we do is our first service to God and man. The Christian Steward sees his job, whatever it may be, as a partnership with God. For him work becomes an opportunity, not a burden. Service and not gain is his motive.

Prayer: Matt. 6:6-13. "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. After this manner therefore pray ye, Our Father —". All this teaches us that they who are most frequently and most earnestly in prayer are the ones who render the most efficient service in their activities.

Money: When we think of the Stewardship of Money we are naturally led to ask. What is money, or what does money represent? The late Dr. A. F. Shauffer of New York was perhaps the first to teach that "Money is myself."

The first task of the church is not to ask men for their money, but to make plain what money really is, and the relationship of a Christian to money. Think of it thus, and teach the young people these everlasting truths.

1. Money is myself. All money that is really earned is just so much of a person's muscle, or brain, or nerve energy stored away for future use. It is not filthy lucre, nor a necessary evil. It is my personality in my pocket, and should be turned loose to the glory of God.

2. Money is power. By it we command the service of the laboring man, the doctor, the teacher, and the farmer. With it we build railroads, and with it we buy houses and lands. It is not to be despised, but it should be properly used.

3. Money is danger. Do not pass too easily over the searching, warning words of Jesus. Nothing can fool men like money. It seems so powerful that it makes men forget the supreme power. It feeds pride until men seem to think they have no need of God. It invites constantly to selfishness. It commands so many things that men forget the real goods that it can never purchase: righteousness, love, and a clear conscience. There is only one way to escape: not by renouncing it — that is the counsel of weakness — but by finding some high end which you can make your money serve.

4. Money is opportunity. Never were doors of service both at home and abroad so wide open and so appealing. Never were the Christian agencies so well organized as today. Never were there so many young men and young women, the very choicest of the land, waiting to serve. The great need of the world today is consecrated money. And the church needs to consecrate the money.

5. Money is obligation. It is not the church alone that is saying this; the state is saying it, and the common conscience of men is saying it. We are more and more sceptical of the religion of those who leave large sums to those who have not earned it, who have no need of it, and who cannot be trusted to properly administer it. The greatest responsibility comes in properly spending money.

Some Elementary Principles for Handling Money.

Nearly all the leaflets you read these days on Christian Stewardship set forth some such principles as these for the handling of money:

1. God is the Sovereign Owner of all things.
2. Man is a steward, to acquire and administer his possessions is a sacred trust.
3. God's ownership and man's stewardship ought to be acknowledged.
4. This acknowledgement requires as a material expression, as an act of worship, the setting apart of a separate portion of income.
5. The Bible indicates the tenth of income as the designated portion, and indicates a divine sanction for the practice and the proportion.

Other gifts and favors: The tonsils and adenoids of eleven of the children were successfully removed by Drs. Austin and Coe of High Point. The operations were performed at the Home. Two nurses accompanied the physicians. These good physicians give their time and service to the Home when needed. It makes us feel good to know that such competent service is at our command when needed. Mrs. J. R. Koerper, High Point, coats, dresses, shoes, hose, etc. Mrs. J. R. Osborne and Mrs. John Lee Shoaf, both of Mt. Pleasant church, North Davidson, a nice lot of pears. Rev. J. H. Bowman, pumpkins and pears. W. A. Bowman, pears. Mrs. R. B. Causey, apples and pears. Mrs. Brooks of Mt. Vernon Springs; a dress.

Miss Martha Parsons, Mitchell's Grove, one dozen song books.

For all these contributions, gifts and favors we thank you very much.

HOW THE ASTERS CHOSE THEIR COLORS.

One summer evening a cool breeze swept over the land. It refreshed all nature and sang to the tired grass.

Most of all it talked to the flowers in a beautiful garden and told the asters it was time to think of blossoming. They were only little green buds now, but they smiled back to the wind and said they would be ready.

All the next day they whispered to one another, trying to plan what colors they should be. At last one of the smallest buds said: "Let us wait till the sun sets and watch for its tints. A raindrop told me they were beautiful, but I have never been tall enough before to look at them."

The other buds listened eagerly, for they had never heard of the sunset colors. So they stretched their heads high all the afternoon and then! Oh then! When the sunset hour came, they held their breath, it was so glorious.

They were happy and quiet for a long time, even till the twilight hours. Then one said: "I'm going to be that velvety purple; it rested me to look at it." "And I," "And I," said several more.

"The bright red dazzled my eyes," said one tall plant. "Come, sisters; be red with me." "Yes but the pink is like our dear friend, the rose, who died just as we came to live here. I loved her so much in those few days. I wish you would all be pink," quietly said another.

"But little Dorothy's eyes are blue, and she brings us water every day. I'm going to be the sky-blue that showed ever among the bright colors," spoke up one floweret.

Then the baby plant of them all, the one who had told them of the sunset, whispered softly: "I am going to be white; that is the color I saw last. I looked and looked, and by and by there was only a beautiful white, and I shall be white."

So day by day the flowers grew, and day by day they thought only of trying to be like their color. The little plant that wanted to be white found it must be true and kind and good and thoughtful, for when it was selfish or unkind, even a little, some of its petals began to grow dark and spotted.

One glorious day they all blossomed out, and Dorothy and her mother came to pick them.

Dorothy clapped her hands and cried. "Who ever saw such perfect asters! Some fairy wand must have touched them."

But the asters were satisfied and only smiled. They had found it was by hard work day by day and by watching the sunset every night that they at last were beautiful.—The Baptist.

A commercial traveler, visiting a large insurance office, boasted to the manager that he could pick out all the married men among the employees. "The married men wipe their feet on the mat; the single ones don't."—Western Christian Advocate.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—SEPT. 27.

Review.

Golden Text. "Whom not having seen, ye love, in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." 1Pet. 1:8.

Lesson 1 teaches that under the influence of the Holy Spirit the church at Antioch in Syria had awakened to a sense of responsibility to the outside world, that Paul and Barnabas were sent forth as the first foreign missionaries, and that on the island of Cyprus they first planted the banner of the cross and won many to accept Jesus Christ as Savior.

Lesson 2 teaches that in Antioch in Pisia Paul and Barnabas first preached the gospel in the synagogue of the Jews, that, those having raised such molignont opposition, these apostles withdrew from there and preached to the Gentiles, who received the word with much gladness, and that the opposition having broken out with such violent persecution they were compelled to flee from the city.

Lesson 3 teaches that the impotent man was healed at Lystra, that the people supposed that Paul and Barnabas were their own gods came down from heaven in the likeness of men, that their priests proceeded to offer sacrifices to them, and that these humble messengers of Jesus Christ had much difficulty in restraining them from so doing.

Lesson 4. teaches that a serious controversy had arisen whether the Gentile converts should be circumcised and keep the law of Moses, that Paul and Barnabas, and certain others, were appointed by the church of Antioch in Syria to go up to Jerusalem and lay this matter of dispute before the mother church for settlement, and that after much discussion, pro and con, it was decided that the Gentile Christians should be required to "abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood." And they were absolved from observing other ceremonial laws.

Lesson 5. teaches that hearing the Gospel is a most valuable privilege, but the performance of its obligations was of supreme importance, that an unbridled tongue is evidence of a seeming, but vain, religion, but that the pure and undefiled religion enjoins a loving service and a spotless life.

Lesson 6. teaches that Paul proposed to Barnabas a second missionary journey, that, unable to agree upon taking John Mark with them this time, two missionary tours resulted, —Barnabas and John Mark to Cyprus, and Paul and Silas to Asia Minor, and that Paul and Silas were greatly blessed in establishing the churches in the faith of the gospel.

Lesson 7. teaches that Christian liberty is not in the least a license to do wrong, that love is the fulfilling of the law, that the power to overcome the fleshy nature is important by the Holy Spirit, and that the Holy Spirit supplants the works of the flesh with such Christian graces as "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."

Lesson 8. teaches that "the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord," that at Troas Paul received by means of a vision a call to carry the gospel to the continent of Europe, that at Philippi he preached Jesus to the women who came to the riverside prayer meeting, and that Lydia and her household were converted, with whom Paul and Silas lodged during their stay in Philippi.

Lesson 9. teaches that Paul invoked the demon out of the half witted sorceress, that her masters were enraged at this loss of much revenue, that they rushed Paul and Silas to the magistrates who beat them unmercifully, that they were cast into prison and placed in the stocks, that after singing and praising God till midnight an earthquake shook the foundations and loosed every band, that the jailer, about to kill himself, by means of Paul's message was convicted and converted, and that he washed the stripes of his prisoners and set them down to the best meal that he could provide.

Lesson 10. teaches that the best education is "the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord," the highest attainment is the complete life of love in Jesus Christ, the wisest pursuit is immortality,—"the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," and the most uplifted realm of thought is that of good report, virtue, and praise.

Lesson 11 teaches that at Thessalonica "of the devout Greek a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few," were brought to Christ by Paul's ministry, that this marvelous outpouring greatly inflamed the Jews, who stirred up an insurrection against Paul and his companions, that to escape their murderous attack they fled to Berea, and that "these were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word of God with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily, whether these things were so."

Lesson 12. teaches that Paul was a bold and aggressive exponent of the faith, that he was as pure as the driven snow, that his love and gentleness knew no bounds, that he exemplified in daily life the gospel that he preached, and that as a spiritual father he exhorted his converts to "walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory."

BLAMING PUBLIC TASTE.

In the recent wide-spread discussions about immoral, salacious matter in books, magazines, movies and on the stage there were not lacking those who defended or condoned the present flaunting indecency.

One of their strongest, most repeated arguments, which was as fallacious as it was effective, was that the public is to blame for patronizing such stuff. They pointed out that the public wanted it and paid for it, and concluded, therefore, that the public was to blame.

In Maryland a delegation of Baltimore women waited on Gov. Ritchie and asked him to discharge or transfer a judge who had dismissed cases against some chorous girls arrested for having acted the worst part in an immoral play. The governor, as an editor in a high-class paper remarked, "administered to the women a courteous but sensible rebuke." He told them the girls were employed to do what they did because the public wanted to see them do it. The girls, the governor added, were merely earning their living at their profession, and such fault of morals as a play disclosed was not their fault.

To clinch his argument and impress his conclusion the governor called the ladies' attention to the fact that the show complained of had played a return engagement in which the worst features were omitted—and that the patronage fell off greatly. The philosophic editor quoted above remarked in conclusion: "When the public betters its taste it will improve the stage." The same, of course, applies to the movies and to all publications.

What is the matter with this line of reasoning?

Simply that it excuses any kind of lawlessness, excess and indulgence. Does the governor doubt for a moment that great gambling casinos such as the one at Monte Carlo, would flourish in this country if allowed to? Was it for lack of patronage on the part of the "public" that the old Louisiana lottery was stopped? Did a lack of public support put the saloons and distilleries out of business? The old dives, places of ill repute and opium smoking joints which have been abolished in most cities could argue just like Gov. Ritchie that they were run because of a public demand.

If that were a valid argument we should never stop anything, however vile, as long as the public supported it.

Washington would be one of the biggest prize-fight and horse-race centers in the United States if only the support of the public governed the question.

The fact is that there is more than one "public!" There is the self-indulgent, sporting "public," carelessly inclined to carry things to extremes. This is the more active "public." Then there is the law-abiding, moral, church-going "public," inclined to remain quiet and tend to their own affairs. This is the more numerous "public." But when the worst class of the first-mentioned "public" carries things too far and keeps it up too long then the decent majority rise in revolt and there is a "clean-up."

That's just what is happening now.

The better element is in the majority, but they like peace, and they will stand for a lot before they act. They are always led to action, at last, by some of the militant among them—like committees of women. It's a principle in this country that the majority can rule. If gamblers, tiplers and the like have a majority they can legalize the vices they wish and indulge in them with complete freedom. But the country will have sunk to a lower moral level.

We should remember to be thankful that the great majority of our citizens are of high moral character. On that support is based the soundness of our most precious institutions.—The Pathfinder.

"What was the name of the last station we stopped at, mother?"

"I don't know. Be quiet. I'm working out a cross-word puzzle.

"It's a pity you don't know the name, mother, because little Oscar got out of the train there!"—Kasper (Stockholm).

Waiter—Yes, sir, we're very up-to-date. Everything here is cooked by electricity.

Diner—I wonder if you would mind giving this steak another shock?—Action Leader.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Winston-Salem!—The members of the church and friends of the congregation feel greatly indebted to the pastor for securing the services of Dr. Charles M. Compber, of Washington, D. C., in a ten days' evangelistic campaign, beginning Sept. 6th. Rev. E. Lester Ballard of Greensboro directed the singing and also rendered many beautiful selections himself, which were much enjoyed. This has been one of the most successful revivals ever conducted in the Methodist Protestant Church of Winston-Salem.

Dr. Compber spoke four times on the last Sunday of the revival. The first service, held during the Sunday school hour, was especially for the children and young people, and from 20 to 25 accepted Christ as their Saviour. The subject of the eleven o'clock sermon was "The Meaning of the Three Crosses." The message made a deep impression on the congregation, and there were two conversions at the close of the service. At three o'clock Dr. Compber talked to men only, his subject being "Fetters of Brass." There were also two who gave themselves to Christ at the men's meeting. A large congregation listened to the evening message, "The Value of the Soul." Large crowds listened to Dr. Compber and a deep interest was manifested throughout all of the services.

The pastor did not spare himself in making preparation for these meetings; his people were much impressed with his deep consecration and earnestness, and his heart rejoiced at the splendid results obtained. At the closing sermon on Wednesday evening he received thirteen into full membership of the church, and there are a number of others expected to join at a later date.

Mr. Hunter has always served his church most faithfully both in and out of revival seasons. During his five years' pastorate here he has given himself wholeheartedly and unselfishly to the great work of saving souls. His pastorate here has been most successful and he has greatly endeared himself not only to the church but to all who really know him. The church has made much progress during the past five years, this year being one of the most successful in its entire history. We hope to have Mr. Hunter with us the coming year.

Among the visitors who attended the revival services were Rev. Mr. Bethea and Mrs. Bethea, of Lexington, Rev. Geo. L. Curry, of Maple Springs, Mr. and Mrs. Sennewald of Charlotte and Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Gunn of Danville, Va. The choir was delighted to have Mrs. Gunn assist in the singing.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society held its meeting for September with Mrs. W. V. Hutchins, at her home in Ardmore, with Mrs. J. R. Fletcher as associate hostess. Mrs. J. A. Gwyn had charge of the program, her subject being "The Mother of Moses." Eighteen members answered to the roll call and the report of "Scholarship and Native Workers" and of "Life and Memorial Members" was given by Mrs. H. G. Paschall. A report of the home board meeting held in Indiana was given by Mrs. T. L. Speas. The amount of $31.25 was collected as dues. Dr. C. M. Compber and Rev. E. L. Ballard were present and made impressive talks. An ice course was served during the social hour.

Mr. R. N. Hauser has been elected delegate to the annual conference. Reporter.

Charlotte, Richland Circuit.—Our revival meeting began Sunday, Sept. 6th, and continued until Sunday night, Sept. 13th. Rev. Fred. R. Love did most of the preaching. Our pastor, Rev. C. H. Hill, preached two inspiring sermons, and Bro. Guinn of Concord was present and assisted in a most helpful way.

Bro. Love preached the plain simple truth. He preaches with power and puts his whole soul into his work.

He is young in the work of the Master, but we feel sure with his spirit and determination to do God's will, there are great things in store for him, and he will be a great blessing to humanity. May God wonderfully bless him is our prayer.

Although the number of conversions was much smaller than we had hoped for, yet we can truly say the meeting was a great success, because of the inspiration Bro. Love gave those of us who are trying to uphold the banner of Jesus Christ. I believe much and lasting good has been accomplished.

As a token of our appreciation of what Bro. Love did for us a contribution of about $50.00 was made to him; wish it could have been more.

We have organized a prayer meeting. It has been several years since we have had a prayer meeting at this place and we feel very weak and inexperienced, but we are going to do our best to make it a success.

Mr. T. T. Redding, one of our stewards, has been in the High Point hospital for a very serious operation. He has returned home now and is slowly improving. We ask the prayers of the good people, that he may speedily be restored to health. We miss him so much at church and Sunday school.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Henley twin girls, Sarah and Marjorie.

Fountain Place, Burlington.—I have not reported for quite a while, as we have had nothing of special interest to report, and have been out of our church for quite a while, but we hope to be back on the second Sunday in October. Our building is progressing very nicely. On our opening day, October 11th, we are planning a special programme, working in three services, with out of town speakers. This will be a day of rejoicing with us, and we invite our friends to come and worship and rejoice with us. Plan to spend the day in Burlington, and with Fountain Place Church the above date.

Rev. Joe Lynch came and spent several days with us the first week in Sept. He did some fine preaching, but we could not get many people out to hear him for some reason. We hope that we can get him back with us again when we get "back home." During his stay with us, he made many friends, and a good number of his friends from West End, Greensboro, came down and worshiped with us. We invite them to come again.

Our attendance at both Sunday school and church have been off ever since we have been away from "home." We hope that it will improve after the second Sunday.

Conference is almost upon us. At the last quarterly conference the writer was elected delegate from this charge. We hope that we will be able to go up with a splendid report. Our work here is we believe in as good condition as can be expected.

Pray for us that we may finish up this year's work with credit, and start the new Conference Year aright.

Elbaville, Mocksville Ct.—We haven't sent in a report for some time but we have not been idle. Our pastor was absent the first Sunday, but we had a good service. Mr. Waller, the Sunday school supt., conducted prayer meeting. The third Sunday of this month Mr. Beasley filled Bro. Sisk's appointment. He preached a very inspiring sermon on Baptism.

Our Sunday school is still growing, I think we are doing good work in our church. We are glad to see Elbaville coming to the front. Pray for us that we may continue to be faithful.

Reporter.

Bethesda, Halifax Ct.—The special meeting at this place commenced second Sunday and closed Friday night. Mr. R. L. Hetheox did the preaching and gave us some searching and stirring sermons. He is a good preacher and gets a great deal of thought and applicable truth out of texts that had not seemed to mean so much, while his "terrible earnestness," as some one expressed it, adds to the impressiveness of his words.

He gave us a stirring up that was much needed. One truth he continually emphasized that Mr. Spencer often stresses—the need that people should help answer their own prayers by being willing to be used in the cause, since God works through men.

Congregations were good, with crowded house at night, and many favorable comments were heard: "A powerful sermon," "True preaching," "The last was the best," "He hit us all, didn't he?" "He tells us how we are, but he does it in such a way! He doesn't jump on you."

Prayer meetings were conducted by the preachers in many homes during the week, this movement being instigated by Rev. N. M. Harrison, who was a very welcome visitor for the first few days. We were sorry that his duties called him elsewhere then.

Mrs. E. R. Wells, of Wilmington, nee Miss Nannie Hunter, is visiting her mother here and was a constant attendant.

Miss Mary Hunter, lately returned from Cullowhee, where she held a position in the normal school, is spending some time here.

Mrs. Kate Harrison Nelson, of Henderson, was also a visitor during the week.

Mr. Spencer has been giving us some good sermons along from time to time since our last report, one of the best being from parts of two texts "Why stand ye here idle all the day?" and "We are colaborers together with God."

Mr. Spencer seems to be much liked by the people on this circuit.

M. H. Street, Reporter.

Lebanon Church, High Point.—We tried to show our pastor just how glad we were to have him back after an absence of one Sunday by giving him a good audience on Sunday morning and at night. We also had a larger number at Sunday school than we have had for sometime.

We have the Junior Philathea Class and their teacher, Mrs. Baily, to thank for the new carpet which covers the floor in our church auditorium.

The extremely hot weather has not kept our two Christian Endeavor Societies from their work. If you could have overheard our Junior Supt. and the Juniors talking about the watermelon feast that they are going to enjoy next Saturday afternoon you would have thought that they were very active indeed.

Our special meeting begins the 1st Sunday in October with Rev. J. D. Williams as the pulpit help. We are looking forward to a great revival, won't you join us in prayer for it?

Our regular reporter expects to make the next report and then a full one will be given; until then this is just to let you know that we are still on the job.

I. G.

West End, Greensboro.—West End was eight years old September 23rd, and Anniversary Day was observed at both services September 20th. In the morning Rev. R. M. Andrews, president of High Point College, delivered the sermon, and in the evening the pastor, Rev. E. Lester Ballard, was the speaker. Both sermons were appropriate and well delivered. A short memorial service was held at the morning service for the members who have passed away during the year, Mrs. Charles and Mrs. Beasley.

The entire community and especially the membership of West End is grieved very much over the death of Mr. L. D. Mendenhall who died Thursday night following a stroke of paralysis a few days previous. He very often filled the pulpit during the absence of the pastor, and frequently taught the Foust Bible Class and spoke at Christian Endeavor. His interest in young people won the admiration and love of all the Endeavorers, and his passing makes us feel that we have lost one of our own members. Our hearts go out in sympathy to the family.

Mrs. Nannie Newman, who recently joined West End, was seriously hurt in an automobile accident Sunday, September 13th. She is a nurse and was on her way to take charge of a patient when the car in which she was riding was struck by one driven by a man under the influence of whiskey. She is a patient at St. Leo Hospital.

The president, Mrs. J. R. Holden, and Dr. Joy Glascock were joint hostesses to the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society Monday afternoon at the home of the former. Mrs. A. G. Dixon gave an interesting talk on mission work. An unusually large number attended the meeting.

Our pastor, Rev. E. L. Ballard, is leading the singing for Rev. J. D. Williams in a revival meeting at Reidsville this week.

Mr. P. A. Burns has been elected delegate to Annual Conference.

Mr. V. C. Stockard succeeds Mr. W. A. Smith as superintendent of the Sunday school.

for the ensuing year. The Sunday school has made wonderful progress during the past year—the attendance averaging 210 during August. More class room is needed in every department.

The Endeavorers had a very interesting meeting at the colored convict camp last Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. J. K. Osborne delightfully entertained the Junior Christian Endeavor Society at her home on Walker Avenue Saturday afternoon, September 12th. Twenty-two Juniors were present and held a very interesting business meeting before the social hour. Miss Sarah Foust, little eight-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Foust, won second prize in the Dixie Poster Contest recently held in the Dixie States. The prize is a beautiful Junior Christian Endeavor pin. Rep.

Shelby.—We began our revival meeting last Sunday with Rev. H. F. Fogleman as pulpit help. There were large congregations at both services and Brother Fogleman delivered two very helpful and inspiring sermons. Services will be held each night this week and possibly one or two nights next week. The people here who remember Bro. Fogleman as a former pastor seem delighted to have him preach here again and also others who had not heard him before are enjoying his able sermons.

We were glad to have Rev. J. M. Morgan, of the Fallston Charge, with us at the night service last Sunday and assist in the service.

Bro. Fogleman and the pastor and family have been invited to a number of homes of our people for the week for which we are thankful.

We have already enjoyed being in the homes of Bro. S. C. Tate and family, Bro. Mos Gantt and family, Bro. J. T. Ramsey and family, eating a meal with each.

Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Gantt, of the Lawndale community near here, were among the worshippers at our service last Sunday night. Mr. Gantt was a member of our church here until he moved away last winter.

We ask the readers of the Herald who pray remember us in their prayers while we are engaged in our revival meetings this week.

C. B. Way, Pastor.

Whitakers Charge.—We have recently held a good meeting at Speight's Chapel. The first Sunday in this month was observed as Homecoming Day and a number of people came back to the church of their childhood days. We held the revival the following week. Dr. L. Whitaker was the pulpit help. He was with us on Sunday and staid through Thursday night. His preaching was powerful, appealing and persuasive. The people listened attentively and all the people were glad to have Dr. Whitaker in our midst. While Dr. Whitaker had to leave early Friday morning, the meeting did not close Thursday night. The pastor decided to continue the meetings for a few days and it closed on the following Monday night. There were nine conversions and even have united with the church and we are hoping that the other two will later join.

We were very glad to have with us yesterday, Rev. L. C. Little. His messages were informing, encouraging and inspiring. He is rendering an invaluable service to our church.

We are happy to report that the heating plant for our church in Whitakers is about completed. We are using steam heat and we trust that during the winter months the church will be so warm and comfortable that no one can give as an excuse for not coming to church, "The building is too cold." We are planning to make three more Sunday school rooms, to repair the broken plastering and carpet the aisles and pulpit platform. These things we hope to get done before conference.

A thing of great encouragement to us is this, we have not had the usual summer slump. The attendance at all services has been remarkably good, especially when we consider the extremely hot weather. We are planning to hold rally day services at both churches and we trust that our forces will be rallied and strengthened for the work of the winter months.

Yours and His,
Fred. W. Paschall, Pastor.

Cleveland, Ct.—I will endeavor to give a report of our work on this charge. Oak Grove has curtained off their church for Sunday school rooms, which adds much to the convenience of the teachers and Supt. in carrying on the work. It also very greatly helps the classes during recitation.

Mt. Moriah people have painted their church, both exterior and interior; and have put in new pews. Old friends coming back to this church would hardly know the place.

Kistlers people painted their church last year, or rather I believe they painted the interior this year since conference.

The third Sunday in July we began our special meeting at Pleasant Hill. Bro. Atlas Ridge was to help me there but his wife was sick and did not get to me. So I had the meeting on my hands and no help. But Rev. E. A. Bingham came over and preached for me once a day. His sermons were greatly enjoyed by the people. Had a splendid revival in the church. Some eight or ten conversions but no accessions.

We next began at Kistlers with Bro. Bingham as our help. There were about twenty-four conversions and six accessions. The church was greatly revived. We all enjoyed Bro. Bingham's preaching exceeding well, and shall be glad for his return any time. Of course they gave Bro. Bingham a purse but I forgot the amount.

We began at Oak Grove Friday before the third Sunday in August. We closed the next Friday night. Rev. N. G. Bethea came over and did all the preaching for us. We were thinking that Bro. Bethea had been out of these parts for twenty years, and that age would be telling on him; but lo, he looked fatter and fairer than in days of yore. And his sermons had no moss on their backs. We had sixty one professions and twenty four accessions. We were all delighted with his sermons. The church gave Bro. Bethea a purse of fifty odd dollars. Come again, Bro. Bethea.

Rev. Robt. Short came to our rescue the first Sunday in Aug. at Mt. Moriah and preached during the week and through the first Sunday in Sept. We had the largest crowd that have come to this church in many years, the people say. Bro. Short did fine preaching. The people were carried away with his sermons, and his fine evangelistic methods. There were so many conversions at times, while I was busy keeping the music going that I did not find out how many conversions there were. But there were twenty seven received into the church. I consider it a great meeting. The church gave Bro. Short a purse of sixty-six dollars.

Second Sunday in Sept. I began a meeting at Mt. Pleasant. Preached twice a day for a week. We had the largest crowds we ever had at that church. Twenty odd conversions and five joined the church, but there are several more coming in yet.

These preachers who helped me did excellent preaching, in sermonizing, in delivery, in method, true to plain Bible exposition with pure common sense, and a religious devotion that can be trusted any where. Fine M. P. preachers they are. All of you come again to Cleveland Ct., for you are wanted and welcomed.

J. D. Morris, Pastor.

Matthews Chapel, Greenville Ct.—Bro. Powell has completed his series of revivals at the different churches on this charge, and was back with us again last Sunday for the first time since the fourth Sunday in July.

Yet we have been visiting the different churches, and heard some good preaching just the same.

Our Sunday school is doing nicely and much interest is being shown towards a better school.

The W. H. M. S. held its regular monthly meeting Sunday night at church; quite a number of members present, and also visitors, which we were glad to have with us.

Since our last report we have organized a Junior Choir of which the children are very proud. And also we have organized a Junior Home Missionary Society, and the children are much interested. They will hold their first meeting next Sunday morning following Sunday school.

Bro. Powell will speak especially to the children on the first Sunday afternoon in October; he has requested the children to make their own music on that day. So everybody come; we feel it will be very encouraging to the children for the older ones to be interested.

Bri. M. P. Chambliss was with us last Friday night, and preached a very interesting sermon. We had a very good crowd considering the brief notice.

Since our last report two of our girls have taken upon them the marriage vows.

Miss Emily Bowen to Mr. V. Battle Mitchell, of Emporia, Va., and Miss Grace Bowen to Mr. Roosevelt Baird of Gasburg, Va.

Mrs. Baird still holds her position in our church and Sunday school.

Saxapahaw Charge.—A beautiful missionary play was given at Salem church Saturday night, September 13th. Miss Lalah Paris, president of the missionary society, deserves much credit for her untiring efforts in getting up the play. The characters rendered their parts without a single mistake. An offering was taken for Foreign Missions. This church, Salem, recently voted to build two Sunday school rooms, the main auditorium not being sufficient to hold the large school. Bro. H. G. Paris is the able superintendent at this place.

The Junior C. E. Society of Saxapahaw church meets every Thursday morning. Miss Lillian Lindley, the efficient president, is always on the job. It does one good to hear the little children under ten years of age pray in public and recite portions of scripture.

Concord C. E. Society, which meets every Sunday night, is still doing good work. Prof. S. A. Cooper, who teaches agriculture at Eli Whitney high school, recently joined Concord church. He is a great help to the C. E. Society.

The Myra Crawford Mission Band of Orange Chapel church has held the banner for three years. Mrs. Ira Lewis, the president, is a very efficient leader for the children.

Several of our young have left for college. We miss them from Sunday school and church service.

Mr. Lois Roberson, son of the late Bro. A. N. Roberson, is in the Burlington hospital where he underwent a serious operation. He is a splendid young man. We hope he will have a rapid recovery. Mrs. C. C. Crawford, who spent several weeks in the Durham hospital for treatment, has returned home much improved.

The pastor desires to thank the following for gifts since his last report: Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Woody potatoes, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Overman honey and pears, and Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Durham pears.

H. L. Isley.

Shiloh.—Rev. Raymond Gertner surprised us Sunday with a new one to speak for us, Mr. Harlley. His talk was surely enjoyed.

Our crowd Sunday was not so large, only 58 present. Collection in Sunday school was $1.23. Number of chapters read the past week, 448.

Sandy Ridge, Kernersville Charge.—I feel like we have things started on a boom at our church once more.

On Saturday, Sep. 12, the Sunday school went to the Battle Ground on a picnic. We had a good crowd and everybody seemed to enjoy it.

On Sunday Bro. Suits preached us a good sermon as he always does. After preaching he had communion.

Bro. Suits has only about three more appointments at this place before conference. It doesn't seem like the year is that near gone. I hope we can raise all his salary so he can go up paid off. Our Sunday school is doing very well; some of the older people are taking hold, I am glad to say, and that helps out so much. We organized prayer meeting Sunday, Sept. 13. Brother C. L. Frazier as president and Brother Albert Smith as vice president, and Mr. Ruffin as secretary and treasurer. We had a good meeting. Mr. J. L. Frazier's wife who has been sick for about four years does not seem to get any better and his mother is in a serious condition.

Mr. D. E. Robertson's baby died last night and will be buried this afternoon at this place.

Fallston Charge.—This work is in fine shape. We have had good revivals on this work again this year. Have conducted all my meetings myself; had a very good meeting at Loundale in the spring. On the 2nd Sunday in July we got a tent, and brought three churches together and held a union meeting for three weeks. This was one of the greatest meetings that I was ever in to me. Some of the old people said "it was the best meeting that had ever been in that community." You will agree with me when I tell you that we had 225 professions and reclamations. The community is so favorably impressed with the result of the meeting, they are going to build a large tabernacle that will seat about two thousand people, to hold about ten days' meeting in every year, and we have almost enough to build it, and Dr. Edwards told me the other day that they would build it before Christmas so you see it is a reality. I have come to the conclusion that if we ever have any great meetings we will have to run longer than one week. The time has come on our large fields, when we will have to consolidate some of our churches that are so close together in order to give them the best service, and that they may be better organized for service, so I think one of the best ways to get them started along this line is to hold a union meeting for the whole community.

Knob Creek.—We started our meeting on Wednesday after the 1st Sunday in August and on the 2nd Sunday (Aug. 9th) I had four appointments. I went to Laurel Hill and preached and came back to Knob Creek to preach at 11.30 and when I walked in the church, whom should I find standing up talking on the Sunday school but Rev. N. G. Bethea, I was shocked, and yet delighted. He was so kind that he preached for me that morning and brought a splendid message, and came back Thursday and preached in the afternoon. We closed the meeting Friday night, took 13 in church. Some went to other churches.

Friendship.—On third Sunday we started our meeting at this place. The people were ready for a meeting and we had a good one.

Old time praising God and sinners were truly born again at the altar. One man seventy years old made a profession and joined the church, and some of his boys from 30 to 50 years old. We don't know how many professions there were but we took 38 into church and have three more to take in Sunday (Sept. 3rd Sunday). This will make 43 we have taken in at Friendship this year. Last year on the whole work we took in 137 members and I think probably we will about come up to that again this year.

Yours for the Master,

J. M. Morgan.

Littleton Circuit.—Our meeting started at Vaughn the third unday night in July. Rev.

C. L. Spencer came to us on Monday night and did the preaching. Brother Spencer's preaching was very good and the meeting was well attended and we believe good was done, but we had no accessions.

The second Sunday in August we began our meeting at Hawkins Chapel. Rev. A. G. Dixon, D. D., was with us for 11 o'clock service and preached for us a very impressive sermon. Rev. M. P. Chambliss, our engaged help, came to us for afternoon service and did the preaching until we closed on Thursday night. Brother Chambliss's preaching was well received. There were some conversions and reclamations, but no addition. Two or three ought to join but did not, but may yet.

The third Sunday in August we were at Weaver's Chapel. Rev. F. W. Paschall came to us on Monday and preached for us until Thursday night. Brother Paschall preached well and we had a good meeting. Seven joined the church.

The first Sunday in September we began our meeting at Corinth church. Brother R. C. Stubbins, our promised help, was with us from the beginning and did the preaching until Thursday afternoon when we closed. Brother Stubbins's preaching was enjoyed by everybody. We had an old-time-like Methodist meeting. Two services a day with dinner on the ground. Congregations were good and everybody seemed to be happy. It was good to be there. God's presence was there and we had a good meeting. Four joined the church.

Brother W. M. Hockaday is the delegate-elect to represent this circuit at High Point conference. We are now closing our fourth year with this people. We have enjoyed serving this work. We have found some good loyal people here. We haven't gotten done by a great deal all we would like to have done, and we are not altogether satisfied with results, but we have to accept the same and move on and pray more and try harder.

At this writing finances are behind. It is to be hoped that they will come up in the wind-up of the year's program. J. B. O'Briant.

Shiloh.—Our Sunday school Sept. 20th was not so large, only 35 present. Regardless of small crowds we have interest.

Number of chapters read the past week, 350. Collection, $1.13. Officers and teachers present 5. Scholars present, 30.

Rev. Raymond Gertner said he would send us a new preacher next Sunday, Sept. 27. We are looking forward to his promise with great interest.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

SAMSON BUNTON
Samson Bunton was born February 22, 1844; he departed this life August 31, 1925. His age is 81 years, six months, and 9 days.

Bro. Bunton was born in Chatham county, and with the exception of about eight years his entire earthly life was spent in the county of his birth. At the outbreak of the civil war he was but a stripling of a boy, only seventeen years of age; but even thus early in life he had acquired a trade—that of shoe making—and when the war came on he made shoes for the Federal government for two years. This service, no doubt, would have kept him out of the army, but he requested to be released that he might take his place as a private in the ranks. He enlisted in Company F, 53 regiment, and remained in the conflict until the close of the war. Three of his comrades of those trying days were present at his funeral.

Shortly after the close of the war the deceased was married to Miss Elizabeth Johnson. The exact date of their marriage is December 1, 1867. This happy union was blessed with nine children—eight daughters and one son. Two daughters, Mrs. C. S. Crutchfield, and Mrs. Charles J. Webster preceded the father to the spirit world some fifteen years. Besides the surviving widow, there are seven living children, as follows: Mrs. H. G. Harris, Siler City; Mrs. C. W. Petty, Mrs. C. C. Durham, Mrs. W. H. Buckner, Miss Rachel Bunton, all of Burlington; and Mrs. W. I. Isley of Greensboro.

The religious life of the deceased began in 1890, when he confessed faith in Christ as his personal Saviour, and united with the church at Siler City. When he removed his family to Burlington, about eight years ago, his membership was transferred to the Burlington church, where it remained till his death.

Bro. Bunton was a good man. His attendance upon the church services was regular, and always he manifested an earnest interest in spiritual things. He was an obliging neighbor, a devoted husband, and an affectionate father. At different times during the illness of which he died he spoke assuringly of his future. As we watched him breathe his life away we were comforted in the assurance that he was ready to go.

The funeral service was held at the home on Maple Street, and was conducted by the writer. The body was laid to rest in Belmont cemetery, under a covering of flowers, to await the glory of the resurrection morn.

To the aged and afflicted widow, and other members of the family and relatives, we extend our heart-felt sympathy, and pray for them the comforting presence of the Holy Spirit.

S. W. Taylor.

—Mr. W. S. Bennet, father of Bro. Geo. Bennet of the Burlington church, died almost suddenly Saturday night, Sept. 12. The funeral service was held on Sunday at Berea Christian church, interment followed in the church burying ground. The service was held here because of convenience to the burying ground.

For many years Bro. Bennet was a faithful member of Fairview Methodist Protestant Church.

Ferree.

Civil Harrelson Ferree, was born in Marion Co., S. C., April, 20, 1863, departed this life Sept. 4, 1925. She was the widow of the late James S. Ferree. To this union were born nine children. The husband and one child preceded her to the great beyond, six sons and two daughters survive, namely, James E. Ferree of Ritzville, Washington, G. B. and E. L. Ferree, and Maud Ferree Brown, of Asheboro, N. C., Mabel Ferree Hinshaw, of Randleman, N. C., Eugene Ferree of South America, Marvin and Stanton Ferree of High Point, N. C. With these children there are a number of grandchildren, and a host of friends and relatives, to mourn her departure. But God knows best, and we must be submissive to His will. Her suffering was great, but loving hands did all they could to relieve the pain, and she fell asleep in Jesus. She professed faith in Christ at an early age, and joined the M. P. Church at Brower, and lived a consistent member till death. On Sept. 6th her funeral was conducted by the writer, in the presence of a large gathering of people. The grand daughters acted as flower bearers, and the grandsons pall bearers. Then her body was gently laid to rest beneath the beautiful bowers, in Brower Cemetery to await the resurrection morn. May our Heavenly Father comfort all the bereaved ones in this sad hour.

By her Pastor, C. H. Hill.

Mrs. W. A. Bowman.

Mrs. W. A. Bowman, one of Guilford county's best loved women, and wife of Mr. W. A. Bowman, who for several years represented Guilford county in the State Legislature, and prominent farmer in southeastern Guilford, died March 23, 1925, in a hospital in Greensboro. With only her husband, one sister and a few other close relatives gathered at the bedside, she peacefully slipped away, just as the sun was casting its early glow across the eastern hills, as though providence timed the passing of this saintly soul: The rising sun certainly gave at least a picture of what transpires as one who trusts in Jesus Christ as she did, passes into the celestial morning of a brighter day. Her sun is now rising, not setting, her day just beginning, not ending, her life just started, not done. She gave abundant evidence of this only a day or two before she took her departure. She often expressed her willingness to go, saying that Jesus could make a dying bed soft as downy pillows are, and would sing: "I'll soon be at home over there, for the end of my journey I see,

Many dear to my heart, over there, are watching and waiting for me."

Then, too just as Mrs. Bowman was crossing the valley, a little bird perched on a limb near the window sang so sweetly, as though accompanying the music that must have thrilled her soul as she entered that land of perfect music and heard the angels playing on their harps of gold.

Mrs. Bowman was a woman of lovely character, unassuming in her manners, kind to all, and loved by all. She was a leader in her community and in her church, and always stood for the betterment of the social condition in her county. Though her body be dead she still lives in the hearts of those who knew her.

For several years she was a patient sufferer, as grim disease laid his unrelenting hand on her many years ago, and during all these years of suffering, she concealed her suffering as much as it was possible and strived to live for others, and the happiness of her family.

Before her marriage she was Miss Martha E. (Bettie) Greeson daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Rankin Greeson, of Climax, N. C., who only about two years ago preceded her to the spirit world. She was married to Mr. Bowman August 1, 1888, and had been a helpmate worthy of the name. To this union three children were born.

Mrs. Bowman is survived by her husband, Mr. W. A. Bowman, two sons, Roy L. and T. Grady Bowman of Liberty, N. C., one daughter, Mrs. George Sockwell of Burlington, N. C., one brother, Mr. John T. Greeson of Climax, N. C., three sisters, Mrs. J. H. Bowman of Liberty, N. C., Mrs. W. Charles Kirkman of Pleasant Garden, N. C., and Mrs. D. A. Neese of High Point, N. C. All these have our heartfelt sympathy, and especially do our hearts go out to the husband and children, those who feel the loss greatest.

Interment was at Pleasant Union Methodist Protestant church, where early in life she consecrated herself to Jesus Christ, and united with the church. The floral offerings were many and beautiful, attesting the high esteem in which her many friends held her. Funeral was conducted by Dr. T. M. Johnson, of Mebane, assisted by Rev. G. F. Millaway, Rev. J. A. Burgess, Rev. J. R. Hutton, Rev. L. W. Gerringer, there being several other ministers present.

She was a faithful and consecrated member of her church until she was called home, always giving in unstinted measure the very best service she was capable of rendering. Truly she will be missed in her church, in her home, and in her community, but all have the blessed consolation that our loss is her eternal gain.

Walker.

Mrs. Daisy Harper Walker died in her home near Littleton, N. C., August 30, 1925. She was 24 years of age. She joined Corinth M. P. Church while yet a girl, and so far as we know lived a consistent Christian life.

Her husband who at this writing is in Roanoke Rapids Hospital, and her mother, two brothers and five sisters survive her. Funeral was held at Corinth Church Aug. 31, and body placed in the church burying ground. The bereaved family have the sympathy of the church and community.

J. B. O'Brient.

Balmer.

Mr. James B. Balmer, an aged citizen of Northampton Co., N. C., passed away August 26, 1925, at his home near Garysburg, N. C. He testified of his acceptance of Christ before he died.

He was about 80 years of age. He leaves several children to mourn their loss. His remains were deposited in the old Powell burying ground. Funeral was held from the home by the writer.

J. B. O'Brient.

Rev. W. C. Kennett.

On August 19th, Rev. William Calvin Kennett passed from labor to reward. Brother Kennett was born Feb. 20, 1835. He was ninety years old last February. As far as the writer knows he lived to be the oldest of any of our Methodist Protestant ministers. For about sixty years he preached the gospel of love to a lost world. Not only did he preach it but he lived it. For about twenty years he had been superannuated. But that does not mean that he was inactive. He continued to preach whenever and wherever opportunity afforded. He took an active interest as far as his failing strength would permit in the building of the new Calvary Church in South Greensboro. His membership has been transferred to this church.

Bro. Kennett was naturally of a hopeful, cheerful disposition. His benignant spirit was often felt in the sessions of our annual conference as well as in the pastorates that he served. I have not had the privilege of knowing a finer Christian gentleman than Brother W. C. Kennett, or "Uncle Billy," as many affectionately knew him. For months before his death he was confined to his room but did not take his bed until just a few hours before he went home. To the last he retained his interest in the church and the gospel ministry. He would sometimes tell me when I visited him that he would like to preach again, and he enjoyed hearing the old gospel hymns. We cannot say we are sorry he has gone, for we know he is enjoying a well earned rest. May his memory influence us to emulate his life of loving service for the Master and to mankind.

Sister Kennett, who nursed him so tenderly, and all sorrowing loved ones have our sympathy and prayers.

The funeral service was conducted by Rev. W. F. Ashburn, assisted by Revs. Murphy Williams, A. G. Dixon, J. A. Burgess, and the pastor. He was buried in the Tabernacle cemetery.

A more complete obituary will be prepared by a special committee appointed by the President of the annual conference.

L. W. Gerringer, Pastor.

Charles M. Isley, born Dec. 25, 1871, died June 21, 1925.

He was married to Hattie Blaylock August 16, 1902. To this union was born one son, Rev. C. G. Isley, who is the present pastor of Fairview charge.

Bro. Isley professed faith in Christ at the age of 15, and joined Friendship M. P. church where he remained a faithful member until he was called home.

He served his church as class leader and Sunday school superintendent for a number of years, and he was also a teacher in the Sunday school.

In the death of Bro. Isley, Friendship church has lost one of its most faithful and active members. His life was a blessing to the community, for he lived those principles for which Christianity stands. He is now reaping the reward of a faithful steward. The influence of his life will live on.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by other ministers present. The large congregation of sympathetic friends

EDUCATORS WORK FOR PEACE.

The yearly convention of the World Federation of Education Associations was held in Edinburgh, Scotland, July 20-27. One hundred and eighty American delegates attended and Augustus O. Thomas, Superintendent of Public Schools of Maine, was re-elected president. The federation was founded in 1923 at the annual meeting of the National Education Association, held in San Francisco. Its purpose is to bring about a better understanding among the nations of the world by means of education.

The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey adopted the eight-hour day for its employees, beginning in July. In the past that company has had a twelve-hour day.

Nearly 4,000 miles by automobile without a stop! That is the record set by Lieutenant Leigh Wade, one of the world-flight Army aviators, and his companion, Linton Wells. Their route was across the continent, from Los Angeles to New York, and they made the trip in 15 hours 50 minutes, traveling 3,965 miles. When their supply of gas ran low they drove very slowly, (but never stopped) past gasoline stations while friendly helpers refilled the tank.

ment yesterday afternoon. At this service Mr. Suits administered communion to the largest number that have yet communed at Pine Grove during his pastorate. A bright young girl, Miss Mamie Hull, was also received into the church which makes eight new members to join recently.

At a call quarterly conference held at Kernersville church last Saturday night the following motion was made and carried: That this quarterly conference authorize the board of trustees of Kernersville circuit to get prices on any lots available for a parsonage in Kernersville or elsewhere, also get bids or offers on the present parsonage property, and report same to the fourth quarterly conference for such action as the conference may desire to take.

One of our members, Mr. Homer Watson, is a patient in Dr. Long's Hospital in Greensboro. Homer had the misfortune to break his back as a result of a fall several weeks ago. He was such a bright, energetic promising young man. May we earnestly pray for his recovery.

Misses Blanche Ingram and Trevah Benson have entered High Point college, and Miss Bessie Cooke is at Guilford College. They will be greatly missed, yet we rejoice in the fact that they are taking advantage of the opportunities to better fit themselves to serve.

Miss Sallie Barrow and the reporter motored over to High Point this afternoon, stopping at our Children's Home and college.

Sunday school seems to be increasing in interest and number. Finances are quite slow, in fact, it is alarming how far behind we are and how near it is to annual conference.

METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD.

J. F. McCulloch, Editor and Publisher.

Published weekly in the interest of the Methodist Protestant Church as an organ of the North Carolina Annual Conference. Price—$1.50 a year, payable in advance. Papers are discontinued on expiration of the term of subscription. However, subscribers who request it will be marked on our books as "regular," their subscription to be continued and payment to be made us near the beginning of the year as convenient. Subscribers can remit directly or send their money to pastors who act as our agents in the field. We are changing the name of the paper to the Methodist Protestant. In renewing, give the same notice as before. We cannot often supply back numbers. We acknowledge receipt of money on subscription accounts by changing the date on the label. If the date is not changed within two weeks after your money is received, write us. Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Greensboro, N. C.

NOTICE TO PASTORS.

At this writing—Sep. 25th—sixty-two pastors have returned Delegates' Credential Cards. That leaves twenty-two charges to be heard from. I suppose I shall have to begin fussing at these preachers for not sending in the return postal cards with the information. I am disposed to be lenient. Some, perhaps, failed to get the cards. Others may not have held their third quarterly conferences yet. But those pastors who failed to get cards can give me the information anyhow. I can wait a while for the other who have not yet elected delegates.

But what shall be said for the brethren who through carelessness, indifference, or other reason, have failed to do what they are asked to do? It is a very simple request, by the use of the return postal card made doubly simple. Why can't the brethren help us, and not hold up our work until conference is upon us? I say as advisedly. The president cannot make out the list of committees until I can furnish him with the names of the delegates. Dr. Brown and his entertainment committee is waiting for a copy of the list before making assignments to homes. I cannot get my roll ready for conference until the cards are in. "Immediately after the third quarterly conference the pastor shall certify to the Secretary of the annual conference the name of the representative elect." Come on, brethren, do what the law directs, and oblige "us."

C. W. Bates, Secretary.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Board of Home Missions, very much to their surprise and regret, was presented on September 1st with the resignation of the Executive Secretary, Rev. Charles H. Beck, D. D., who filled the office so satisfactorily for the last fifteen years. He had been asked to take the pastorate of our Tiffin church and felt it to be his duty to accept.

The Board immediately proceeded to fill the place, but its efforts, for one reason or another, have been unsuccessful in securing a man that would meet the requirements of the situation. At last the Board determined that the best interests of the work and the least disturbance to existing arrangements in the Church warranted them in calling upon Rev. J. M. Sheridan, D. D., of the Maryland Conference, to fill the vacancy until the next meeting of the General Conference.

They, therefore, united in a unanimous election of Dr. Sheridan to the position. He has been a member of the Board twenty-five years, and for the last eight years has been Superintendent of the Board of Church Extension of the Maryland Conference. No man in our denomination is better fitted by knowledge and experience for this work. He is not what we sometimes call "in the prime of life;" but he is in vigorous health and has been in continuous and active charge of interests as complicated and taxing as the new duties he will have in the new office. Of course he was in no sense a candidate for the position, and was only induced to take it by the unanimous urgency of the members of the Board. He will devote his entire time to the new office and the Board is convinced that it is a fortunate Providence that a man so well equipped is available.

This statement is made by order of the Board and it bespeaks for the new Executive Secretary the active co-operation of all Methodist Protestants, and their prayers for the continued success of the work thus committed to his charge.

H. A. Sicker, President
Board of Home Missions.

—The resignation of Dr. Beck as Secretary of the Board of Home Missions was ground for anxiety regarding the work of the Board, but the selection of Dr. Sheridan as his successor brings relief. Our best wishes to both these good brethren in the new work undertaken.

—We congratulate our Fountain Place brethren of Burlington on the completion of Sunday school rooms as reported by Pastor Hendry elsewhere. No doubt the opening service next Sunday will attract a house-filling congregation, with Dr. Lewis as preacher.

—Thirty persons from many parts of the United States have been ordered to appear before a Federal District Court in Pennsylvania, in October. They are charged with defacing monuments on the Gettysburg Battlefield. Most of them are said to have written or scratched their names on a bronze memorial tablet on Little Round Top. If they are found guilty they may have to pay fines of from $10 to $1,000, or serve terms in jail as the Court decides.

Fountain Place, Burlington.—Sunday, October 4th, the New Fountain Place Sunday school building will be formally opened with appropriate exercises at 11 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. Rev. T. H. Lewis D. D., LL. D., President General Conference, will preach at both services. We are sorry that the Rev. A. G. Dixon, D. D., our Conference President, cannot be with us on the account of pressure of engagements otherwise made.

A cordial invitation is hereby extended to all our brethren and friends to attend. The building, we think, will reflect credit to our cause here. It is two full stories with basement under the entire building. Will have room to care for from four to five hundred in our bible school and besides this the basement is being fitted out for social purposes. The cost is about $15,000.

A more complete description will appear following the opening of the building.

Sincerely,

G. H. Hendry.

RALLY DAY.

Have You Ordered Your Rally Day Services?

"If Not, Why Not Do So To Day?"

Rally day affords a splendid opportunity for the Church to enlist the people of the community in its fall and winter program. Vacation season is over, the children are now in school, and both young and old should be active in the church.

An excellent program has been prepared and will be furnished free to all our churches desiring it.

Rally day is one of the special days designated by the General Conference and should be observed by every church. First for the good it may do the local church and secondly for the financial assistance it will give the denominational program. A large part of the General Conference benevolence may be raised at this time if rally day is properly observed.

The money is needed to carry on the work of your denomination. Shall it suffer from a lack of co-operation on the part of each church?

This is one channel through which you can express your devotion to Christ and the church of your choice. From the number of orders being received, we feel the church is responding nicely but it should be one hundred percent. This includes every one. We are depending on you. Why not embrace this opportunity of helping your church and the denomination as well. E. A. Sexsmith.

PREACHING AND PRAYER-MEETINGS.

Rev. Raymond Huse.

So the major task of a preacher is no longer preaching! This seems to be the conclusion reached from the returns of several ecclesiastical questionnaires which have been featured in the church papers of late.

Pastoral work, it is true, still occupies a position of primary importance, but there is an unmistakable tendency in the returns received, and especially in the interpretation of those returns, to conclude that the greatest task of the modern minister is to function as general organizer and director of religious education in his parish.

The writer of this gentle protest has long insisted upon the supreme importance of sane, sensible, spiritual work in constructive religious education by every pastor and every parish. There is no substitute for it if we are to build to last until all the carpentry of time is past.

However, because we are giving some belated recognition to Ezra does not mean that we can dispense with Amos and Isaiah. We have not yet outlived the need of the prophets. The Christian preacher, the spiritual heir of a noble company who paved the way for the coming of the Christ, made possible the Christian church and the Christian school. Those men with a message—silver-tongued and golden-mouthed they were!—turned the world upside down and right side up. And we need them still. Without that inspiration which comes from the glowing words of a man sent from God in the pulpit, all our carefully planned schemes for teacher training and child training will shrivel up like thistle-down.

There is nothing that will upset the efficiency of our whole educational system like poor preaching. If a minister feels that his preaching is a secondary matter, he will not give it the first place in his time and study and sweat of brain and soul. The result will be the lost radiance of the Christian pulpit.

It is, of course, practicably impossible for a pastor to arrange in pigeonholes according to their relative importance the various tasks that are his. There are so many things he must do well if he would be a good minister of Jesus Christ. But somehow I cannot escape the conviction that I was first of all called to preach. I realize that good preaching must be accompanied by diligent, sympathetic, sacrificial pastoral work to be effective and to continue good. Moreover, if we would make disciples we must surely be apt to teach and to organize and direct. But personally, if it were necessary—which, thank God, it is not—I should choose to leave all these other things undone rather than to stand before a wistful people in God's house on God's day without a message into which I had put my best in time and thought and prayer and life. If that be treason, make the most of it.

The second surprising revelation from the questionnaires is the diminishing emphasis on the prayer-meeting. It occupies a comparatively subordinate place in the list of things the modern minister considers important. We may frankly admit that the prayer-meeting is no longer largely attended or supported. It constitutes one of our most difficult pastoral problems. The average minister comes to the week-night service with secret dread. Will even the faithful few be there? Moreover, we may admit with equal frankness that some of the finest and most Christlike of our modern laymen do not seem to find this service a means of grace.

But granting all that, shall we let it go? Shall we say that by a majority vote of those who stay away, this service will be discontinued? Very consistency from the standpoint of religious education should save us from doing this. Education is complete only when it fruits in expression. It is true the noble Christian deed is also the finest Christian expression, but it is also good pedagogy and sound psychology to emphasize the spoken word. Christian testimony is not an outgrown and outworn antiquity but a normal expression of Christian purpose and life and love.

If the pray-meeting goes, what is to take its place? Where else shall our laymen find the inner glow that is the natural reaction from Christian expression? A cold blooded system of lofty ethics is not Christianity, and especially it is not Methodism. We need to emphasize the prayer-meeting. It belongs still near the head of the list. Let us put it there. Let us keep it there.—Zion's Herald.

EVIDENCES OF THE TRINITY.

The doctrine of the Trinity is one which is derived from the Holy Scriptures. It is not the outworkings of the human intellect. It is a truth which has come to us through Revelation. In fact, it would be impossible for the human intellect or understanding to discover it. It is true that there have been philosophical arguments to prove the Trinity, but they are not the initiators of the truth. They did not discover the same and make it known. The truth was known and then philosophy afterwards sought to prove the rationalism of the same.

The Trinity transcends the power of the human intellect. It is the truth of the inner Godhead. It sets forth who God is. The creature cannot reveal that. That alone can be revealed by the Infinite, by God Himself, moved by His love for mankind. No matter how long you may try to reason about it, you can never grasp it with your intellect. And why should you expect to be able to understand it? You are dealing with God, not with mere man. The very fact that he is God should at once cause us to realize that He is infinitely above us, and beyond our understanding. If we could understand the nature of God, He no longer would be God. He would then be on our own level, or even below it. God must be above and beyond us to be God. God has been gracious to us and has condescended to tell us about Himself and His Being. We are like children in the kindergarden. We must have a teacher who tells us things which we ourselves do not know or could not find out. Even so God has done for us. He has told about Himself. He has told us of the Trinity of His Being.

This is a truth which we accept by faith. It is mystery. A mystery is not something which is impossible, contradictory to good sense and reason, or contrary to the established order of things, but just something which is beyond our understandings. It is too deep for us. It must be revealed to us. It is part of the university post-graduate course, and we are only in the kindergarten stage of knowledge.

There are many mysteries, not only in religion. Faith needs to be exercised not only in religion but in every sphere of life. We must accept things which we do not understand not only in religion, but in the simplest and commonest experiences of every day life. There are hundreds of mysteries in the physical universe. Once in a while some one finds fault with religion because, as he says, there are too many things which must be taken for granted, too many things which you cannot understand and which you are told you must take on faith. Of course, there are many such things.

But there are just as many, and perhaps more, in your every day life. Can you explain how that piece of bread which you ate at your last meal is digested and assimilated and goes to make the various parts of the body, the hair, the skin, the bone, the muscle, the blood, etc.? Of course you cannot, nor can anyone. It is a mystery. You must eat your bread on faith.

Take a hundred small flower seeds. They look absolutely alike. You may place them under a microscope. You can tell no difference among them. You may crush them and they are alike. Plant them in the same soil. The same sun, the same rain, the same heat will come upon them. When they spring forth you can tell no difference among them. They look alike. But when they bloom and flower, how is it that some are red, some white, some purple, some blue and other colors. Why and how is that? Do you know? Of course you do not, nor does any one else know. It is a mystery. We come into being, into life in a mystery, and we go out of life in a mystery. Birth and death are mysteries, mysteries, but absolutely real, and all along life we are surrounded with mysteries. In mysteries we live, move and have our being. So then, the fact that the Trinity is a mystery should not trouble us. We would expect it to be a mystery! If it were not a mystery, we should rightly be suspicious of the truth.

There is nothing else like the Trinity in all the universe. And that is what we should also expect. It is the truth of God's being and nature. And He is alone in all the universe. There is none or nothing like unto Him. He is unique and stands alone. Therefore, the doctrine of Him is also unique. It all fits together. Everything is consistent.—Dr. H. C. Roehmet.

FAITH.

Ellen Beach Yaw Cannon.

Take me as a little child, I pray Thee;
Fold me in Thy all-protecting wings;
There, in perfect union with Thy spirit,
Do I feel the peace faith ever brings.
No more through the vale of doubt I wander
Seeking after gods to Thee unknown,
Finding them but fleeting human shadows;
All my faith is turned to Thee alone.
Now revealed in Thine own perfect likeness
By Thy true reflected light I see;
So with love and gratitude—full measure—
I in faith reflect but good from Thee.

GOD'S METHOD IN CREATION.

The Theistic evolutionist says that God's method in creation was evolution. This sounds plausible until one stops to think. When one thinks he sees at once that the statement is a mere assumption. Evidence is wholly wanting. No man was present when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy. A non-existent, or an absentee being cannot be a witness. Man was not there. No scientist had come on the scene. "Where wast thou," said Jehovah to Job, "when I laid the foundations of the earth?" Of course Job, nor any other person was present. Later, when God began the work of fitting the earth with vegetation and living creatures, man was still absent—could not be a witness. When vegetation and the living creature appeared, man was still absent—no witness. And when man did arrive on the scene, he himself, of course, and within himself, was no competent witness as to the method of his arrival. He was conscious of being on the scene, as one is conscious of being awake, after sleep. But as to how he arrived there could be no possible way of knowing but through revelation. Jehovah, the Creator, alone could reveal this, and no doubt did. If this was not revealed to the first man, it has been revealed to his posterity, by implication and direct statement. As to the real modus operandi that is not explained, any more so than that of the New Birth. Perhaps it cannot be explained to the comprehension of finite beings. Hence it becomes a matter of faith. "By faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God," hence, "He spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast." "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth." God said, Let there be light: and there was light. "God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness."—Paul.

These, and similar statements of the Word, name Jehovah's creative act as a word, a speaking, a commanding, something utterly foreign to evolution. Evolution is the "unrolling" or "unrolling" (from Latin, evoluta, an unrolling) of something already in existence; while creation is a bringing in to being, or existence, something that did not exist previously. The difference in the two acts is as great as any difference possibly can be. The difference between the finite and the infinite. Man can evolve but God only can create. The method, then, is utterly incomprehensible to finite beings. We know it cannot be evolution, for this is an utter contradiction in terms. But we do know it to be miracle, whatever that is. But miracle is utterly beyond the finite, toathom, or comprehend. It is a matter of faith, alone not a matter of comprehension, it's a method of Divine procedure utterly incomprehensible.

Jesus said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Not that the Father and Son are identical persons, but that they are identical in nature, in all that constitutes Divinity. Jesus being the "image of the invisible God." "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." So when the people saw Jesus perform a miracle, his method, if it can be called a method, was the method of the Father, the method of the Divine. There was no simblance of evolution about it. The work in nearly every instance was absolutely instantaneous. A touch, a word, and the work was done. As to the how, nobody knows. Perhaps nobody ever will know. The power that quickens a dead soul into life, or raises the dead—a Lazarus, or a young man of Nain. That speaks a word, and the tempestuous sea is still—"a great calm." That makes wine of water. That creates bread and fish in the wilderness—it could be nothing but an act of absolute creation—that speaks to devils and they obey—"come out." That speaks or touches, and the sick is well—whole—the lame walk, the deaf hear, the blind see. So we see the method of Jesus when upon earth—miracle—was his method in creation. "All things were made by him"—Jesus. And as he works, as to method, so does the Father, for "he and the Father are one."

So "he spake and it was done," in his humiliation and incarnation. The method is identical—miracle. The method of the unchangeable God, "the same yesterday, and to day, and forever." Be so in the resurrection. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God," and we shall be "changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." God's method—miracle, not evolution. So whenever a man contends that evolution was God's method in creation, and that this harmonizes with the Bible, it shows that he is deficient in knowledge of the Bible, or else it shows a kink in his brain somewhere. The Bible nowhere says that evolution was the method, but that speaking, or commanding, was, whatever that means. And we know what that meant when Jesus spoke. It did not mean "evolve." But it carried the same meaning as when men spoke, save the Divine power that accompanied the word. Whenever "speak" means the same as "evolve," then the wily word-juggling evolutionist will have gained his point, and not before. Paul speaks of those who "changed the truth of God into a lie;" and when the evolutionist changes "create" into "evolve," he is doing the identical thing of which the Apostle Paul speaks. For "create" means to bring into existence something that did not previously exist; while "evolution" means to "evolve," or unroll, something already in existence.

If we adopt the theistic evolutionist's method of interpretation of the Bible we have no "sure word of prophecy" any longer. All the cranks, fanatics, paranoiacs, and skeptics can make it mean just anything that suits their whims. The old-line apostles of evolution had mental penetration sufficient to see, and the courage to affirm, that evolution and the Bible were contrary the one to the other. It's the modern up-to-date Theistic evolutionist that has the hardihood to affirm that evolution was God's method in creation, that it harmonizes with the Bible, and this he affirms without one iota of proof, and in the face of all the indubitable Bible proof to the contrary. Showing that he does not accept the Bible as authority, but what he calls science has first place, though it be an "unproved hypothesis." It is not sufficient to say that "the Bible is not a book of science," a kind of camouflage that "covers a multitude of sins" of unbelief. While all will admit that the Bible is not a formal treatise on science; but to say that it is contrary to true science is to say that it is an uninspired book, or that God knows less than man—does not know his own physical universe which he has created, nor how he created it, or else he could not, or would not, tell the truth. God, no doubt, has not revealed all the truth to us. While the Bible, primarily, is not a treatise on science, but whenever its words touch upon a subject involving, or embracing, what we call science, it speaks the truth so far as it goes. When we affirm otherwise we deny its inspiration, its Divine origin, its authority. And that is just what the so called Theistic evolutionist does. He talks very pious, professes great faith, and makes extravagant claims of being far in advance of all those who really believe the Bible. But denies the plain teaching of the Bible about creation. Not only of Genesis, but of the entire Bible, for no succeeding part of the Bible contradicts Genesis, but all references to the creation, succeeding Genesis, confirm the creation story, whether by prophet, Christ, or apostle. The Bible's unite on the creation question. So the Theistic evolutionist is forced to resort to all kinds of word-juggling, false, unsound methods of interpretation, and attributing an extreme literalism in interpretation to those who really believe the Bible, of which they are entirely innocent. This is unfair and unjust, showing these men to be wholly incompetent in the field of biblical exegesis, or else they are dishonest in their practice. In either case it is pernicious in its influence, and deserves a stern rebuke from all really honest, God-fearing persons.

We heard a Professor in an address say that God made the world, but that "we will leave it to the scientist as to how he did it." This was an evasion. He was an evolutionist and did not wish to come out in the open and show his attitude toward the bible. So far as this writer is concerned, he is not going to leave it to the scientist to determine how God made the world and all things therein. The scientist knows no more about it than this writer. He was not there as a witness. And he will never know any more than he knows today—nothing. I am willing to accept the testimony of the Creator himself, that it was not by evolution, but by miracle, whatever that is. "He spake and it was done; he commanded and it stood fast." The same as Jesus stilling the tempest, raising the dead, casting out devils by a word. As has already been said, it's a matter of faith, and not of comprehension. But faith is something the evolutionist does not possess. For he does not believe what God says about his own work. What he calls science is authority with him, and God's word is given a secondary place. He professes to be a seeker after truth, and professes to believe nothing he cannot understand. But he is inconsistent. He does not understand his own speculations, neither does anybody else. His difficulty is he has never fully accepted God's word as authority. He makes human reason, or opinion, supreme. I do not want such persons to teach my boy theology. I do not want such persons to teach the boy that is to preach to my children. It is "by faith we understand" these things, and these men do not have it, they themselves, being witness. For they confess they do not believe, save that which agrees with their own pagan speculation—for they are pagan, reaching back to the Greeks and Babylonians.

"The world by wisdom did not know God," in the days of Paul. Neither does it now, nor ever will, God is spiritually discerned, by faith. And his word is understood through faith. The person who approaches, or accepts, God's word with reservations, will never understand it. It becomes a stumbling-block, or foolishness to him. And for such a person to attempt to interpret and teach the book to others is a piece of brazen impertinence. But that is what these deluded men are presuming to do. Claiming that all their antiscriptural speculations are a help to faith. Of a piece with satan's, "Thou shalt not surely die." Shows its origin and nature to be satanic. Deceivers, "deceiving and being deceived." Blind leaders of the blind. "Fools and slow to believe all"—the Bible, and "wrest the scriptures" as some did in apostolic days "to their own destruction," and the destruction of others. A great deal that these men say looks plausible, like "Thou shalt not surely die," or, "If thou be the Son of God command that these stones be made bread." He was "more subtle than any beast of the field," and he is so still. "Transforming himself into an angel of light." And Paul says we need not wonder if his apostles do the same. They are doing the same. Professing to believe the Bible, but rejecting about everything in it that differentiates it from all other books.

In conclusion we will say that God's method in creation was miracle, like all other miracles mentioned in the Bible, except creation was on a larger scale. Dividing the sea and the Jordan. Raining manna in the wilderness for forty years for more than a million persons. Bringing water out of the rock in the wilderness. Raining fire and brimstone from a clear sky, on Sodom. Breaking up the fountains of the great deep and opening the flood-gates (margin) of heaven on the antediluvians. The ten plagues on Pharaoh, while Israel was preserved. But time would fail to mention all the miracles of both Testaments. But when he comes again, it will be miracle. He's a supernatural, miracle working God. He works on the natural plane through second causes. On the supernatural planes, directly, and incomprehensibly. Omnipotence and Omniscience at work. And he who denies is a fool. To say that it required millions or billions of years for God to create is a "whopper" of the varietal unbelief. As to when he did create, we have no means of knowing, as God has not revealed it unto us. It was in the beginning, but we do not know when the beginning was. But it did begin—"He spake and it was"—came into being at once—existed—not a process, but an act. This is the teaching of the book, and the evolutionist knows nothing about it. He denies, disbelieves, but proves nothing, and should be entirely ignored. There is nothing too hard for Jehovah. The evolutionist measures Jehovah by his own little measuring line, and says it can't be.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Davidson.

Wednesday, Sept. 23, was spent at Chapel Hill church, among the people of Davidson charge Bro. Ridge, the pastor, assisted by Rev. W. F. Ashburn, was in the midst of a splendid camp meeting. I enjoyed hearing Bro. Ashburn preach in his old-time zeal. Then I had the privilege of preaching to a large congregation in the afternoon. They heard the word gladly and were so responsive that it was easy to preach to them. The people are delighted with Bro. Ridge. I think they will pay his salary in full, and that they will do better on the budgets than they have ever done before.

Denton.

On the evening of the same day I preached in our church at Denton, Rev. O. C. Loy, pastor. There was not a large audience, but a delightful congregation to preach to. They were also very responsive to the word. These people love Bro. Loy and are responding to his leadership in the work. Bro. Loy is one of our ministerial students at the High Point college, and is doing splendid work in the pastorate in connection with his college work.

Lexington.

From Denton I drove to Lexington where wife was assisting Bro. Bethea in a meeting. I tarried there for two days. Some one else will report the meeting, so I shall just say,—That young church is doing fine under the pastorate of Bro. Bethea. They have already outgrown their room, and must soon have more room in which to work.

Rev. Geo. E. Hunt.

On my way from Lexington to Union Grove I passed the home of Bro. Hunt and stopped in to see him and his good wife. Bro. Hunt is very feeble, he being 86 years of age. He loves the brethren and wishes that he might get to Conference in High Point this fall to meet and greet them. But Mrs. Hunt tells that he has not walked without some one to assist him in nearly two years. It was pleasant to talk with him a while and to pray with him before leaving. He is just waiting the summons home. Brethren, pray for him and his.

Union Grove.

I will perhaps have a further word to say about Union Grove after I have been here for a part of this week. I am here today with Rev. W. T. Totten and his folks in the beginning of their revival. We have had a good time today, and everything seems favorable for a good meeting.

Appointments.

Oct. 3 and 4, Connelly Springs.
Oct. 7, Saxapahaw quarterly conference.
Oct. 9, Caroleen.
Oct. 10 and 11, Yarboroughs.
Oct. 12, Midland.
Oct. 13, At night, Lexington.
Oct. 17, Glen Raven quarterly conference.
Oct. 19, Thomasville.

Budgets.

Remember that the budgets are badly in need of help. I mean the causes represented in the budgets. Their needs are great and their funds are short. Five more weeks will tell the tale so far as our reports are concerned. Let us make them as good as possible. Remember also that the honor roll of charges will stand in the Journal in the manner in which they are now being published in the Herald. See that yours gets in to the paid in full column.

Conference Committees.

I shall try to announce the chairmen of conference committees next week.

Faithfully yours,

A. G. Dixon.

Not as many changes these two weeks as there are good contributions sent in. Bess Chapel, Orange and Glen Raven each went up fine in amounts but kept the same numbers. Mt. Hermon, Richland, Littleton, Why Not and Yarborough all made good gains. Saxapahaw held her own by sending in a contribution.

On the G. C. B. Tabernacle, Burlington and Mt. Hermon all advanced. Grace church, Greensboro though over the top already sent in the largest contribution of the two weeks.

Just five short weeks and the last report will have to be handed in. Suppose it should be the last of life's reports. Let us work and pay and pray as though it were.

A. G. Dixon.

WHY DO THE HEATHEN RAGE?"

The Psalmist in his day was interested in this question, and the answer he gave was that their rage was in vain, because the Lord held them in derision.

Those who have expressed their views about the Tennessee statute on evolution and the outcome of the Scopes' trial at Dayton, Tenn., are not exactly to be classed as heathen, except in the manner in which they have raged over its conduct and its result.

We quote from a Northern Methodist paper of the extreme radical type:

"Nothing in the history of this country since the persecution of witches in Salem has presented quite such a nauseating spectacle as the trial of John Thomas Scopes at Dayton, Tenn., for teaching the doctrine of evolution. Every thinking American citizen is hanging his head in shame these days over the display of loud-mouthed ignorance and unspeakable bigotry by the half-educated zealots of Tennessee."

We are confident that the thinking American citizen who reads this vituperative explosion will also hang his head in shame.

"The half-educated zealots of Tennessee" with "their loud-mouthed ignorance and unspeakable bigotry," will no doubt pursue the even tenor of their way, and still believe in the Bible, and insist upon their children being taught that God made man in His own image.

It does not impress us as honest the way in which intelligent editors, and equally intelligent ministers, seek to obscure the real issue in this famous trial.

They persistently insist that intellectual freedom was on trial. Whether a teacher should be forced to stifle his real convictions.

Every intelligent reader knows that the question at issue was nothing of the kind, and these men, being intelligent, must know it. It was simply whether the State, employing a teacher, had the same right as any private employer, the right to decide what that employee should teach.

If a man employs me to teach that the earth is flat, I must either teach that or else give up the work.

It is said that politics makes strange bed-fellows; but we know nothing stranger than the "bed-fellows" we find among the upholders of the right to teach this theory, forbidden by the State of Tennessee.

Scorning lawyers, pious preachers, raging editors of papers, both secular and religious, form a motley crew.

If a man be known by the company he keeps, the reputation of some of our intellectual preachers must suffer as they are "cheek by jowl" with the Chicago agnostic and the scoffing scientist from our state schools, and also from some of our church schools.—The Presbyterian Standard.

"IF EASY, IT IS WRONG."

A recent writer reports an interview with Thomas A. Edison, the great inventor, and quotes him as saying about the problems in science today, "If the answer is easy it's wrong."

This challenging statement has its application to all phases of life, and not least to morals and character. Too many people are looking for easy places, easy conquests, today. There are students who try to pick out studies that will give a sufficient number of credits for completion of the course without exacting too much time and study. There are men who despise the routine and hard work which make possible the understanding of a business, and who desire to achieve success in a few years by any short-cut method which opens. And there are other people—a few of them—who would like to have good moral character, be strong in the face of temptation, and live right, without conscious effort or any measurable sacrifice. Easy money, easy morals, easy masteries, these are the ideals of a multitude.

It is well for us to hear the axiom of the great scientist, "If the answer is easy, it's wrong." The world must listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, who said, "If any man would come after me, let him...take up his cross daily and follow me." It is at our peril that we ignore the costliness of character. We shall have to fight for it, live for it, die for it. It will require the severest discipline, all the resources we possess, all the aid which generous friends and a friendly Saviour can bring to us. And at the end we shall enter somewhat understandingly into the words of Paul, "I have fought the good fight!"—C. E. World.

Our Lord said: "Man cannot live by bread alone." No matter what some men say and how much they may seek to eliminate religion from human life, this thing stands true: Man to be his best must have an answer to the questions of the soul, What is this world, whence am I, what am I, whither am I going? These are deeply rooted in the religious life of the human race, whether found in the wild life of the Australian jungle or the halls of our most highly cultured institutions of learning. The religion Christ gave to the world came down from heaven, from the altitudes, from the clear light of eternity. It came not from the bogs and fens of human floundering. It has power to satisfy the spirit of man and to abide with him as a permanent value that can never be displaced. To accept him means to see the way open to light and life, to the dwelling place of God.—Ex.

WAIT A MINUTE.

The injured girl turned eyes dark with the fever of rebellion upon her friend who had come to console.

"I cannot see why," she said hopelessly. "I was so willing to work; I had my job; everything was going well, and it was work for human betterment. Then this check—this accident. And I must lie here for weeks, perhaps months. It almost makes me think there isn't any over-seeing Providence. Can you see any possible justice in it, any reason for it?"

"I don't know," began the visitor.

"Do you mean you can?" challenged the invalid.

"Of course, I don't mean that I can understand these mysterious things. But I can see a possible reason. No doubt there are other possibilities. Will you let me tell you a little story first?"

"This morning I called my little Ted to do a very urgent errand for me. I had to tear him away from the preparation for a show in the back yard. The other boys were shouting for him to hurry back.

"'Ted,' I said, 'I want you—'

"'Oh, mother,' he interrupted, 'you ought to see how Jimmy can walk the tightrope. And Bud's dog can do tricks.'

"'But, Ted, I want—'

"'And Frank has his granddad's bugle, and we can charge a penny for admission, and we need one more sheet for a tent—'

"Then I took Ted by the arm, and led him to a chair. 'Sit there without speaking till mother tells you,' I said sternly.

"What an astonished and grieved face he turned on me! He hadn't done anything wrong. He had been so busy and happy, and, of course, mother should have been interested in the show. I almost relented. But I knew Ted needed a lesson in heeding. So I let him sit for five long minutes.

"Then I said: 'Teddy, grandma has telephoned that Uncle George brought in a lot of maple sugar. You may take a basket and run down there, and she will give you some. I want to make a maple cake, and then you shall have some sugar for your show.'

Ted flew off the chair to give me a hug.

"'My, but I'm glad you made me sit still and listen,' he called back, as he ran on his errand.

"It's a homely little story. But you know one of our poets saw that the things of earth are 'patterns of the things of heaven.' Our dealings with the children often help us to see our Father's dealings with us. Don't you think that sometimes God may want you to sit still a while and listen? We are so busy with our own plan, and our own work; so sure that our way is the one right way; so eager to tell about it, that we do not listen to the Voice over us.

"We can not know for another person. Our accidents and illnesses are usually brought on by carelessness. But after happen, and we must lie still, I think we might improve the time by making it a period to 'sit and listen.' We may find that God has something to say to us."—Ex.

So high is grandeur to our dust,

So near is God to man,

When Duty whispers low, Thou must,

The Youth replies, I can.

ATTENTION, COMPANY!

In this day of great progress, when all right minded girls are striving to gain heights in usefulness in the world, it will not be amiss to ask yourselves if you are exercising what talent you possess for the lasting betterment of your fellowmen? It is conceded by all thinking men and women that a community, a state or nation is just what the mothers, wives, and sisters make it. Since this fact is so incontrovertibly established you should lose no time but strive with every God-given power you possess to mold your associates so they may be able to practise the cardinal virtues. First, reverence to God and parents; second, unselfishness, helpfulness, purity, honesty, sympathy, kindness, industry and frugality.

Divine Love created all human beings to be happy, and He has laid down a line of conduct in His word, that always brings joy and blessedness to His creatures. If we expect to amount to anything good in this life, we must train ourselves to be happy only in right living. We see young girls whose joy it is to minister to the comfort of every one with whom they come in contact. Others we see who are selfish, exacting, vain, disobedient, loud and boisterous. The latter class is never contented—impossible that they should be, for the wages of sin is always death to joy and happiness.

The first requisite in a blameless life is that we keep clean in person—in conversation, and in character. You were never more mistaken if you think you do not amount to anything that you have no influence, because you occupy a lowly position in society. The true-hearted girl that discharges her whole duty to her fellowmen, will just as surely gather her reward of praise and admiration, to say nothing of her final reward, as that the sun shines. Her lowly environment will add luster to her actions. But how infinitely sad is the opposite course. A girl who has every faculty for being a power for good will prostitute her glorious advantages and carry her associates with her in all the flowery paths of sin, to reap what? Joy and contentment? Nay, verily, but sorrow and remorse unutterable. Our brothers watch the actions of girls. Their very life, moral and spiritual, depends on the impression made on them by their female associates. How then can any woman, young or old, be guiltless when they carelessly and thoughtlessly let them see that they hold purity, honesty—every Christian grace—at a discount? Dear girls, it is time for us to clean house. Every good or evil thing comes from inside. Pretending will not do. Putting on a few nice airs for certain occasions will not answer. We must have the heart right or no good can be accomplished. Take two men in any community, one grows up to be a power for good. His honesty, purity and right-mindedness is proverbial. The other walks abroad in perfect physical manhood, and is a curse to everyone with whom he comes in contact. What is the cause of this state of things? The first one had a pure, clean christian mother and sisters who watched over his babyhood, his childhood, and boyhood to remove every hindrance to moral and spiritual growth. The other not only had his moral nature neglected but was actually trained to be over bearing, cruel, brutal, Godless. Everything wrong, nothing to induce him in one single instance to desire better things.

The saddest thing that ever cursed the sunlight of a redeemed world is a human being led in the ways of darkness and sin by his God-given guardians. Young ladies, it behooves us to watch every word, and action of our lives, that we stand not at God's bar and have the souls of our brothers and sons required at our hands. Ruth Fletcher.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Sing aloud unto God our strength. Make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob.—Psalms 81:1.

Church music is a subject that should be given more attention by many individuals, and churches. Therefore I want to bring before you this important subject, and notice some things that should enter into church music. For we believe the church has lost much by not giving the attention it should give to its singing. Music wields a strong influence either for good or bad according to its kind. Tradition tells us that Orpheus, the Greek musician, wielded a powerful influence over many things, with the violin. We are told that the beasts of the forest would come out and lie down near him while he made music. Also that by the power of his music he uprooted the trees of the forest. Then if music has such a great influence, is it not time for us to consider such an important subject, for the good of each singer and listener?

There are four things that should enter into church singing or religious singing, if you please. The first one is that of praises unto the Lord. Then that we should sing hymns of praise to our God and our Christ no reasonable person will question. Then let me ask you to examine the hymns you sing and see whether there be any praise in them; if there is none found, then let us not be found singing them. But rather let's be singing such praise hymns as:—

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all."

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow, Praise him all creatures here be low."

Such hymns as these wield a good influence over us who sing and over those who hear such Gospel singing.

The second thing that should enter into our singing is thanksgiving. If there is none in our singing, then let me ask you if you do not think you should sing a hymn of thanksgiving unto Christ and the heavenly Father for the many blessing which you receive from him each moment of your life. O! my friends, did not Moses and the children of Israel sing a song of thanksgiving that day they walked through the Red Sea on dryland? Friends, if our souls are not up lifted in thanksgiving by our singing then I believe we are losing something that would be gained by so doing. Then let me ask you if you please to examine your song and see whether there be any thanksgiving in it and if we find that there is none, let us look for those which have thanksgiving in them, then let us sing them with all the power of the soul.

The third thing that should enter into our singing is invoking the blessings of God up on us. Yea, let me say that our singing should embrace asking God to give us the needed things of life. Then why not let our singing be a prayer for his blessings upon us. "Break thou the bread of life to me, dear Lord, as thou didst break the loaves beside the sea."

The fourth thing that music should do is that of edifying. This will of course embrace many different things. A song that has something in it which will help us to love each other is good for church singing. One that makes us love Jehovah more is good for any person to sing. A song that aids our faith in God will be found to wield a good and great influence over the congregation. If our music fails to have the qualities mentioned a moment ago, then I say that our hymns are un-fit for church and religious service. O for music that will lift the soul of the congregation to a greater faith in God and the Redeemer of men. It matters not to me when a song was written, but it does matter whether or not it tickles the feet, or kindles within the heart a greater love for Christ our Lord. I believe in using the best in song and if there are any songs that beat—

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord, is laid for your faith in his excellent word."

"There is a fountain filled with blood drawn from Immanuel's veins, and sinners plunged beneath that flood lose all their guilty stains."

"Rock of ages, cleft for me, let me hide myself in thee, let the water and the blood from thy riven side which flowed be of sin a double cure, wash me and make me pure."

"My hope is built on nothing less than Jesus' blood and righteousness. I dare not trust the sweetest frame, But wholly lean on Jesus' name."

My faith looks up to thee,
Thou Lamb of Calvary,
Savior divine;

Now hear me while I pray:
Take all my guilt away:
O let me from this day
Be wholly thine."

I repeat, it matters not when a song was written, but it does matter whether it deepens the soul's devotion to the Almighty God. So, my brother and sister, let's make a careful examination and select the best in music. Let every thing that can sing sing a song of thanksgiving and praise unto the good shepherd of the soul.

CHRISTIAN VITALITY IN JAPAN.

Since our oldest and largest Mission is in Japan, the following is of interest to our people generally who wish to know of conditions and the progress of missionary work in the foremost nation of the Asiatic world.

It is from the latest issue of "World Dominion" published in London. "The leaven of the Kingdom is revealing its presence in Japan through all kinds of movements and tendencies.

Buddhists are being stimulated to a new social outlook. They are showing an increased interest in social welfare work: schools for the blind, orphanages welfare work in factories, research work and training for social service.

Students are studying Christian methods, and are eager to co-operate with Christians in any purely humanitarian work.

But in spite of a higher moral standard Buddhism is steadily losing ground as a spiritual force.

Throughout Japan there is to-day a spirit of accessibility. It is easy to gather an audience to listen to Christian teaching; there is a genuine longing to understand spiritual matters, and a great demand for the Bible.

The church in Japan is growing in strength and influence; the losses and sorrows caused by the earthquake have not quenched her vitality.

Remarking on the enormous loss of actual Church buildings, a Japanese Christian said to a friend: "But the congregation has rallied!" "Yes, indeed," said the other, "the Church of God cannot be destroyed by fire."

The Anglican Missions in Japan have consecrated the first two Japanese Bishops; one of them, Bishop Notoda, in a recent address, emphasized some of the outstanding spiritual needs of Tokyo: (a) the evangelization of the suburbs: "the population of Tokyo has been steadily moving towards the outskirts of the city, especially after the earthquake. The suburbs are largely residential quarters and not business centers. From the missionary point of view you can gather fruit more quickly and more abundantly in the suburbs than in the city."

(b) work among students, and the need of hostels. He points out that Tokyo "is a city of schools and students. Many of the students have difficulty in finding places to stay in."

From a purely evangelistic point of view, the hostel work is more effective than the school."

They Have Arrived.

The two beautiful banners made in Japan reached here last Tuesday, and will be admired by all, is taken for granted.

One is made of blue velvet embossed in heavy gold lettering, the Japanese characters, and decorated with gold embroidery.

The other one is made of heavy red silk, and is embroidered like the other.

Cherry cross sticks are at the top to which heavy gold cord is attached at the ends with which to suspend them, and heavy tassels are along the bottom of each and altogether make very unique banners.

They are to be awarded each year, one to the Sunday school giving the largest amount for Foreign Missions, and the other to the Sunday school giving the largest amount in proportion to membership.

These banners will be awarded yearly, and be retained one year by the schools to whom awarded. They will be awarded as soon as possible, and it is hoped the membership of the schools was reported when the Children's Day offering was sent to the conference treasurers.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

A brief commutation from Dr. Feeman informs us that the enrollment of regular college students is over 180, probably largest in the history of the school. There will be in addition many music students and a number of specials in other departments.

The science classes are overcrowded and the administration besieged with demands for assistant teachers and additional apparatus. Lack of funds is hindering Dr. Jones and Miss Sanders. Where are some good friends who will furnish two or three hundred dollars to strengthen this department?

Some articles in recent editions of our church papers are deserving of more than casual reading. The one by Dr. Humphreys, president of the Maryland Conference and of the Board of Education should be read by every parent in the denomination. The one by Dr. Forlines as an editorial in the Methodist Protestant is full of pointed fact. Recorder editorials have been most helpful in supporting and promoting the educational program of the denomination. Such contributions are bound to strengthen the educational conscience of the Methodist Protestant church.

The small college is gradually coming into its own. For years there has been a growing conviction that the work being done by the great universities was inadequate and often superficial. The classes with from one hundred to four or five hundred cannot be taught in any true sense of the word. The lecture method is necessary and that is the poorest possible way to try to teach. The smaller classes, ranging in size from a dozen to 50 students, gives an opportunity to do real teaching. These are the kind of classes found in the average church school. It is no wonder that those promoting the new Woodrow Wilson University in Georgia have determined to limit the student body to three hundred. They intend to have a school where real teaching is possible.

The orders for Rally Day programs continue to come in and the outlook is encouraging. We are not enough ahead, however, of those sent in last year to create any extravagant enthusiasm. That we are ahead is the significant fact and that gives hope that the offerings will be larger also. If the conferences would remember that their contributions to the denominational budget have much to do with the apportionments to the school of their area they might exert themselves a little more.

On September 25th the orders received were as follows:

Maryland, 104, Ohio, 60, Indiana, 37, North Carolina, 20, Michigan, 19, Eastern, 18 Pittsburgh, 18, Onondaga, 17, Kansas, 11, Illinois, 11, Missouri, 9, W. Virginia, 9, Iowa-Missouri, 9, Texas, 5, Colordax-Texas (Colored) 2, Arkansas, 2, South Carolina, 3, Kentucky, 2, Alabama, 2, Georgia, 1.

According to college areas the situation stands as follows. Adrian, 161, Western Maryland, 128, High Point, 26, Kansas City, 34, and Westminster College, 7. Making a total of 356 orders received to Friday September 25th.

Frank W. Stephenson.

Not Too Late Yet.

The usual time for the observance of rally day is the latter part of September or the fore part of October. However, there is no rule governing the day, the convenience of local church being the main consideration. Some churches observe the day as late as the middle of November, depending somewhat upon the time when their annual conference meets. Therefore, it is not too late yet to make full and adequate preparations for a successful rally day service. Send in your order now and it will be in your hands within a few days.

Is it right to let our educational institutions continue a starvation existence? Is it right to ask men like Drs. Elderdice, Feeman, Ward, Andrews, Phipps, and Jones to carry the heart-breaking burdens that the present situation compels? Methodist Protestant people have the means and the disposition to give if they are once made to feel the actual needs. They know the value of a Christian college in the programme of Kingdom building. They want their children educated under the influence of schools where Christian ideals are dominant. They are well aware that the very bulwark of civilization is the Christian element.

Rally day has been set apart by the General Conference as a time when the cause of Christian education may be considered. It is a time also when the church is asked to make contributions for the support of our educational institutions and endeavors. Is it right to ignore the will of our chief legislative body? Or is it wise to neglect a cause so important as training our young people for Christian leadership and service? Does not loyalty impel us to observe rally day? Please then give us your order for programs and then we will know you are doing your part. Send to

Frank W. Stephenson,
Secretary Board of Education.

WHO WROTE OUR HYMNS?

By Rev. H. H. Smith.

If any Christian lack breadth of spirit, let him study his Hymn Book and it shall be given him. Glance through any standard hymn book and you will be struck with the diversity of authorship of its hymns. "In the Cross of Christ I glory," was written by John Bowring, "an eminent English politician, statesman, foreign minister, and literary man;" "Jesus, the very thought of Thee," was composed by Bernard of Clairvaux, "an eminent monk;" Bernard Barton, known as "the Quaker poet," gave us "Lamp of our feet, whereby we trace;" Clement of Alexandria, a church father of the second century, wrote, "Shepherd of tender youth;" "Take the name of Jesus with you," was composed by a Baptist woman; the daughter of an English Dissenting minister wrote, "How blest the righteous when he dies;" John Henry Newman, High Churchman, and later a Roman Catholic cardinal, wrote, "Lead, kindly light;" John Bakewell, a Wesleyan class leader, gave us, "Hail, Thou once despised Jesus;" a German gave us, "Of Him who did salvation bring;" John Hay, secretary of State under president McKinley, wrote, "Defend us, Lord, from every ill;" an Italian monk wrote, "Near the Cross was Mary weeping;" Robert Grant, a layman, active in public and political life, wrote, "The starry firmament on high;" and five other hymns; Bishop

Ken, of the Church of England, is the author of the "long meter" doxology; Sir Walter Scott wrote "The day of wrath, that dreadful day;" Unitarian clergymen gave us "It came upon the midnight clear," and "God bless our native land;" Congregationalist clergymen are the authors of "My faith looks up to Thee," "Must Jesus bear the Cross alone?" and "Lead on, O King eternal;" the poet Tennyson gave us, "Strong Son of God, immortal Love;" Count Zinzendorf, "the apostle of the United Brethren," wrote, "Jesus, Thy blood and righteousness;" a Methodist layman wrote, "Come, let us tune our loftiest song;" a Lutheran pastor wrote, "My Jesus, as Thou wilt;" Thomas Moore, the noted Irish poet, wrote, "Come, ye disconsolate;" John Cennick, a Methodist preacher of the eighteenth century, wrote "Children of the heavenly king;" John Newton, "the child of many prayers, the profligate youth, the wicked sailor boy, the contrite penitent, the happy Christian, the consecrated minister, the eminent divine, the sweet singer," wrote, "Amazing grace! how sweet the sound," and twelve other hymns; Robert Robinson, a Baptist minister, wrote, "Come, Thou fount of every blessing;" Edward Perronet, an Independent English clergyman, and later a Methodist, is the author of "All hail the power of Jesus name;" John Milton wrote, "The Lord will come and not be slow;" George Matheson, an honored minister of the Church of Scotland, wrote, "O Love that will not let me go;" Martin Luther gave us, "A mighty fortress is our God;" Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden, wrote, "Fear not, O little flock!" Cowper, the poet, wrote, "There is a fountain filled with blood;" "O for a closer walk with God," and eight other hymns; Frederick W. Faber, High Churchman, and later a Roman Catholic priest, wrote eleven of our hymns, among them, "Faith of our fathers! living still," and "There's a wideness in God's mercy;" Charlotte Elliott, a member of the Church of England, wrote, "Just as I am without one plea," and four other hymns; Fanny Crosby, a Methodist, and a prolific writer of gospel hymns, wrote "Blessed assurance, Jesus is mine," and many other hymns.

In addition to this list—which might be greatly extended, we not a layman in walks of life as diverse as the following who contributed to the making of our Standard Hymnals: An eminent physician, a social reformer, a distinguished editor, a London book-seller, and a Danish teacher.

Charles Wesley, "the poet of Methodism," wrote more than six thousand hymns. The Methodist Hymnal contains 121 from his pen, or about one sixth of the total number in the Hymnal.

Isaac Watts, a Nonconformist minister of the 17th century, has been called the father of English hymnody. Comparing Wesley and Watts, the author of "The Methodist Hymnal Annotated," says: "Watts' great theme was divine majesty, and no one approaches him in excellence upon this subject. Wesley's grandest theme was love—the love of God—and here he had no rival."

Among the great poets who contributed to our Hymnals, we note: Joseph Addison, John Milton, Alfred Tennyson, Thomas More, John Dryden, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Sir Walter Scott, Sidney Lanier, William Cowper, William Cullen Bryant, John Greenleaf Whittier, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, and Rudyard Kipling.

A study of the great hymns of the ages, with special reference to their diverse authorship, would do much to bring all branches of the Church of Christ closer together, for after such a study who would dare claim that his particular Church has a monopoly of the Holy Spirit?

Preparation For The Meeting.

Decorate the society room or the corner of the church in which the meeting is held with flags or red, white and blue bunting, and with the national flower—goldenrod, if it is still in bloom. If convenient hang on the walls as many pictures of former presidents of the United States as possible, also pictures of the White House and other government buildings at Washington. It would be fine to have a good picture of Ellis Island and the landing of emigrants.

Just A Citizen.

One of the highest privileges of life is that of being a citizen of a community—helping to shape its life, direct its activities, determine its spirit and control its destiny.

To meet this high privilege one must be interested in every plan of the community life.—the school life, the church life, the social life and the political life. To neglect either is to fail as a citizen. Then there is the health of the community. For a citizen to neglect health conditions is to invite disease into his own home. Then too it is every citizen's duty to see that his community is made as attractive and as beautiful as possible. Every enterprising citizen will want his community equipped with as many conveniences as it is practical to bring into the community.

If his community is in the town or city he will want paved streets, electric lights, sewerage, a good water plant, telephone, and an adequate mail service with all other modern improvements and conveniences, and he is willing to do his part by using his influence to install these conveniences and also in providing the money to pay for them, not merely that he may enjoy them but that the entire community may enjoy them.

If his home is in the country he is equally interested in making his community and up-to-date one by having the telephone in homes, the rural free delivery, good roads and other conveniences that the country as well as the town may have these days. In either the town or country he will obey the laws of his country and use his influence and help if need be to see that others in the community do so. This he will do "just as a citizen," but as A Christian Citizen.

He will do all the above and a great deal more. He will strive to make the church of his community the center of the community interest, the community activities, and community social life. He will be interested in bringing into his community the best educational influences. The most elevating in music, literature and art. He will strive just as earnestly to keep out of the community everything that is low, vicious and vile, obscene and ugly billboards, immoral and suggestive shows, gathering places that are not to the glory of God and the helpfulness of His children. He will guard his community against the bootlegger, and the blind tiger as he would guard his children against a mad dog or the savage beasts of the forest. He will help the poor and needy, visit the sick and afflicted, and do his utmost to win his entire community for God and the church. I like Edgar A. Guest's description of what christian citizenship must be as he pictures in the poems entitled:

Law And Leadership.

He who is wise is the strength of the fool, the strong is the guide to the weak. As a man and his wife are we bound in our race, and one common glory we seek. And the law is our tie, and who laughs at the bond or shrinks from the duty it asks shall find with the morning the men of the field unwilling to go to their tasks.

For all was it written, the great and the low, for the dull and the wise, it is said, this you must do for the good of our land, and this is the path you must tread. And the rich man, the great man who sneers and turns to an easier way shall find with the morning the men of the field unwilling the law to obey.

High the example the great man must set, wise deeds must come from the wise, much must be done by the man who has much or all of his glories are lies. And if wise men shall scoff at the law of the land, it must follow as night follows day that the men of the field, seeing all that you do, shall also refuse to obey.

You who are leaders must lead to what is best or our Nation goes down in despair; if you shall venture to scorn at the law, your people will follow you there. They see what you do and they know what you are, and if to the law you're untrue you shall find with the morning the men of the field betraying our country as you.

Through Back Yards to Hearts.

As Christian Endeavor citizens we might do much to help beautify our communities by putting on a campaign for beautiful back yards. We could begin with our own and then with that of the church and school and parsonage and so start an interest in our neighbors that can be easily followed up till our back yards are as beautiful as our front ones, and why not? And let us not forget that this campaign will open up many opportunities to introduce the great gardener of hearts to the owners of these back yards.

A Happy Surprise at the Forsyth Parsonage.

A most happy surprise came to the Forsyth parsonage when on Sept. 19 the eighth birthday of little Virginia Curry was celebrated in a most unique manner. Rev. J. S. Williams, that noble soul, who was such a wonderful friend to Virginia last year when she was in an Asheville Sanatorium, did not forget the date and wrote to Mrs. D. C. Speas, wife of our family physician who lives near the parsonage, and suggested that the occasion be remembered. Mrs. Speas at once called attention to the matter of other friends and of course the work went on with rapid progress. On the above date Virginia and her sisters were invited to the Spease home to enjoy a playtime as we thought. But it was more than a play time, for when the children returned they were carrying a large basket piled high with many useful articles for the child's happiness and welfare. It is impossible to mention all articles and the names of them who gave them. A number of the articles came from the people of the Forsyth charge and a number came from the congregation of the First Methodist Protestant church of Winston Salem, and some from people we do not know at all. We do not know the value of the articles but certainly it was a generous shower. This is another one of the ways we have been so beautifully remembered since our lives have been so saddened and discouraged. This is another one of the many ways that we have been reminded that God is so good and that His people are also good. For such a beautiful expression of kindness our hearts go out in sincere gratitude to God and to every one who had any part in it. May God bless the good people.

It might be of interest for me to say that Virginia is now well and happy. She is in school doing full work.

I have never been able to thank all the good people for their kindness and favors to Virginia while she was in the Sanatorium last year. Indeed I have never known all who did remember her so kindly. As her father I certainly do thank each one most sincerely.

Most gratefully,

Geo. L. Curry.

THE GLAD RELEASE.

"No: I can't say I dread the coming of death," said a man who had long been a patient sufferer. "You know," he continued smilingly, "if one had been in prison a long time, suffering almost every conceivable pain, living upon worse than prison fare, because all other foods are denied him by his criminalers, disease and ill health, he cannot but be glad to see the walls fall and eat a glimpse once more of blue skies and sunlit fields."

This is what death means to the believer in Christ. It means release from prison walls; a vision of wider horizons and fairer outlook. As Dr. Holmes truthfully says, "Most of us die before we really leave this world." We die to all its pursuits and pleasures and activities so that, as he intimates in another place, "Death is but the locking of the door of the deserted mansion from which the tenant already has fled."—Ex.

WHEN HERBERT FILLED THE WOOD-BOX.

Herbert went reluctantly about gathering up wood and cobs. "O dear," he thought to himself, "if only I didn't always have so many chores to do! Seems as if the wood-box was always empty, though I know I fill it often enough."

Into the wood-box went the wood and cobs and Herbert turned about to face his mother.

"Just another arm-load, please," said mother gently. "I want a fire all day to make apple butter."

brave li

"All right," answered Herbert with a brave little smile. But underneath the smile there were cross, complaining thoughts, such as these: "I hate chores, and, O dear, I wish I could have a new sled for next winter!"

Out to the wood-pile he ran, and soon another arm-load was picked up. But listen! what was this? A faint far-away sound seemed to come from the wood-pile. Herbert dropped the wood and knelt down, peering cautiously about. Then suddenly he rose and clasped his hands. "Turkeys!" he exclaimed in gleeful tones. "The turkey hen has hid her nest away and hatched some baby turkeys."

As fast as he could he ran to the house.

"Oh, come see the surprise!" he shouted. "I've found a nest of baby turkeys!"

Mother looked up from the apple she was peeling. "I knew the turkeys were there all the time, ten of them," she said smiling, "and I've kept the secret because I meant to give them to you as a surprise. If you wish, you may sell them later and use the money to buy a new coaster. What does my son say to that?"

"Oh, mother, you are so good!" said Herbert joyously.

"You see," mother went on, "I appreciate how good my boy is to fill the wood-box so often without grumbling."

For a moment Herbert's face flushed with shame. Then two little arms went tight about mother's neck. "Oh, mother," he cried, "I did grumble 'bout filling the wood-box, not out loud so you could hear, but inside. But from now on there is not going to be any grumbling of any kind, because I'll be too busy filling the wood-box and tending to the turkeys."—Word and Way.

NOSES AND APPLE SEEDS.

"Now that's what I call sensible," said Mother. "Listen to this."

They were all at the breakfast table, and Lily and Bob were having a private scrimmage over the last piece of toast on the plate.

"What is it?" asked Dad, looking up from his paper.

"It's for you, Bob and Lil," Mother went on; so stop squabbling and pay attention."

It was not often that the mail brought anything of interest to the young people, so, at these words the toast was forgotten, and two pair of ears and eyes were wide open.

"It is an invitation for you both from Mrs. Parker. She is giving a surprise party to Dick and Dora on Tuesday, and the invitation says, 'Boys, please wear wash suits, and girls plain rompers.'"

"That's something new," said Dad. "Quite an idea too, I wish your friends would take up that idea, my dear, for the parties we are in for. But I thought Dick and Dora were away?"

"I'd like to see you in a wash suit, John. Yes, Dick and Dora have been spending a month in Canada with their aunt, but are expected home very soon now."

"Can we go, Mother, can we?" asked Lily, all excitement.

"Why, yes, of course, dear, and Spot is specially included too."

Spot was Bob's special pet and companion, "a doggy pal who always agrees with you," said Bob in speaking of him.

"I'll take Gwendolen Pearl," said Lily.

"Gwendolen Pearl," Bob cried. "Do you think I am going to a party with a doll?"

"I will take her," cried Lily.

"You will not!"

Mother interrupted the wordy war. "Lily, my dear. Gwendolen was not invited, you know, and no lady will go anywhere unless she is asked. I am afraid Gwendolen will have to stay home this time."

The eventful day arrived at last, and they started off bright and early, so as to be in good time.

It was a clear, frosty day and the icy road cracked deliberately as the car wheel passed over them. The trees were frosted, and with the sunshine on them, looked as if they came from Fairyland, as Lily said.

Their way led them through woods that skirted a bay, across which they could see little houses dotting the shore on the opposite side. One of these was the Parker house, and it was a long, though delightful ride.

"Well, you are in plenty of time," said Mother, as the car stopped at Mrs. Parker's, and the children scrambled out. "Give my love to Mrs. Parker and tell her I'll stop and have a little chat with her about five when I fetch you."

"All right, Mumsey," and the car glided off, as they ran up the path to the house.

It was quite a while before the door was opened by Ellen, the Parker's maid, and an old friend of theirs.

"Hello, Ellen, where's Dick, where's Dora," they both cried together.

"Well, Glory be to Goodness, and what do ye mean? Master Dick and Miss Dora won't be home till tomorrow, in time for the party on Thursday."

"Thursday, why, the party is today, and we've come for it."

Ellen stood with her mouth open.

"Sure the missis is out, and she told me the party is Thursday, and I'm just making the cake all pink icing at that."

"What shall we do?" said Lily, looking as if she were going to cry.

"Well, Mrs. Parker will be home soon, so ye'd better come in," said Ellen.

"We'll have to wait till Mother fetches us, anyway," said Bob.

They followed Ellen into the house, and she took them into the cozy sitting room, through the doors of which they could see the dining-room.

"Sit here, it'll be more comfortable, and I'll bring ye down some books and things from the play room."

Pretty soon she was back again, her arm full of various things to amuse them, and pass the time away.

"Just make yourselves at home, while I go and finish up my cake," she said, "and maybe I'll have a little pink cake for each of ye when I come back. If you're hungry, the young ones always is—there's apples and oranges on the sideboard, help yourselves."

With a nod and a smile she hurried back to her neglected cake, leaving them, with Spot at their feet, smitting in a big chair surrounded by books, balls and games.

Bob was a regular bookworm, and was soon deep in a large story book, but Lily soon got tired of her pictures.

Suddenly he exclaimed, "Gee, that's just like you."

"What are you talking about?"

"This story. It's about a little Indian girl, who had a turnup nose, like you, and felt just as unhappy about it."

Lily did not half appreciate her dear little upturned nose, that so well suited her bright mischievous face, but was constantly bemoaning the fact and was fond of filling innumerable sheets of paper with pictures and drawings of noses, the sort she would like to own. Like Amy in Miss Alcott's famed Little Women, she had been known to sleep with a clothes pin on the offending nose, in the hope of bringing it to her idea of beauty.

Her interest was at once aroused.

"Read it to me, Bob!"

"It's about an Indian girl, who had a funny nose, like yours, and was so unhappy about it, that she went to an old Indian woman, who was very wise, and asked her to help her."

"And what did she say?" asked Lily.

Here is what she said: "Take, O dusky maiden, twelve seeds from an apple and three walnut shells full of Mother Earth. Soften the earth with a little water, and make into twelve small balls or pills, the palefaced medicine men call them. Take one of these, my daughter, three times in the day, and lo, the earth will change the form of your nose, to the sort you wish for, if you keep the shape of it in your mind."

"Oh," cried Lily. "It doesn't sound very nice. Dirt pills!"

"Come, I'll make them for you. Perhaps your nose will change before Mother fetches us. There are apples in the dining room and we can take some earth from the planter over there. Come along."

"I don't think they can be very nice," said Lily.

"Nice! Who ever heard of medicine being nice?"

Bob ran into the next room, Lily slowly following him, half afraid but led away by the hope of getting rid of the—to her—ugly nose.

She watched Bob as he cut an apple, extracted the seeds, and then digging out three teaspoonfuls of earth, the amount he thought about a walnut shell's size, he wet the earth and manipulated them into pills, his hands and fingers, looking rather grimy as he worked away.

"There you are," he said at last. Now take this to begin with." He held the small wet brown pill to her lips and handed her a glass of water.

Lily shrank back. "Oh, I can't."

"Stupid, just like a girl. And after all the trouble I took. Here, take it at once."

"Oh, my dear children!" said a voice, and then stopped. Mrs. Parker stood at the door unable to understand the scene before her.

Lily rushed to her, and both began to explain at once.

"Well, I'd be satisfied with the nose I had, if I were you. It's a very nice little nose, and I'm sure your Mother would not want it altered."

Bob looked rather glum. "I thought it would be great," he said.

"Besides," Mrs. Parker said, "that old Indian woman didn't know anything about it, and if you finish the story you will find the pills did no good at all."

"Didn't it?" said Bob.

"No, I read that story to Dora when she was ill with her cold, so I know all about it. But I can't understand how this sad mistake about the date of the party came about. However, come and have some tea and cake with me, and we'll read the story over while we are waiting for Mother. We'll have a nice little party all to ourselves today, and then on Thursday, we'll have the Honest-to-Goodness one."

When Mother arrived, the mistake was explained. She happened to have the invitation in her bag, and sure enough it was for Thursday, although Mrs. Parker saw that it did look very much like Tuesday.

"Well, dears, you have had two parties instead of one," she said, "and I know that you had something a great nicer than Bob's dirt pills to eat."—Selected.

MOLLY'S HALLOWE'EN.

"Aunt Em, what is Halloween?" Molly asked her grown-up aunt.

"It is the thirty-first of October," Aunt Em answered in a very matter-of-fact tone.

"I know that much," Molly answered with a puzzled frown, "but I want to know what it means."

"I don't understand you," Aunt Em replied, beginning to look almost as puzzled and frowny as Molly did.

"O like Christmas, you know, means the star of love. And Thanksgiving means 'Father, we thank Thee,' and now what does Halloween mean?"

Aunt Em began to understand before she answered, "Well, people used to think that spirits without bodies were going about the world on this night or hallowed evening, and some thoughtless people got the idea that spirits would play tricks and jokes on human beings and made Halloween a joking time."

"To me, though, Halloween really means what it says, and that is 'holy evening,' and I think it is nice for us to try to make all the wrong things we know of just as near right as we can on holy evening."

Molly understood and went downstairs to her mother's room. There she found her mother sewing and looking rather unhappy. "Mamma, dear," she said earnestly, "will you please tell me why I can't play with Ernestine any more? I'm so lonely without her."

fine any more? I'm so lonely without her."

Mother put down her sewing and looked sadder than ever as she took the little girl on her knee and answered gravely, "I hate to tell you, dear, but your father and Ernestine's father didn't agree about something, and so they quarreled, and now the friendship of the families must be broken up."

"What did they quarrel about?" Molly asked solemnly.

"About some papers," her mother answered.

"O," said Molly, "is that all?"

"But," said her mother in reply, "these were very important papers and your father trusted them with Ernestine's father just one day and then he said they were lost, and maybe they were, but it meant a great deal to all of us to have them lost!"

Molly looked grave a few minutes and then, slipping quietly out of the room as she heard her father coming in, she tiptoed upstairs and got a thin rubber band out of her top drawer. Then downstairs again and out into the yard she ran. Bareheaded and with her blue dress and her brown curls flying in the wind. Straight across the grass and through the rose hedge into Ernestine's yard and then up the front steps she went.

She was afraid she would be scared if she waited too long, so she walked right into the room and right up to Ernestine's father before she said a word.

Then "Judge Wallace," she said bravely, "I'm so lonesome for Ernestine and I think she's lonely for me and couldn't we all be friends again? That last day I was over here when Ernestine and I quarreled about some papers you said, 'My, what a silly quarrel! Can't you divide the papers?' and we divided them. But they were old papers and I didn't really care for 'em, and Ernestine did, 'cause they were so lovely and thin for paper doll dresses, so I took the rubber band and she took the papers and they're upstairs in her little doll trunk. I can go get 'em and show you just how we divided 'em."

"Do," said Judge Wallace, very sad and very stern, but beginning to look sort of kind and twinkly around the eyes, as he used to do in friendly times.

Molly started upstairs, with the delighted Ernestine at her heels, and pretty soon they came back with the troublesome papers.

"I see," said Judge Wallace, taking both the papers and the band in his hands, "these papers have caused a lot of trouble among friends."

"O," cried Molly, dancing up and down, "are they the very same papers you and daddy quarreled about? My! what a silly quarrel! Let's go and make it up."

"Good," said the judge, and marching with Molly and Ernestine at his heels, and the whole family following, Judge Wallace appeared at Molly's front door with the precious lost papers. And then such a shaking of hands and laughing and crying as there was at Molly's house for a few minutes, you never saw!

"I think grown-up quarrels must be worse than little children quarrels," said Ernestine, speaking slowly, "'cause they seem to be harder to make up."

"But isn't it a good Halloween?" said Molly, bubbling with joy.

"Indeed it is 'holy evening,'" said Judge Wallace, stooping to kiss her bonneted head. "Always a 'holy evening' when children make up their silly quarrels."

Then Molly's mother was gone for a few minutes and she came back looking as fresh as a rainwashed rose, and said, "I've put enough plates on the table, so you must all stay to supper!" And they did.—Sunday School Times.

A CHILD OF CHERRY BLOSSOM LAND.

Little Suki San lived away across the ocean in far-off Japan. Her home was made of paper screens all placed side by side with a woven grass roof to keep the sun and rain off. Inside the house there were bright mats on the floors. There were no tables or chairs like we have in our homes in America. When Suki San and the rest of the family sat down to eat their meals, they sat on the floor, squatting in front of a huge bowl of rice in the center before them. How we would smile if we saw them eat their rice with no sugar or milk to put on it.

Day after day Suki San sat at the door of the little house, while her mother embroidered beautiful kimono indoors or tended the little brown baby that cried and cried, or cooked the bowlful of rice for the family dinner. Out in the sunny fields other children were running and laughing and playing, but poor little Suki San could not run and play like other children. Do you know the reason? Poor little Suki San was blind. She could not see the pretty blue sky, nor the lovely, leafy trees, nor the bright green grass, nor the smiling cherry blossoms that nodded in the wind. All day long she would sit and think and think. She often wondered what her mother's face looked like. She was sure she was gentle and kind and patient, but how she longed with all her heart to see the round curve of her soft cheek, to see the sweet lips that so often kissed her. She wanted too to see the birds that sang for her such thrilling music. Oh, if she only had eyes like the other children that romped about her! She would give her new doll Omura to the gods if they would only give her two good eyes that she might see like other people.

One day as she sat in the doorway, she heard the quick footstep of some one approaching. Then a kind voice spoke to her in broken Japanese. It was the missionary from far-off America. He told her of the new mission and best of all, of the wonderful gospel of love and how the Christ came to earth to seek and save sinners. How the cruel men nailed Him on a great cross and then buried Him in a darkened tomb. Then how the dear Jesus had risen from the tomb, that a beautiful, shining angel had rolled the stone from the door and that the Christ had come forth a conqueror over death. He died on the cross for us because He loved us so. He died that we might be forgiven.

"Did He really die for me?" asked Suki San in trembling wonder.

"Yes, for you, Suki San," the missionary answered.

"Oh, maybe He could give me two good eyes that I might see my dear mother's face," cried Suki San hopefully.

Then the missionary told her of the long ago miracles, of how He had opened the eyes of the blind, and healed the sick, and raised the dead.

"Oh, this wonderful Jesus, that I might know more about Him," cried the little blind girl.

"Will you come to the mission, Suki San, on the Sabbath day? Ask some one of the children to bring you. Who knows but that maybe with prayer and skill, Jesus can open those poor little blind eyes. I hope He can."

Like one in a dream, Suki San waited for the long, long three days to pass before it would be Sabbath day. If only the blessed Jesus would open her poor, blind eyes that she might see, O how she would love and thank Him!

Sabbath morning dawned at last, bright with its golden sunshine. Little Suki San was awake at the first twittering of the birds. She could hardly put her yellow kimono on, her fingers trembled so. She swallowed a few mouthfuls of rice and hurried with all her might to the doorstep to wait for Mayu who had promised to take her to the mission. Hand in hand the two girls walked swiftly to the mission door. The bell had not yet rung but the missionary was there, and he and his wife greeted the children pleasantly.

"So this is Suki San?" the missionary's wife inquired sweetly.

"Yes, I have come to ask for the two good eyes I want so much," answered the little blind girl earnestly.

Tears were in the kind lady's eyes as she turned away. "I hope that Jesus will give them to you, dear," she whispered softly.

It is the day of the Great Feast of the gods in Cherry Blossom Land! The children at the mission were gathered around the organ singing songs of praise and worship to the risen Christ! How their sweet voices rang out and filled the tiny room with holy music. They were glad today! Glad that they knew the Christ whose love was so wonderful. But they were glad because of something else too! For word had come this morning from the big hospital at Tokio that Jesus had opened the blind eyes of little Suki San. And what do you think the doctor said was the first thing that little Suki San did when she saw the blue sky through the window of her room? Why, she knelt down beside the white bed and folded her two little hands and whispered, "Thank you, dear Jesus; I love you for giving me these two good eyes. Now I can see my mother's face!" Great tears of joy fell as she rose and looked out upon the world of Cherry Blossoms for the first time. Her heart was singing like a happy bird. For now she, too, could play like other children!—Louise H. Bowman, in United Presbyterian.

—"Is your baby fond of you?"

"Fond of me! I should say he is," replied Tom. "Why, would you believe it, he sleeps all day while I'm not at home, and stays awake all night just to enjoy my society."—London Punch.

—Why do you go to church?

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

High Point College.—On Friday evening, September 25th, at eight o'clock, a very delightful informal reception was extended to the students of High Point College by the members of the faculty.

The reception was held in the large dining hall of the Roberts building. In the receiving line were Dr. and Mrs. R. M. Andrews, Mr. N. P. Yarborough, Miss Mary Young, Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Lindley, Mr. and Mrs. P. S. Kennett, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Houck, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. White, Mr. W. F. McCanless, Miss Mabel Williams, Mr. J. H. Mourane, Miss Vera Idol, Mr. J. H. Allred, Miss Novella McIntire, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hardy, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Garrett, Mr. J. P. Boylin, Miss Lena Martin, and Dr. and Mrs. S. S. Coe, Miss Young, the dean of women, was in charge of the program, which consisted of delightful games, delicious punch, and specially prepared ice cream. Every one seemed to enjoy this first get-together-meeting of the college year. Such social gatherings is a means of bringing all the students into closer touch with the faculty, and students with each other, so that they may gain something socially as well as mentally.

The two hundred or more college students add a new and different life to the High Point community that it has not heretofore had. There is developing on the campus a real college spirit. From the increase in the student body this year, it is believed that by the opening next year the college will have more applicants than it can accommodate.

Friendship, Mt. Hermon, Ct.—Perhaps a good many readers of the Herald do not know that there is a Friendship on this charge but nevertheless it is a fact.

We have a real live church and Sunday school, and also a Woman's Home Missionary Society with about thirty members that has been working for over a year. A few weeks ago it was decided to let the rest of the world know that this society is doing things too. Although we are only about one year old we clothed a child and helped out in some other things last year.

With the beginning of another year we have decided to furnish a room at High Point College.

Members of the society assisted by the Baraca class have just given the play, "An Old-Fashioned Mother," and cleared about forty-three dollars.

During the hot weather we made forty dollars selling ice cream and cake and we made twenty-five dollars last spring at a play. So you see we are getting started.

Our next meeting will be with Mrs. J. L. Kernodle at an old-time quilting—to complete some quilts that have been pieced for the Children's Home.

As this is our first attempt perhaps I had better stop, for fear this may land in the waste basket.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Mrs. R. W. Isley, Reporter.

Randleman Chareg.—New Salem meeting began third Sunday in September. Rev. E. G.

Lowdermilk preached a forceful sermon at the 11 o'clock hour. Rev. A. D. Shelton came Monday and preached until the close Friday night. It was my first association with him in a meeting. He proved himself to be an excellent preacher and an earnest worker. In addition to the church being revived generally, three young ladies were converted, and united with the church.

At Worthville last night the attendance and interest were fine. Their attendance at Sunday school yesterday was 114. Recently we received four young people into the church here.

The special meeting begins the 2nd Sunday in October. Rev. R. S. Troxler is our promised helper.

We are to begin our meeting at Level Cross next Sunday. Rev. C. H. Hill to help.

Mt. Lebanon meeting will begin third Sunday in October. Helper to be announced later.

It is never advisable to hold three meetings within three weeks time, but blocked roads and Small Pox, forced this program on us.

I like the idea suggested by Bro. Morgan in last issue. The same idea was suggested and recommended by Bro. Taylor in a private conversation at last summer conference, namely, that the churches of a charge concentrate their forces in one protracted effort, rather than to try to hold several meetings of a few days duration.

Miss Jewell Hughes is away at High Point college. Miss Ruby Hughes is teaching near Haw River.

A sunset prayer circle was organized recently by Mrs. Neese at Mt. Lebanon. It consists of a band of young ladies who are praying for the coming revival. W. H. Neese.

Orange Charge, Efland.—The revival services began here Friday, September 18th, and continued eight days. Rev. H. F. Surratt did all the preaching. His sermons were earnestly and faithfully delivered and well received.

Visible results, 15 conversions, 12 additions to the church, church revived.

As a token of appreciation a purse of over $38.00 was presented to Bro. Surratt.

It was a pleasure to work with Bro. Surratt and have him in our home. Come again, Bro. Surratt. Sincerely, B. M. Williams.

Henderson.—On September 20, we were very glad to receive Miss Annie Renn into our membership. Miss Renn comes to us from the M. E. church of Durham, N. C.

Rev. J. E. Pritchard called a business meeting of the church for the 21st. We found our finances in pretty good shape for this time of year. Mr. L. R. Gooch was authorized to have a heating plant put into the new annex, before cold weather sets in.

Last Sunday was rally day and promotion day for the Sunday school. We had 223 present. The offering went for education.

Our mid week prayer service has been called in, so that our people can attend the revival meeting at the First M. E. church.

We will have the fourth quarter communion service next Sunday.

Miss Sallie Vestal of Washington, D. C. has been visiting at the parsonage the past week. Reporter.

Burlington.—It is about time I'm making another report. We have been having good services and good Sunday school attendance. Our revival meeting began yesterday (27th) and will continue 10 days or more. Yesterday morning our pastor, S. W. Taylor, preached a very impressive sermon on "Gathering the Spiritual Harvest." In the afternoon at 3:00 o'clock a special meeting was held in which most all of the Men's Federation units of Blaine County were represented, this meeting being a preliminary to the revival just starting. At the night service there was a treat in store for every one and the church was filled to capacity to hear our own beloved F. Milaway, preach on "How Long Have I to Live?"

It was one of the greatest and most impressive sermons the writer has heard since the Ram-Ramsey meeting. Rev. Bro. Milaway is former pastor here and served this church longer than any other minister, and his very name is dear to the hearts of its members. The meeting last night was a decided success. Much interest being shown from the start, and there were several who accepted Christ. Good meetings are expected throughout the revival.

Our Bro. F. S. Cheek still remains very ill at this writing. W. T. Way, Reporter.

Shelby.—Our revival meeting began here the third Sunday in September and continued through two Sundays, closing last Sunday night. There was a total of fifteen services held. We had seven day services and eight night services. Rev. H. F. Fogleman arrived Saturday night and was with us on the last day of the meeting. His preaching was of very high order and the people were uplifted and heard him gladly.

While there was no visible sign of a great revival among the people who attended the services, yet we feel that much and lasting good was accomplished. On Saturday night of the meeting three persons, two young girls and one woman, professed faith in Christ as their Savior. Brother Fogleman preached the Gospel in a very clear and convincing manner. Very few unsaved people attended the services, which accounts for the small number of conversions. We are confident that the church was blessed and the people led to believe in a higher plane of Christian living.

An offering was taken at both services last Sunday for Brother Fogleman. After the offering was received at the night service he stated that he would accept only an amount covering his expenses to and from Shelby and stated that he wished to turn the rest of the offering over to the pastor to help the church with his salary, which both the pastor and church very greatly appreciate.

Brother Fogleman and the pastor enjoyed the hospitality of the following homes and ate a meal at each place, being accompanied by the pastor's wife and two daughters at four places: S. C. Tate, Amos Gantt, J. T. Ramsey, A. R. Chapman, Oslie Ramsey, Gamewell Gantt, S. B. Short, W. B. Wright, J. W. Silvers, Mrs. M. E. McFarland, Andy Canipe and F. Spake.

We will resume our regular services this week, beginning with the mid-week prayer services Wednesday night. Next Sunday at the morning service we will observe the Lord's Supper and will open the doors of the church for the reception of members. We are expecting a number of the people to unite with our church at that service.

The annual conference is rapidly approaching and we are not ready for its approach; our finances are behind. We expect to make one great, strong pull to bring the finances up to the top notch by the last Sunday in October.

C. B. Way, Pastor.

St. Paul's.—Our special meeting began on the 2nd Sunday in this month and continued until Wed. night after the 3rd.

The pastor conducted the services on Sunday and Bro. T. A. Williams came to us on Monday night. He stayed with us to the close except going to fill his own appointment on Sunday.

Bro. Williams is not only a good preacher but a fine worker in the congregation. He endeared himself to us and our people, and we would be delighted to have him come this way again.

All denominations co-operated with us in the meeting. Rev. S. T. Hensly, pastor of the Revolution Baptist church, was with us almost every service, and did splendid work. He preached for us on the 2nd Sunday of the meeting at three P. M. and all enjoyed his sermon, for it was right to the point.

The meeting resulted in a great revival among the church people and forty-seven reclaimed and converted. Fourteen accessions to our church to-date. We are expecting others to join. The people say this is the best meeting that has been held here in years.

We are hoping to get to conference with a good report. J. H. Moton, Reporter.

Giles Chapel, Richland Circuit.—Our revival meeting began Sunday, September 20, and closed on Friday night, September 25.

Rev. J. B. Trogon came and did most of the preaching until Wednesday when his health gave way, and he had to go home.

Our pastor, Rev. C. H. Hill, preached on Thursday and Friday night.

Both of these men preached some very able sermons. The number of conversions in this meeting was smaller than we hoped for. Yet we feel it was not a failure.

We were very glad to have Mrs. Trogon with us also.

The fourth quarterly conference will meet at this place on Sunday before the third Sunday in October. There will be preaching before noon, and business meeting in the afternoon. Everybody invited to come.

We are still having Sunday school, although the attendance is small. Pray that we may have a larger attendance. Reporter.

Lexington, State St. Church.—The revival meeting closed Sunday night. There were a good many conversions and practically every member of the church here and a number of others pledged a deeper consecration. Mrs. Dixon gave us such fine and helpful talks mornings and evenings every day last week except Thursday night. Dr. Dixon preached for us Thursday night.

We had the largest number at Sunday school Sunday morning we have ever had.

The new church, we hope, is not far in the future. We are expecting many additions to the church membership in the next few weeks.

Miss Herndon of Greensboro spent the week end with Mrs. Bethea and was with us at all the services Sunday.

Mrs. Wilcox, Mr. Bethea's daughter, and her two children are spending a while with Mr. and Mrs. Bethea.

Reporter.

Henderson.—Our annual revival began on the first Sunday in September and ran through Wednesday night after the second Sunday. Rev. J. R. Hutton came to us on Monday and remained through the remainder of the meeting preaching twice each day, at 9 A. M. and 8 P. M. Brother Hutton for a number of years has been rated as a man who knows the Scriptures and who can hurl the truth at the people with tremendous force. While here he lived up to his reputation in that respect. He preaches with power and those who heard him were edified. Several things entered in to keep the meeting from being as successful as we had hoped. In the first place the weather was unusually hot and oppressive. And in the second place the territory here was worked so closely in the great evangelistic campaign of last fall that there are not many unchurched people in the city, especially among those who ever go to church. It was largely a question of preaching to those who were already members of the church.

Yesterday was a good day with us. It was rally day in the Sunday school and promotion certificates were given to the children. There were 223 in Sunday school and a fine congregation at the eleven o'clock service. Our Sunday attendance has been the largest this year that it has ever been and I think I am safe in saying that the Sunday congregations and the Wednesday evening prayer meeting congregations have been the largest of any time during the five years we have been here.

J. E. Pritchard.

THE TRUE MEASURE.

"I delight in roses," exclaimed a young girl enthusiastically. "But do you know I feel sad when I look at them. How can I help it when I know so well they will only last for such very short time."

"Yes," replied her companion, "but think how much beauty and fragrance they bring into our lives while they last! Their lives may be short, but how different the world would be without them."

This is true of many of the beautiful but hopelessly fragile things of the world.

But the world is better for that moment's whiteness. Remembering this, it becomes easier for us to reconcile premature death with the thought of divine goodness. It becomes self-evident that God does not measure life by years but by service. It is possible for one who leaves the world while yet in his teens to have lived more than another who has been spared to his allotted three-score years and ten.

"We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;

In feeling, not in figures on a dial."

—Forward.

Friendship.—At last our dream has materialized and we have a nice little Methodist Protestant Church near Chase City, Va., with 100 charter members. Our first revival meeting was held in August. It started the 9th and continued until the 30th. The result of the meeting was over 50 conversions and a changed neighborhood.

We were very fortunate to have Rev. J. H. Trolinger, our pastor, to hold the meeting, and Mr. A. G. Dixon, our president, and Brother Chambliss to visit us and deliver several wonderful sermons.

Bro. J. H. Trolinger, our pastor, will preach for us every 4th Sunday. We are all very proud of our Sunday school. We have a "God chosen" superintendent, it seems. As we have had such a good Sunday school last Sunday there were 92 members present. And our community has been greatly benefited by our prayer meetings. We have prayer meeting every Sunday night and on Wednesday night held by our young men and we do hear such wonderful meetings.

A ladies' aid society was organized the 4th Sunday in August with 86 members.

We are all thankful to the Lord for the many blessings in our community. But we feel there is much more yet to be done for the Master. We ask the prayers of all the readers of the Herald that we may continue to work and grow for the Master.

Mrs. M. F. Harris, Rep.

Flat Rock Circuit.—Notice.

The fourth quarterly conference will meet at Gideon's Grove church Saturday before 2d Sunday in October, at 2 P. M. It is important for us to have a large representation from each church, as we will want to total up this year's work and lay plans for next year. May we make the business of the Kingdom of our Christ first. Then God will bless us with that we need most. Joel B. Trogdon, Pastor.

Bess' Chapel W. H. M. M. S. Meets.

The ladies of Bess' Chapel M. P. church met at the parsonage with Rev. and Mrs. E. A. Bingham on Wednesday after the 2nd Sunday in July at 3 P. M., and organized an auxiliary of the Woman's Home Missionary Society.

New members are being added at each meeting. The membership is now 23. All are very enthusiastic in the work. We are interested in helping the sick and needy. Work amounting about $12.00 has been done at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony whose little son Ellis is very sick; $6.95 in contributions have been made also.

The August meeting was held at the home of Mrs. T. L. Beam Wednesday after the 2nd Sunday. Several important matters were brought before the meeting for discussion; the principal one being a plan of how to raise money for the Society.

A September meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Z. N. Dellinger Wednesday, 16th, at 2.30.

The meeting was opened by the president, Mrs. J. C. Beam. Scripture reading and prayer by Rev. E. A. Bingham.

An interesting talk was made by Mr. Bingham on "Mission work among the Foreigners."

Report of Children's Home at High Point was read by Mrs. J. C. Beam with much interest.

Report of Bethel Home was read by Miss Edna Dellinger.

In this meeting the Society decided to plant a cotton patch next year of about three acres. The money to be used in the Society's work.

Adjourned to meet at the home of president, Mrs. Mrs. J. C. Beam, Wednesday after 2nd Sunday in Oct. at 2:30 P. M.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—OCT. 4.

Paul at Athens.

Golden Text: Acts 17:28.

The Central Truth. "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and truth."

Scriptural Points.

1. Paul came to Athens to escape persecution at Berea. Athens was the most idolatrous city in the world. Usually a city was content with one god or goddess, but Athens had them all, and had a altar erected to any unknown god.

2. Paul at once began to preach Christ to the Jews in their synagogues and to the Greeks in the market places. The philosophers of the city quickly recognized him as "a setter forth of strange gods." And they were curious to know more of this new theology. So they brought him to Mars' Hill, the public forum, to explain more formally and more fully the faith in Jesus Christ.

3. In this most celebrated sermon, or address, since Christ, Paul first complimented his hearers upon their religious aspirations. "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are very religious." American Standard Revision) It was a nartful stroke to win the sympathy and attention of his hearers.

4. He next announces his text, not from the Jewish Scriptures, of which they were totally ignorant, but one of their own idolatrous inscriptions, "To the unknown God."

5. He first declares that this God whom they ignorantly worshipped is the Creator of the universe. He next sets forth that He is the Sovereign of all worlds,—"Lord of heaven and earth." He next exalts Him as the supreme Benefactor,—"seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things."

6. Paul next asserts the spirituality of God,—"dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshipped with men's hands." This was a bold thrust at the materialistic idolatry of Athens and of the world.

7. The Fatherhood and providence of God are next set forth,—"hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell upon the face of the earth." The common origin and brotherhood of the race are here given as necessary facts emerging from the supreme fact of divine fatherhood. To corroborate this truth Paul quotes two of the Greek poets, "For we are also his offspring."

8. The purpose of God's providential dealings with mankind is "That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us."

9. So far Paul has been clearing the way. He has been enlightening the understanding of his hearers. He now presents a gospel message to their hearts,—"and the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." Repentance for sin is the primary message of the Gospel.

10. He next introduces Jesus Christ as the Savior and Judge of the race,—"Because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained."

10. Paul's discourse appears to have been interrupted and cut short upon his mention of the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. It is said, "Some mocked," no doubt publicly. Others "like Felix" put hi moff, saying, "We will hear thee again of this matter."

12. But the momentous message was not without results. Two noted converts are mentioned, "and others with them."

Practical Points.

1. To millions in darkest Africa and Asia our God is still unknown. The missionary responsibility is still as heavy as a load of lead. "Go ye into al lthe world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

2. It is the heaviest debt we owe. The supreme obligation we owe to Jesus for the great salvation must e discharged in an earnest and selfsacrificing effort to win those for whom He died. "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians; both to the wise and to the unwise."

3. Intellectual knowledge about Deity is not enough. It is soul-acquaintanceship that yields salvation. "And this is eternal life, that they might know thee the onl ytrue God, and Jesus Christ whom thou has sent."

4. To milions of professed Christians the Father of mercies is still the unknown God. They have no experience of the deep realities o' God. They are even "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world."

5. To know God in the deep spiritual sense in the highest personal attainment possible. "Yea doubtless, I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord.—That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death."

6. God is more than the Father of the spirits of all flesh. All true believers are more than the creative offspring of God. "wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord almighty."

7. Repentance is still an imperative duty. There is no salvation from sin without it. "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish."

8. Every moral act goes on before to judgment, and the effects of good or bad influences follow after. "We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ.—Word of Life.

"Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie, Which we ascribe to heaven."

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.Junius Wesley Binkley.

Junius Wesley Binkley, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Binkley, and the subject of this obituary, was born in Yadkin county June 29, 1853, and died in his home in Winston-Salem, N. C., August 30, 1925.

Bro. Binkley was twice married. In 1888 he was married to Miss Sarah Pilcher. In 1895 he died and in 1906 he married Mrs. Lillian Slater. He is survived by his wife, four daughters; Mrs. J. W. Minter, Mrs. Paul Minter, Mrs. B. A. Bullard, Mrs. J. M. Woodard and one son, Mr. O. E. Binkley, all of Winston-Salem. Two sisters, Mrs. J. R. Pilcher and Mrs. D. Branson and two brothers, Mr. C. H. Binkley of Yadkin county and W. A. Binkley of Winston-Salem also survive. Besides these near relatives there is a large number of friends who are sad because a good man has passed away.

Early in life Bro. Binkley accepted Christ and joined the Baltimore Methodist Protestant Church of Yadkin county. Since that time he lived a consistent Christian life, witnessed to the many who knew him. On moving to Winston-Salem some years ago he connected himself with the First Methodist Protestant Church of that city. In this church he was a faithful member until he moved to his farm near Mt. Airy. He joined the Mt. Airy Methodist Protestant church about 9 years from Winston-Salem. On moving to his country home he joined the Mt. Carmel church there and remained a faithful member until he died. His brethren of this church greatly respected him and at different times imported him to perform official duties were entrusted to him. He was at one time superintendent of the Sunday school, and at the time of his death he was a member of the board of trustees.

Bro. Binkley was a quiet, unassuming man who possessed outstanding qualities greatly admired and appreciated. He was a very pious man, he loved and worshiped his God, he loved and read his Bible, he loved and respected his church, he loved and honored his family, he was true to his fellowman and walked in such a manner that he was beloved by his neighbors and was a credit to any neighborhood in which he lived. He was a good father and a true and devoted husband.

The funeral was conducted in the First Methodist Protestant Church of Winston-Salem by his pastor, the undersigned, assisted by Rev. R. A. Hunter, Rev. Carl J. Helmich, Rev. Douglas L. Rights and Rev. J. L. Trolldenier. After the funeral the remains were taken to rest in the Woodlawn cemetery to await the final call at the day of the resurrection. A TOBACCO MENAGERIE.

Will H. Brown.

A trick cat in a cigar store in Ashtabula, Ohio, passed away on Friday, Sept. 14, 1923, according to a local paper, with every symptom of dying from poisoning. Everything possible was done to save the cat, but without avail. The mother of the cat died in the same store, in the same way, a year before. This was considered a deep mystery. It should not be thought so. One drop of pure nicotine will kill any cat, any time, any place. Living in the cigar store all the time was simply absorbing more poison than the cats could stand.

Now please get this: Many children, living in tobacco-soaked homes, where fathers smoke in the house as freely as if in a cigar store, become pale, sickly, and finally pass away, in spite of all that doctors can do to save them. At least one father, when told by his physician that his smoking in his home was the cause of his little girl's poor health, not only quit smoking in his home, but for all time.

A farmer in the South this year planted a row of tobacco between each row of cotton, and claims that his cotton crop was bothered but little by the boll weevil. A Southern paper, commenting on the incident, says: "So far as known, aside from the bug and worm, there are only mankind, monkeys and goats to use tobacco."

Thinking men should resolve to cut out a rank poison from their lives, and not be a part of the tobacco menagerie. Leave the weed to bugs, worms, monkeys and goats. Let's no longer make monkeys out of our boys and men, nor make them the goats for the profit of the tobacco dealers.

"WHAT CHRIST IS TO ME."

"My calm in storm—
My peace in strife;
When faint with hunger—
Bread of life.

"In sickness—He
To me is health;
In poverty—my Source of wealth.

"When friends are distant,
He is near.
His love so boundless
Casts out fear.

"When skies are dark
He is my Sun;
He is my heaven—
On earth begun.

"Each day His grace
To me is given.
Like dews of morning—
Fresh from heaven.

"Even the same—
Whate'er befall,
Yes—Christ to me,
Is all in all."

HOME, SWEET HOME.

'Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home!

A charm from the skies seems to hallow us there,
Which sought through the world, is ne'er met with elsewhere.

Home! home! sweet, sweet home!

There's no place like home!

—It is reported from Rome that the Pope plans to convoke an Ecumenical Council of the Roman Catholic Church during the year 1928. The meeting is expected to be the largest in the history of the church. There have been only twenty such councils in Roman Catholic history, the first being at Nicaea, in Asia Minor, in 325. The last one, which was held in 1869 under Pope Pius IX, ended in July, 1870. It was not completed on account of the Franco-Prussian War and the occupation of Rome by Italian troops during the political disturbance in Italy at that time.

GIVE JOHNNY HIS OWN SUIT.

Said Henry Drummond: "Boys, if you are going to be Christians, be Christians as boys, and not as your grandmothers. A grandmother has to be a Christian as a grandmother, and that is the right and beautiful thing for her; but if you cannot read your Bible by the hour, as your grandmother can, or delight in meetings as she can, don't think you are necessarily a bad boy. When you are your grandmother's age you will have your grandmother's kind of religion. Meantime be a Christian as a boy. Live a boy's life. Do the straight thing; seek the kingdom of righteousness and honor and truth. Keep the pace with the boys about you and be filled with the joy of being a loyal and simple and natural and boylike servant of Christ."—Selected.

Brunswick Stew and Auction Sale.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Calvary Church on Friday night of next week will serve a Brunswick stew in the hut of the church, beginning at 6:30, for which they will charge 50 cents per plate. After the supper they will sell at auction the elaborate quilt they have been making for some time. This quilt has embroidered upon it 784 names of people. They expect a considerable sum for this quilt. All members and friends of the church are invited to be present.

—Yesterday morning's paper reported the death on Tuesday morning of Bro. A. J. Dixon, of Rockingham county. He died of tetanus which developed from wounds in his hands caused by a chain on a cow he was leading. He was a prominent merchant near Reidsville, and was a brother of Brother A. C. Dixon, of Calvary church. He leaves a wife and two small children. The funeral was held at Midway church where the deceased was superintendent of the Sunday school. In what unexpected and surprising ways may death come!

Dillon.

Mrs. Nannie Pegram Dillon, daughter of N. F. and Caroline V. Pegram, was born May 14, 1888, and died September 23, 1925. On December 23, 1905, she was married to L. D. Dillon. To this union there were born eight children, six of whom are living. In early life Mrs. Dillon professed faith in Christ and joined with the Bethel Methodist Protestant Church. The funeral services were conducted at the Residence near Colfax and at Pine Grove church by the writer assisted by Rev. Mr. Hill of the Colfax Wesleyan Methodist church. She was buried in the Pine Grove cemetery.

Bro. Dillon and the children and all relatives have our sympathy in this time of greatest loss. No one can take the place of wife and mother. However, we have the privilege of looking to Him who knows how to comfort in time of sorrow. May we by faith look forward to the time when we shall join our loved one again to separate no more.

Bivins.

Mrs. Lillie Bivins died Sept. 24th. She had been an invalid for some time. She bore her affliction patiently.

A short time before her death she told her children, she was waiting. We believe she is waiting for her loved ones, in glory.

Miss Bivins had been a faithful member of Edland M. P. church for about 15 years.

She was present when able at church services. When she became so feeble she could no longer attend her church services she was still interested in the progress of the church.

In her passing the church and community lost a faithful servant, the family a devoted member.

The funeral services were conducted from the Edland church Sunday, Sept. 27th, after

HOW TO ELIMINATE THE THOUGHT OF GOD.

The author of one of the Psalms of the Bible wrote: "I remembered God and was troubled." This experience has been common to many. Who is there that has not been troubled by the thought of God? There are other painful ideas, but perhaps the idea of God is the most painful idea.

To form the habit of trying to protect our minds against painful ideas. We try to close our minds against them and keep them out. We learn that certain of our ideas are connected together, so that one of them will bring the others with it. Hence in our anxiety to protect ourselves against the painful idea of God, we carefully avoid the ideas that are connected with this idea and likely to bring it. The Bible is connected with our thought of God. Hence when we are trying to escape the thought of God we avoid the Bible. The Bible is connected with our thought of God. Hence we refrain from going to church, lest it usher into our minds the thought that is painful for us. Ministers of the Gospel get into our minds the painful thought of God. Hence we avoid ministers. Christian people remind us of God, hence we avoid the company of Christian people.

When we forget God, we have a sort of peace; when we think of God we are troubled.

Why is it that the thought of God is painful to us? Is God such a monster that the idea of Him strikes us with intensest pain? No, God is a perfect being. In Him no fault at all can be found. Why then this widespread effort to banish the thought of God?

There are two explanations, one true in some cases and the other true in other cases. There are people to whom the thought of God is painful because they have an utter misconception of His character. They do not know of Him as He is, the All-Perfect One, and they impute to him a character foreign to his real character. They invest Him with qualities that make him really a hideous monster. Some of the idols found in heathen lands well represent the vicious misconception that people even in Christian lands may entertain in their thought of God. Such people need to have presented to them Christ's revelation of God as the loving Father of mankind.

Then there are many people to whom the thought of God is painful because they are conscious that in their own characters they are an offense to Him. They feel His righteous wrath abiding on them. This produces in their souls a deep unrest. They are under conviction of their depravity, and the pain they feel springs not from the character of God but from their own character. But their own depravity is not so obvious to them save in contrast with the high character of God. If they could forget themselves, they might endure and even enjoy contemplation of the character of God. But they cannot forget themselves; hence they try to forget God.

There is no remedy for these people so long as they maintain their attitude of hostility and insubordination to the will of God; but if they could gain the consent of their minds and hearts to confess before God their evil ways and turn from their rebellious attitude, what a profound and blessed and enduring peace they might find. They might pass into a new phase of human existence in which they would find the thought of God no longer painful, but joyful and gloriously inspiring.

What is your attitude to the person we call God?

—It was our privilege to attend the opening service of the new Fountain Place Church last Sunday. Dr. Lewis preached the sermon which we found intensely enjoyable. The music deserves special notice. In addition to the full choir there was a band of musicians with instruments of various sorts which seemed to harmonize almost perfectly. At the conclusion of the morning service Pastor Hendry made an appeal for money to pay a balance due on the building, which he said cost about $3,000 more than had been expected. I was struck with the pleasantness of the site of this new church. The building opened last Sunday was simply the Sunday school building. A church is to be built beside it on the corner of two streets intersecting at right angles. Then there will be room for a parsonage on the other side. The new building is neat and attractive, with steel ceiling in panels and with walls finished in plaster. There are class rooms in the first and third stories, while the assembly room is a large room on the second floor. Our people at this point are to be commended for their enterprise, and for what they have already accomplished. May their plans be worked out successfully.

NOTICE OF MEETING OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The 100th session of the North Carolina Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church will convene in the First Church, High Point, Rev. Geo. R. Brown, D. D., Pastor, beginning Wednesday, November 4th, at 9:30 A. M. The credential cards sent the pastors stated the hour of meeting as 10:00 o'clock. The hour fixed at the last session was for 9:30. Conference will be called to order at this hour. We trust all delegates and pastors will be present to respond to their name at the first roll call.

There are many perplexing problems facing us as a conference, for which we must seek a solution at this session. We therefore call upon all those who shall attend conference to come in the spirit of prayer. And we call upon all who shall remain at home, the members of the respective charges, to be earnestly in prayer that the Spirit of Wisdom may be in all the deliberations of our body, and that the Divine approval may be upon all that shall be done.

A. G. Dixon, President.

C. W. Bates, Secretary.

—On our way to Fountain Place church last Sunday we were misdirected and sent to West End M. E. Sunday school, where we found a very live Sunday school with a very capable superintendent. We found out our mistake in time to reach the true objective in time for the preaching service, but regretted that we did not see Fountain Place Sunday school in session.

—Rev. N. M. Harrison, Jr., is now pastor of a Methodist Protestant Church in Chicago and a student in Chicago University. He should be addressed at 7841 St. Lawrence Ave., Chicago, Ills. He will be missed at the college, but he is preparing himself for better service while he is serving an important new church in the great metropolis of the West.

—Bro. T. B. Waugh of Calvary Church has gone to a United States hospital to be operated on for appendicitis. His many friends will anxiously await report of his condition. He is secretary of the Sunday school and will be much missed while he is away. We hope he will soon recover and return.

All those who journey, soon or late;
Must pass within the garden's gate;
Must kneel alone in the darkness there
And battle with some fierce despair.
God pity those who cannot say,
"Not mine, but Thine," who only pray,
"Let this one pass," and cannot see
The purpose in Gethsemane.

THE CHURCH AND EDUCATION: A CONCRETE TASK.

By Rev. D. L. Fouts.

Nations fall because their pillars decay. Accepting this fundamental contention as correct, we may well pause for a moment and examine a few of the greatest pillars of the American nation. Some outstanding questions involved are. First, how firm are the pillars of our own nation? Second, can they stand the rapidly increasing strain of this modern scientific age; and, if not, can they be reinforced? Such questions as these have created in many thoughtful minds a profound sense of perplexity, and even of alarm. For America is seemingly nearing a great danger point in her civilization because two of her essential pillars, the home and the church, which are vitally related, are tending to totter under the ever-increasing weight of the present scientific world.

An examination of the home—the first of these great pillars — at once causes alarm. A few facts will show that the home of today has degenerated from the home of the past.

The present home life is a butt of ridicule, the growing evil of divorce, the new woman of the world, the man who has no time for his home, the decreasing birth-rate, and the decay of family religion all point toward the breaking up of the home. This is certainly a great menace to our civilization, for as home influences weaken, religion deteriorates; and when religion declines, the nation falls. Greece, Rome, and Russia bear silent witness to this fact.

An investigation of the church—the second great pillar of the American nation—shows evidences of a dangerous condition. Generally speaking the church of today is on trial at the bar of social judgment. While the church is no longer held responsible for not having averted the World War, it is rightfully held to account for not taking a leading part in the spiritual regeneration of this disorganized world. Again, the church has suffered a considerable loss of prestige in the last two generations. It is no longer held in its former high esteem, and it lacks authority as an instrument of religion. This loss of prestige on the part of the church is seen in its failure to attract membership. Only 44 per cent. of our population are members of any church, and about 20 per cent. of those are Jews, Roman Catholics, and other non-Protestants. The church is losing its power as a moral force because of its antagonistic attitude toward the changing world. Young people are suffering for the want of proper moral training, while the church is searching for heretics and attempting to defend its ancient traditions.

But the most discouraging factor is the failure of the church to function as an educational institution, and this unfortunate condition appears to be growing worse instead of better. The church was at one time the greatest of all educational institutions, but it has lost that position because of its failure to adapt itself to the changing conditions of the times. A few facts will show that the church as an educational institution is not adequately prepared to meet the moral and religious needs of the day. First, it has failed to take seriously its teaching function. It was the first to begin elementary and high school education, but has long ago lost that function to the public schools. Denominational academies are almost a thing of the past, and denominational colleges are placing less emphasis on religious training than on any other phase of education.

Church schools known as Sunday schools have not been standardized. Some progress, of course, has been made by these schools, but they are still characterized by inefficient teachers, an inadequate curriculum, and poor equipment. Second, they have a narrow appeal in that they reach only 25 per cent. of all children. Third, their period of instruction is critically limited to a half hour a week in contrast to 15 to 20 hours a week in the day schools. What is the result of the present policy of the church?

The result, beyond all doubt, is that there is growing up a generation of people who have no moral basis of citizenship. In the last half century crime has increased 50 per cent. in America. The juvenile court records show that an increasingly large percentage of this crime is among the young people. Again, the enlarging problem of sex immorality in the high schools, the growing evil of divorce, and the decreasing birth-rate all bear witness to this dangerous condition. The state has become alarmed. It realizes that some steps must be taken to preserve the old virtues of its citizens. Honesty, industry, truthfulness, and common decency must be taught and inculcated or the state will perish.

In view of the aforesaid facts steps must be taken to reinforce the great pillars of the American nation. But by what means can these pillars be strengthened? The solution lies in practical religious training. But if we accept this conclusion, we have yet to solve a perplexing phase of the question; namely, who is going to administer the religious education? Three plans have been offered.

First, give over the teaching of religion to the public schools. Second, withdraw the pupils from the public schools and establish the parochial system; or, Third, co-ordinate the church and public schools with a unified educational system.

Now let us notice the merits and defects of the first plan. Religious education in the public schools is advocated on the basis first, that the duty of the state is to take over the duties of any vital institution that fails to function properly; second, that religion is an essential element in all education; third, by adding formal religious instruction to the curriculum of the public schools, their haphazard methods of teaching morality would be eliminated; fourth, more children would be reached by this plan; and fifth more time could be given to instruction. This plan must be rejected on the grounds that there are historic, governmental, social, natural and religious arguments against formal religious teaching in the day schools. A careful study of this plan will show that the disadvantages outweigh the advantages. To introduce into the public schools at present any formal religious training would make it impossible for the state to preserve the unity of society, and in the end would invite national disaster.

The next plan known as the parochial, or Roman Catholic plan, is not satisfactory because it is undemocratic and narrow. We are living in a democracy, and the life of a democracy depends upon the existence of a system of public schools. Again, this plan is not good because it proposes too large an undertaking for the Protestant churches. The financial burden would also be too great; even if this were untrue, not all children would be reached. Finally, such a plan would not gain favor with all denominations.

Now since the necessary religious training cannot be provided either by the public schools or by the church, we are forced to accept the third plan—that of co-ordination of schools, home, and church—as the only real solution of the problem. A full explanation of the content of such a plan would exceed the limit of this discussion, but the important features may be briefly mentioned. This plan provides for a standardized system of religious education organized and administered by each local church; a system of schools in which various age-groups would receive one period a day of religious instruction (in the church) that would be acceptable for credit in the public schools; and a system so co-ordinated with the public schools and the home that compulsory attendance could be required. Standard requirements for teachers would be demanded, and each child would be permitted to attend the denomination of his choice. Such a program would be controlled by the church and financed by the church and by humanitarian drives.

What would be the results of such a system? first, the church, and the public schools would supplement each other; second, it would preserve the unity of society; and, at the same time, through teaching and through expressional activities, inculcate principles of Christian living in the hearts and lives of children who are to become citizens of the future. Finally, such a program would be the beginning of a real concrete means of realizing more completely the dynamic kingdom of God upon earth.

This plan of religious education may seem inadequate today, but we are not to resign ourselves to fate because no perfect system of training for character has ever been effected. No religious agency is perfect; few are beyond obvious and gross defects. Religious ends cannot be attained through ideals without concrete means; religious and moral objectives cannot be reached through mere sentimental utterances of religious piety.

In view of the conscious failure of the present system of training for character, it behooves the leaders of the State and the Church to co-operate in the adoption of some system of education that will provide for the moral and spiritual needs of the coming generations.

The young mother asked the man who supplied her with milk if he kept any calves, and seemed pleased when he said that he did.

"Then," she continued brightly, "bring me a pint of calf's milk every day. I think cow's milk is too strong for the baby."

WORSHIP AND HEALTH.

There is no royal road, no short cut to health, either by taking something out of a bottle or by purchased manipulations. There is no short cut by juggling with mystic phrases or by trying to stand on one's head through an insistence that one shall believe what his common sense tells him is incredible. All those curious cults to the contrary notwithstanding, there is no such short cut to human wellbeing. It has to be worked out according to law, and the best results are attained where the work is done intelligently, systematically, and in serene reliance upon the great fact that God is working within us to accomplish his good pleasure. It is the office of the church to make this clear; to teach the people to assert, not by jumps and jerks, but by the steady thrust of their own truest aspiration, the full potentiality of their natures in the name and by the help of the God who loves them.

The very worship and service of the church can be made, and should be made, a means of health. It can be used to develop interior courage and high resolve. It can be made an opportunity for the influx of that larger supply of vitality from the great reservoir of spiritual energy so that "as the day, so shall our strength be"—the presence of energy from within meeting and balancing the pressure of obligation from without.

It is a well-known fact that certain emotions have an expansive and liberating, as well as a steadying and strengthening effect upon the entire body. Every one has had these experiences when participating in some nobly conducted religious service. The church by the whole appeal of its worship and instruction, by its power in moral renewal and in spiritual uplift, can steadily induce those states of feeling and attitudes of soul which make for health.

If one will study closely the relation of worship and aspiration, reflection and meditation, to nervous poise and stability, he will understand how fruitful this line of effort may be made. It is the doctrine of modern philosophy that God is immanent as well as transcendent, immanent in all these forms of life; and that He is finding a growing and maturing expression of his beneficent power and purpose in their advance. In the words of Josiah Royce of Harvard, "God wins perfection through expressing himself in the finite life and triumphing over and through its finitude. God means to express himself by winning us, through the very triumph over evil, to unity with the perfect life; and therefore our fulfillment like our existence is due to the triumph of God himself."

All this is but a far-off echo of that divine word of the Master—"In this world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome!" By virtue of this victory, first vicarious, then representative, then individually effective through personal appropriation, we win our own victories. Life becomes a "continuous divine communication." It is the high office of worship and aspiration, of meditation and reflection, to keep wide open the arteries of the soul for the divine influx to the end that men may be lifted into the joy and efficiency of that more abundant life to which we are called.

It was not the pastor of a church, nor a learned theologian in some seminary, but the leading psychologist of America in our oldest and greatest university who said, "The sovereign cure for worry is religious faith. The tossing billows on the fretful surface of the ocean leave the deep places undisturbed. And to him who has a hold on the vaster and more permanent realities the hourly vicissitudes of his personal destiny seem relatively insignificant." If anyone would gain that poise and steadiness, that serenity and peace, which make for health twenty-four hours in the day, he can best accomplish it, according to William James, by personal, vital religious faith, making these mighty truths, these infinite sources of help, his own by daily utilization. —Dr. C. R. Brown, in "Faith and Health."

The very people who declaim against the use of drugs in time of sickness, all use soap. Soap is a drug; it is sold at the drug stores; its action is chemical. If one were furnished with plenty of hot water and time enough, he might wash his hands, his face, and his clothing clean without soap, but it can be done more quickly and easily with soap. For that reason all sensible people use this drug which we call soap. The very people who become so agitated over the use of drugs in healing disease constantly use soap without realizing, apparently, how funny they make themselves by their inconsistency. Charles R. Brown.

The year is rapidly passing and the budget isn't half met. October has been set aside as Ohio month. We who live in N. C. with so small a percentage of foreign population can't realize the great need of this work. Let's come to the rescue.

The treasurer was asked at the executive meeting last week to send every society an apportionment for each of the home missionary interests. They are being mailed this week. If you fail to receive one write and I will be glad to send another. The apportionment for Pine Ridge covers both the regular assessment and the building fund. If you failed to send a penny for each year God has permitted you to live, please send at least half the apportionment as soon as possible as Dr. Woodford must pay his bills.

Mrs. H. A. Garrett.

—The telephone company has arranged for direct conversation between Greensboro, High Point, Winston, Reidsville, and Burlington. Instead of calling "long distance," you name the town and the subscriber's number and you are immediately connected. There are special charges for out of town conversations, 15 cents between Greensboro and High Point, and a little more for the other points named.

—Six heavy bridges are to be erected by the Southern Railway immediately in North and South Carolina to take the place of lighter structures now in service. The largest of the projects to be undertaken will be the construction of a new bridge, 625 feet long, across the Yadkin river near Idols on the line between Winston-Salem and Charlotte. The present masonry stem walls will be topped out with concrete and five 125-foot riveted truss spans will be placed.

A WORD ABOUT THE CONFERENCE REPORT BLANKS.

The blanks will be sent out the first of this week and should be in the hands of the pastors before this appears in print.

Just two or three things need to be said. First, no changes have been made in the blanks except in the Pastor's Personal Report Blank. This has been simplified just a little, and will not be so hard to make out. The conference at Henderson voted that the question "Has your charge conducted the Every Member Canvass?—If not, why not?" be inserted in the Blank. This has been done.

The report blanks were made out last year better than ever, I have an idea, in the history of the conference. As a result the statistical tables, as they appear in the Journal, are the best and fullest of any of the conferences. Let's see if we can't do even better this year. To that end just one or two simple things can be done:

1. Don't put any figures where the blank says "Don't write here." It looks like that wouldn't need to be said. Nevertheless some of the brethren persist in doing so.

2. Don't report odd cents. If less than fifty cents disregard it. If more than fifty cents make it a dollar. That we are not alone in our difficulties with the brethren who do report cents is seen from this statement by the Statistical Secretary of the Iowa-Missouri conference: "If pastors would follow the even dollar plan of reporting it would save a world of trouble."

3. Try to make your figures as plain as possible. If you haven't a typewriter, try to get some one to help you who can make plain figures. We ought not to expect the Statistical Secretary to guess at what you meant to say. I happen to know that he had that to do in a case or two last conference.

4. Get your facts together and your reports complete before you come to conference. You may have to make a change or two in your financial blank, but everything else you can make out a week before conference meets.

Perhaps I should let Brother Surratt, the Statistical Secretary, make this statement. But I am interested in it since I must review the statistical reports of all the annual conferences. I know how important it is that the pastors' reports shall be as full and as accurate as possible.

Let me say this word in closing. Brother Surratt's Statistical Sheets—the papers from which the printer sets up the Tables in the Journal—were beautifully done. He alone should have the credit for the very few mistakes that appeared in the proof this year.

Now, if you brethren will help us, and I am sure you will, we shall be able to do the best yet this fall. C. W. Bates, Secretary.

What is a Wallaby?

This question was asked by President Coolidge when he was informed that a citizen of Tasmania had presented him with a wallaby for a White House pet. He learned that the wallaby is a species of kangaroo. The President accepted the gift but will not keep it at the White House. The wallaby will become an inmate of the Washington zoo.—Current Events.

THE GLAD RELEASE.

"No; I can't say I dread the coming of death," said a man who had long been a patient sufferer. "You know," he continued smilingly, "if one had been in prison a long time, suffering almost every conceivable pain, living upon worse than prison fare, because all other foods are denied him by his grim jailers, disease and ill health, he cannot but be glad to see the walls fall and get a glimpse once more of blue skies and sunlit fields."

This is what death means to the believer in Christ. It means release from prison walls: a vision of wider horizons and fairer outlooks. As Dr. Holmes truthfully says, "Most of us die before we really leave this world." We die to all its pursuits and pleasures and activities so that, as he intimates in another place, "Death is but the locking of the door of the deserted mansion from which the tenant already has fled."—Ex.

SPREAD THE LIGHT.

There is darkness, still, gross darkness, Lord.
On this fair house of Thine.

There are prisoners still in the prison-house,
Where never a light doth shine.

There are doors still bolted against Thee,
There are faces set like a wall,

And over them all the Shadow of Death
Hangs like a pall.

Do you hear the voices calling,

Out there in the black of the night?

Do you hear the sobs of the women,

Who are barred from the blessed light?

And the children—the little children,

Do you hear their pitiful cry?

O brothers, we must seek them,

Or there in the dark they die!

Spread the Light! Spread the Light!

Till earth's remotest bounds have heard

The glory of the living Word;

Till those that see not have their sight;

Till all the fringes of the night

Are lifted, and the long-closed doors

Are wide forever to the Light.

Spread—the—Light!

O then shall dawn the golden days

To which true hearts are pressing;

When earth's discordant strains shall blend

The one true God confessing;

When Christly thought and Christly deed

Shall bind each heart and nation,

In one Grand Brotherhood of Men,

And one high consecration.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Executive Committee of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the North Carolina Branch met at the First Methodist Protestant Church, High Point, N. C., September 29th.

Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, President, presiding. The meeting was called to order and opened with Scripture reading and prayer led by Mrs. Brown.

The following members were present. Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Hammer, Mrs. Harrell, Mrs. Andrews, Mrs. Nicholson, Mrs. Whitaker, and Dr. Harris Glascock.

In the absence of the Recording Secretary, Mrs. A. H. Ragan acted as Secretary pro tem.

The minutes of the First Executive Committee meeting were read and adopted.

Reports from the various Secretaries were given.

The Corresponding Secretary reported that the greatest advance in our work during the quarter was increased membership, 72 having been enrolled. Four Young People's Societies have been organized.

The Branch Treasurer's report was read. Receipts for the quarter, $841.68. Disbursements, $749.70. Bal. on hand, $91.98. We are far behind on our assessment. Are we doing our best in our financial support?

Undoubtedly we pay our dues but do we pay them when we should—each month? Our Missionaries are our representatives; they are dependent upon us for support. We expect them to keep faith in us. To them is due our deepest interest, our prayers and financial support.

"A Missionary Record in Every Home" is still our slogan. Does every member of your Society take this splendid magazine?

Mrs. J. E. Pritchard, Secretary of Literature, reported 45 packages mailed on request. Total Receipts, $26.54. Disbursements, $8.66.

Dr. Harris Glascock, Secretary of Tithers and Intercessors, read a report of her work during the quarter. Prayer calendars have been mailed to all the auxiliaries in the Branch and to the Young People's Societies. It is the wish of the Secretary that all of the Societies use the "Stewardship Study" found in the Missionary Record each month as a devotional.

This department of our work is rapidly gaining ground.

The banner committee reporter, banners made and ready for distribution. The following Young People's Societies received these banners in recognition of their splendid work: Precious Jewels, Greensboro. Mission Band, Burlington. Sunshine Circle, Winston-Salem.

The Presidents, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Hammer, are planning to have Mrs. Henry Hupfield, vice-president of Union Board of Foreign Missions, to represent our work at the annual conference which convenes in High Point, N. C., November 4th.

Planning the work for the Autumn.

The Autumn is one of the most favorable seasons for effective work, and the leaders of each society should unite in efforts to make the most of it. May we plan our work well and give a new impetus to the life of our Societies; and may this year be the very best in the history of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

Mrs. M. P. Harrell,
Corresponding Secretary,
North Carolina Branch.

WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY?

What is Christianity? Is it the Nicene Creed? That is a great creed, I think the greatest of all the Creeds. But it is not Christianity. What is Christianity? Is it the Catholic Church, or the Episcopal Church, or the Baptist, or the Presbyterian Church? No. These are important. They have made great contributions, but they are secondary. They are not Christianity. What is Christianity? Is it baptism or the Lord's Supper? They are very beautiful symbols and those of us who know them find in them deep significance. But they are not Christianity.

What is Christianity? Christianity is the spirit and quality of life breathed into people from fellowship with Jesus, and the people in whom it is you will find among all Creeds and Churches. Father Damien, the Catholic, going out to help the lepers and, as Robert Louis Stevenson said, shutting the door of his own sepulchre—that is Christianity. George Fox, the Quaker, proving the reality of the inner light that God had given him by the radiance of his living—that is Christianity. The Protestant missionary, murdered by the Boxers in China, sending back word to his ten year old son that when grown he should go out to China to tell the people who had killed his father about the love of God—that is Christianity. And the folks whom we have known, through whom God hath shined marvelously to make life beautiful—our fathers and mothers and friends—they are Christianity. When you are all through discussing the formal and elaborate things that are needed for the improvement of the Church, this is what the Church needs most of all: more Christians, to whom Christianity is keeping fellowship with the Master and learning how to live.—From a Sermon by Dr. H. E. Fosdick.

MARRIED.

Smith—Elliott.

On last Saturday eve, October 3rd, about 8 o'clock at the M. P. parsonage on Davidson Circuit, Miss Beatrice Smith became the bride of Mr. Claud Elliott.

Mrs. Elliott is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Asbury Smith of Alleghany section and is a well respected young lady.

Mr. Elliott is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Elliott, of Handy, and is a well known christian young man in his community.

The ceremony was performed by their pastor, Rev. C. E. Ridge.

Only a few present to witness the ceremony.

We wish for this young couple many days of wedded happiness. Mrs. C. E. Ridge.

LESSONS I GET FROM THE CHARACTER OF SOLOMON.

By A. Watson Chapman.

As long as I can remember, the character of Solomon has attracted me. When I was much smaller than I am now, the magnificence of his court fired my imagination and I often played the part of "king" in my games. As I have grown older, the character of Solomon has still held its appeal for me, although the reasons have now assumed a much more substantial form.

One of the first great lessons we can get from this character is that of peace. In a time when strife, petty wars, and martial diplomacy were the policies of the nations, Solomon's reign stands out as one of the utmost calmness and serenity, a foretaste of the final kingdom of the Prince of Peace. We are shown that it is possible for one to live a peaceful and good life although surrounded by evil and disturbing influences.

Solomon was allowed to choose what he desired, with the assurance that his wish would be granted him, and he chose wisdom. What a splendid argument for education, which helps to bring wisdom! How many of your friends, who have not profited by a knowledge of Solomon's choice, are stopping school, lured by the possibilities of immediate wage earnings? Our whole life is a constant search for knowledge, and it is our duty to see that those who come after us are provided with the best possible facilities for continuing the quest.

Solomon was just. So also must we be if we call ourselves Christians. A spirit of fair play is a requisite for a true sportsman, and we all want to be good sports. More often than we realize, do we pass judgment, consciously or unconsciously, upon the words or actions of others, and we should strive to see that our decisions are true to Christian principles.

The greatest thing that Solomon did was to build and dedicate the temple. As young people we are laying the foundations for a building called Our Life. We must be very careful with that building. It is within our power to make of it an ugly hut or a magnificent temple. How I hope that each of us will build a temple and dedicate it to God.—Selected.

THE POWER OF THE CROSS.

We never get past the cross. It grows more precious every day and every step of the Christian's way. It is heaven's trade-mark on everything that expects to pass the gates of heaven. The principle of death and resurrection is the profoundest principle connected with our Christian life. Abraham's Isaac had to be laid down in death and taken back in resurrection as God's Isaac before the promise could have right of way. Not only must our evil things be given up to be crucified, but our best things must go through the cross and come forth with the stamp of the resurrection. Our natural graces and virtues must be exchanged for supernatural gifts and endowments. Our very prayers must first often seem to fail, then come back to us as from the grave. Our service must be buried seed and bear the stamp of the cross. Yes, and even this earth itself must pass through its great and final catastrophe and come forth as the new heaven and the new earth with the sign manual of the cross as the mark of its divinity and immortality.—Selected.

CONDITIONS IN CHINA.

The following is taken in the main from an illuminating article in the "International Review of Missions," October, 1925, issue.

A definite anti-Christian movement has developed in China, caused by the anti-religious stream which has come from the outside, and the anti-foreign stream which arose in China, and is a reaction to the aggression of foreign nations and groups.

The Christian Church, considered by the Chinese both a religious and a foreign organization, has received the full force of these two streams.

The anti-foreign stream derives its strength from a re-study of the dealings of foreign Powers with China during the last hundred years.

The recent events on which the lime-light has been chiefly turned have been the twenty-one demands made upon China by Japan, and the delay in carrying out the provisions of the Washington Disarmament Conference.

These issues, however, have been regarded as only a part of a long persistent policy in which all foreign nations have had a share.

This policy, it is believed, is calculated to lead to the permanent disablement of China politically and economically for the benefit of foreigners.

It is supposed to include a deliberate attempt to denationalize young Chinese through missionary education. It is set forth as being a major cause of China's present weakness.

The economic and political 'invasion' and 'exploitation' of China are regarded as one side of the picture, the 'cultural invasion' as the other.

The intensest type of anti-foreign propaganda has been developed in certain centers; this has certainly been encouraged by Russian influences, which has had the greatest weight because Russia alone among the Powers has voluntarily surrendered her concessions and her extra-territorial privileges.

The point of most bitter attack has been the 'unequal treaties' which seem to stamp upon China the brand of inferiority among the nations.

The Christian Church is commonly supposed to be identified with this determined policy. Not only is it a part of the general impact of the West on China, but it is regarded as itself manifesting in the person of its missionaries that sense of superiority and domination that are peculiarly resented today. It brings its message as something better than China has produced. Its methods are alien, its government has been largely in foreign hands.

When grievous injury has been done to China by foreign nations the Christian missionary has not stood forth, as a rule, to protest.

It has been urged on behalf of the missionary movement that its success furthers the economic interests of the countries which send the missionaries. Is it not obvious to China that Church and State are but two aspects of the same aggressive force?

Herein then lies the extreme difficulty of the Chinese Christian today. From the West he has received the Gospel which has transformed his life. Among missionaries he counts some of the friends who have helped him most and whose friendship he is anxious not to lose. Nevertheless, he is keenly patriotic, he hates the unchristian elements in the West which are regarded by many of his fellow-citizens as an essential part of the Christian propaganda.

If he associates himself too closely with his foreign friends or the 'foreign' church he is accused of lack of patriotism and of yielding to superstition. If he takes a more independent line he runs danger of breaking a valued connection and losing some part of catholic Christianity.

Can we hope that right choices will be made by individuals and by Christian communities in China? Never was greater need for prayer and real sympathy and for our avoiding any kind of undue pressure even in the interests of truth itself. One of the most trusted Chinese leaders stated 'I have a very deep conviction that the Christian Church in China is called upon to show what Christ really means to the world. We ought to be absolutely loyal to God and Christ.' Fred. C. Klein.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

Western Maryland opened the new school year under most favorable circumstances. The enrollment will exceed that of any previous year and will total fully five hundred before the end of the year.

President Ward and his co-laborers tried a new experiment this year. "Freshman Week" was established and the first year students invited to come a week early. This time was used to instruct them in all college practices, including their social, religious and intellectual life. The plan succeeded in a wonderful way giving the new students a training that fitted them at once with a proper understanding of college life.

Good words reach us from High Point. The enrollment at the start is fully fifty per cent ahead of last year, coming close to the two hundred mark, and promises to be still greater before next June. This substantial increase in the number of students together with the various material improvements will make High Point College more attractive than ever. None of our schools has a more enthusiastic body of students.

The campaign in behalf of Kansas City University which was being planned by Chancellor Jones for the fall months has been postponed until later in the year. The goal established by Dr. Jones is $135,000 which will provide for all indebtedness, usual obligations and normal deficits. Pledges will be made payable in four annual installments which will distribute the burden sufficiently to place the goal within the range of reasonable possibilities. This sum must be raised if Kansas City University is to continue its service to the church.

The rally day orders continue to come in at a fair rate every day, although not in as large numbers as we had hoped. We are glad to report a substantial increase over the number received at this time last year but there are many others from whom we were expecting to hear. We know that many of our churches hold a rally day service and receive an offering for the work of the Board of Education who do not find it convenient to use our program. No fault could be found with this but we would be glad to furnish our publication for distribution if for no other purpose than to place the information it contains in the hands of our people. Some of the pastors are distributing them for souvenirs. We have enough on hand so that this can be done in a number of cases.

The Adrian College Commission has been scheduled to meet by the Chairman, Prof. L. B. Hull, at Adrian, Monday Oct. 12, at 9:30 a. m. at the college. This Commission was appointed by the Tiffin General conference and has been giving the questions submitted to it most careful consideration. Its final conclusions will be submitted to the Board of Trustees which meets in Pittsburg in December. In order to secure information that would help them to reach satisfactory decisions they distributed questionnaires to the ministers and leading laymen of the Adrian territory as well as to the alumni and former students.

Promoting Rally Day.

In conversation recently with one of our pastors he outlined the methods used in his church to secure a good attendance and offering on rally day. The date is set far enough ahead to permit of the fullest preparation. By means of the church Bulletin and the local papers the event is kept constantly before the congregation and community. The pastor sends out a letter or two to each member of his congregation urging their attendance and support. The Sunday school is given a definite part and responsibility not only in preparing the program but in the offering. Each class is asked to raise a certain amount of the offering and an earnest effort is made on the part of officers and teachers to have one hundred per cent attendance. The special envelopes are distributed one or two weeks before and the sum it is desired to raise kept constantly in view. It is little wonder that this church never fails to raise its twenty three per cent of the General conferences Budget on rally day and in fact always brings up its budgets in full. Such careful planning is bound to bring success.

We are filling more orders for programs every day. Because of the meeting of some of our conferences many pastors do not find it possible to hold their rally day service until late in October or sometime in November. The date, however, is immaterial. The main thing is to hold the service. Otherwise the local congregation will be robbed of the benefit and opportunity while the children will be deprived of the joy of taking part on the program. And in addition the Board of Education will fail to receive that much needed offering.

A card will secure for you all the programs you need. Address, Board of Education, 613 W. Diamond st., N. S. Pittsburg, Pa.

A Perfect Excuse.

The little girl had thrown a stick at her sister, a year or two her senior.

"Katherine," said daddy, "did you throw that stick at your sister?"

"Yes, daddy," was the defiant reply.

"Why did you do it?"

"Because," instantly replied the youngster, with her eyes flashing, "afterward she hit me."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CONFERENCES.

A number of the Young People's Summer Conferences have been reported through the papers, but it will be interesting to have a summarized statement of the summer's work.

This work has grown rapidly and also permanently. While the number of conferences each year has increased, the character of work being done has also had a corresponding development.

Young People's Conferences were held in the following annual conference districts:—Alabama, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa-Missouri, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, North Carolina, Ohio, Pittsburg and Texas, making eleven, besides a number of rallies which were held in other conferences.

Our records, which are about as accurate as can be obtained, show there were enrolled for the full course of study in these conferences, 528 between the ages of 15 and 18; 450 between the ages of 19 and 25, and 301 over 25 years, besides these there were 2236 who attended part of the time, making a total enrollment of 3560.

I have given the different age groups to show just what classes of people are attending. These figures show we are not only touching our present but the future leadership as well.

The effect of these conferences upon those who attend can be seen best by their own written statements, which were gathered during the conferences in order to find out their conception of the value of such conferences. I am quoting only a few of the several hundred received.

"I appreciate the wonderful course I received during the Young People's Conference. My eyes have been opened to many opportunities of life."

"This convention has been a great inspiration to me. I have received a broader vision of the opportunities of our lives and I am more determined than ever to be a worker for my Master."

"Through this convention, I have gotten a determination to do more for my Master."

"This conference has caused me to appreciate the great privileges and opportunities that are mine. It has made me more determined to show my appreciation by doing my best for my Master in my home church."

"I can truly say that this Young People's Conference has been very beneficial to me. The messages of the leaders have been most inspiring to me. I am glad that I have had the privilege of attending such a conference for Christian leadership. I am leaving here with a sincere desire to make of my life a worth while thing."

"The conference has meant more to me than I can possibly express. 1. It has broadened my vision of the Kingdom of Christ. 2. It has caused me to realize more than ever before the wonderful opportunities before the young people, also the great responsibilities resting upon them. 3. I have received inspiration and practical help to carry back to my church."

"This week has meant more to my life than broader vision of life. It gives me a greater I can express in words. It has helped me to see and appreciate God's love for us. I feel the great need of religious education."

"The Young People's Conference has meant much to my Christian experiences. I feel that God is nearer to me than ever before, and thru the inspiration and instruction received I feel that I shall be a more efficient worker."

"This institute has meant so much to me that I cannot express my heart's deepest feelings regarding it. The inspiration and instruction received here has led me to give my whole life and heart to serve my Master in any field that He may lead me."

"I have enjoyed this week very much. The classes I have entered have helped me to see how I can be of service to my church and community. I have also resolved to lead a better Christian life and in so doing help to lead others to Christ."

"I feel that I have a broader knowledge of Christian work and that I am better equipped to go back and teach others."

"The conference has been the greatest inspiration that I have ever had in my Spiritual life. It has filled me with a deeper interest in the church and all its departments. It has taught me, this year especially, a deeper understanding of prayer, and how to pray."

"This conference has meant for me a deeper consecration to Christian living and Christian service."

"This conference has given me a broader vision of God's Kingdom and has made me more eager to serve Him each day of my life." "The fact that this is the fifth Young People's Summer Conference that I have attended during the entire session is sufficient to show what I think of these meetings. I know of nothing of more value to Methodist Protestant young people either educationally or inspirationally."

Certainly a careful analysis of these statements reveals three things. An enlarged conception of the importance and character of the church and her mission. A better knowledge of how to work and a deeper consecration to Christ and the church, together with a larger Christian experience.

The Life Recruit list is interesting. Eight have decided to take up the ministry, twenty-three have offered themselves for Foreign Mission work and eleven for Home Missions, besides twenty-nine for other lines of full time service, making a total of seventy-one. 263 have signed Christian Workers cards indicating their local church, and 20 have accepted Christ as their Saviour.

No one can properly estimate the far reaching influence of these conferences upon the lives of those who attended and the blessing that must certainly come to the church through them.

I wish to gratefully acknowledge the splendid co-operation given me in this work, and the valuable assistance rendered by all those who have so faithfully given their service in teaching and otherwise assisting in the programs.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON, OCT. 18.

Paul Writes to the Corinthians.

Lesson Text: 1 Cor. 13:1-13.

Golden Text: 1 Cor. 13:13.

The Central Truth: Love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God and knoweth God." 1 John 4:7.

Scriptural Points.

1. The love in this chapter is not natural love, nor self-seeking love, nor reciprocal love, but the supreme grace imparted by the Holy Spirit. It is the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given unto us.

2. Paul calls it "a more excellent way" in the last verse of the preceding chapter: "But covet earnestly the best gifts; yet I show unto you a more excellent way."

3. Love is more excellent than eloquence. Without love as its motive and object eloquence is no better than the rude sounding of a musical instrument.

4. Love is more excellent than knowledge. The understanding of all mysteries, problems, and events is cold, dead, and even dangerous without the accompaniment of love.

5. Love is more excellent than faith. Faith may remove the mountains of granite, sin, unbelief, and failure, but love imparts godlikeness to the soul and life of man.

6. Love is more excellent than self-sacrifice. The giving of one's life and all his possessions may be nought but a selfish ambition or a vain imitation of goodness. But love is that diamond of character that shines with unvarying splendor in every step, adventure, and circumstance of life.

7. Love includes, produces, and sustains all the other christian graces. Love is patient—"suffereth long," merciful—"is kind," lonely—"envieth not," content—"vaunteth not itself," humble—"is not puffed up," courteous—"doth not behave itself unseemly," unselfish—"seeketh not her own," self-possessed—"is not easily provoked," charitable—"thinketh no evil," glad in the Lord—"rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth," burden-bearing—"beareth all things," trustful—"believeth all things," hopeful—"endureth all things." Love is the central stem from which the other christian graces blossom and grow and bear fruit.

8. Love is the permanent grace. Prophecies end in their fulfilment, eloquence is silenced by the touch of death, and knowledge escapes the memory, but love is as lasting as its Author.

9. All earthly knowledge is partial, one-sided, imperfect, and childish. In that good world knowledge will be complete. "But then shall I know even as also I am known." Then the fragmentary knowledge of earth will be discarded in the light of a full and complete understanding.

10. Love is the supreme grace—the greatest thing in the world. "And now abideth faith, hope, love: but the greatest of these is love."

Practical Points.

1. "Patience is love bearing burdens, kindness is love showing sympathy; generosity is love giving; humility is love taking a lowly seat; courtesy is love flowering into beautiful behavior; unselfishness is love forgetting itself; hope is love looking on the bright side; joy is the sunshine of love, affection is its warmth, and purity is its whiteness."

2. Love grows by exercise,—the more you give, the more you have. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth. and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." Prov. 11:24.

3. Love loves the unlovable. God is love. To love truly is to be and do like God. "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners (and enemies), Christ died for us." Rom. 5:8.

4. The love of enemies is a notable triumph of this supreme grace. "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." Matt. 5:44,45.

5. Love impels obedience to the commandments of God. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him and manifest myself to him." John 14:21.

6. Love insures that delightful "fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." "Jesus answered and said unto him, if a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." John 14:23.

9. Love makes one fearless of calamity, enemies, or death. There is no fear in love: but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love." 1 John 4:18.

9. To love God is to love one's neighbor also. "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen." 1 John 4:20.

—The Word of Life.

GRANDMA WHITE'S BEAR.

Before the days of automobiles and when northern Michigan was still new, something happened where Grandma White lives, something unusual. Grandma White has told the story many times to the four little sisters, Vera, Charlotte, Genie, and Baby Ruth, and it never fails to win their smiles.

It happened that one autumn day late in the afternoon a big boy was passing the farmhouse. He saw Grandma White in the yard. (She wasn't grandmother, though, to the four little sisters at that time.) The boy leaned over the fence to talk with Grandma White about wild raspberries. He said that if he thought he would be safe he would sleep out of doors that night. He had walked many miles before he had found a place where raspberries were plentiful, and he wished to pick both his big pails full of berries before he returned home.

"There is nothing to fear in this well-settled neighborhood," Grandma White replied cheerfully.

"That is what I told mother," the boy replied. "I told her not to worry about me because I might camp out tonight. She thinks there are bears in these woods."

"Of course," Grandma White admitted,

"when I was a little girl bears used to be common in this vicinity; but they are back in the deep woods now. We haven't seen a bear around here for years."

The big boy thanked her and said, "Thank you, what I told mother." Then he went swinging two big empty pails and whistling cheerfully.

When Grandma White was washing dishes after supper she said, "I wish I thought to invite that boy to come back for supper and sleep here tonight."

Later she went to the door for a look at the gathering twilight. The farmhouse was on a hilltop. Just as Grandma White had decided that the night would be warm and the boy could camp out without feeling cold, she noticed a shadow by the farmyard gate at the foot of the hill. A minute later she believed that she plainly saw Maud at the gate below. Maud was a colt.

After Grandma White went into the house and the lamps were lighted, she forgot all about Maud until she heard an animal step up on the porch.

"That is a queer thing for Maud to do," she exclaimed Grandma White. "She must have opened the gate and walked up the hill, I never knew her to climb the steps and come on the porch before."

Without stopping to think further, Grandma White opened the outside door and walked out on the porch to drive the colt away. The next minute she called: "Brother Isaac, bring a lamp quick! This isn't Maud! I believe it is—a bear!"

Brother Isaac instantly stepped to the door with a lighted lamp. Grandma White was just ready to back into the house when the light fell full upon a huge bear with bright and shining eyes.

Now it happened that Isaac was so startled by the sight of that bear that he forgot his sister. Instantly he slammed the door shutting Grandma White outside with the bear.

Fortunately the bear went down the steps faster than he came up, without offering to hug Grandma White or even to shake hands. That bear ran down the hill so fast that when Brother Isaac went looking after him with a gun a few minutes later he was nowhere to be found.

Grandma White didn't sleep well that night. She didn't blame Isaac for shutting her outside with the bear, because she knew that of course he didn't intend to do such a careless thing. Grandma White didn't sleep well because she couldn't forget that big bear camping out under the shining stars while her huge bear was out for a stroll.

The next morning Grandma White saw the boy coming when he was yet far from the farmhouse. When he came nearer she invited that boy in to breakfast. He said he would be glad to come to breakfast, because he had been picking raspberries since the early dawn and had not taken time to eat a bite.

"I am in a hurry to get home," he complained.

"Well, I am so glad that you are safe and sound this morning that I can't tell you how thankful I am," Grandma White said while she helped the boy to more pancakes, "because a bear came to call on us last night."

"He called on me too," the boy remarked.

"By hard work I had picked one of my two pails full of raspberries before dark. Then I wrapped up in my blanket and made myself comfortable for the night on a bed of pine boughs. I had put my pail of berries on a big stump before I made camp. I had scarcely closed my eyes when I heard an animal walking through the underbrush. Next thing I knew I saw a big bear walk up and lift down my pail of berries. The rascal ate every berry, pawful after pawful. Then he put the empty pail back on the stump and walked away.

"Of course I was glad the bear didn't offer to touch me, but I was mad enough at the loss of the berries. That is why I filled my pails early this morning and started for home."

The big boy said he was glad the bear called on Grandma White the way he did, because he had feared that his story would not be believed. Then how they laughed before the big boy went on his way cheerfully!—Frances Margaret Fox, in The Continent.

THE TRUE PREACHER'S MASTER PASSION.

Text: I Cor. 5:15—The love of Christ constraineth me.

Young Gentlemen of the Graduating Class: I beg the privilege of giving you as a class motto the striking words of Paul in explanation of his own ministry and service as a preacher and apostle. "The love of Christ constraineth us." I cannot resist the impulse to say to my brother moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., whom I also claim as a beloved friend, that I find in his noble address tonight as well as in his splendid pastoral service, and his wonderful and arduous work for the last twelve months as moderator of his great church, an impressive illustration of the theme which I would now seek to impress—that the true preacher's master passion is a supreme love for the Lord Jesus.

We were all made for love and to love. The human soul was built to pour the tides of a ceaseless and mighty affection upon worthy objects; upon the one object most worthy of a love which knows no limits to the worth of the beloved and recognizes no limits as restraining the amount of love due to this infinitely worthy object. We are not only reconciled to God in Christ; we cannot ask for anything higher or better for ourselves, our world, the universe, than that God should be exactly like Jesus whom we know so well; and so we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and love for Him makes it a delight to live with Him and for Him in the service He appoints to us as preachers of His gospel and grace. There is one activity which never tires; the more intense the activity the profounder the rest and peace which fills with blessedness the busy spirit. Thought wearies the exhausted brain, volition unnerves the baffled and puzzled spirit; imagination's flight is soon paralyzed by the lethargy of prosy commonplace; but the heart can love with a fervor and ecstasy which unifies all the force of the personality into one mighty passionate tide, and instead of exhaustion comes rest and instead of diminished energy increased capacity and intensified activity. The more we love the more we can love, especially when the worth and loveliness of the divine object grows before our rapt and ever-enlarging vision. The vision of Christ and the love of Christ keep pace with rhythm and majesty which marries heaven to earth in the real true preacher's soul. This explains the wonderful career of the typical preacher who swept like a cross of light and fire across the continents and seas to all the great world centers of population and culture without weariness or exhaustion, because driven by a force mightier than that which holds the Pleiades in place or guides the suns in their orbits, a passionate love for Jesus which valued Him at His true worth and made it easy and genial to live for nothing else than to know Him and make Him known. The preacher who bears this master passion on his bosom will find it a delight to preach and watch and pray and seek for souls and, instead of complaints, of difficulties, and hardness of task, will abound in hallelujahs and abundant thanksgivings.

Courage is the product of this love. Who can imagine Paul compromising or hedging, hesitating or dickering when the name or the claims or the character or the "truth as it is in Jesus" was concerned. Love is a combination of all the forces, sometimes as quiet and yet as resistless as the gravitation which rolls the planets, sometimes as tumultuous as the cyclone which tears the forest into shreds sometime a flaming weapon "sharper than any two edged sword." The man who said "the love of Christ constraineth me," also said, "If any love not the Lord Jesus Christ let him be anathema." Love for Jesus and for the souls and for the Gospel and truth of God is not shown by a passionless pacifism or indifferent neutrality which sometimes seeks to disguise itself as Christlikeness, because the real likeness to Christ is lacking, but it is reflected in the blazing love, in the wellnigh infinite passion of affection, of this most wonderful and successful of all the preachers of Jesus and His Gospel the world has ever known, who has said of himself, "So fight I not as one that beateth the air," and whose exhortation is, "fight the good fight of faith," "Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus." "Take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day and having done all to stand."

My dear young brethren, my hope and prayer of every one of you is that you may so exercise your ministry that you may deserve these inscriptions over your quiet resting place:

"The Love of Christ Constraineth Me."

"A Good Soldier of Jesus Christ."

"Love and Loyalty to Jesus Inspired Him."

A GOOD MOTTO.

"Look up and not down,

Look out and not in,

Look forward and not back,

And lend a hand."

This is the motto of the Anti-Can't class in one of our large churches. Let us make this our motto. "Can't" is one word that ought not to be in the Christian's vocabulary. "We can and we will" ought to be our slogan as we face the tasks that are just ahead of us. One of the greatest workers in all the world said, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." Our Master when He outlined His great world program to his faithful band of disciples said to them, "Lo, I am with you." On to victory in His strength and we can put our church and kingdom program over.—Belmont Baptist Bulletin.

CHURCH SERVICE.

Every one needs at least once a week the uplifting and spiritual nourishment which we receive through attending church service. There are 168 hours in each week. How many of these hours do we spend in idle moments? How many of these hours could be saved by planning our work and eliminating the unnecessary things? One of the divine commandments is to "remember the sabbath day to keep it holy." How many of us keep this one commandment? Sunday by divine command was established as a day of rest and worship. This day was set aside that we may rest . . . from physical and mental care, contemplate the works of the Almighty God and worship God according to the divine command. Our attendance at church services is the first step in keeping God's command.—Daily Northwestern.

KIND WORDS.

Kind words do not cost much. They are quickly spoken. They do not blister the tongue that utters them. They never have to be repented of. They do not keep us awake till midnight. It is easy to scatter them. And oh, how much good they may do! They do good to the person from whose lips they fall. Soft words will soften the soul. They smooth down the rough places in our nature. Care to say kindly things will drill our natures in kindness. It will help to pull up all the roots of passion. It will give us a spirit of self-control. It will make the conscience delicate and the disposition gentle. A woman cannot make a habit of speaking kind words without augmenting her own gracious temper. But better will be their influence on others. If cold words freeze people, and hot words scorch them, and bitter words madden them, so will kind words reproduce themselves and soothe and quiet and comfort the hearer. They make all the better elements of one's nature come trooping to the surface. They melt out stubbornness. Let us say a kindly word. No one can tell how many burdened hearts may be relieved, how many discouraged souls may be inspired. Say it every day; to the one who disturbs you while you are busy, asking for work; to the one who has almost lost hope; to all. Remember kind words can never die.—Review.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON, OCT. 11.

Paul at Corinth.

Lesson Text: Acts 18:1-11.

Golden Text: Acts 18: 9.

The Central Truth: Ours is a reasonable religion: the love of God is its reasonable motive, the will of God is its reasonable authority, and the power of God is its reasonable cause.

Scriptural Points.

1. Paul's stay at Athens was short. That proud city of Greek culture was not a promising field for the gospel. In the light of their worldly wisdom the gospel of salvation was the quintessence of foolishness.

2. "Came to Corinth." This city rivaled Antioch in Syria in wickedness and low-down profligacy. And, like Antioch, it was ripe for the gospel. The greater the need, the greater the opportunity. The more wicked the people, the more appealing will be the gospel.

3. Paul must have been in financial straits at this time. He at once formed a partnership with Aquilla and Priscilla to make tents. This was the occupation for which he and they were trained in youth as a means to a livelihood. Paul was compelled to do this for self-support. He had no missionary board back of him to finance his expenses. He still gave full time to the ministry, and worked at odd hours.

4. As usual, he first preached in the synagogue. He did this for two strong reasons. First, his hearers were more or less versed in the holy scriptures. They knew the prophecies concerning the promised Messiah. And, secondly, Paul loved his own race better than any people on earth. Upon the arrival of Silas and Timothy Paul became doubly earnest in pressing the gospel message upon his Jewish hearers. He was so anxious to win them.

5. Argument and testimony were Paul's method of preaching to his own people. He reasoned from type to the One typified, from prophecy to its fulfilment, and from the covenant of promise to Abraham to the covenant of redemption in Jesus Christ. And he bore testimony to the incarnation, ministry, death and resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth.

6. "They opposed themselves." This is a terrific statement of the unreasonableness of unbelief. To reject Christ is to reject life. Unbelief is soul-suicide. It is the starving casting away food; the poor casting away untold riches; and the sick and dying casting away their only remedy.

7 "Shook his raiment." No doubt he also shook off the dust of his feet as a testimony against these unbelieving Jews, in keeping with a commandment of Jesus recorded in Matt. 10:14.

8. "Your blood be upon your own heads." Paul had cleared his own conscience of blood-guiltiness. He had delivered his own soul of further responsibility. They must reap the fearful consequences of unbelief.

9. From the synagogue Paul went to a near by house of a converted Gentile, named Justus. Here he continued to preach the gospel.

10. But his ministry had been quite fruitful. The moderator of the synagogue was a noted convert. And many others accepted Christ.

And a church of much promise was organized.

11. Quite an unusual depression of discouragement came upon Paul at this time. It was likely to have been caused by the bitter opposition of the Jews. No doubt he was contemplating leaving Corinth for another field of labor. At this juncture the Lord came to Paul in a night vision. In His message there is an exhortation to be courageous and faithful,—“Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace.” And he gives a threefold promise of His unfailing presence, immunity from harm, and large success,—“For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee; for I have much people in this city. By means of His omniscience God counts His converts beforehand.

12. With this ample encouragement Paul continued his work there 18 months, and no doubt reaped a large harvest of souls.

Practical Points.

1. There are people of such amazing conceit and self-sufficiency and of such unspeakable stubbornness of self-will, from whom the gospel might be withdrawn. Of these the prophet wrote: “Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone.” Of them Jesus also spoke, “Cast not your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you.”

2. Manual toil is honorable in any station of life. Work with prayer will overcome the biggest difficulties and solve the toughest problems of life. Work of rescue of lost souls is most imperative. “Work while it is called today, for the night cometh when no man can work.”

3. Contemptuous, malignant, and final rejection of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, for which there is no forgiveness. It is the deadly sin.

4. There is large comfort in the divine presence. “My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest.” Ex. 33:15.

There is large achievement by means of the divine presence. “I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me.”

And there is complete victory assured by the divine presence. “Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us.”

5. The all-loving Sovereign permits sickness, loss, and adversity for the wise purpose of discipline. Unruly children need oftentimes to be chastised into the path of rectitude. “It yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.” Heb. 12:11.

6. Such dark providences, which are blessings in disguise, are matters of deep gratitude to God. “But we glory in tribulations also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience hope.”—Word of Life.

Give us, O God, a race of normal people Who walk no paths of morbidity apart; Who dwell not in the bog, nor yet the steeple, But in the dusty way, the busy mart; Who like their work, care for the folks about them, And make each day a thing of joy and song. This world of our's could never do without them.

They are the men who make it move along.—C. E. Flynn.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

Our Daily Bread.

Text: Give us this day our daily bread Matt. 6:11.

It is written: “Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning.” This statement of fact includes bodily food and all material needs and comforts of life. There are various channels through which food is given. The usual channels are the sea, the forest, the soil, the heat, the rain, and the toil of man. It is said that man's toil, producing and harvesting the foods grown from the soil, is only five percent of the total outlay of effort. The other ninety-five percent is credited to the soil, the rain, the solar heat, and the fruitful seasons, all of which God supplies. Therefore the harvests are God-given.

But God has other channels of supplying food. The ravens and an angel brought food to Elijah. The multitudes were fed by Jesus by the multiplying of the loaves and fishes. God can and will do this again if it becomes necessary.

Since food, for both body and soul, is God's gracious gift, it is our privilege and duty to pray for each. “Give us this day our daily bread.”

Let us first consider the duty of praying for Bodily Food.

The first promise of food is given in Gen. 8: 22: “While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease.” In Isa. 33:16 the righteous have a sure promise of the means of sustaining life. “Bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure.”

These promises are sufficient authority for praying for daily bread. We are here encouraged to pray for the means of producing bountiful harvests, such as rain and fruitful seasons. For the forces of nature do not always operate according to fixed laws. They are subject to the directions of the great Ruler of the universe. God gives or withholds rain according to the good pleasure of His will. He does this in answer to believing prayer. For it is written in James 5:17: “Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heavens gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.”

This petition, “Give us this day our daily bread,” is also a petition that our daily food might supply nourishment and strength. The blessing invoked at the beginning of each meal is also an invocation for needful nourishment.

Two meals a day is quite enough for those who do not perform hard labor. The ravens brought Elijah bread and meat in the morning and the same in the evening,—two meals a day. A celebrated doctor of New York City said ninety-nine hundredths of the American people eat twice too much. As a consequence we are a nation of dyspeptics. In the next place let us consider the need of praying for Spiritual Food.

The Bible is food for the soul. Jesus said to the tempter, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." The great facts, truths, and promises of the Word of God furnish nourishment and strength to the believing soul.

The atonement of Jesus Christ is food for the soul. This means of imparting and sustaining the life of the soul is set forth in the sixth chapter of St. John. Jesus said: "I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give him is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. . . . Whosoever eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood bath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. . . . He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him."

These passages mean that faith in the crucified Savior of the world appropriates salvation from sin and life from the dead. This atonement is the chief means of soul nourishment. The soul feeds upon Christ by faith. The Christian graces, called the fruit of the Spirit, are still another means of soul-nourishment. "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, faith, meekness, temperance."

The soul needs its daily bread as often as the body. David and Daniel, through prayer, fed their souls three times a day. "Give us this day our daily bread."—Word of Life.

A DIFFERENT KIND OF A TELEGRAPH.

May marks the anniversary of the sending of the first message by telegraph. Over the wires came the message. "What hath God wrought," and the waiting and doubting populace, marveled and believed. Since the sending of that historic message many variations of the telegraph have been developed but one of which I read the other day is I think the most novel.

When Thomas Edison, the great inventor, was a young boy he started his famous career as a newsboy on a train. Every day the train stopped for half an hour at Mount Clemens station and there the boy Edison became very friendly with the station master. One day he rescued the station master's little son from before a moving train and in order to show his gratitude the station master offered to teach Edison all he knew about telegraphy. Edison was delighted with the offer and gladly accepted it. A day or two later the lessons began and in ten days' time the boy managed to construct a complete set of instruments for himself. It was not long after that that Edison constructed a short telegraph line from the town to the station and set up his instruments in a druggist's shop. During the first month of the operation of this new line Edison sent three messages for which he charged twelve and a half cents apiece. In the meantime he had made such rapid progress in the study of telegraphy that he was able to teach his teacher.

That winter during several severe storms the telegraph cable across the river between Port Huron and Sarnia was cut. Edison thought he could communicate across the stream which was a mile and a half wide without the cable. Jumping onto an engine he pulled the cord of the whistle, causing it to give forth sounds like dots and dashes of the telegraph alphabet. Thus three short whistles were three dots, and a short whistle and a long one were a dot and a dash, etc. Edison gave the telegraph signal for Sarnia by blowing the whistle. These whistles were repeated several times: Toot toot toot-toot toot-toot; toot toot toot-toot toot-toot. It was not long before the operator at Sarnia realized that something unusual was going on at Port Huron. He heard the whistling and almost immediately it flashed over him that it was a message. Jumping on an engine he began to toot back a reply. In that way messages were whistled across the river until the cable was repaired.

DIARY OF A BIBLE—IS IT YOURS?

"January 15—Been resting for a week. The first few nights after the first of this year my owner read me regularly, but he has forgotten me, I guess.

February 2—Clean-up. Dusted with other things and put back.

February 8—Owner used me for a short time after dinner, looking up a few references. Went to church school. Have never been to church.

March 7—Clean-up. Dusted and in my old place again. Have been down in the lower hall since my trip to church school.

April 2—Busy day. Owner led union meeting and had to look up references. He had an awful time finding one, though it was right there in its place all the time.

May 5—In grandma's lap all afternoon. She is here on a visit. She let a teardrop fall on Colossians 2: 5-7.

May 6—In grandma's lap again this afternoon. She spent most of her time on Corinthians 13 and the last four verses of fifteenth chapter.

May 7, 8, 9—In grandma's lap every afternoon now. It's a comfortable spot. Sometimes she reads me and sometimes she talks to me.

May 10—Grandma gone. Back in old place. She kissed me good-bye.

June 3—Had a couple of four-leaved clovers stuck in me today.

July 1—Packed in a trunk with clothes and other things. Off on a vacation, I guess.

July 7—Still in the trunk.

July 10—Still in the trunk, though nearly everything else has been taken out.

July 15—Home again and in my old place. Quite a journey, though I do not see why I went.

August 1—Rather stuffy and hot. Have two magazines, a novel and an old hat on top of me. Wish they would take them off.

September 5—Clean-up. Dusted and set right again.

September 10—Used by Mary a few moments today. She was writing a letter to a friend whose brother had died, and wanted an appropriate verse.

September 15—Clean-up again.—Bulletin, First Baptist Church, Jacksonville, Fla. L. G. Broughton, pastor.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Corinth, Littleton, Ct.—I have not been where to begin. Have not felt like writing any at all since mother and father died.

The room in which I now sit, the death angel has visited five times. Calls for three were years apart. First, a great uncle by marriage; second, his wife; third, an aunt; fourth, mother; then in course of 7 weeks father. This room is a hallowed place. I feel that it is almost too sacred to be used even in a very quiet way. Now here with a 15 year-old boy we have from the Children's Home of Greensboro. We want to so live that when the death angel comes for us we will be just so glad to go!

Conference is fast coming to a close. People are getting their crops in fast. Do hope that every cent of pastor's salary and conference claims will be paid and that we will have Bro. O'Briant returned as pastor. He has endeared himself to this people. We are always glad to have him to visit us and serve as pastor. I know he wrote about having Bro. Stubbins help in our meeting, but I just want to voice his sentiments (Brother O'Briant's) that we all did enjoy having Bro. Stubbins help. Every sermon was just what we needed, and helped us so much.

And now I want to tell you how Mrs. Bernice Carter has helped us. She has been giving choir practice every Friday night for quite a while. For the meeting she ordered a set of Billy Sunday's hymn books; since then she has collected money enough to purchase an individual communion set. Sacrament was administered yesterday to quite a number. We have children enough for one table.

The young ones are fast coming to fill the older ones' places. Let us pray that the mantle of the fathers and mothers may fall upon us. Fanix Barnes.

Welch Memorial Church.—It has been some time since there appeared an article from our church. The pastor being busy did not write, and we do not know why the reporter does not write once in a while. I suppose she never sees anything worthy of mention. Of course we are not doing any great things, but we are still going ahead. During the hot summer months the attendance fell below normal, but for the last few Sundays it has been improving. I remember the Sunday-school attendance for the last three Sundays: the first was 172, then 214, and 215. We are looking for a still larger increase for next Sunday. There is a special evangelistic meeting in progress in town, and all of the churches are cooperating, so we do not have any evening service, and will not so long as the meeting continues. Large crowds are attending the meeting and Mr. Stephens is doing some good preaching. We are hoping for a great revival.

Since our last report we have had two very sad funerals in our church. The first was that of little Martha Ery, the daughter of Brother and Sister W. W. Ery. She had been only a few days. She with her parents had gone on a visit to the country; little Martha was taken sick and the family came home on Sunday. A physician was summoned and he pronounced that she had the diphtheria. We were in to see her that night after the service, and did not think her so very serious, but she passed away the next morning about six o'clock. The funeral took place the following day, Tuesday, July the 21st, at the church. There was a large crowd at the funeral, and many floral offerings. The Rev. J. H. Moton of Greensboro, former pastor, and Rev. O. L. Routh, pastor of the Holiness Church, and a neighbor to the family, assisted the pastor with the service. Brother and Sister Fry have our deepest sympathy.

The next sad funeral was that of Brother W. M. Welborn, who passed away last Saturday evening at ten minutes after ten o'clock. He had been suffering with a cancer on the face for about four months.

Brother Welborn was one of our oldest and most faithful and beloved members. In his illness we were in to see him often, he realized his condition, and one day told me that he knew that what he had would soon take him away but he was ready to go, there was nothing in the way between him and God. At one time he was thinking so strongly about the future home, and that it would only be a few more days until he would be there, and it made him happy, he shouted and praised the Lord for some time. We were standing by his side when the end came. After a brief struggle he fell asleep in Jesus. The three daughters and their families, with the wife and mother, besides several other friends and members of the Church, were all present when the end came. On Monday the 28th the funeral took place in the Church at 2:30. A large concourse of people were present, the house was packed, the annex doors had to be opened to accommodate the people. I think it one of the largest attended funerals, and the largest floral offering I ever witnessed. Rev. J. H. Moton of Greensboro, a former pastor, and Rev. O. L. Routh, a neighbor and friend, assisted the pastor with the service. Rev. Edward Suits was present but did not take any part. He came as a friend. The interment took place in the burying ground at Fairfield Church, where he was one time a member.

Next Sunday I am to be with Brother J. W. Hulin, at Love Joy, where we will begin a Camp meeting, which will continue for several days. Pray for us that we may have a real revival and that many may be born into the Kingdom of our Lord. T. E. Pierce, Pastor.

Friendship, Stanly.—Another conference year is drawing to a close, we have but two more sermons to enjoy before conference. Our pastor presented two excellent sermons yesterday to a right large audience.

The ladies of Friendship, got together yesterday and organized a "Ladies' Aid Society." Hope they will go forward in the society and accomplish much and lasting good toward the church.

To the members of Stanly Charge: Don't forget the fourth quarterly conference to be held at Friendship Saturday, October 17, at one o'clock. More later. Reporter.

Notice, Vance Ct.—Our fourth quarterly conference will convene at Spring Valley, Saturday before the third Sunday in this month. Trusting to have a good report from each church.

We are some what behind financially speaking, but if every member will put his shoulder to the wheel we can go to the annual conference with a clear record.

What we do we must do quickly. Just think friends, only a month to conference. We are surprised that the months have flown by so quickly, and so many things left undone.

Let's get busy and bring in a good report. May God help us to do it.

M. P. Chambliss, Pastor

High Point.—The Evangelistic Campaign, conducted by George T. Stephens and his corps of workers, has entered its fourth week and is increasing daily in interest and attendance. Scores of people are being saved after each night service. Sunday night the crowd was so great the Tabernacle could not hold them. On Friday night Mr. Stephens preached a powerful sermon on "The Second Coming of Christ" and this was followed up by a gripping one on Sunday night on "The Day of Judgment." He says that the great trouble with this generation is that we do not read and study our Bibles often enough, and no doubt he is correct in this conclusion. The prayer meetings in the homes are being held all over the city on three afternoons each week, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Meetings in the factories, mills, and shops are being held at the noon hour. Beginning with this week services will be held each morning from 10 to 11 o'clock. On Sunday afternoon a mass-meeting for women was held in the First Church, when the main auditorium was almost filled. Miss Jean Lamont, woman's worker and Bible teacher of the party, presided at this meeting, and a beautiful prayer was offered by Mrs. E. K. McLarty, wife of the pastor of Wesley Memorial M. E. church. Prayers for friends or for themselves were asked by many persons. The women who are aiding Miss Lamont to the fullest extent in this meeting, seemed deeply stirred by her earnest talk. High Point seems to be on the eve of a great and far-reaching religious awakening.

The Woman's Foreign and Home Missionary Societies held their monthly meeting at the church Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock with a good attendance. In the future, two meetings will be held each month, one for business, and another for a programme and Mission Study. The Study books have been ordered, and a committee has made out the programs for the ensuing six months. The Home Society has sent in the amount of $40.50 towards a Scholarship in High Point College. Three new members, Mesdames J. D. Hardy, C. E. Hayes, and J. A. Atwater, were welcomed into the Society. The November meeting will be held in the home of Mrs. H. T. Hancock.

The ladies of the church will serve supper at 6 P. M. on Thursday to the Business Girls of the city and the Stephens party. An attractive menu is being planned.

Arrangements and plans are being made for the entertainment of the N. C. conference which will meet here November 4th.

The first attraction of the Lyceum Course at the College, the Criterion Male Quartet will be presented Tuesday evening.

A cablegram from Wyatt A. Pickens to mother announces his safe arrival at Buenos Aires, Argentina, on October 4th, after a lightful sea voyage of 23 days and an interesting trip across the Andes Mts.

We are pleased to note that Miss Bencini, the young daughter of Mr. and H. A. Bencini, is recovering nicely from operation for appendicitis.

Shiloh.—All of us enjoyed Saturday afternoon and night. Dr. and Mrs. Dixon were us. Mrs. Dixon organized a "Home Missionary Society" of twenty-four members. W. S. Miller, president; Miss Macy M. vice president; Mrs. A. W. Palmer, corresponding secretary, and other officers elected. The meeting will be held at 7 o'clock Sunday afternoon, October 11.

Our Sunday school had very good attendance October 4th: 43 present, collection, $70; number of chapters read the past year 318.

We are all working to get every one in the community in Sunday school. Every child and adult should be in Sunday school. The children should be there to learn and the old people to teach.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Fountain Place, Burlington.—Sunday, October the 4th, was a great day for Fountain Place M. P. Church, which was the occasion of the Formal Opening of the new Sunday school building. Rev. T. H. Lewis, D. D., D., was the speaker of the day, and delivered two powerful sermons, to large congregations. Several hundred dollars was received to help on the new building.

In the morning service we were glad to have the presence of Rev. J. F. McCulloch, D. D., Editor of Methodist Protestant Herald, at night of the Rev. T. M. Johnson, D. D., pastor of our church at Mebane, N. C., member of the executive committee of General Conference.

The building itself is two full stories, of dark brick, and has basement under entire building.

In the basement is located the boiler room, kitchen and dining room, ladies' rest room and nursery, ladies' and men's toilets.

The first main floor has a large hall, entrance, one class room and the general assembly, seating 250. The second floor has class rooms with beginners and primary department.

The building is heated with steam.

This plant gives us ample work facilities for the present and we are expecting a steady advance along all lines of service.

This new church has done wonderfully notwithstanding the difficulties under which it has labored all the year. The membership has almost doubled by the time conference meets. All claims will be paid including $1,200 on debt incurred in the building of basement last year. And in addition to this quite a sum raised and paid on the new building this year. C. H. Hendry, Pastor

Thank You, Concord!

High Point College certainly thanks the Christian Endeavor Society of Concord for its contribution. This Concord society has recently donated a number of magazines for our library at college. The magazines have not been named yet but we will have the very best publications on the subject of Religious Education. We thank you, Concord, you are the first to come to the aid of our library magazine department this year. P. E. Lindley, High Point College.

Oak Grove, Cleveland Ct.—Oak Grove is although she has failed to send in her report for some time. We organized our Christian Endeavor Society three years ago. We now enrolled one hundred members. This organization has done a great work in training, women, and boys and girls to work for the Master.

Junior department have on roll thirty intermediate department have on roll fifty. This society is a live wire for our church. A protracted meeting began August 21. Led with us Brother Bethea who did some preaching, and much interest was taken in the meeting. Many souls were saved. This is the greatest meeting in the history of the church. Also has Bro. J. D. Morn's done a great work to build up our church.

Sunday school is doing a fine business. Sunday school is the foundation of our church. We have a good attendance every week, and much interest is taken in the Sunday school work. Bro. C. T. Haynes is our superintendent; he is a man of God, full of love and kindness to all.

Dear readers, remember us in prayer, may we all some day meet in that land where God has prepared for those who have obeyed his commandments. May God's richest blessings abide with all is my prayer.

BIBLE RULES FOR GIVING.

What did the Lord Jesus say about giving? The more blessed to give than to receive—Matt. 23:35.

What kind of a giver does God love? God loves a cheerful giver—2 Cor. 9:7.

What have we received, and how should we give? We have received, freely give—Matt. 23:23.

How much should we give? Every man shall give as he is able according to the blessing of the Lord thy God, which I have given thee—Deut. 16:17.

What promise did Jacob give to give? I said that Thou shalt give me, I will surely give thee the tenth unto Thee.—Gen. 28:22.

Are our gifts accepted? We must be first a willing mind, it is acceptable to God that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not—2 Cor. 8:12.

Should we honor the Lord? We should honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of thine increase—Prov. 3:9.

Is said of him that pities the poor? He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again—Prov. 19:17.

How often shall we give?

Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him—1 Cor. 16:2.

What promise is given to those who consider the poor?

Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—Psalm 41:1.

How should we treat those who ask for favors?

Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not away—Matt. 5:42.

What is God's greatest gift to man?

God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life—John 3:16.

What should we say for this?

Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift—2 Cor. 9:15.—Selected.

A GRANDMOTHER'S RULES.

Somebody's grandmother has given to her descendants these admirable rules of conduct:

"Always look at the person to whom you speak. When you are addressed, look straight at the person who speaks to you. Do not forget this.

"Speak your words plainly; do not mutter or mumble. If your words are worth saying, they are worth pronouncing distinctly and clearly.

"Do not say disagreeable things. If you have nothing pleasant to say, keep silent.

"Think three times before you speak once.

"Have you something to do that you find hard, and would prefer not to do? Do the hard thing first, and get over with it. If you have done wrong, go and confess it. If your lesson is hard, master it. If the garden is to be weeded, weed it first, and play afterwards. Do first the thing you don't like to do, and then, with a clear conscience, try the rest."—Selected.

GETTING EVEN.

To get even with one who has wronged us is to get down as low as he is. The more outrageous his injustice, the lower we shall have to get if we insist upon getting even with him. So "getting even" always leaves us worse off than we were before. If ever one man was unfairly treated by another, it was David, at the hands of jealous, unworthy, infuriated Saul. But when David's chance to get even came, he preferred to stay on the heights. To "revenge" ourselves is to return the sort of thing that was given to us. It is as though, having been cheated by counterfeit money, we wait for an opportunity to pass some of the counterfeit back to the cheat. No matter what we have suffered, we cannot afford to do that; for then we have been injured twice, and the second injury is far worse than the first. There is a better way of "getting even" with one who, in order to harm us, has descended to a low level. It is to stay above him in God's company, and by love to bring him up to that level.—Sunday School Times.

NOT AS THE WORLD GIVES.

By Ella Parks Martin.

John 14:27.

"Not as the world gives" dost Thou give, O Master,

Lord of my life and Saviour of my soul!

For peace the world gives when the sea is smiling,

But Thine comes when the stormy billows roll.

"Not as the world gives," when the sun is shining,

And all of life is one glad, happy song,

But Thy peace dwells in hearts that walk in darkness,

When life is bitter and the way is long.

Thy blessed, wondrous peace, O Christ my Saviour,

Steady it keeps our hearts in hours of pain;

"Not as the world gives," but as Thou dost measure,

We look into Thy face and loss is gain!

SOME DAY.

Someday the tangles will be all smoothed out; The crooked be put straight, the rough made clear;

Poor foolish words, that had so little weight, Yet weighed so heavily, be sweet and dear; And friendship shut away—that might have been

A little help, a sunshine gleaming in Upon life's shadowy way—

Will come to us some day.

Some day the hands we once had scarce dare touch,

The eyes that shone too distant for our gaze, Will stretch toward us with their eager help, Will bend above us with their gentlest rays:

And voices now receding on the ear

Will nearer come and nearer, sweet and clear; And dear things far away

Will be our own, some day.

YOUR CHURCH.

By C. L. Poulston.

If you want to belong to the kind of a church,

Like the kind of a church you like,

You need not slip your clothes in a grip

And start on a long, long hike.

You'll only find what you left behind—

For there's nothing that's really new—

It's a knock at yourself when you knock your church.

It isn't the church; it's you.

Real churches are not made by men afraid

Lest some other church gets ahead.

When everybody works and nobody shirks,

You can raise a church from the dead.

And if while you make your personal stake,

Your brother can make one, too,

Your church will be what you want to see.

It isn't the church; it's you.

Albemarle.—The work here is moving along as well as could be expected. We have been hampered quite a bit on account of some of our strongest people leaving the city; among them have been Brother J. E. Gantt and his good family who have moved to their new home in Sarasota, Florida. Brother Gantt has for several years been the real back-bone of this church, not only in a financial way, but in every other way that tends to make a work progressive. At the time of his departure for Florida he was superintendent of the Sunday school and one of the pastor's closest advisers. The church will and does miss him and his family, and the pastor will miss his good friendship and comradeship.

Brother C. L. Hatley has been making a good superintendent and the work under his leadership will continue to grow as it has in other days. The attendance now is as good, or better than usual at this time of year.

We have recently organized a wide-awake Christian Endeavor Society, the seed of which was sown during the recent Young People's Conference at High Point College. Miss Verdie Lee Harward is the efficient president, very ably assisted by Arthur Coley as vice-president and Louise Greene as Secretary and treasurer. Several meetings have been held, and from the work done in these meetings it is the humble opinion of the pastor that a great work is going to be done by these young people.

Our attendance at church services had fallen off a bit due to the fact that quite a few of our folks were taking their vacation but is about normal again.

Brother Little knows how proud we are of our Register of Deeds, John U. Whitlock, and we are confident that our confidence in him is well grounded. He is working among the young people of the church, and as chairman of the board of stewards and other positions he holds in the church endears him to the hearts of all our people.

Brother Whitlock is our delegate elect to the tenth session of our annual conference, and we know we will be well represented.

We are behind in finances, and this is the first time in the history of the church, I am told, that such has been the case this near conference, but "hard times" and conditions over which we had no control have brought this about. We are hoping to come out, and I believe we can if every one does his or her best.

We would like to mention the names of others who are doing much to put across our program, but time and space forbids. We will endeavor to do this at a later date.

J. L. Trollinger, Pastor.

Midland Charge.—It has been quite awhile since I sent in a report, but have not been able. We have been climbing all the while. We feel indebted to Bro. D. N. Trogdon for the financial help that he gave us. Also to the financial effort of Mrs. Talmage Bunkreyer, and the co-operation of the different churches in placing a late incumbent in the parsonage. We surely appreciate these comforts. Space will not permit us to mention all that have shown us so many acts of kindness, by giving us milk, butter, and vegetables and fruits.

May the Lord abundantly bless each giver. We have had good revivals at each church. Our fourth quarterly meeting will be held at Giles Chapel the 17th of October. All the churches are requested to be well represented.

New Union.—We started our meeting the fourth Sunday in July. I had two appointments at this time. I went to Brower and preached at eleven. Bro. G. A. Loflin did the preaching at Union until Friday night, when the meeting came to a close with three professions. Five united with the church, others coming in at my next appointment. Bro. Loflin surely did preach some wonderful sermons. He is a noble man.

Brower.—On fourth Sunday in August we began our meeting at this place with Rev. W. B. Thompson of Granite Quarry as my help. He did some able preaching. The church was greatly revived. Three professions and reclamations, none united with the church at this time, but three are coming in later.

Cedar Falls.—On fifth Sunday in August, Rev. C. E. Ridge came to me as help at this place. He did some able preaching, also delighted all with a solo each night. He stayed with me until Friday night. I did the preaching Saturday night. Then on the first Sunday in September, Rev. Fred R. Love came as my help at Charlotte. At eleven he preached at this place. Bro. Hillard, at Cedar Falls, and I conducted a funeral at Brower. Then I went to Charlotte in the afternoon, then to Cedar Falls at night. Then on Monday to Charlotte, and back to Cedar Falls Monday night. Then I left the meeting in the hands of the laymen. They closed next Sunday night. There were fifty-one reclamations and professions. Ten joined the church at this place with more to follow later. Here I must say that the professions were divided among the M. E. church, also the Baptist. As for the workers in the meeting, they rendered such good service you could not tell any difference in an M. P., M. E., or Baptist, which we surely did appreciate. This was a wonderful meeting. I saw mothers come to the altar with babes in their arms and were happily converted, many were made to praise God aloud. It was an old time revival. Several of the older people said it was the best meeting ever held in that town. The meeting at Charlotte closed the second Sunday night, with five professions and reclamations, and the church much revived. Brother Love did some old time plain preaching.

Giles Chapel.—Third Sunday in September, Rev. Joel B. Trogdon as pulpit help. He preached some wonderful sermons which were enjoyed by all, was sorry he could not stay any longer than Wednesday night. As he was not feeling well he went home. As this is Brother Trogdon's and family's home church, we all were delighted to have them all in the meeting with us. I closed the meeting on Friday night. The success was not what we had hoped for, but the church was greatly revived. There were three professions and reclamations. I feel there was much good done at all the churches.

Yours for the Master, C. H. Hill.

Haw River.—Our fourth quarterly conference will be held at Mizpah church on Saturday before the 2nd Sunday in October at 11 o'clock. Every official will be needed.

Don't forget that at this conference you will instruct Brother Walter Maxwell, the delegate to conference, as to whom you desire for pastor next year.

Unfortunately for the good people of this charge they have made it one of short pastorates. The average pastorate for the last 25 years being only one and a fraction years. The present incumbent has made over the average, having served two years.

So it is important that you come to the quarterly conference to maintain or break the record as you may desire.

This has been a splendid year for us in many ways. We have installed three pianos, built a new church at Mizpah, placed a new carpet at Brown Summit, painted the interior of parsonage, and had gracious revivals at most of the churches with splendid ingathering.

W. D. Reed.

Orange Charge, Chestnut Ridge Church.—The revival services began here Sunday, September 27th and closed Friday, October 2nd. Rev. R. M. Andrews, D. D., preached the first sermon of the series. Rev. D. R. Williams preached Sunday afternoon.

Rev. N. G. Bethea, our promised help, came to us Monday and preached for us three times each day until the close, except one sermon by Rev. M. Ivey Crutcherfield.

These sermons were all good. The series by Brother Bethea was hard to beat.

Visible results: 20 conversions, nine additions to the church, church revived, three additions to the Efland church.

A purse of $35.00 was presented to Bro. Bethea. To all these brethren we say "Come again."

B. M. Williams.

Officials Orange Charge, Notice.—The fourth quarterly conference will meet with the Union Grove church Saturday before the fourth Sunday in October.

Conference called to meet promptly at 2:00 P. M.

The business of the year to wind up, alternate delegate to elect, delegate to be instructed as to pastor for next year and many other things to look after.

Please make it a point to be there.

B. M. Williams.

Happenings on Greenville Ct.—On fourth Sunday in July I commenced my meeting at Matthews Chapel. Rev. R. S. Troxler was my help. Bro. Troxler did fine preaching and good work. His sermons were much enjoyed and the meeting resulted in a glorious revival—several reclaimed—and some three or four professed faith in Christ.

On the 1st Sunday in August we commenced our special meeting at Hobbs Chapel. The pastor preached at 11 o'clock and Brother J. B. O'Brian came and preached in the afternoon and till close of meeting. We were hindered one day by rain. The last rain we have had till a few days ago. Brother O'Brian did fine work and his services were greatly enjoyed. The meeting resulted in several reclamations and a great revival in the church.

On the second Sunday I commenced my meeting at Ebenezer; the pastor preached in the morning and in the afternoon. On Monday morning Rev. S. L. Spencer, from Halifax Ct., came and preached twice each day till close. Brother Spencer did some great preaching and the meeting resulted in much good to the church and community.

On third Sunday we commenced at Wesley's Chapel. Sister Dixon was with me from the start to finish. Dr. A. G. Dixon came on Monday. Dr. and Sister Dixon are so well known as good preachers and revivalists that it is needless to remark here.

On the first Sunday in September we commenced our meeting at Philadelphia. Brother and Sister Dixon were with me from start to finish. We enjoyed a great spiritual uplift. Brother and Sister Dixon are much loved by the people here. Sister Dixon has helped here and elsewhere on charge for three successive years. We have got so we look for their annual visit. We have had good preaching and good revivals at each church on charge this year. Several have joined church as a result of our meetings. We had such large numbers to join last year that we could not expect to have so large numbers to join this time. We are profoundly grateful to all these good messengers of God and to Him who hath called them in to the service. May God bless them and continue to make them a blessing. There will always be a hearty welcome over here for the above servants of God. Come again.

Since these meetings have closed we have been going on with the regular routine of work. On third Sunday in September we had a very busy day preaching three times, taking four into church, baptising two adults, and three children. You are going to hear of something happening over here on Greenville Ct. I heard over an airwave yesterday. Our fourth quarterly conference will convene at Philadelphia on Saturday before 3rd Sunday in October. Preaching at 11 o'clock, much business of quarterly conference. Brethren, be sure to come; it is winding up and we want to make it a record conference.

We keep busy but we have had no earthshakes over here. H. L. Powell

Concord.—Pastor Lindley preached two very impressive sermons Sunday. A large congregation was present at both the morning and night services. At the eleven o'clock service Mr. Lindley brought a message from the story of Samson. The subject for the evening worship was, "A man sent from God."

The promotion day of the Sunday school was held Sunday morning. This being the first year that we have had our Sunday school where there were no certificates awarded. There were eight promoted from the Beginner's Department to the Primary Department; seven from the Primary to the Junior, and eighteen from the Junior to the Intermediate Department. The work for the coming year started off fine.

At the meeting of the Senior C. E. Society Sunday night, the subject of religious magazines being needed in the library at our High Point College, was discussed. The society decided to subscribe for several good religious magazines for the benefit of the college library. This society is the first to have any religious magazines sent to the college. We hope that other societies will follow our example.

Miss Vista Dixon, of High Point college, spent Sunday with Miss Ethel Blackwelder; returning Sunday night with Rev. and Mrs. Lindley.

Mr. R. P. Benson, who has been in the Concord Hospital for several weeks suffering from a stroke of paralysis, returned to his home and is recovering nicely.

Bernice Nash, Reporter.

Reidsville.—We have had a wonderful revival in our church, closing last night. The week prior to the meeting we held prayer meetings at the church and the first week of the meeting we held cottage prayer meetings and the second week we had a short prayer service at the church each evening before the song service began.

We had services at 9 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. The first four nights members of the Men's Federation of Christian workers came over from Burlington and had charge of the services. Quite a number of them gave testimony of the great things that God had done for them since they had given their hearts to Him. They did a splendid work among us and we appreciate their co-operation.

Our pastor, Dr. J. D. Williams, preached the remainder of the time and I have never heard more soul-stirring, forceful sermons than he preached, and the response was great. A number of our members did personal work, there were thirty-two converts and our whole church has been revived. Already we have seen splendid results of the meeting, and we pray that God may continue to bless us and we may keep working in His service, doing whatsoever He would have us do.

Brother Ballard, pastor of West End church, Greensboro, was with us and led the singing. He helped us a great deal and we were so glad to have had him with us.

The following persons were received into our church last Sunday and yesterday: Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Goolsby, Misses Dora and Sadie Matheny, Helen and Rebecca Jones, Dorothy McCollum, Harry Weatherly, H. S. Dixon, Chas. Oakley and Oscar McCollum. Some of these come to us on profession of faith, others from other churches. We feel sure that there are others who will join us later. We welcome the above mentioned into our church.

Our Sunday school is making much progress. We had the best report yesterday that we have had in a long time.

We had a good C. E. meeting last night with Mr. C. J. Roberts as leader.

Our C. E. society will have charge of the Wednesday evening prayer service. Some of our members are planning to attend the C. E. Rally to be held in Greensboro Tuesday evening. Rev. Lawrence Little will be the speaker of the evening.

We will hold our fourth quarterly conference on the 14th of this month. We hope to have a goodly number of the church officers present at that time and all claims paid up to date. Mrs. H. S. Dixon, Press Reporter.

UNSEEN.

I couldn't see the wind, that wondrous day
I frocked with a playful sea;
And yet it sent the sailboats on their way
With bellied sail; it blew me salty spray,
And heaved great sea waves under me.

I failed to see the wind that stormy night,
Though all night long the lightning flashed!
Yet well I heard its rage and wailing flight;
Uprooted trees bore witness to its might,
And viciously the rain it dashed!

I saw it not—although the moon made plain
A garden wall I paused beside!
Yet breath of flowers it wafted down a lane;
I heard it move the garden weather-vane;
A vine stirred where it tried to hide!

Nor could I see, one ne'er-forgotten day,
That wind which stirred within my soul
As in a holy place I knelt to pray!
But, oh, it brought me peace from far-away—
That Spirit Wind which makes men whole!
—C. A. Vandermeulen in Congregationalist.

Within my inner temple there's a crowd.
There's one of us that's humble, one that's proud;
There's one that loves his neighbor as himself,
And one who cares for naught but fame and self.
There's one who sits and sorrows o'er his sins
And one who, unrepentant, merely grins,
From such corroding care, how soon I'd fly,
Could I but once determine which is I.

Tall Order.

A farmer came to town to insert a death announcement.

"How much do you charge?" he asked.
"Three dollars an inch," was the reply.
"By Heck! He was over six feet high!"—

A certain lady one Sunday induced her husband, who was not a regular church-goer, to accompany her to evening service. During the sermon he fell asleep, snoring at first softly, and at length so noisily that the good lady was constrained to give him a sharp nudge, in the hope of rousing him. To her consternation, however, as he slowly awakened he exclaimed in a loud tone, "Let me alone! Get up and light the fire yourself—it's your turn!"—Presbyterian Witness.

Got His Money's Worth.

After morning services the family dined and churches and their procedure came in for criticism.

Father criticized the sermon. Mother disliked the blunders of the organist. The oldest daughter thought the choir's singing was atrocious.

But the subject had to be dropped when the small boy of the family volunteered the remark: "Dad, I think it was a pretty good show for a nickel."—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

The funeral was conducted by her pastor, Brother Hill.

AGRICULTURAL EFFICIENCY AND RURAL WELFARE IN THE SOUTH.

By Carl C. Taylor.

Dean Of The Graduate School Of North Carolina State College, Raleigh, N. C.

The American Country Life Association meets this year in the South for the second time at Richmond, Virginia, October 27 to the 31st, at the Jefferson Hotel. It is coming into this area for its annual national conference because it was invited and urged to come by a great number of people who are deeply and devoutly interested in Southern agriculture and rural life.

The topic of the conference is, "Needed Readjustments in Rural Life Today." Experts in every phase of agricultural efficiency and rural welfare are to appear on the program.

Every specialized group of workers and every specialized interest in rural life needs the collaboration which will be made in the conference at Richmond. Certainly the conference needs every one of these groups present. It has nothing to jam down any one's throat. Its very genius is in getting every one together with others who have a contribution to make to the larger needs and problems of agriculture. Being a national organization it holds its annual meeting at various places in the United States. This year we people in the South are fortunate in having it where we can all attend. This is our special year of advantage. Furthermore, the conference is coming on us. Each annual conference depends at least for fifty per cent of its success upon the geographic locality in which it meets. It's up to the South this year. We will not fail if those who are in positions of leadership will urge those with whom they have the greatest influence to be there. This ought to mean agricultural extension people, rural health people, public welfare people, rural education people, rural ministers, and the farm men and women who are themselves leaders in their communities and States. The place is Richmond and the dates are October 27 to 31.

THE ANGELIC MINISTRY.

The rich benefaction of this ministry has never been fully realized by the Church of God. It is impossible to estimate it properly and fully because it is mainly an unseen ministry. But the Holy Scriptures throw much light upon the activity of angels in the affairs of mankind. First of all, they are the messengers of the most High God to those who have embraced the blessings of the gospel. In the Scriptures, in which the will of God was dimly known, they frequently visited the earth bearing messages of warning, enlightenment, comfort, and courage to the chosen leaders of the people of God.

They are the executors of the will of God. It was an angel that shut the lion's mouth's so that they hurt not Daniel the entire night long. It was an angel that delivered Peter from prison on the eve of his being put to death. Angels execute the wrathful, as well as the merciful, will of God. It was an angel that slew the first born of Egypt. It was an angel that destroyed the Assyrian army in the days of Hezekiah. It was an angel who smote

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

Herod with worms in punishment of robbing God of the glory due unto His name.

Angels administer the food supply of heaven to those in distressing need. It was an angel that fed Elijah under the juniper tree. It was an angel that ministered to the hunger of Jesus at the close of His forty days' fast. And angels scattered the manna like rain about the camp of the Israelites in the wilderness.

The angels are the divinely appointed protectors of the children of God. They are the guardians of little children. For Jesus said, "Their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." And Paul wrote, "Are they not ministering spirits, sent forth to minister unto them that shall be heirs of salvation?"

And they are the harvesters of immortal souls. It was a number of them, likely his life long protectors and comforters, who bore the spirit of Lazarus to Abraham's bosom. And in the parable of the Tares it is recorded that the Judge of all the earth will "send forth his angels and gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." And these same angels will do a much more delightful service for the righteous. For it is written in Matt. 24:31: "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one of the earth unto the other."

"Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name," in devout appreciation of the countless blessings of the angelic ministry.

ADDITION TO CONFERENCE PROGRAM.

In copying the conference program I left at the Friday night service. It is as follows: 7:30 P. M. Missionary Hour. Devotional services in charge of Rev. R. A. Hunter. Brief reports from the Woman's Home Missionary Society, and the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Address by a representative of the Woman's Missionary Societies. C. W. Bates, Secretary.

NOTICE TO PASTORS.

Won't you brethren who owe for Conference Journals, please send in your money? It is hard to have to get it during the conference sessions with all the other things I have to do. When you send checks please make them payable to "C. W. Bates, Secy." C. W. Bates, Secretary.

IMPORTANT TO PASTORS.

Please observe this direction in regard to our conference envelop: Write on a slip of paper the amounts raised by Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies, and put this paper in your conference envelop. This will secure credit for your charge on the G. C. B. for all the money raised by these organizations. In winding up the year's work, reports should be made by the treasurers of these societies to the treasurer of the local church, to the pastor, and due credit taken on the local church budget—G. C. B.—for what has been raised. This amount, added to the other payments that have been made, will indicate to the local church what is the status of the G. C. B. This seems to be sufficiently clear to be fully understood, and if each charge will do what is asked for here, there will be no difficulty in securing full credit for all money raised that counts on the budget.

A HUNDRED YEARS DEBATE.

Our Michigan correspondent reports a debate which he heard recently in the Michigan Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. What do you suppose the question was? Why, it was the same question that Stockton began discussing a hundred years ago, whether laymen should be admitted to participation in the affairs of the church.

ARE LAYMEN "FOLKS"?

This seems to be doubted by those who would keep laymen out of the councils of the church. The ministers in their humility think themselves the lowest order of humanity, and when they drop down to laymen, they seem to regard them as subhuman; they cannot see in them the necessary qualifications for position beside ministers in their deliberations over the affairs of the Kingdom. Laymen are needed—to execute the plans laid, but are hardly to be expected to have a share in making plans. If given the right of suffrage they might even control. The prayer of many Methodist Episcopal ministers seems to be: "Lord, deliver us from the laymen. Let us fall into the hands of the Bishop, but let us not fall into the hands of the laymen."

—Rev. L. W. Gerringer spent last week in Mebane, preaching. He remained over last Sunday. Dr. T. M. Johnson came to Greensboro Sunday morning and preached in Calvary church morning and night. The congregation were glad to greet him and hear him. He was accompanied by his son and younger daughter, Miss Nicholson, and Miss Barnette.

—J. B. Duke, the wealthy business man, died a few days ago and was buried last Tuesday at Durham, N. C. He had been sick for months. It was he that changed Trinity College into Duke University.

—A sad death occurred yesterday at St. Leo Hospital. All deaths are sad to somebody, but this one must be sad to all who read of it. A young man named Padgett was sent from High Point to the convict road force for stealing an automobile. Whether he was guilty or not we do not know. He denied his guilt to the last. But he made an effort to escape and was shot and mortally wounded by the guard. He was taken to the hospital, and his sweetheart came to him and watched beside his bed to the last. His last words were; "Tell Mama that I did not take that car."

—The onlooker is impressed that many foolish things are said and done in the controversy between the fundamentalists and the modernists. Why so much feeling in the matter. Don't both parties know that neither can destroy God's truth? And can't both parties conceive it possible that there may be some truth on the other side? If these parties cannot agree, they would do well to respect the honesty of the other side, and exhibit Christian courtesy.

LAY-REPRESENTATION AND HERESY. IN MICHIGAN METHODISM.

By Luther K. Long.

Michigan has two conferences of the M. E. Church—the Detroit conference, including the eastern part of the lower peninsula and the whole of the upper peninsula, and the Michigan conference, which includes the western portion of the lower peninsula.

At their recent meetings there were three matters which came before each of the conferences. The question of unification with the M. E. Church South was soon disposed of—eight persons in the Michigan conference voting against it, while in the Detroit conference only two votes were cast in opposition. Throughout the North the majorities in favor of unification are overwhelming. The indications are that, while the South will give a majority in favor of the plan, the majority will not be large enough to carry the movement through at the present time.

Lay-Representation.

I heard the debate in the Michigan conference on the question handed down by the last general conference; "Shall laymen be admitted to the annual conferences in equal numbers with ministers?" Some ministers expressed themselves as very much in favor of the resolution. They claimed: It would make for good democracy and good Christianity; laymen are needed in the counsels of the annual conferences the same as they are needed in the counsels of the general conference, where they are found to be exceedingly helpful; laymen are as much interested, and as intelligent concerning these matters, as are ministers; laymen's conferences have always voted in favor of membership in the annual conference. Other ministers spoke vehemently against the measure. They said: The annual conference is, and should continue to be, a ministerial brotherhood; laymen do not want membership, and they would not be interested in attending to the business; we are not opposed to the laymen, we are their good friends, but our system has worked well as it is and we should not seek to change it. The vote showed 78 in favor of lay-representation and 110 opposed. In the Detroit conference the vote stood 166 for and 45 against. Total for the state—224 for, 155 against.

Heresy.

Dr. William H. Phelps, editor of The Michigan Christian Advocate, is a member of the Michigan conference. Dr. Levi Bird preferred charges against him because of certain editorials, and because he used in the columns of The Advocate articles from certain contributors. "If the publication of such articles is continued," the accuser declared, "they will destroy our great and beloved church." The Superintendent of the district to which Dr. Phelps belongs had already appointed a committee of investigation. This committee met the first day of conference, took into consideration the charges, and unanimously reported to the conference, "No cause for action." This report was unanimously adopted by the conference.

Dr. Bird also preferred charges against D. Lynn Harold Hough, a member of the Detroit conference and pastor of the Central Church, Detroit. Dr. Hough had not yet returned from Stockholm when his case was called. In his absence, Dr. George Elliott, editor of The Methodist Review, represented him before the committee. There were twenty-seven specifications. These are samples: Insulting God and outraging the moral sense of the Methodist church; putting Jesus Christ and Charles Darwin on an equality; making God a liar and Moses mistaken, if not an arrant charlatan; making Christian and Atheist Heaven, when Christ consigns the Atheist to hell; invalidating the whole plan of salvation in favor of Evolution. As in the case of Dr. Phelps, the committee reported, "No cause for action." This report was unanimously adopted by the conference.

Dr. Hough gave a series of addresses before the conference. On his arrival he was given a decided ovation—for as a Christian man, and as a faithful minister of Jesus Christ, his standing among his brethren is very high indeed. In the course of his first address—having in mind, no doubt, some of the charges—Dr. Hough said:

"The prophet is a citizen of his own age and he cannot avoid if he would the outstanding aspects of his own experience and life. The magical word of our period is the word science. And the prophet must come to the very heart of the meaning of the scientific movement and of scientific achievement in order that in this realm too he may be a true interpreter.

"Sometimes the prophet has been tempted to assume a merely hostile attitude to science. In fact, it is to be remarked that most men at first dislike anything which requires them to learn a new vocabulary. The intellectual trouble involved in learning all the passwords in so diversified a movement as that of modern science is indeed great. And the prophet is tempted to suspect that in all this transition into a new vocabulary things which are infinitely precious to him may be lost sight of and forgotten.

The Way Out.

"But the way out of the dilemma is not hostility to science, but the mastery of science. Sometimes the prophet is tempted to be a sort of Henry Clay, seeking for compromises by which the new and the old can live together in peace. History would suggest that such compromises are only half-way houses on the road to civil war. There is a third attitude, and we believe it is not one of hostility; it is not of compromise; it is one of joyous and eager utilization. It consists of a zestful proceeding by a kind of divine right of eminent domain to annex the whole realm of science for the purpose of the moral and spiritual life.

"This attitude doesn't regard science as the friend or foe of God. It sees in all the results of science the vast mass of material ready to be gathered up into the noblest sort of moral and spiritual interpretation of life.

"This world of the evolutionary processes is the world in which these unfolding intellects which we would win for the Christian sanction live. And it will come to them as an immeasurable assurance that all these things are profound and happily related to the deepest experiences of religion.

"The truth is that much of the disturbance in religious circles in the United States/ the present time could have been entirely avoided if religious leaders had treated with happy and confident frankness the results of scientific investigation incorporating them as part of their moral and spiritual message and making them the very vehicles of Christ truth. The policy of silence and evasion has been proved very costly. The true propylactics at the spot where science and creative mysticism—biology and Christian truth meet in joyous friendship."

THE BIBLE AND LIFE.

Only that part of the Bible is helpful to which one makes vital in one's life. The Bible is worth no more than any other book, save the method and manner of its influence over and control of, human life and destiny. One may know the entire book from Genesis to Revelation, and then be as little influenced as one would be by knowing the almanac or the dictionary, from beginning to end. "Devils also believe and tremble;" but the Book avails them nothing. It is not the amount of Bible lore with which one is tallied, but the amount of the plain teaching of the Word which enters into the life and conduct of the reader, or the hearer, that counts.

Nor does the fact, that one may quote or rote or from memory any passages glibly even indicate that one is a real Bible student or really believes in the Word. Some of the greatest skeptics of the age, as well as some of the most patent scoundrels, can quote scripture and argue with great versatility their poisonous views and beliefs. It is not the amount of scripture one may quote, but the spirit of the teachings of the Word of God which one lives that tells on one for time and eternity.

This leads one to the thought, and emphasizes in one's heart the fact, that the Word of God can no more be overthrown than human life itself. From beginning to end of the scriptures, there flows a resistless tide of life, a truth and love. "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."—John 5: 39. It is, therefore, not controvertible superficial facts which one should search for in the scriptures, but for life eternal—richer and the more abundant life.

More than this may be said. The scriptures can no more be overthrown nor destroyed than the very fact and life of God Himself can be overthrown and destroyed. This is the reason that our Bible, differing from other books, sets forth in explicit terms God's life and love in His dealings with men. Our Bible places God at the beginning, and through the whole Book we find Him dealing with men and women, revealing Himself opening up His very heart and life to the world. Of course, the grand climax of this process is reached when "The Word became flesh and dwelt amongst men." The Book tells the story of the dwelling on earth and the deeds among men of the Incarnate Son of God. The Old Testament, like the New, was throughout seeking to lay bare to all who would receive and give heed the revelation of God Himself to men and women in every condition of life.

and in every attitude of mind and thought and conduct. We have a revelation of God as He deals with the wicked and lost men and women as well as with the righteous and the faithful. The Koran of Mahomet, it has been pointed out, reveals man as he dares to speak to his God. Our Bible, on the other hand, reveals God as He graciously and lovingly speaks to man. It is God's dealings with faithful Abraham and the faithless Saul, and the Shepherd David, and the Prophet Isaiah, and the irresolute Jonah, and the impetuous Peter, and the loving John, and the energetic Paul, that interests the reader and reveals to one how God has dealt with men; and since in Him is no variableness nor turning, we know how He may be counted upon to deal with us. One does not have to argue the inspiration of the scripture any more than one has to argue the validity of love or the veritableness of truth. One who will read and give heed to its teachings, knows that the Word of God is an inspired book and invariably inspires the life of one who reads it thus.

All the other books that were ever written and printed are as nothing compared with this one, when it comes to measuring its weight and worth in influencing the lives and shaping the destinies of men and the nations. "I know that the Word of God is inspired because it inspires me." And that fact can no more be destroyed nor confused nor overthrown than can life itself.—J. O. A. in The Christian Sun.

THE MIRACLE OF PRAYER.

After an extremely busy day Jesus Christ usually went apart to pray. And He prayed long and continuously. If we know anything at all about prayer in the life of Christ we know that He prayed, not only to keep in harmony and in close touch with the will of His Heavenly Father, but also to replenish the energy and power which He had used in working and in causing miraculous things to happen—power and energy employed in healing the sick, restoring sight to the blind, curing the disabled, bringing a consciousness of God to the spiritually dead, and regenerating the souls of those whose spirituality had long since been materialized. By prayer Jesus kept alive His personal sense of divine mission, His strength, His consciousness of duty, His joyousness and happiness, His enthusiasm in His work, and His refreshing attitude.

Does one put it too strongly to say that prayer was the vital, living power of Jesus' life and through it God was revealed and His works were made manifest?

"If we pray—believing—with all faith—it shall be done unto you." When this wholesome attitude to prayer is taken, then prayer will have a meaning and will accomplish things. Where this miraculous power of prayer is visible, men more readily recognize and believe in the power and presence of God and His Spirit. Where the presence and power of God and His Spirit are visible, there, conversely, prayer is used as a power and force. We know a tree, not only by its kind, but also by its fruits. Let the fruits of the tree of prayer be displayed!

It remains for the Church of God to "gird her loins" and make Him a vital force and a living power by re-establishing, unhesitatingly and with full belief, the miraculous power of prayer which causes the miraculous to happen.—M. A. Vance, in Zion's Herald.

SHE BROUGHT ME TO JESUS.

John Jeter Hurt.

My mother brought me. And that is the sweetest thought I have of mother. She was a timid, shrinking soul, but she would not shrink from a duty. Neither would she delegate a sacred privilege like that to any evangelist, or Sunday school teacher, or even to the revered pastor himself.

Life was sweet to us on the farm, for ours was a large and happy family. But mother's mind was fixed always upon the Hills of God, and she talked much about a family circle there which should be unbroken through all the changeless years.

And so she brought me to Jesus. I was only ten, but never can I forget that epochal day. It was a September afternoon, just before twilight. The dogwood trees in the yard were putting on their coats of many colors. The score of majestic oaks which stood in solemn splendor around that three-story house in white were dropping their leaves one by one—silent testimonies that no hold on earthly life can last. Over yonder across the field was a vast woodland, and upon that rich assortment of foliage were lavished all the colors ever painted by the finger of God. Up from the lengthening shadows on the meadow came weird music from the negroes as they turned their weary footsteps home.

Mother called me from play, and I left the two little brothers over beside the fence which circled our beautiful grove. Following her lead we sat down together on a rustic bench. And there, that afternoon, while the sun lighted all the hills of Virginia with mellow glory, my mother told me the sweetest story I ever heard—of Jesus. I loved that story then. I have loved it since. I have been trying to tell it to others these 25 years, but I cannot tell it like she told it to me. Oh, for the sound again of the voice that is still!

I don't remember any passages of scripture that mother quoted. I am not sure that she used any. But she told me that she had trusted the same Jesus since she was a child, and He had never failed her in the hour of need. She told me that He would help me to be good, and to do good. She told me that He would help me to bear the burdens which are a part of every person's life; and that when my brother died the year before she could never have lived through the gloom but for Jesus. And then she told me that she and father would rather their children should be humble followers of Jesus than to win all the money and all the honors of the world if they overlooked Him in the winning. It was a personal sort of gospel she preached to her lad, in the plainest sort of way.

I don't know what I was before, but I know that when mother got through talking I was a Christian. I told her so, and her arm tightened about my little shoulder, and she kissed my brow. She was the only translation of the Bible I knew at the time, and the best one I've ever known since. I've never gotten far away from the experience of that holy hour. I have learned that God speaks to us through nature, that He speaks through the stars in their courses—but He spoke to me first through the voice of my mother; the experience of a soul that was surrendered to His will. I have had my doubts since then, and they have bothered me some. But when the far horizon grows murky and the mists of the world come into my eyes—then I hie me back to the old rustic seat under the sheltering oaks, and listen again to my mother's winsome story of Jesus.

After a while the supper bell was ringing, and we walked up to the house, hand in hand. Even as we walked along I heard her singing softly, for hers was a joyful religion. And this was the song she sang that twilight hour:

There is a name I love to hear,

I love to sing its worth;

It sounds like music to mine ear,

The sweetest name on earth.

I have no criticism of the evangelists, of the Gospel singers, of the large tabernacles, of tents, of city-wide and country-wide campaigns. But we will get much further along if we stress equally the importance of well-side evangelism, street-corner evangelism, and individual evangelism when there are no tents, or tabernacles, or visiting preachers, or special meetings of any kind.

I shall always thank God that my own mother brought me to Jesus.—Christian Index.

A correction: It was First Church, of Thomasville, that should have been credited with a $30.00 children's recital in September and not West End as was reported. E. G. Lowdermilk, Supt.

POISONED.

It was in the late afternoon; a traveller was pressing forward as rapidly as his tired legs would permit, hoping to reach some shelter before the cold of a winter night should descend upon him. As the sun was sinking over the horizon he spied a stone house near the side of the road. Stumbling to the door, he knocked. It was quickly opened by a man, evidently also a traveller but shortly arrived in the place. Eagerly he greeted the new arrival and invited him in. There he found a large room, bare of furniture, except for a large, built-in stove, in one corner. Fuel, coal and wood were in abundance, and the prospect for a comfortable evening and night was good, and the traveller was greatly cheered. The men ate heartily of the rations they had brought with them. "The air is slightly close, don't you think?" asked the last traveller of the first. "I hadn't noticed it," replied the first. And so they rolled themselves in their blankets and stretched out before the stove and went to sleep. The stove continued to give off the deadly carbon monoxide fumes which it had been giving out since the first traveller lighted the fire. Insidiously it did its work, and some days later, other travellers found their dead bodies and wondered why they had died.

A minister of God's Word was travelling on God's highway. He had worked hard and faithfully. He loved men and he loved his work. He met men who had not been taught evangelical Christianity as he had. They were attractive men. They were lovable men. They were educated men. They were men of high ideals. But they did not accept all of God's Word. They did not believe men are saved by Christ's atoning death. They believed that Christ was divine, only as man is divine, and they believed and preached the gospel of Social Service. They were Modernists. God's minister loved them. He went with them. He compromised with them. He wrapped himself in his blanket and slept with them.

Years afterwards, other travellers on God's highway found these men, spiritually dead. The insidious poison of Modernism had done its work. "Concerned."

—Summerfield has had another bank robbery. Three youthful amateurs held up the cashier and got away with some money, but they were pursued and captured by citizens in a short time. What to do with such boys to make good citizens of them is a problem for the State. Can it be done? We believe it can, but it will require infinite patience and much teaching. Clearly these boys have imbibed false ideas. The jail and the public roads will help to disillusion them, but they need more than disillusionment. They need Christian ideals.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Notes mailed to the Herald for last week went astray and did not even reach the Herald office for publication, so through the kindness of the editor this brief note is going in this week, even though this is Thursday.

Boundaries.

If there is a desire for a change in boundaries on your charge, please write me at once. The boundary Committee will hold a meeting just before conference.

Please be prompt about this. Thank you.

Chairmen Of Committees.

In cases where written reports can be drafted before reaching conference, the chairman of such Committee will please do this and have report ready to submit to his Committee to save time. Other members of Committees will be announced soon.

Church Officers.

Pastors please note:—Some of our pastors persistently fail to elect the church officers, for the ensuing year, before conference, leaving it to be done by the new pastors in the early part of the new conference year. Please elect all church officers for next year before going to conference. This is imperative.

THE LAWS OF FAITH.

Saving, enabling, and victorious faith is one of the graces provided for in the atonement of Jesus Christ. In Gal. 2:16 there is this statement: "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law but by the faith of Jesus Christ." Jesus Christ is then the Source of faith by means of His vicarious atonement. In Gal. 2:20 we have a restatement of the same truth: "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave himself for me."

The Holy Spirit is the Agent through whom this grace is imparted to the soul. In Gal. 5:22, 23 there is a list of Christian graces imparted by the Holy Spirit, of which faith is one: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." The disciples of Jesus recognized Him as the Source of faith when they prayed, "Lord, increase our faith."

Now there are certain rules or conditions that govern the impartation of faith. One of these is knowledge, especially the knowledge of God through His revealed word. In Rom. 10:17 it is written: "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." The more we come to know of God, of His goodness, love, mercy, and power, in the spiritual sense, the more complete will be our faith or confidence in Him.

Another law of faith is penitence, or sorrow for sin. In Matt. 21:32 it is written, "For John came unto you in the way of righteousness, and ye believed him not; but the publicans and the harlots believed him: and, ye when ye had seen it, repented not afterward, that ye might believe him." These are the words of Jesus and set forth repentance as the forerunner of saving faith. The first command of Jesus was, "Repent ye, and believe the gospel." This means, Repent in order that ye may be able to believe.

Another law that governs faith is humility. It is written in James 4:6,10, "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. . . . Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." Now humility is not in itself a condition of spiritual life, but it promotes faith which is the condition. The centurion felt too unworthy for Jesus to come under his roof, and this sense of deep humility developed a strong faith; of which Jesus said, "I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel." The Syrophenician woman became so humble that she was willing to take her place among the dogs to eat of the crumbs that fell from the children's table; and Jesus said, "O woman, great is thy faith."

And lastly faith gets stronger by exercise. Faith is like love, the more you give away the more you have. It is one of the things described by Solomon, "There is that scattereth, yet increaseth." We grow in the various graces by exercising them. "He giveth more grace" to all who make wise use of it. "And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace."

LET ME BE BRAVE.

Let me be brave to fight the night.
And bear my burden of the fight
With Courage
Not that I may be counted great in victory,
But that another treading on
May still keep heart when hope seems gone.

Grant to me wisdom.
Not that I may boast as one who's clamored high
And count myself superior clay to those less learned;
God, I pray for wisdom and a clearer mind
To aid the ones who come behind.

Let me be strong and brave of heart,
And teach me how to play my part
As one who toils not just for gold
(Thus I would not have my history told),
But let me serve as best I can
My God, my home, my fellow man.—Edgar Guest.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Incarnation.

"And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth." John 1:14.

The text is a plain statement that the Son of God became manifest in the flesh in the person of Jesus Christ. This incarnation was a matter of prophecy for four thousand years, a matter of fact for thirty three years, and it has now been a matter of history for more than nineteen hundred years. This is one of the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith. Without it Christianity is a man-made religion, without the least power to save. With it the gospel of Jesus Christ is "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." The roof of this great doctrine is abundant, rich, and convincing. The purpose of the incarnation was to enlighten, to save, and uplift the race.

Let us first consider

The Incarnation In Prophecy.

Immediately after the fall God said that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, that a divine-human Redeemer would destroy the works of the devil.

To Abraham it was promised that "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." "Thy seed" here does not refer to Abraham's posterity in general but to one particular descendant, which is Jesus Christ.

In Psalms 132:11 there is this most illuminating prophecy of the coming of the Prince of the house of David: "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne."

Isaiah foresaw the glory of the incarnation, as set forth in this statement. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." And from this same prophet's lips and pen has come this prophecy: "Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel."

The angel Gabriel made this announcement to Mary: "And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shall call his name Jesus. And he shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. . . . The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

In the next place let us consider

The Fact Of The Incarnation.

Was Jesus really God? Was Godhood and manhood really united in His person? The testimony to this effect is direct and overpowering.

An angel from heaven gave this testimony: "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

God the Father at the baptism of Jesus and also at His transfiguration spake with audible voice. "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

John the Baptist said of Him, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." "And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him. And I knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he that baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw and bear record that this is the Son of God."

Peter's confession sets forth the deity of Jesus Christ in most unmistakable language: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

John, the apostle, bore testimony to the incarnation in these words, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us."

Nathaniel said to Jesus, "Rabbi, thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel."

"And Paul wrote to Timothy and testified that Jesus Christ is 'the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords.'"

And Jesus Himself admitted and declared on a number of occasions that He was God as well as man. The transfiguration was a demonstration of His Godhood. There shone from His body the glory that He had with the Father before the world was,—"the glory as of the only begotten Son of God." To the man born blind He said, Dost thou believe on the Son of God? He answered and said, Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him? and Jesus said unto him, Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee."

And Jesus exercised the functions of the Godhead. He forgave sinners, cast out devils, healed the sick, and raised the dead by the exercise of His own authority and power. He received the worship and the exercise of faith, which are due to God alone. And His resurrection and ascension are the crowning evidences that He was God manifest in the flesh.

In the next place let us consider

The Humiliation Of The Incarnation.

There was a physical humiliation. His bodily figure and countenance were unattractive. "He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we shall desire him."

He underwent a humiliation of vast deprivation. He exchanged a throne for a manger, sovereignty for babyhood, the glory of the Godhead for the form of a servant, the applause of angels for the insults of man, and the fellowship with the Father for the death on the cross. Paul gives a vivid description of this deprivation in the second chapter of Philippians: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon himself the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."

And there was the humiliation of deep impoverishment. "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." The Creator and Possessor of all the worlds became so poor that He had to work a miracle to pay his taxes. Of Himself He said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not no where to lay his head."

Again let us take note of

The Method Of The Incarnation.

The incarnation was voluntary. He cheerfully consented to undergo the humiliation of loss, association, sorrow, suffering, and shame. He "took upon him the form of a servant." "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham." He became man by the exercise of His own free will.

The Holy Ghost was the agent that brought about the incarnation. God the Son became flesh in the womb of the virgin Mary by the operation of the Holy Ghost. Jesus was the masterpiece of all the Holy Spirit's work. He was "made of the seed of David" by the Holy Spirit. He was "made of a woman, made under the law" by the operation of Holy Spirit. He "was made in the likeness of men," in the likeness of sinful flesh," by the agency of the third Person of the adorable Trinity.

And he was made sinless. He did not inherit the depravity common to the race. While in the flesh He was still the holy, immaculate Son of God.

In the last place let us consider

The Purpose of the Incarnation.

He came into the world to overthrow the kingdom of sin. In 1 John 3:8 it is recorded, "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil."

And Jesus became man in order to become "the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." He came to die the just for the unjust, and thereby satisfy the broken law. "He made him to be sin (or sin offering) for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." "Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people."

And Jesus came to organize the church as His chosen instrumentality to evangelize and save the world. He said to Peter, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The rock referred to is none other than the divine-human personality of Jesus Christ, as set forth in Peter's confession, "Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God." Paul asserts that the foundation of the church is Jesus Christ,—"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." And Paul wrote of the Israelites in the wilderness, "For they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them, and that Rock was Christ." These Scriptures state so specifically and forcibly and conclusively that the Rock, the foundation of the church, was Jesus Christ,—the divine-human Son of God

THE KINGDOM'S SUCCESS.

The work of the kingdom is in a sphere all by itself.

The reputed hard-headed business man, the man of cold facts and of things visible, takes little for granted, he insists on proof and security, makes but slight ventures on simple faith, but always wants a sufficient capital in hand, looks out for himself with his interests supreme, works zealously and expects returns in health, position, honors, and ever strive to get ahead even if so doing impedes the progress of others, and so becomes too often self-centered, narrow, unsympathetic, unresponsive to appeals, lives for self and the things of this world.

But workers for the Kingdom, besides depending upon brain and brawn, are "laborers together with God" in bringing in the reign of peace, love and righteousness through the acceptance of Jesus Christ as Lord and Master.

They, of course recognize human relations, dependence upon men, need of wisdom, resources, etc, but they also go beyond into the spiritual realm where faith is regnant and productive of unflinching guidance, unstinted help, unlimited power, unmeasured blessings, in the work of giving to men the gospel, in leading them to Christ for the liberty and life he alone gives.

This is set forth very forcefully by the great missionary, St. Francis Xavier who, after calling for help of the king of Portugal, said unmoored from human help, I set forth which for him meant toils and hardships to lift heathen people Godward.

Then the workers of the Kingdom do not labor for personal gain, or worldly honors, but to enthrone the Christ in human hearts, to extend his benign sway over men and nations, and to enrich the world with the agencies which promote the highest welfare of mankind.

Resources must be available for operations in distant lands, and policy and plans must be followed, but chiefest of all is dependence upon the Word, the leadings and power of the Spirit in the task which requires one rather to draw by the affection of a Christian than to drive by the argument of the natural man. And here material things have no place. This dependence grows out of the fact that man alone is helpless, because "God goes before us, breaking up the way before us into the human heart, and, accompanying that divine operation, creating that atmosphere in which faith buds and blossoms, there must be love of our brother."

Nothing is more insistent than that brotherhood shall be conceded, the love of Christ shall constrain, the love of man shall be evidenced in the greatest of all tasks in which God and men unite to achieve earthly and eternal results.

This was well expressed, as meeting human needs in the Orient, by a prominent Indian Christian, "You have given of your goods to feed the poor; you have given of your bodies to be burned. Give us love." That is a demand that India makes of us, the love that respects and honours and does not condescend."

Testimony to the efficacy of this was borne by Dr. Tagore of W. W. Pearson "that he gave to India 'the gift of friendliness, completely free from conscious or unconscious egotism.' "

FOR THE SHEEP.

Alethea Thompson Cobbs.

The storm door of the ranchman's cottage was flung open and John Ross stumbled across the threshold, puffing and blowing and shaking the snow from his body as he stamped his feet upon the heavy door mat.

"Ugh, but it's cold! God pity man or beast out on such a night as this. It reminds me of the winter storms on Loch Carron—only Scotland never had anything to match this Manitoba wind. It cuts in straight from the north pole. Ugh," Then the sturdy highlander stamped his feet again and doffed a fur cap, revealing a mop of curly brown hair and a face ruddy with health.

Mrs. Ross and blue-eyed Jean who had been fluttering officiously about him from the time of his entrance, now helped him to divest himself of his great sheep-skin coat without letting a flake fall on the bright red carpet. Then they triumphantly escorted him into the cosy sitting room, where, in front of a glowing sheet-iron stove he found an easy chair, slippers and the Stock Raisers Gazette awaiting him.

Satisfied that her man was safe, the wife then bustled about in preparation for the evening meal; but ten-year-old Jean lingered about her father's chair until he looked up sharply and demanded—"Well, child, what is it?"

She did not answer at once, but climbed onto his knee and putting her arms around his neck in a winsomely compelling way that he well knew, whispered in his ear—"Father, I'm sorry to trouble you, but do you know that my little lamb is safe with its mother?"

John Ross laughed reassuringly and kissed the child—"I feel sure that she is, Lassie, for I sent Eric to look after the stock two hours ago. Doubtless has had her supper and snuggled down for the night long since."

"But Father," the child persisted, "Eric is only a hired man and that is my little lamb, just like I am your little girl."

The father laughed again—"Well, not exactly, dear; but here he comes now, let him speak for himself."

Jean flew to meet the hulking young Swede who was just coming in through the back doorway.

"O Eric, tell me truly, is my lamb safe with its mother?" But before she reached him the Swede had begun thawing out his hands over the kitchen stove, from which emanated entrancing odors of bacon and coffee and he was in no mood for argument before the bar of a whimsical child, so he answered gruffly,—

"How do you expect me to know yours from a hundred other idiotic sheep that I chased around for an hour before I could get 'em under shelter. So far's I know they're all in, but when the snow blinded me and the sheep moved around so fast I couldn't count 'em or see whether they were big or little."—Then he shuffled out of the kitchen to do his evening chores.

John Ross had now settled down to news of stock sales which soon became blurred by reason of a delicious drowsiness that overtook him, while Mrs. Ross moved cheerily about her tasks lilting a half-forgotten Scotch melody;—

"O wert thou in the cauld, cauld blast,
On yonder lea, on yonder lea,
My plaidie to the angry airt,
I'd shelter thee, I'd shelter thee."

At last the supper steamed on the table and a bell rang out the welcome news. Then a cry went up,—"Where is Jean? Where is Jean?" No one knew. She was not found in any of the rooms in the ranchman's stocky cabin; nor was she in the barn. They called in vain. They looked in the closets and under chairs—suspecting her of a prank. They lighted a lantern and pried into every corner of the hay loft. They shouted themselves hoarse, but there was no response save the howling of the wind. Her red coat and hood had gone from the closet. She had left the house unobserved; but why should she go out into the blinding storm? No one knew, of course. But mothers are more discerning than hired men and are wiser, sometimes, than fathers, where children's motives are concerned, so she questioned the two men keenly, beginning with her husband who was staring dazedly at the stove.

"What did Jean say to you, John, when she climbed into your lap and was whispering into your ear?"

The distraught man rehearsed slowly every word of the conversation but drew no conclusions therefrom. Then she turned sharply to the Swede.

"Eric, what did she say to you when she ran to meet you?" The young giant, feeling that he was on the defensive, answered accordingly,—

"She asked me about them fool sheep."

Mary Ross eyed him keenly, as a judge might search the mind of a criminal at the bar.

"Eric Stavenson, was it the sheep that she asked about or was it her pet lamb?"

He shuffled from one foot to another and mumbled evasively,—"Her lamb was the biggest fool of all, and so far's I know, sure and sartin' know I never did get it in, though God knows I tried for a solid hour and would 'er been tryin' yet if the snow had not blinded me."

Then the mother knew, and her voice rose in command,—"John—Eric, save the child. She is out looking for the lamb in this terrible storm. God keep her!"

In a trice the men were in their great coats with caps pulled over their ears and lanterns and horns swinging at their sides. As they plowed through the snow and disappeared into the dim woodland beyond the road, Mrs. Ross shouted,—"Take Laddie with you."

"The dog's already gone. I guess Jean took him," flung back Eric.

"Thank God for that," ejaculated Mrs. Ross. She closed the door, placed lamps in every window and then flung herself upon her knees in an agony of prayer to the Chief Shepherd, that He would keep her little lamb, out in the bitter cold and bring her safely home.

The men pressed grimly on in the teeth of the storm,—shouting, listening, shouting or blowing their horns, and hearing in reply,

AN OLD SOLDIER AND A YOUNG ONE.

They had made the round of the main entrance hall of the Congressional Library, walked through the long corridors, penetrated to the periodicals' room, glanced up the grand stairway, which was to "be done" later, and were now at the door of the public reading room. But here the third and smallest and most important of the party of three hesitated and drew back.

"Please, mamma," he pleaded, "may I go back and stay round the beautiful stairway till you and papa come? I'll not get in anybody's way, and not harm a single thing. Really and truly! I'll just walk around and look. If you and papa get in there among the books you'll read and talk and read and talk, and I'll wait and be so lonesome. Please!"

The gentleman looked down and smiled.

"Jimmy is half right, Clarice," he admitted. "I'm afraid we have talked books sometimes till he got a little lonesome. Let him stay out in the main hall and look around. He will enjoy it more."

"But will he be safe, and not in anyone's way?"

"We must trust him. Jimmy is getting to be almost a man now—nearly five."

"Oh, I'll be all right, mamma," assured the little fellow, drawing himself up. "I'll just walk about and study things, and tell you what I see when I come back, and I won't hurt anybody's feelings."

So they went on through the swinging doors, and he returned to the main hall, where he walked about looking at things, very straight and soldierly in his consciousness of being alone in the vast room and wholly dependent upon himself.

At the frontier fort commanded by his father, Jimmy had grown familiar with things that are unknown to most boys of his age, and now with his feeling of independence some of these came naturally to the surface.

One of the guardians of the place watched him for some time, then, concluding the boy had strayed from his party, crossed over to offer assistance. Jimmy was gravely stepping off the colored mosaics in the floor, two head and three aside, two head and three aside, and then clicking his heels together and reversing, and doing it to the tune of a favorite air which the fort band had played.

As the official stopped beside him, Jimmy paused in his evolutions, raised a hand in military salute, and waited inquiringly.

"Are you lost, sonny?" the official asked.

"No, sir," gravely; "I'm just here by myself. I hope I'm not doing any harm, sir."

"Why, no, indeed, only—" He stopped, bit his lip to hide a smile, and turned away, for Jimmy had again saluted and recommenced his two ahead and three aside, two head and three aside, with clicked heels and reverse.

A little later two old ladies shuffled past and one of them dropped her handbag. With an impatient exclamation she bent painfully to pick it up. But Jimmy was quicker, and gave her the bag with a salute and slightly inclined body.

"Bless the baby!" she exclaimed. "How ever did the nite learn that! Just as natural, and for all the world like a real soldier, too! But it don't seem right, though, does it, Matilda? Children ain't children any more, like they used to be."

Jimmy remained with hand up and palm to the front until they turned away, then dropped his arm with a little sigh of discontent, which, however, was only audible to himself.

He did not two ahead and three aside any more. The unintentional insult/had taken away all zest for further evolution there, and he glanced about covertly to see if any one had overheard the humiliating word "baby." Apparently they had not, and, somewhat reassured he slipped away toward the grand stairway.

This he had been holding in reserve as a later delight, after the pleasures of the lower floor palled. And he took possession of it as all large delights should be taken, a little at a time as they can be absorbed, going up step by step, slowly, gazing at the things he did not understand, but though pretty, and often pausing to look back and below.

So at last he made his way to the head of the stairs, to a position in front of the colossal mosaic of the Goddess of Wisdom. Here he remained for a long time, gazing at the curious work of art, and wondering how such a picture could be put together to look so natural and so like a real painting.

While standing there he was joined by another figure, who had also paused to admire the great mosaic.

Dozens of persons had passed Jimmy on the stairs, and he had scarcely been conscious of their presence. But something in the measured, firm tread of this one as he drew near, and then in his presence as he stood beside him, caused the boy to look up. What he saw made his body stiffen suddenly, and his hand to go up in quick military salute, his heels clicking audibly as it did so. This was the kind of man he had been accustomed to see at his father's fort, gold braid and shining only—and this he noticed even as he saluted—this officer's uniform was just a little different from any he had seen.

At the sound of the clicking heels the man had glanced down with an amused light coming to his eyes. But as he met the steady, straight gaze of the small figure the amusement vanished, and he saluted gravely in return.

"May I ask whom I have the honor of meeting?" he asked courteously.

"Captain Jimmy, sir—really and truly captain," with just a shade of questioning defiance in the voice. "It was my own papa, the Colonel, who gave me the rank; but he did it with me kneeling down and his sword touching my shoulder—the accolade, you know. So it's all right."

"Yes, the accolade is all right," admitted the man. "Now, Captain, about this mosaic. You were admiring it, I think."

"Yes, sir. It is wonderful."

"I agree with you. It is wonderful. I always stop for a few minutes whenever I come this way. Now suppose we go on through some of the upper corridors. There are a number of things I greatly admire, and want you to see. I hope you will like them too."

So the big soldier took the little soldier's hand and the two went off together. And just at that moment a lady who had come from the public reading-room paused at the foot of the stairway and saw. When she returned to the reading-room she told her husband that Jimmy was all right, and was being looked after by a nice-looking old gentleman.

It was fully a half hour later when they went in search of the boy to accompany them through the rest of the building. He was standing again in front of the mosaic, and they went up to him.

"Hello, Captain!" the father called contritely. "Did you get very lonesome?"

"No, sir, not a bit," Jimmy answered, saluting. "I've had the very bestest kind of time. And will you read this card for me, please. I can't read such fine writing very good. The man gave it to me."

The Colonel took the card and glanced at it, then gave a low, astounded whistle.

"Clarice," he said to his wife, with an odd note of eagerness in his voice; "you remember the man I told you I would most like to meet in Washington?"

"Yes—Admiral Dewey. You said you hoped to find some one who could give you an introduction."

"Well, I have found him—out of little soldier here. Read this."

On one side was the Admiral's name and address; on the other, written in fine hand, was "An old soldier's compliments to a young one, and a cordial invitation to dinner Thursday evening, for himself and family. The old soldier will be glad to meet the parents of such promising material for our country's future defense."

"Dinner at eight, but come as early as five or six, for there are a lot of war relics and mementoes that the young Captain will be interested in."—Frank H. Swaet, in The Banner.

DICK'S PRACTICE TIME.

"Mamma, is it fifteen minutes yet?" called Dick from the piano stool.

"No, dear. Don't talk, but practice," answered mamma from the other room.

"But, mamma, my shoe hurts my foot, and I can't think what I'm doing," said Dick, appearing at the door with a forlorn look on his face. "I guess I'll have to take the shoe off."

"Richard, you have lost five minutes now. Go right back to the piano and play your exercises. You will have plenty of time to look after the shoe after awhile."

Mamma's tone was firm, so Dick gave a sigh and went back to his task.

One, two, three! Bang, bang, bang! Dick was getting down to work at last. Just outside the window a boy shouted, and he had to run and see who it was.

"Hello, Charley!" he called cheerily. "I'm pretty near done with my playing. Wait a few minutes and I'll be out."

"Got to to the grocery for my mamma," said the boy. "Won't take me very long."

"Richard!" said the warning voice from the next room, and Dick sat heavily down to hunt up the place in the exercise-book once more.

When the clock struck three, a very smiling little boy appeared at the door to say, "Now my time's gone. You promised to read to me mamma, from 'Robinson Crusoe' for half hour after I finished my playing."

"All right," said mamma, taking up the book. "Where was I? Oh, yes, where Crusoe finds his man Friday! I believe I want a drink," and she put down the book to go to the dining room. Dick sat patiently waiting for her; and when she came, it took a long time to find the place once more.

After she had read a few lines, she saw a lady passing and said, "I must speak to Mrs. Page a minute. Don't lose the place." But when she got up the book flew shut, and it took Dick a long time to find the picture of Friday, as he did not know the page.

"Let me see," said mamma, when she had read almost a page, "isn't this the afternoon for the boy to call for the laundry?"

"No; he comes Tuesday, and this is Monday," said Dick. "Please do read very fast, mamma, for I am anxious to hear about Crusoe."

"I'll begin just as soon as I look after that shoe that hurt your foot," said mamma. "Which one?"

"It doesn't hurt a bit now, mamma—honest it doesn't. Please."

"Time is up," said mamma, as the clock struck the half-hour. "I was only to read twice as long as you practiced."

"You haven't read two pages," said the disappointed little boy. "You lost ever so many minutes of the half hour. I wonder—Are you doing this, mamma, to show me that I lost time, too?"

"What do you think about it?" asked his mother, with a smile.

"I'm going right back to play fifteen minutes and see what happens," said Dick. "I think I know what it will be."

When the honest fifteen minutes were gone, mamma was waiting with a slice of bread and jam for Dick and the open book in her hand. Dick thinks the time goes ever so much faster since he doesn't whine and ask questions and waste the moments, and I really believe he is right about the matter.—Ex.

WHAT HAS THAT CHILD DONE NOW?

"Of all things in this world what has that child been up to now," Mrs. Winters peered anxiously up and down the street through the dining room window. "And where could she have gone? Every chair in the living room full of folks waiting to see her. Sunday of all days—so early in the morning, too. And every one of 'em's had a telephone call during the week begging them to come. Something very important she wanted them to do to help her. Couldn't be done any other time. Horrors, there's that bell again! How can I face any more people."

But it had to be done. With rising color, Mrs. Winters opened the door. Mrs. DeBetts and her two little girls this time.

"My dear!" exclaimed the plump little lady as she came bouncing in. "Such a time I had getting here! But Alice Barbara seemed so set on it, and to tell the truth I was curious." Breathlessly the good woman sank down on the dining room chair that Mrs. Winters brought for her.

"Well, did you ever," she exclaimed "quite a party. I had no idea."

"Nor we either," chorused the group that filled the living room. "And Alice Barbara not even here herself!"

"I declare—I can't imagine," began the harassed mother of the missing Alice Barbara. "She never said a word to me about expecting a soul. And she always goes to Sunday school every Sunday—wouldn't miss it for anything. I can't understand it."

"Maybe she's gone already and forgot all about us," spoke up a small girl. "Perhaps she did it just for fun."

"No, indeed!" declared Miss Dewberry, Barbara's teacher. "Alice Barbara would never do a thing like that. She'll have some good reason; depend upon it. She's clever, surprisingly so!"

"Yes," agreed Barbara's mother—none too cheerfully it must be admitted. "She keeps me perpetually surprised, not to say startled at times."

"But where can she be?" questioned Ray Wentworth, a tall boy who lived in the next block. "I thought probably she wanted some more stuff lugged around to that poor family in Mill street, and I brought my wagon."

"Possibly it is something like that," came a man's voice from the corner. "Had to go to Sunday school herself and engaged us as deputies."

"But why the time?" put in his wife. "Quarter of 10, not a minute later. If it had been any one but Alice Barbara I wouldn't have attempted it. Possibly she's persuaded that florist on Main street to donate flowers again and wants us to distribute them to the shut-ins—to make their Sunday bright."

"In any case she should have told you," said Mrs. Winters. "How you ever consented to come without knowing—"

"Curiosity and Alice Barbara," laughed Mrs. De Betts. "A pretty strong combination."

"Oh!" gasped Mrs. Winters, "there's that bell again. Positively I cannot answer it."

"I'll go." Mrs. De Betts rose from her chair and disappeared into the hall. A listening silence; then:

"Well, Alice Barbara, it's just about time you turned up."

"Yes, and I'm sorry I was late. Is every one here? Oh, goody, I see they are," she crowed delightedly, smiling a welcome on the assembled visitors. "One, two, three," counted Barbara her eyes traveling eagerly over the company. "Fourteen in all counting the twins here. Oh, it was so dear of you all to come—just to help me!"

With a sweeping glance of the engaging brown eyes beneath the heavy Dutch bang, Alice Barbara seemed to thank each one personally. In her rich dark blue coat and her becoming hat to match, she certainly was an attractive young one.

"I'm just too sorry for anything to have to keep you waiting," she apologized, "but the very last minute I thought of the twins here; and when I went over to get them they weren't up yet, and I had to dress 'em and feed 'em myself. But I got 'em," she ended triumphantly.

The twins, tiny three-year-olds in tan reefers and sailor caps, clung desperately to Barbara's two hands and smiled bashfully up at the company.

"They're the liveliest things," warbled Alice Barbara enthusiastically. "They crawled all over creation while I was dressing them; Ted here climbed under the bowl and clung fast to the water pipes. But aren't they too dear?"

"They are," said her mother grimly. "But Alice Barbara, tell me this minute why you routed all these people out of their beds so early Sunday morning."

"That's right," said Miss Barbara. "I didn't tell them. But it's time we started this very minute, and we'll have to hurry; I'll tell them on the way. Put on your hat and coat, mother; fifteen's a lot nicer number than fourteen. Fifteen, oh, isn't that glorious! Not another body'll have half that many, I know!"

Ushering her visitors out as she talked, Barbara called: "Hurry, mother, we're starting."

Mrs. Winters stared helplessly at her young daughter, then hastily did as she was bidden.

"This way," directed Barbara, "we're only going to church, you see. It's really Sunday, and that's why I asked you all to come. The one who brings the most visitors gets a prize, the most beautiful set of books, and the class that brings the most gets the banner for the whole year. Oh, it was too sweet of you all to come! This year we'll get both, I know we will. Look at all of you, just look!"

Indeed they made a small army walking down the street. And after their young captain's astonishing speech their thoughts were many and varied. "And you mean to say—just to get a prize—" Words failing the good woman, she sank into silence. It was years since she had been to Sunday school. Of course, she went to church occasionally, but Sunday school!

"Alice Barbara!" Mrs. Winters' voice quivered with nervousness. "How could you se a trick—it certainly was a trick—to get all these good friends of yours out? In the name of the Sunday school of all things! Why didn't you tell them what you wanted instead of using this subterfuge?"

"Oh, last year I tried that on a whole lot of folks, and every one had the biggest lot of excuses. Promised to come next Sunday or the Sunday after that; and our class didn't anywhere near get the banner. And this year I wanted the books so much. Besides," she ended cajolingly, "no one's going to be sorry; we have the loveliest Sunday school in the whole city. Our superintendent says so. I know you'll like it."

The church coming into sight at that moment, Mrs. Winters fished in her pocket and brought out her gloves. Hastily slipping them on, she said gently to Barbara: "My dear, with children it might not have been so bad, but with grown people a little girl shouldn't take liberties."

"But, mother, really I didn't. There's a splendid class for older folks, too. Fifty in all already, and they want a hundred, and Mr. Kimball, the teacher, is the nicest man."

"She wins," chuckled Mr. Blake, the one man of the party. "High time I looked in on a Sunday school anyhow. I declare I've almost forgotten what it's like."

Up the steps of the church filed the little company and with more or less commotion found seats in the back of the big room—just as the opening hymn was announced. From then on they behaved themselves very well, even the lively twins. No one would guess in the least that they had been drafted for the occasion. Indeed when Alice Barbara's name was called and the beautiful books presented they became so enthusiastic they clapped louder than all the rest put together. And when the representative of her class she received the banner also, the whole church was in an uproar. No wonder Mrs. Winters thrilled with pride. "Certainly a most unusual child," she told herself. "But—oh dear, what will she be doing next."—Dora Dexter, in The Continent.

LABORING DAY.

"It'll be fun on the train," said Sarah to her brother Ted. "This is Labor Day, you know, and Mommer says they'll be crowds of people going home from their vacation." She changed her mind about the "fun" of it when she was on the crowded train. A man got up and gave her mother a seat but she and Ted had to stand. It was a very hot day and the car was packed with hot people. "If I could get hold of one of those ginger-snaps in the bag, I'd feel better," Sarah said.

Ted suddenly felt a yearning for ginger-snaps too, so he climbed up on the rack overhead. He slipped when the train gave a lurch, and down he fell on a fat lady's head, bringing the bag and two hats down with him.

"Hey!" shouted the Conductor. "What you trying to do, eh?"

"Get some ginger-snaps for my sister," replied Ted, as if he were very noble. "My sister is hungry."

The fat lady forgave him, and everybody smiled, thinking what a good little boy he was to wait on his hungry sister. He and Sarah ate five ginger-snaps apiece. Then Sarah said. "My! I can't eat another bite. They're awful stuffy things. I'm dead for thirst!" "So'm I," said Ted. "I'll get a drink and bring one to you."

He had a collapsible drinking cup, so all he had to do was to worm himself to the ice-water cooler at the end of the car. Gee. It was hard work! There were legs and legs, and bags and valises and skirts of different lengths through which he had to dodge and twist. People lost their balance, women screamed, men shouted "Hev!" but on went our little hero to the end of the car. Well, it was the wrong end! The cooler was at the other end—of course, one might have expected that!

Nothing daunted Ted began squirming back to find the cooler. Again his path was marked by screams and protests, not that he was rough, but the train lurched so that just as he was dodging by a pair of legs he would almost fall and only manage to save himself by grabbing a leg. At last he found the cooler and took five drinks. Then he filled his cup and started back.

He had only gone past about two legs when his cup of water was swept out of his hand by a wildly clutching passenger. So Ted had to go back and fill it up again.

"Say, kid," protested a man. "What sort of a game are you playing? Cut it out!"

"I'm taking a drink to my sister," said Ted. "She's very thirsty."

"Well, if that's the case, I'll help you along," said the man, and he lifted the boy, cup and all and passed him to another man further along the line. The third man was just about to take him when the collapsible cup collapsed and, of course, the water fell out of it. It happened that a little girl was looking up watching Ted, when the water fell. It splashed right in her face and the girl began to boo-hoo like anything.

"I'm thirsty, too," said a little boy standing next to her.

So he and Ted began squirming for the cooler again.

"Take me back to the shop!" exclaimed a big man. "This is worse than working eight hours."

"Put him off the train!" cried the little girl hopefully.

Sarah heard her and began to cry loudly, which worried her mother a good deal.

Suddenly the train gave a great lurch, throwing nearly everybody down, and then it stopped.

"What's the matter? Is it a collision? Let's get out!" people began to say, but the Conductor came to the door and shouted:

"It's all right, folks! There's a cow on the track, that's all. We'll be going in a moment!"

Ted squirmed madly for the door and at last got out with some other boys and men. It wasn't a cow on the track at all. It was a landslide, and the engineer and fireman were shoveling it as fast as they could. Ted asked if he might help and they gave him a pair of big gloves and told him to "heave away." Soon the other boys and men were at work, some with shovels, some picking up stones and clods of earth.

"I've been working on the railroad —" sang one of the men.

"Just to pass the time away—"

"Labor Day," said another. "I ain't goin' to work on Labor Day."

"If all said that, we'd stay here all night," said the engineer.

While they were all busily engaged, Ted climbed a little way down the embankment to look around, when suddenly a figure came up from the other side and a voice shouted: "Hands up!"

My! It was thrilling! It was a real bandit, and another one was inside the car! Ted stuck up his head and saw the bandit's legs. The engineer and everybody stood with their hands raised.

"Of course," thought Ted, "the man has a gun and everything!"

He was a business-like bandit, too. He shouted to one of the little boys to go through the men's pockets and take everything out and hand it all to him, or he'd "blow your brains out!" The little boy rather enjoyed the job, he knew it wasn't stealing, as he couldn't help himself, and he knew his mamma would not want him to let the bandit blow out his brains.

Everybody was staring at the bandit's gun, and the bandit was watching the wallets and watches coming out of the men's pockets, so they did not see a small form glide from the bank and begin running softly towards the big bandit. But suddenly, the bandit was seen to stagger, his hands flew up. In a moment the engineer was on him, then the fireman wrenched away his gun. Then the other men piled on top. It was thrilling!

They held the bandit tight, while somebody went to get a rope, and the engineer ran to the car with the gun and shot at the other bandit, and they captured him too.

Meanwhile Ted was being squeezed very hard and seeing all the stars and comets in the sky. When they picked up the bandit they found the poor little fellow underneath, looking more dead than alive. There was a doctor on the train, who got ice-water and brought him to, and believe me, he was a hero in the eyes of all.

"He'll make a wonderful tackle on a college team," said one of the men.

It was a couple of hours before the train could go on, and some of the holiday-makers were heard to remark that they'd never labored so hard in their lives as they had labored over the landslide which the bandit had started in order to stop the train which he wanted to hold up.

They took up a collection for Ted, and he was given a purse with fifty-eight dollars in it.

"Say, Sarah," he told his sister, "you were right! It certainly is fun on this crowded train. I haven't had a slow minute. The engineer is goin' to let me ride with him and teach me to drive the engine. Good-by! Oh, er, wait. I nearly forgot. Here's your drink of water."—Selected.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

A Fine Suggestion!

This morning I opened my mail and I found a check and a letter running something like this: "To-day thirteen years ago you married me, and enclosed you will find check to show my appreciation for the kind deed. I have more money these days than I had then." And then goes on to express words of appreciation for other work done that are a great encouragement to me. Such deeds are worth more than the money value. I am not using the brother's name because I do not feel at liberty to do so; but I am giving publicity to this now because this thought occurred to me: Wonder how many among our older men in the ministry need a new hat for conference, or a pair of shoes or even more than that, and possibly there is an account at the grocery store "hanging fire" because of lack of funds to pay it, and some of you men who have prospered and you have forgotten the "kind deed" as this brother calls it. You are in so much better circumstances than you were then and you could do good with some of that increase just in this way. Now I am not asking everybody to rise up and make another payment on their wives, but to those that you know are in need try this plan and make them happy.

This brother paid me then, but the increase in prosperity and the happiness that has come made him feel like he wanted to make another payment. This seems to me a splendid opportunity to remind some of the good they might do to our older men who went through so much to do their work and so often got so little for the efforts put forth.

Thomasville Circuit.—First Church:—Our work here at First Church is going on smoothly. Our mid-week prayer meeting has a good attendance, yet many of our adult members do not attend. We have recently received into this church, Mr. and Mrs. Z. R. Dameron and their two daughters, Miss. Myrtle, and Mrs. Ruby Harmon. We extend a most hearty welcome to these good people. They are not only church attendants but church workers. Mrs. Dameron has been suffering from the effects of blood poison for several months, but has improved so that she can attend church. Our membership at First Church is now 117.

The long looked for and much talked about Sunday school rooms at Pleasant Grove have been completed and both Sunday school rooms and the church auditorium have been painted. This church is now well equipped for both church and Sunday school work. In fact, I do not know of a better equipped country church in conference. The third Sunday has been selected as "rally day." Sunday school will be as usual at 10 A. M., and at 11 A. M. Prof. Geo. H. Crowell, of High Point, will deliver an address on christian education. Some of our readers perhaps remember hearing Mr. Crowell last summer at the college. He is a fine speaker, and orthodox in his views on the Bible. A great treat is in store for those who hear him. Dinner will be on the grounds. After dinner the Pleasant Grove memorial association will have charge. This association was organized a few months ago with Bro. Z. B. Morris as president, and Bro.

B. E. Kennedy secretary and treasurer. Mr. R. L. Pope, of Thomasville, will deliver an address in the afternoon and perhaps there will be others who will speak. All who have friends buried at the Grove are urged to be present, if possible. Geo L. Reynolds.

P. S. Our fourth quarterly conference will meet at First Church in Thomasville on Friday night Oct. 16th at 7:30 P. M. Dr. Dixon will be present and will preside. G. L. R.

From A College Girl.

"Rev. A. G. Dixon,
Greensboro, N. C.

Dear Sir:—As a college girl and an interested member of the Methodist Protestant church I give you these hints. Please act upon them as you see fit. I have studied the situation for the past two years and I think I see matters in the true light.

We, as young people are full of energy, and if it is not directed in the right way now, it may drift so far into the wrong that it cannot be brought back.

Will you please suggest to the pastors of our churches back home that they show enough interest in their girls to follow them up by writing to the proper one in each of the Methodist Protestant churches in this city. If they will write to Mr. J. Norman Wills of Grace church he will turn the names over to the members of his class and we will try to look them up. It is impossible for us to send our girls unless we know their names.

There are a number of us who would like to be in High Point for some of the annual conference. We are making desperate efforts to be there. Some of us have never been to one.

Please accept these statements in the kind and loving manner in which they were meant to be given.

Sincerely,

A College Girl."

I wish to thank this college girl for her kind note, and am taking this means of making the suggestion she makes to all our pastors who have girls from their charges in the N. C. C. W. in Greensboro. Where there are 1700 or more girls these Methodist Protestant girls who have been in college for a year or more would like to be of service to the new girls if they can find them, but they cannot find them unless they have their names. Pastors will please do as requested above and write to Mr. Wills.

I hope a number of these girls will be able to attend several sessions of the annual conference Nov. 4 to 9 in High Point, and I hope "A College Girl" will make herself known to me the first time we meet so I may thank her personally for her letter. Mrs. Dixon and I would be so glad to have her call to see us at 126 Tate Street. We will also be glad to have any of our girls who are at the N. C. C. W. call to see us.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

Lexington, State St. Church.—As the conference year is coming to a close and we look back over the year's work we find many things that are encouraging. The membership has more than doubled, the Sunday school is more than twice as large as at the beginning of the year, an enthusiastic Christian Endeavor Society has been organized and the Missionary Society has grown during the year. For all these things we are thankful but all of us wish we had done better in many instances. Doubtless every member has a ready resolved to do better work next year. With a pastor like Mr. Bethea and a Sunday school superintendent like Mr. Lindsay few people can do great things. Some time I wonder if we appreciate our leaders as much as we should; yes, I am sure we all appreciate them but do we tell them so as often as we will tell others about them after they are gone?

Our Christian Endeavor Society held service for the prisoners at the jail here last Friday night. We will hold another service with them the last Friday night in this month.

Miss Muse of Charlotte, N. C., spent the week-end with Brother and Mrs. Bethea and was with us at all the services Sunday. She favored us with a beautiful solo at both services. Miss Muse has been with us before and we are always delighted to have her.

Quarterly conference will be held tonight. Dr. and Mrs. Dixon will be with us.

Haw River.—Our fourth quarterly conference was held at Mizpah church the 10th.

All churches were well represented and we had an enthusiastic service. The reports were fine and in spite of the fact of bad crops the people are hopeful and determined. The good people decided to change their record of short pastorates and instructed the delegates to ask for the return of the present incumbents.

Bro. Gilmer Huffines, one of our youngest and most faithful and efficient stewards, was elected delegate alternate. W. D. Reed.

Winston-Salem.—Miss Orrell, our reporter has been on the job this year, giving to the readers of the Herald from time to time interesting items of the work being done here so I have not felt it necessary for me to report often. However, as the conference year draws near to its close, I feel that it is due the good people of this church to say that has been more successful, from every standpoint, than any year of my ministry here. There have been more conversions, more members have been received, more money has been raised, the average attendance at all services has been better, and the majority of the members have taken a deeper interest in the work of the church than during any previous year of the five. While there have been some misunderstandings, some disappointments and some discord, as you will find in all churches the work has prospered, and God has abundantly blessed the earnest efforts of his faithful servants here.

Wednesday evening of this week at 7:30 we are to give a reception in honor of the members received during the conference year—thirty in number. An interesting program has been arranged and it is expected that the occasion will be one of much pleasure and profit.

Brother J. Norman Wills, of Greensboro is delighting and edifying our evening congregations with his series of addresses "Friendship." He will deliver his final message next Sunday evening.

The last quarterly conference of the year will be held 'Wednesday evening,' October 28th, just one week from the opening of the annual conference. It is expected that interesting and encouraging reports from every organization of the church will be presented at that time. The pastor is very anxious for full attendance not only of the official board out of the entire church membership. Brother R. N. Hauser will be the delegate to the annual conference.
R. A. Hunter.

Love Joy, Why Not Circuit.—We have had a wonderful revival in our church, closing Friday night. We had four services a day; prayer service at 7 o'clock, A. M., preaching at 11 o'clock A. M., preaching in the evening and at night. Our pastor, Bro. Hulin, had as his helper Rev. T. E. Pierce of Welch Memorial church, High Point, N. C. I have never heard more soul stirring, forceful and inspiring sermons than he preached and the response of the people was good. A large number of our people and people from other churches did personal work. There were about 50 conversions and reclamations and our whole church has been greatly revived; 16 joined the church. May we continue working in His service so that God will pour out his blessings upon us.

Bro. T. F. Scott of Steeds was with us and led the singing which was a great help in the services.

Our Sunday school is making good progress. We elected our officers and teachers last Sunday for the ensuing year. Bro. Frank Hunter will be our Supt. for another year. May we all as church members pray for him and help him in the work. He has been the real backbone of the Sunday school in every way that tends to make it progressive.

Our pastor, Rev. J. W. Hulin, will preach for us on Saturday night, October 17 at 7:30 o'clock. Every member is requested to be present as there are some important matters to look after.

Our next and last quarterly conference will be held on Saturday before the 4th Sunday in October at Flag Springs.

Hobart Reynolds, Reporter.

Asheville.—We are hoping to wind up our finances by the next Sunday week so as to have the last Sunday for joking.

Last Sunday was rally day. The attendance at both services was good. The offering for all causes was almost one hundred dollars.

Our Christian Endeavor is the best ever. Its interest is fine and the attendance very good. The society pledged twenty-five dollars to the budget and paid thirty-seven. Our Ladies' Aid made forty dollars on a rummage sale. They have paid off their college pledge. They have paid about five hundred dollars this year to all causes.

Mrs. M. D. Council recently returned from Baltimore where she was treated in a hospital. She has been spending the winters at Miami, Fla. She is now residing on Gracelyn road, this city, with her nephew George Lehman and her niece, Mrs. Hardee. Mrs. L. Joyner is nursing her.

Brother Ward Mitchell is improving. He has been in a hospital for several weeks. We still miss Brother Cris Carter from our services.

Brother E. L. Douglas of High Point, with his son and daughter, worshipped with us two Sundays ago. Our pastor has just finished a series of Bible characters in his prayer meeting talks. His studies have been quite helpful.
Reporter.

Alleghany, Davidson Ct.—Second Sunday was a busy day. We had Sunday school; after Sunday school Brother Ridge preached and opened the doors of the church. Three joined: Brother J. M. Taylor from the Baptist church and Sister Caroline Hearn and son Solomon Hearn from the M. E. church. We welcome these and hope that they may be a great help to the church. Brother Ridge administered the Lord's supper; 32 partook. He then appointed the officers for next year as follows. Brother Carl Cook as superintendent, W. E. Lanier and Brother Paul Fine class leader. The other officers were the old board. I think that Brother Ridge will get what is promised him at our church. We are not very far behind. We want him to, for we are expecting him back. He has helped the people greatly this year and we hate to give him up, for we feel that he has preached the truth. He has preached plainly and that is what the world needs. It seems that people are seeking pleasure more than God. I want the old time religion, that is good enough for me. I want to live so that when the Lord calls I will be ready to go. I try to pray everyday for everybody as best I can. I want to see everybody get on a higher plane. There is room for all to get better. If we cannot talk like some others we can pray and we can stand up for the Lord. We can tell the love of Jesus. We can say that he died for all.

We have had a very good Sunday school this year. If all will pull together we can have a great deal better next year by the help of the Lord. The superintendent needs our prayers to help him to do his best. If he does not do what we think he ought, let us think and see if we would do any better. Let us keep our promises in holding him up. Prayer meeting Saturday. Pray for the preachers as they go to conference that they may be sent to the right places. We ask the prayers of all of the readers.

In Memory of Our Loved One.

On Saturday morning, October 3, 1925, little T. C. Satterwhite, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Satterwhite, Sr., left his home on earth for a more beautiful one in heaven where sorrow and dying are unknown.

He was five years, one month and seventeen days old. He got choked with a bean, and died suddenly which was shocking and grieved the whole community. But we all knew that it was the Lord's will and He doth all things well. May the Lord bless and guide his parents in the path of the righteous that they may meet him in that beautiful home in heaven. He is survived by his parents, one sister, one brother, relatives and friends.

The funeral was held at his home and he was laid to rest in the family burying ground near Mr. S. G. Satterwhite's old home. The crowd was large and there were many beautiful flowers which showed our love and respect for him.

He is sleeping, sweetly sleeping

In a new made grave to-day;

We are weeping, sadly weeping

For our darling gone away.

T. C., we miss thee, yes, we miss thee,

You know not our sorrow,

But how sweet it will be;

When we meet thee on the morrow.

A Splendid Young Man Passes.

Lois Newton Roberson, oldest son of the late Bro. A. N. Roberson, was born February 13, 1902, and passed away at Rainey hospital, Burlington, September 22, 1925. In his early teens he was converted and joined Concord Methodist Protestant church, remaining a faithful member until death. Although he received the very best medical attention, having two special nurses with him all the time, it was of no avail.

It was the writer's privilege to know Mr. Roberson intimately for about three years. His disposition was sunny and full of genial warmth, yet he knew and fully appreciated the value of a man. He was a young man who walked circumspectly every day. Youth found him religious, and that is the best thing that can be said about any one. In his passing the writer has lost a personal friend. God does not measure life by years but by service. It is possible for one who dies early to have lived more than another who has been spared to his allotted three-score years and ten. Mr. Roberson did not live long in years, only 23, yet he lived the 23 years well. He was prepared for that fuller and more abundant life made perfect in Christ Jesus. He told his mother just before he died that it was well with his soul.

Concord church could accommodate only about one fourth of the large concourse of people that assembled for the funeral, which was conducted by the pastor, assisted by Rev. S. W. Taylor. We then gently laid his body to rest near his father, Bro. A. N. Roberson of sainted memory, who died just a few months ago. The floral tribute was beautiful. May grace be multiplied to his mother and brothers and sisters.

Clark's Chapel.—It has been quite a while since we have had a report in the Herald, as you all know. But things have been moving nicely with our little church, with the exception of sickness in our community. After asking our good Master to check the sickness we are now on foot to do our best for Him (Jesus Christ).

Never in my life have I served a more enthusiastic little flock of members, that are always ready to be fed with the spiritual food that the good Master has taught us.

The members are active at Bible Class, which is taught on Tuesday night, and Prayer Meeting on Thursday night, and are still found faithful on Sunday morning at Sunday school and preaching service, with minds to listen, and hearts to receive, and tongues to speak those things which the Master bids them speak.

We, the members of the Sunday school, thank God for our spiritual superintendent, is always found faithful at the hour of starting. By his faithfulness we have gained a great addition to our Sunday school, with our goal and determination planned out, to add many more to our Sunday school and church.

The community is praying and looking forward to the revival to be held in October, and we are asking the prayers of all the readers of the Herald, and all the churches that this report reaches, that we may have an out-pouring of the Holy Spirit, and many souls will be born into the Kingdom of God.

Thanking you kindly to whom this may

ATTRACTIVE CHRISTIANS.

"My mind goes back," said a man recalling college days, "to a social affair to which were invited all the students, professors, and friends of the college. While the rest of the assembly were moving about, shaking hands and exchanging greetings, Dr. C. was sitting in one corner of the spacious room. A few of us students began to talk with him. He led the conversation into paths which were new to us. Other students left the delights of hand-shaking, joined the group, and listened with strained attention to catch every word which the man of wisdom spoke. He talked to us of human anatomy, and we listened better and learned more than we would had we been attending a prescribed lecture by the regular professor, because Dr. C. had a way of making knowledge attractive. He was not eloquent, he spoke easily and quietly, but there was in his manner a magic which was nothing less than magnetic.

"Dr. C." he continued, "not only made secular learning attractive; he made religion attractive also. He talked about going to church in such a way that interest was aroused, and his students found new motives for being faithful to their religious obligations."

This earnest Christian found a way to influence others for Christ in the midst of the ordinary experiences of life. We make a mistake if we think that in order to make our lives count in Christian service we must be picked up by the almighty hand of God and set down in another part of the world, or that we must be given some unusual opportunity. A man who paints houses, wears jumpers, and climbs up the sides of houses ought not to think that, unless he wears a starched collar, a white necktie, and can throw his voice out over an audience with oratorical precision, he is at all handicapped in doing service for the Master. He has the privilege of so cultivating the powers that lie within him that he shall be able to make his religion so attractive that others will be drawn to Christ to seek in him the same qualities of attractiveness.

Dan Crawford, missionary to Africa, exhibited this quality. "One day," said a companion, "we went to the railway station to bid good-by to one of our friends who was leaving the town. Mr. Crawford started to speak to two natives who were standing on the platform. Within a few minutes a crowd of natives—at least 75—were pushing each other in their efforts to get near enough to Mr. Crawford to hear what he was saying. The station master came up and said:

"You may not hold a meeting here on the platform, as we do not allow it."

"Why," answered Mr. Crawford, "I was not holding a meeting. I simply began to speak to two of these natives, and the rest came to listen!"

It is often in just such quiet and unassuming ways that Christians are able to attract others to the Source whence they themselves draw their supplies. A Sunday school teacher who did not have a great knowledge of the Bible, but who had the faculty of making attractive the knowledge he possessed, was able so to hold up before the boys who came to his class from Sunday to Sunday the manhood of the Master, that they were constrained to devote their lives to Christ and His service.

When we understand that great things are wrought in the Kingdom "not by might, nor by power," we shall be more content to let the Holy Spirit work quietly and attractively in and through us.

THE LOOKING GLASS.

A man was complaining to his neighbors. "Never saw such a wretched set of people," he said, "as are in this village. They are mean, greedy of gain, selfish and careless of the needs of others. Worst of all, they are forever speaking evil of one another." "Is it really so?" said an angel who happened to be walking with him. "It is indeed," said the man. "Why, only look at this fellow coming toward us! I know his face, though I cannot just remember his name. See his little shark-like, cruel eyes darting here and there like a ferret's and the lines of covetousness about his mouth! The very droop of his shoulders is mean and cringing, and he slinks along instead of walking." "It is very clever of you to tell all this," said the angel, "but there is one thing which you did not perceive." "What is that?" asked the man. "That it is a looking glass we are approaching," said the angel.—Baptist World.

All the warm and tender feeling.
From real affections flow.
Love me now while I am living.
Do not wait till I am gone.
And then chisel it on marble—
Warm love words on ice-cold stone.
If you have dear thoughts about me,
Why not whisper them to me?
Surely they would make me happy.
And as glad as glad can be.
If you wait till I am sleeping
Nevermore to wake again,
There'll be walls of earth between us,
And I cannot hear you then.
If you knew someone were thirsting
For a drink of water sweet,
Would you then be slow to bring it,
Would you step with laggard feet?
There's a tender heart right near you;
That is thirsting for your love.
Why should you refuse to give them
That which God sent from above?
You have flowers in your garden,
Some are white and some are red:
Give them to me while I'm living,
I can't see them when I'm dead.
I won't need your fond caresses
When the grass grows o'er my face.
I won't want your love and kisses
In my last long resting place.
So if you are going to love me,
If it's but a little bit,
Won't you love me while I'm living.
So that I can treasure it?

PRAYER FOR CONFERENCE.

Dear Reader of the Herald: In this or hundredth session of our conference, we crave infinite grace and power. You will be glad to pray with others daily and continually in the words of this prayer, or in your own words. We will pray believably.

Father, in Jesus' Name, we pray:

Give us the best conference ever. Prepare us for Thy blessing. Stir ever member and friend for a full financial report. Revive hearts for consecration and for the conversion of unbelievers. Work in us to will and to Thy pleasure. Fire our hearts even before we start to conference. Move the hearts of those who stay at home to earnest prayer. Give unction to every speaker. May every item of business be attended to well. May longing souls be refreshed with the assurance of success for our missions, our college and our churches and our denomination and the Kingdom. In Thine own way, give Spirit, give Thyself, unveil Thy face, speak, fashion, let anoint, send forth. Amen.

—Mrs. C. V. Hardin enjoyed a visit recently from her daughter, Mrs. J. F. Spence of Cheraw, S. C.

A CONVERSATION.

"Bro. Johnsing, is you a Modernist or Fundamentalist?"

"Laws a massie, Bro. Jones, I aint got no far along. I'se jist a plain Christian wid no any frills or furbelows."

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, it has pleased our kind heavenly Father to remove from our midst, our dear friend and sister, Miss Lillie Bivins, a faithful member of the Efland M. P. church and of the Ladies' Aid Society, be it resolved. First. That we peace on record our appreciation of her earnest christian character, as exemplified by her daily life and faithful service in every department of christian work. Second. That we recommend that others emulate her example of christian fidelity. Third. That we extend to her bereaved family and to many who loved her, our heartfelt sympathy. Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family and to the M. P. Herald.

Mrs. Wm. Richmond, Pres.

Mrs. E. D. Thompson, Sec.-Treas.

Miss Lillie Bivins.

In the early morning of September 26th, the death angel ushered the spirit of Miss Lillie Bivins away to her eternal home. She had been for many months a patient sufferer, and her death came not as a surprise to her relatives and many friends. She leaves a devoted mother, Mrs. John Bivins, five brothers, Edgar, Odes, Grover, Hubert, Claude, several nieces, nephews, and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

During the many months of her suffering, the same patience and christian fortitude was revealed that characterized her life. She had been for many years a faithful and consistent member of the Efland M. P. church—everready and willing to sacrifice and serve to the best interests of the church—when unable to attend the regular services, her interest was expressed, by inquiries of its needs and progress.

Hers was a beautiful life, cheerful, unassuming, but full of faith in her Lord and in her friends. Her brave life has been ended so far as it was of the earth, but the spirit of it has been woven into the lives of her family and all who knew her, making their lives richer because of her patience, faith, and love. All that loving hands and medical skill could do, was done for her comfort and healing, but the time had come for her to answer the call, "Come up higher"; then it was that nothing more could be done for her by loving earthly friends than to place her body quietly away to await the resurrection morn.

She was buried in the Efland cemetery Sunday morning September the 27. The large host of friends, together with the magnificent and costly floral tributes, revealed something of the high esteem in which she was held.

Flowers very fittingly speak to us a lesson of her life.

Flowers, beautiful and rare with their rich perfume,
Cheer our hearts and bid us look, up above the tomb.

Flowers, flowers, how we prize the earthly blooms that die,
They speak to us a message soft, of perfect blooms on high.

Flowers, yes, we love the flowers, that in fields and gardens grow,

But, oh, the flowers, the precious flowers we love and treasure so—

Are the flowers of the human heart, the flowers most to prize,

They cheer our hearts, they lift us up, and help our souls to rise—

Away from earthly cares and woes, away from sin and pain,

They help us by their sweetness, Christ's choicest gifts to gain,

We thank Thee, Lord, for gentle hearts, made beautiful by Thee,

We thank Thee that our lives may grow in likeness unto Thee—

Ye thank Thee for Miss Lillie's life in its sweet simplicity,

God grant that many lives may bloom as hers, for eternity.

A Friend.

Welborn.

W W. Welborn was born, March 15, 1859. He departed this life September 26th, 1925. Being sixty-six years and six months and eleven days old. On May 11th, 1879, he was united in marriage to Miss. Elfina Blizzard. To this union were born four daughters and one son. The son and one daughter preceded the father to their heavenly home. Three daughters and the widow, four half sisters, and six grandchildren survive, all of this city.

About thirty-five years ago he professed faith in Christ Jesus, and united with the Fairfield M. P. church, where he remained a faithful member until moving to High Point, he then moved his membership to Welch Memorial Church, where he remained a faithful member until the Lord said, Thy work is finished, Come, "Inherit the Kingdom which I have prepared for thee." With his going, the church has lost a faithful member, the community a good neighbor and friend, the wife a true husband, the children a devoted father, but our loss is his eternal gain. May the Lord bless and comfort those who have been bereaved of a loved one.

The funeral was conducted from church by the pastor, and assisted by Rev. J. H. Motion of Greensboro, and Rev. O. L. Routh, pastor of the Holiness Church of this city. The remains were laid to rest in the church burying ground at Fairfield Church; Servant of God, well done;

Thy glorious warfare's past,
The battle's fought, the race is won,
And thou art crowned at last.

Julian.

Mrs. Adeline B. Julian died Oct. 4, 1925. She was a daughter of William and Mary Carter and was born Jan. 10, 1849, and was the last one of the Carter family. She was united in marriage to P. M. Julian December 25, 1866. To this union were born two children, Charles Edward, who died 32 years ago, and Mary Caroline. She professed faith in Christ while a young girl and joined Cedar Falls M. E. church, and when Cedar Falls M. P. church was organized and built she with her husband moved their membership to this church, of which she ever remained a faithful member.

She was a kind and affectionate companion, a loving mother and a good neighbor. She is survived by her aged husband who is now in his 82nd year, and one daughter Mrs. M. H. Free, two grandchildren and one great grandchild.

Truly a good woman is gone. She was buried in Cedar Falls cemetery Oct. 5th by the writer in the most beautiful grave I ever saw. "Asleep in Jesus! Far from thee thy kindred and their graves may be, but thine is a blessed sleep from which none ever wakes to weep."

G. A. Langhlin.

Bobbit.

Mrs. Patie Floyd Bobbit was born August 1858. On December 15th, 1881, she was united in marriage to Mr. T. V. Bobbit, who survives her. To this union four children were born, two sons and two daughters, all of whom are living.

She was converted in childhood and united with the M. P. church at Union Chapel, Granville Circuit. After her marriage she transferred her membership to Rehobeth where her husband held membership, where until the day of her death she lived a faithful christian. On September 10, 1925, she fell asleep in Jesus and on the following day her body was laid to rest in the Rehobeth cemetery under a mound of beautiful flowers, after a funeral service held in the church which was conducted by her pastor, assisted by Revs. J. E. Pritchard and J. R. Hutton, a large concourse of friends and relatives had assembled for this sad occasion. The songs used were most appropriate and were well rendered. Sister Bobbit had been an invalid for quite a while, partly as the result of an accident which befell her some years ago. During her last days her pastor had a number of heart to heart talks with her. Her faith was most sublime and her resignation to the will of God was complete. She called her children about her and asked them that when she was gone not to think of her as dead, that she was only going home. In heaven we shall find an innumerable host of sweet faced mothers, among them will be Mrs. Katie Floyd Bobbit. She left a message for her Sunday school teacher, Mrs. E. C. Harris, and the adult Bible class furnished the following tribute which was read at her funeral—"Mrs. Katie Floyd Bobbit has been a member of the adult Bible class at Rehobeth church for many years. She has always been an inspiration to the class and especially to those who undertook to teach. Her life has been to us a joy and shall always be a sweet remembrance. She filled her place with dignity and charity. She scattered sunshine and charm, her life was devotion and activity, her example bright, her every day a consecration. We shall miss her and yet we have no desire to call her back. We know that she shall go on forever from conquering, to conquest, and from joy to joy. We hope to follow her as she followed Jesus.—

Servant of God, well done!

Thy glorious warfare's past;

The battle's fought—the victory's won.

And thou art crowned at last."

TOBACCO AND YOUTH.

Will H. Brown.

Regardless of their own personal attitude toward tobacco, normal fathers are proud of sons who do not use the weed. This is indicated in the action of Mayor Rolph, of San Francisco, in presenting his son a gold watch on his twenty-first birthday, because the young man had kept himself free from liquor and tobacco.

Of 2,120 young men who entered the Ohio State University at the beginning of one term, only 632 used tobacco—about three-tenths of his class. Let those who say, "All young men smoke," digest this fact very thoroughly.

Again: A petition signed by one thousand students and teachers in the high school at Pontiac, Mich., was presented to the city commissioners by eight of the boy students, asking that the sale of tobacco to boys and girls in the community under twenty-one be prohibited. The reason given for the request was that an investigation had revealed the fact that students addicted to tobacco were inferior in scholarships.

In preparation for the annual commencement of the University of Michigan, in June, 1925, the students were asked to refrain from smoking in the procession and during exercises. The reason given was that many persons had written in protest of such conduct a year previous.

As an encouragement to thoughtful youths, who want to make their lives count for much that is worth while, note this: The Kiwanian Club of Santa Ana, Calif., has adopted a resolution against smoking at any of its future meetings. It is significant of the trend of the times when an organization of hard-headed business men will take such action of their own accord.

Draper.—Our work here is getting along fine.

We have held two revival meetings and have witnessed about 87 conversions.

Received 23 in the church and God has wonderfully blessed our work here this year. Our finance is behind some yet; the drought here has about ruined the crops and the mill has been on short time for quite awhile.

But we are hoping for better times at Draper.

We moved our tent to Martinsville, Va., and held a revival and God gave us 145 souls meeting.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

Catalogue and application blank will be forwarded upon application. Those desiring further information should address The President, High Point College, High Point, N. C.

There is a great prospect for a M. P. church there.

Asking the readers of the Herald to pray for us and our work.

I am fraternally yours, J. S. Riddle.

OUR OWN.

If I had known in the morning

How wearily all the day

The words unkind

Would trouble my mind

I said when you went away,

I had been more careful, darling,

Nor given you needless pain;

But we wound our own

With look and tone

We may never take back again.

For though in the quiet evening

You may give me the kiss of peace,

Yet it might be

That never for me

The pain of the heart should cease.

How many go forth in the morning

That never come home at night,

And hearts have broken

For harsh words spoken

That sorrow can never set right.

We have careful thoughts for the stranger

And smiles for the some-times guests,

But oft for "our own"

The bitter tone,

Though we love our own the best.

Ah, lips with the curve impatient;

Ah, brow with the look of scorn;

'Twere a cruel fate

Were the night too late

To undo the work of the morn.

ONE CANNOT DO IT, BUT A THOUSAND CAN.

The financial situation of High Point College has become exceedingly acute. While the treasurer's report each week shows a number of payments, the amount is altogether inadequate to meet the needs.

Many of our people situated in the Piedmont section have failed to make any crops, on account of the dry weather, and are simply unable to pay. There are, however, those in other sections who are able to meet their payments, and there are, of course, a great many in the region affected by the drought, who can command the cash with which to meet this obligation.

According to Dr. Andrews' report, the total pledges received amount to $240,000.00. About $150,000.00 has been collected, leaving $90,000.00 unpaid.

I have done the best possible by becoming personally responsible for loans to meet the situation, but the point has been reached that I cannot do so any longer.

I wish, therefore, to make an appeal to those who have unpaid pledges, and who could even by a great sacrifice, meet them, to forward the money to Dr. Andrews at once. I wish to ask also that any who have not made pledges, or who have paid their pledges in full, and can make a contribution, will do so before November 1.

We have a great institution, with property worth over a half million dollars, with 199 students enrolled. We have said that we must not think of failure as being possible, and yet we must realize that unless we can take care of pressing obligations, failure is not only possible, but imminent. One person, or a half dozen, cannot meet this emergency, but a thousand can do so.

Whether we should have undertaken to build such good buildings, or so many of them, need not now be considered. I did not myself think it was wise, but I yielded to the popular demand, and acquiesced in the decision to borrow the money and erect the buildings. Now we have them—there are no better anywhere. To pay for them is not beyond our ability, in spite of unfavorable crop conditions. We need not fail, but to avoid failure will require prompt and concerted action.

J. Norman Wills.

A REQUEST AND AN ANNOUNCEMENT. Let Us Pray.

All Christian people who read this are requested to pray most earnestly that the Spirit of the Lord may have right of way in every action of our annual conference sessions. If we thus pray and believe then His will must be wrought out among us and we will be happy.

An Announcement.

For some years now we have been designating one day of our conference as "Young People's Day." Thursday, November the 5, is young people's day this year. Business will go on just as it would if no young people, and other visitors, should be present. Your young people are asked to sit in on the conference that day just to see and hear the workings of an annual conference.

The evening session, opening at 7:30, will be given over to addresses on young people's work, by Rev. Lawrence C. Little and Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, D. D. Workers in Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies should be there in goodly numbers.

Faithfully yours, A. G. Dixon.

Rev. C. B. Way has published in neat pamphlet form a directory of Shelby Methodist Protestant Church, giving the names of the members and the officers. It also contains a sketch of the history of the church and also a brief history of the beginning of the Methodist Protestant Church. This is a service to be appreciated by the people of the Shelby church.

Bro. Gerringer is preaching nightly in Calvary church this week to very attentive audiences. The first sermons of the series were directed more especially to church members. He tries to impress on laymen their duty to assist in evangelistic work. There will be preaching on Saturday night, too. Bro. W. K. Hess is leading the singing very acceptably. One man called up Bro. Gerringer to tell him that he could not throw off the impression made by one sermon, even if he wished to do so. We hope the meeting will have good results in several ways.

—The trustees of High Point College had a meeting last Monday. There are 199 students now registered. We think Adrian College ran fifty years before it reached this number of students. Our people have reason to be encouraged by the attendance.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAM.

At the General Conference held May, 1924, in Tiffin, Ohio, action was taken looking to the Centennial celebration of the Methodist Protestant Church. The Budget Council has prepared a Christmas program in harmony with this action which will be sent to all pastors and Sunday school superintendents within the next few days.

This program will be furnished free to all our Churches and Sunday schools the same as the other special day programs. The offering will be credited to the General Conference Budget, and all Boards will receive their pro rata of the same.

We all recognize the pressing need for the necessary funds by which the several Boards of our Church may be enabled to carry on their work. This offers an opportunity for the Church to respond to the needs of the Denomination. We hope every Church will use the program and respond with a liberal Christmas offering.

In preparing the program, we have tried to meet the demands of all our Churches and Sunday schools, providing songs and recitations and also a pageant for those who may prefer it. All orders should be addressed to Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, D. D., 516 N. Charles Street, Baltimore, Maryland. If you have not received your sample copy it is because we do not have your correct address. If you write us, we shall be glad to furnish you with a program.

E. A. Sexsmith.

GOLDEN RULE CHILDREN OF THE NEAR EAST.

By Flora Robinson Howells.
Former President of Isabella Thoburn College, Lucknow, India.

Students of world affairs have been watching with great interest the work of American philanthropy in the Near East. To us who are trying to do similar philanthropic work with funds pitifully inadequate, there has been some incitement to envy in reading the reports of an organization which commands a yearly income of several million dollars for use in the most up-to-date and efficient manner for the greatest child-education experiment in the history of the world.

By virtue of its national charter, the Near East Relief enjoys the prestige of being responsible to the American Congress in the matter of its receipts and expenditures. By virtue of serving alike Protestants, Catholics, Jews, and Moslems, it makes successful appeal to a wide range of co-religionists in other lands. By virtue of being good Samaritan to the victims of great national persecutions, it has enlisted the sympathy of all human people. Its benevolence is world-wide in its appeal.

In a special way the Near East Relief is the national philanthropy of America. This is not to discount the significant and beautiful contributions made to its work and to the work of co-operating organizations by other countries. But in a unique way the Near East Relief has drawn America as a nation into adopting its work.

No such philanthropy has ever before been annually sustained with like perseverance and liberality.

The appeal to interest in a steady developing work which can be watched from year to year and which has obvious and inspiring possibilities of great enriching the world, is irresistible to any idealist in business or religious life. This is the secret of the popular following which Near East Relief has won. It is conducting the greatest child education experiment ever undertaken, and is conducting it under the best possible circumstances, keeping in view always the most permanent and desirable results of this unparalleled opportunity.

The American organization takes as its field of endeavor the tremendous number of orphans left as the legacy of war in the six countries of the Near East. To gather, care for, and settle some 100,000 of these children occupied the organization during its early years. Then came the burning of Smyrna and certain disastrous international adjustments which brought about the so-called exchange of populations and which threw a million persons into refugeeism.

The achievement of the Near East Relief since Smyrna is staggering in scope. Great companies of children, 20,000 at one time, marched on journeys lasting from three to six months; 85 percent of the children were under fourteen years of age, 63 percent under twelve; thousands of them were making their fourth or fifth migration since the war, utterly homeless and utterly dependent on these foreigners who came to minister to them as agents of overseas friends.

Add to the triumph of this American achievement the difficulty of changing from one national regime to another two or three times, each change meaning endless red tape. Hundreds and even thousands of children thrust themselves into the orphanage troops as they hurried toward the ports of embarkation, and the alternative to taking them along was leaving them to die. Thousands of adults claimed asylum with the migrating mission. Wherever possible they were helped, and there are a million people alive in the Near East today who would surely have perished without such help.

Then, on arrival at some place where life was safe, there was first the effort to place children in homes and families as far as possible. It speaks volumes for the hospitality of the Near-eastern Christian races that, although these were children from a foreign land and the neighborhoods of their new settlements were poor and the peoples of their new countries were little familiar with the thought of public philanthropy, over 18,000 children were placed in homes or similarly cared for and taken from the orphanage lists. This left some 60,000 to care for, in groups varying in size from a few hundred to that greatest of all children's institutions, the Alexandropol orphanage with its 18,000 boys and girls.

Since Smyrna, the Near East Relief has devoted its energies to reconstruction. It has thus far splendidly achieved the initial stages of this colossal task. With 150 American workers and several hundred efficient local workers, its stations have become centers of organized child life. These stations stretch across six countries, including cities and towns where Jesus lived and worked, cities and islands touched by Paul in his missionary journeys, villages of the far inland regions stretching up toward the Caspian, famous towns of classic Greece.

We would shrink from the thought of organized child life on such a vast scale unless we were assured that through it all there has been a distinct recognition of individual worth. One has but to turn the pages of the various illustrated reports prepared by the Near East Relief to catch on every other page the face of a child whose individual name is often given, the anecdote of a boy or girl whose personal development is being watched with unusual care for some special reason, two or three children in poses that mark children the world over,—to be convinced that in a miraculous way this high enterprise has managed to think in terms of the individual child. It is a fact matched only by the marvelous conception and courage of the whole undertaking.

Who can read of the Birds' Nest Orphanage in Syria with its 400 birdies, or the Dolls' House at Cephalonia with its 800 kindergarteners, without realizing something of the personal concern back of this mass-mothering? The island of Syra, famed in Homer as a place "where dearth never comes nor are people plagued by sickness," is allotted to 2,500 children housed in building largely constructed by their own hands, who are being taught trades in connection with 21 industries on the island, preparatory to spreading throughout the Near East as apostles of the idealism of America.

These strange pathetic populations of orphans are being watched over with a fatherly and motherly interest which combines concern for the relief of immediate need with foresight for the years to come. As a by-product the American organization has reduced the number of trachoma sufferers among 30,000 children from 65 percent to 21 percent, has checked typhus in four countries, and has stamped out the malarial swamps of Samsoun and Corinth. Nothing but an overwhelming devotion to the welfare of the individual could have reduced the death rate in two years from 98 to 9 per thousand.

Never before has it been possible to show what can be done with a whole nation of children brought up under entirely good and wholesome and intelligent influences. We shall watch their effect upon the Levant as they scatter with the coming years to influence it in every phase of life. The 22 industries in 93 training centers, the hospitals, the homes, are permeated with the spirit of service.

JEANNE D'ARC, THE MAID OF FRANCE.

Domremy is a little village of Lorraine. The river Meuse flows softly by and there are meadows where the sheep still stray. Beyond the meadows there used to be a dark forest with a bubbling fountain near which they said the fairies danced by moonlight. An old wise man, Merlin, who lived so many years said that out of this forest should ride a maid who should be the savior of France.

About five hundred years ago there lived in Domremy a shepherd girl whose name was Jeanne. She used to wander with her flocks in the sunny meadows and along the still reaches of the river. At twilight, on her way home, she would stop beneath a great oak to pray. This oak was called the "ladies' tree," because they said the fairies loved it. Jeanne was a thoughtful girl, and she was greatly troubled at the misfortunes of her country.

At that time the English held nearly all of France. There was no king, and the young prince, the Dauphin, could not be crowned. He had to flee from his palace and take refuge in the little city of Bourges, so that they called him, mockingly, the "King of Bourges." He was so poor that he had only a pony to ride upon, and he could not even pay the cobbler who patched his shoes. All of these things made Jeanne sad.

One evening, just as the twilight was gathering beneath the "ladies' tree," a bright light shone about Jeanne and she heard a voice say:

"Be brave, for God has called you to drive the English from France."

"But I am only a shepherd girl," replied Jeanne, trembling, "I do not know the ways of war."

"Be true and brave and St. Catherine and St. Margaret will aid you."

For a while Jeanne sat quite still, wondering if she were dreaming. Then, when the sheep were safe in the fold, she went to the church to pray, but she told no one of her vision.

It was almost a year before Jeanne heard the voices again. This time it was at noon. She heard a silver bell tinkle, and then she saw St. Michael with the flaming sword.

"Be brave," she thought she heard him say, "for the hour is approaching when you must crown the Dauphin the King of France."

"The Dauphin is many miles away," said Jeanne. "How should I go to find him?"

"First you must go to Vaucouleurs. That is only twenty miles away, and the captain of the men-at-arms will send you to the Dauphin."

When Jeanne told her father and her brothers, they were very angry.

"Foolish girl," cried her father, "do you think that the captain will listen to a girl of seventeen. He would only laugh at you. Perhaps, if he were wicked, he might burn you as a witch."

"My voices led me go," said Jeanne, "and I must do their work."

"Your work will be to tend your father's sheep. What work mean you?"

"I do not know. I only know that the Lord of Heaven has chosen me to do great things."

And so, one day, with only a cousin to attend her, she set out on the long walk to Vaucouleurs. When they told the captain that a shepherd lass had come from Domremy to see him, he roared out, "Box her ears and send her home to her father."

But Jeanne remained in the town, going often to church to pray and telling all who asked her that she was sent by God. Soon the village folk began to believe her, and they collected money to buy her a sword. The captain of the men-at-arms was perplexed. At last he summoned Jeanne and questioned her sharply as to what she wished.

"I must find the Dauphin," she replied.

"If I wear my legs out to my knees."

The captain shrugged his shoulders.

"If I should go before the Dauphin with a shepherd lass"—

"Fear not, good captain, they will not mock you. It is the will of God that I must find the Dauphin."

"But do you think your shepherd staff will carry you through France where a robber lurks by every tree?"

"I will give her horse and armor," said a knight, "for I believe."

"Even so must all. I thank you for the armor. I shall have great need of it before we drive the English from our shores."

At that time there were few roads and almost no bridges in France. Attended by only two knights, Jeanne rode for almost two weeks, before she arrived at the castle of Chinon, which is in the heart of France.

The dauphin Charles thought it a great joke that a shepherd girl should come so far to see him. When at last he received the little party it was at night in the great hall with fifty torches flaring. There was assembled, too, a company of three hundred nobles, and Charles, to make sport for them, gave the royal seal to his cousin, while he mingled with his courtiers. But Jeanne was not dismayed. She went directly to him, knelt, and said:

"Gentle Dauphin, may God give you a good life."

"Rise, Jeanne, I am not the King."

"You shall be king and reign in France. I am Jeanne the Maid, and the Lord of Heaven has sent me to help you to do His will."

The people of the court were very much disturbed at this strange power of Jeanne's to recognize the Dauphin, and so they sent for learned scholars of the university to question her.

They asked her about the voices. Was she sure that angels spoke in French? What kind of French did they speak?

"Better than yours, my lords," was the answer.

And these voices came when she was alone. If she wished others to believe, there should be a sign.

"Give me an army, and for a sign I will deliver Orleans."

"But if God has willed that Orleans should be free, then why should you ask for soldiers?"

"The soldiers are to fight and God to give the victory," she answered.

And so the learned doctors agreed that she had answered all the questions well. But still there was no money to fit out an army. So the mother of the gentle, uncrowned queen sold her province of Nice to pay the soldiers and to buy provisions for the city of Orleans, which was then besieged by the English.

One fine morning they set out, Jeanne riding at the head of her army, bearing her banner of white linen, fringed with silk and strewn with gold lilies. When they arrived beneath the walls of the city, Jeanne ordered that they begin the attack at once. Although the siege had lasted for seven months, in ten days the English were beaten off and Jeanne entered the city in triumph.

How the people surged about her as she rode through the streets! How happy they were if they could only touch the trappings of her white charger! Even today the city of Orleans celebrates with great rejoicings its deliverance by the Maid.

And now Jeanne urged the Dauphin to go to Rheims to be crowned, but he was so timid and so slow that it was almost two months before they got started. Everywhere, as they crossed France, the English fled before them. At last, in long procession, they rode into the city of Rheims, and halted beneath the cathedral walls. The heralds shouted, "Tomorrow, by the grace of the Holy Spirit, will the King be crowned."

No such great event had taken place in Rheims since, many years before, Clovis had been baptized. There were knights on horseback with banners afloat in the breeze, there were cardinals in mantles of scarlet and fur, there were men-at-arms, and trumpets blaring everywhere. The balconies that lined the streets were gay with pennants, and over them leaned ladies with their stiff silken gowns, and high head-dresses in the shape of horns, from which hung silken veils. On a corner near the cathedral stood Jeanne's father, who had come all the way from Domremy to see her. Jeanne wept with delight when she saw him, and declared that she loved her village above all places on the earth.

And now, Jeanne said, her work was over, and she begged the Dauphin, now the crowned King, that she might return to her home and tend the sheep once more. But Charles would not let her go. And yet he would not follow her advice. He would not even go with her to Paris to take that city from the English.

One day the people of Compiègne sent a message asking that Jeanne come to help them. The English were besieging them, and they could hold out no longer. Jeanne would never refuse to do a kindness. Her voices warned her that her work was done, but still she persisted.

She rode all night and in the morning she reached the unhappy city. As usual, she planned to attack at once, and led the party that went out of the city gates. She was always in the front of the battle, and when the signal to return was given, she was the last one to withdraw. About the city was a deep moat filled with water and a drawbridge was lowered to receive the soldiers. But somehow the bridge was raised too soon, and Jeanne was left alone. How the enemy shouted in triumph when they made her a prisoner!

Then began the long days of sorrow for Jeanne and of shame for France, for not a voice was raised to help her. The young king whom she had so recently crowned forgot all about her in trouble. Day after day they brought her to trial and questioned her, in hopes of wearing out her strength. They accused her of being a witch, and asked her to explain her sorcery.

"My only sorcery," she replied, "is love of God and my country."

"If not by witchcraft, how did you always conquer?"

"I said, 'Enter boldly among the English,' and I entered boldly and I conquered."

"Does God hate the English?"

"I do not know the hate or love that God bears the English, but they will all be driven from France, save those that perish here."

But a pretext is never lacking to those who have made up their minds to do evil. In spite of the innocence of Jeanne, her captors condemned her to be burned as a witch.

One morning in May, in the square of the Old Market at Rouen, they erected a scaffold, very high, so that every one who wished might see. Near by there were braziers filled with burning coals, and a great body of soldiers stood on guard.

Jeanne mounted the scaffold and was bound. She asked for a cross, and an English soldier tied two fagots together and raised them on a pole. Guards threw blazing torches among the pile of timbers. The flames arose higher until they hid the girlish figure of the Maid.

At last the platform crashed down and the great sheets of smoke swept upwards. An English soldier standing near declared he saw a white dove arise from the flames and soar toward heaven. Another cried aloud so that all might hear him:

"Alas! Great misfortunes will befall us, for we have burned a saint." —Zion's Herald.

To Those Holding Licenses.

Brethren who hold licenses to administer the ordinances are asked to bring them to conference for renewal—provided the holders thereof are given work.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 3 and 4, were spent on the Connelly Springs Charge with Rev. J. R. Gurtner and his people. Bro. Gurtner is a student in Rutherford College. He is a wide-awake energetic young man and is doing a splendid work on that charge.

We visited Shiloh church on Saturday October 3, and preached in the afternoon and held their fourth quarterly conference. Mrs. Dixon spoke to them at the night service, and organized a Home Missionary Society. We found a very loyal and faithful group of Methodist Protestants here. Sunday we visited Shady Grove, Burk's Chapel and Pleasant Grove. At the first two places we preached to reasonably large congregations, who received the Word gladly. At night there were about 100 people out for preaching at Pleasant Grove, a church that had been dropped from the list of appointments. Bro. Gurtner has preached a few times for them this year, and now the people of that community want a regular appointment for next year. This Charge is weak financially and should be helped in some way. However, they are not quite as weak as they think they are. Some days ago I was holding a quarterly conference, and was insisting that they increase their pastor's salary, and the people were pleading poverty, and the secretary wrote this on a slip of paper and handed to me. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." So many of our Charges think they can't, so they don't pay more. However, Connelly Springs is doing far better in this respect than some other charges.

Saxapahaw.—On the afternoon of the 7th of Oct. I was with Rev. H. L. Isley in his fourth quarterly conference at Concord Church on the Saxapahaw Charge. These people love their pastor and are asking for his return. They are paying salary in full, and are doing fair on budgets.

Guilford Charge.

On Oct. 8th I was with Bro. C. H. Whitaker. Conference was well attended. All churches were represented except Hickory Grove.

The people seemed to take hold of the work with a renewed determination to do greater things in the future. I think that there was an earnestness among the people which indicated that pastor's salary will be paid in full. It certainly should be. Then they increased the salary for next year by $200.

Caroleen and Shelby.

These two churches called me to meet with them in a business meeting in Caroleen on Oct. 9th. This meeting resulted in a request being sent up to the annual conference to appoint one pastor to these two churches for next year. The material conditions about them have brought about this request. They are finding it difficult, but I trust their pastors this year will be paid their salaries in full.

Yarborough Charge.

This charge has been without a pastor since the middle of August, but have been going along splendidly with the work. We were with them on Sunday, Oct. 11th. It was delightful to mingle with these dear people, and to preach to them again.

Although they have been the hardest hit by the drought of any community I have visited, they are hopeful of the future. They paid their pastor in full before he left them, and are collecting on the budgets.

Thomasville Charge.

O Friday evening, Oct. 16, we were with Bro. Geo. L. Reynolds in his fourth quarterly conference held in the First Church in Thomasville. This was a fine conference. All reports were good except those for budgets, and these people will round up good reports for these before conference.

At both churches they have been building and repairing and painting and cleaning up until each church building is in tiptop shape. Bro. Reynolds has put in two years of very fine service on this charge, and his people have responded nobly. They are all happy in the work.

West Thomasville.

Sunday, Oct. 18th, I was with Rev. W. M. Loy and his people. At the morning hour we were at the old historic Spring Hill Church, which is really the old mother church of our first church in High Point.

It is fine to see the new life in this old church. The house was nearly filled with eager listeners to the truth. They are planning to build a new church on the beautiful grounds near where the old church building stands.

In the afternoon we had the privilege of preaching the sermon at the opening service in our new church in West Thomasville. This is a beautiful church building, and is complete in every way. The entire basement, which is a day-light basement, is well arranged in Sunday school rooms; while the second floor is a very attractive church auditorium. It was a happy band of people who gathered there for the opening service. They have a splendid house of worship.

An Open Letter To Delegates and Charges.
My dear Co-Worker:—

Just a personal note to you to lay upon your heart some facts concerning our pastors.

Our pastors on most charges are very much under-paid. When a man with a family only gets from $1000. to $1500 per year and then pays from $250 to $300 per year to run a machine with which to serve the charge he is left with a very small amount on which to support his family and educate his children. We are not asking for our men large salaries but we do feel that they must have living salaries.

Please bear this in mind and have your charge set the salary for next year at a figure that will relieve your pastor of all worry about finances. His expenses are heavy, and the salary should be adequate.

Also please have in mind the parsonage conditions and see that it is a suitable place—one that will impress favorably rather than attract unfavorable comment of the community.

Then too we want you to do your best to have your charge pay up the budgets in full, and you and your pastor come to conference with a good report—one that puts your charge on the Honor Roll of the conference.

Note:—We are living in the midst of restless times, and there are some people who are so constituted that they want to change meets. It is expensive for preachers and to pastors almost as often as the conference the charges to have them move so often.

Please be thoughtful about this, and don't move your pastor just because some one growls a bit over mere trifles. Some pastors will move, and this letter is not intended to keep wise moves from being made; but we do wish to stop so much of this unnecessary moving.

Yours in the Master's service, A. G. Dixon.

tural to write to the Herald, although it was called "Our Church Record" when I used to be reporter from this place. I'm trespassing now but I'm sure the reporter will forgive me this time.

There's so much to say—"good things" too for our place.

We began to build our new church last fall. We laid the corner stone Easter Monday. The dedication services were held the first Sunday in June.

Our revival began the first Sunday in July.

We had a good meeting. Really, we wanted it to continue but other meetings demanded the pastor's time.

Our "Pastor Reed" filled his regular appointment here today. As usual he preached an excellent sermon.

We're expecting him to serve us another year. I'm sure I'm expressing the sentiment of the people by saying we shall be greatly disappointed if he isn't sent back to us.

Let everyone assume the preacher's responsibility. Would there be so many one or two year preachers?

When a farmer gets a good horse he does not want to trade him (Not comparing horses and preachers by any means.) Just want to say let's retain our good preachers and not force them to move every year or two.

It takes co-operation between pastor and people to make the work a success. So let each and every one of us make the next year a co-operative year. Mrs. Ray Stewart.

The pastor of Asheville reports "over the top" this week. Some splendid contributions from other charges. Keep it up the best you can for two more weeks.

Macedonia, Fallston Charge.—As I was elected reporter for Macedonia Church for the coming year, I'll try to begin.

There was preaching at Macedonia the second Sunday by our pastor, Rev. J. M. Morgan.

The officers for the coming year were elected and communion service was held. Brother Morgan preached a very able sermon.

The fourth quarterly conference was held at Macedonia Saturday, October the 17. Rev. J. D. Morris preached for us at 11 A. M.; we were very glad to have Brother Morris with us again and to hear his wonderful and very instructive sermon. He made it so plain that even a child could understand.

The noon hour having arrived the ladies spread out a bountiful dinner of good things to eat which was served in picnic style.

In the afternoon conference convened. Bro. Morgan opened conference by reading a portion of scripture and by prayer. The conference voted to leave the pastor's salary the same and the delegate was instructed to bring Brother Morgan back as our pastor for another year. The conference voted on whether Bro. Morgan should be our pastor and it was a unanimous election.

Macedonia Church was insured for $1000 a few months back.

Let all the Herald readers pray for our Superintendent's wife, Mrs. W. D. Hoyle, who is in very feeble health, may God restore her to health again if pleasing to Him.

The Sunday school is very good, the attendance is not so large but the interest is good. With best regards to you all.

CONFERENCE FACULTY MEETING.

All members of the conference faculty are called to meet in First Methodist Protestant Church, High Point, N. C., November 3, 1925, 3.30 P. M.

All members of faculty and those who are to come before it at 7:30 P. M. same day and place.

N. G. Bethea, Secty,
C. L. Whitaker, Chm.

WHERE WE STAND.

If we truly realized the fact that we have a living Christ, he who commissioned his disciples to extend his kingdom over all the earth, and who is now interested in its condition and progress, and is a witness of our attitude, efforts and gifts in its behalf, would we not manifest far more interest, put forth greater effort, give much more money to have his program carried out? That is self-evident.

The fact that we, by the course we follow, consider ourselves independent, free to do just as we please with what we have, has led many to question, if not ignore, the authority which requires every Christian, every church members to render full support to all enterprises of the Kingdom.

In a church like ours which has a representative government there must be respect for and obedience to the delegated authority which has only the purpose to have the church in full accord with Christ's world-embracing program, if the church is to maintain itself, and accomplish the object for which it was brought into being.

But our church, like all others, is but a part of Christ's Kingdom, and we must go back to him who instituted the church, baptized it with the Holy Spirit, imparts his grace and power, and commissioned it to win the world from moral darkness and sin to spiritual light, life and service, as the source of supreme authority.

The first step any of us took to become what God designed led us to him in repentance, and the acceptance of his pardon and salvation through faith in Christ's atoning merits and the surrender of will, life, talents, money, all to him for service to enthrone him in the heart of humanity.

We are not left in the dark, therefore, as to what we are to become, what we are to do, because the objective is world conquest, and the plan of campaign is clearly outlined, the agencies that are to be used are fully indicated, and our duties are sufficiently set forth in the great cause whose worthwhileness is proved by the history of the past, the progressive conditions of the present, and the brightening prospects facing us.

We disregard that authority at our peril, we refuse obedience to those commands with most serious results to ourselves, and we repudiate our solemn pledges, vows, if we withhold support from the work of the Kingdom, and that, of course, includes foreign missions.

We can not question the efficacy of God's plan and agencies, for the results secured throughout the world speak for themselves, and, therefore, we have only to consider responding to the call upon us for the best use of our time, talents, and the recognition of our stewardship as to the money we are able to earn, or that comes to us in legitimate ways, so that we will be careful to use for ourselves that which is necessary, and to yield to God, through contributions to the work of his Kingdom, that proportion which reasonably ought to be given, not less than a tenth.

Overshadowing all is the certainty of the coming Judgment Day when we shall have to answer for the things of this life, how we acquitted ourselves as stewards. We do well to help raise the budget in full this year as part of our church's Centennial Celebration.

THE DENOMINATIONAL OUTLOOK.

Alabama. A new church is being built at Hopewell, Union Circuit, to replace the one destroyed last spring. It is expected the building will be ready for dedication shortly. Rev. W. G. McDaniel, president of the conference, reports that a number of the members of the Chilton circuit have set aside a number of "Lord's Acres" for the benefit of the church finances, and that the outlook is for the best year financially in the history of the circuit. The West End Church Federation, Birmingham, composed of all denominations in that section of the city, has just closed its annual union revival services. The preacher was Dr. J. C. Broomfield, President of our Pittsburgh conference. The meetings were held in a tabernacle seating 3,000. The meetings were a great success.

Eastern. 21 members have been received this year into the Lake Como church. The church at Pittston is having a new front put on it at a cost of $15,000.

Ft. Smith-Oklahoma. The President, Rev. C. O. McMillan, reports the following revival results: Eaglestown, 72 professions, 65 additions; Hope, 30 professions, 24 additions; Cement, 39 professions, 25 additions; Shady Grove, 35 additions. (Many others but space is limited.)

Georgia. The Union church Camp Meeting, at Waco, was the most successful in many years. As a result of the meeting sixteen members were added to the local church.

Iowa-Missouri. The annual session was "the best yet." Two young women were consecrated in preparation for the foreign field.

Illinois. The Secretary says of the recent annual conference: "A wonderful spirit prevailed throughout the conference, and reports showed splendid progress has been made by many of the churches in the conference."

Maryland. The corner-stone laying of the new Trinity church, Baltimore, occurred on Sept. 13. Part of the service included the reception of 27 members into the church $2,500 was subscribed toward the building fund. The church was started seven years ago. It now has a membership of 300 and a Sunday school enrollment of 655. A new parsonage is being built for the Marley charge at a cost of $5,000.

Improvements have been made to the church at Elizabeth, N. J., at a cost of $1,500. The churches on the Amelia charge have had successful revivals with 16 accessions to date. The Lutheran and Methodist Protestant churches at Berrett held a union Daily Vacation Bible School this summer with an enrollment of 60.

Michigan. Many improvements have been made at Midland Park, the camp ground at which the annual conference meets every year. These include an electric light plant, a cement floor in the tabernacle, and a number of new cottages. The annual conference this year showed marked progress.

Ohio. Ground has been broken for the new church at Mt. Lookout, Cincinnati. The organization is only three years old. All the church property is free from debt. The Statistical Secretary reports a net gain of 639. $36,640 was raised on the General Conference Budget. Pastoral support increased by $7,679.

Pittsburgh. The conference reports an increase in receipts for the General Conference Budget of $8,324 over last year, and of $5,333 in the Annual Conference Budget. The first is an increase of 37 percent and the second of 72 percent. The church at Kittanning received 47 new members during the year. The cornerstone of the new church has just been laid. A new church has been built at Fordyce on the Monongahela circuit at cost of $18,000 which was dedicated free of debt. The Mt. Washington church has been improved at a cost of $20,000.

SERMONS WITH SHAVES.

"Have faith in God," is the sign outside of Andy Monohan's barber shop in Duluth. Passers-by from the opposite direction are greeted with these words: "Be prepared to meet God." Once they enter the place they receive a sermon with every shave and haircut. For twenty-five years Andy Monohan has been applying practical Christianity by supplying moral admonition to all who enter his shop—and in doing so he says he has found permanent happiness.

Inside of the place are cardboards bearing the following messages: "It costs something to be a Christian, but it costs more to be a sinner;" "The entrance of thy Word giveth light. Psalm 119, vs. 130"; "God shall supply all your need"; "Take Jesus with you"; "Hair-cut free to all poor children and old feeble men. Tramps and bums, whom Jesus died for, are welcome."

All who have entered the barber shop for the removal of superfluous hair on chin and cheek or to encourage its growth on the desired places have left it better for having met Andy Monohan. No matter whether they are gamblers, wife-beaters, forgers, runaways, or what-not, before they leave the place Andy Monohan has renewed their faith in God and given them increased faith in their fellow men. Many a time Andy Monohan has got down on his knees in the middle of his barber shop floor to pray with some one who has intimated a willingness to leave the path of sin.

Any chance remark that the stranger may make while in the barber's chair is used as a provocation for the giving of kindly advice. If one remarks "Isn't it a dandy day," Andy Monohan will say something to the effect that "it's a lovely God who gives us a day like this."

If the stranger seems despondent and to Andy's greeting of "How are you today?" remarks, "Not very well; I'm miserable, worried, and don't feel well," the barber evangelist will plead with him that faith in the Omnipotent One will do away with his sorrows.

Speaking of how he thought of advertising the gospel by the sign outside of his shop, Mr. Monohan said: "I had a vision and saw all the beautiful signs that people use to advertise their own trades, but I came down from the hills, back of the town where the vision came to me, and put up that sign you see now."

Many a brutal husband has left the shop promising to treat his wife more kindly; many a gambler has left saying that he would buy shoes for his baby with the money he spent on cards; many a runaway boy has been reminded of what his mother should mean to him and has been persuaded to return home and ask forgiveness; and in the days when Duluth was not a city of drought, many an habitual drunkard left Andy Monohan's place promising to do his best to overcome the habit.

The secret of it all is that he understands his fellow men. He doesn't feel that the same things couldn't have happened to him, because, as he tells them, he himself "has had the experience of two lives, living a sinful, ignorant life for twenty-five years and living a Christian life for the same period of years."

Every Sunday finds Andy Monohan in the jail, where he tries to show prisoners the light; or out at the poor-farm, where the sun doesn't always shine quite so brightly as upon the homes of many; or out at the work-farm, where he reads the Bible to those laboring to pay the penalties for minor offenses.

Incidentally, he is the father of fifteen children.—Maria Canel in The Christian Endeavor World.

A SCIENTIST'S GOD.

An Interview With Robert Andrew Millikan, Ph. D., Sc. D.

By Samuel Crowther.

"I cannot explain why I am alive rather than dead. Physiologists can tell me a great deal about the mechanical and the chemical processes of my body, but they cannot say why I am alive. But would it not be utterly absurd for me to deny I am alive?"

"Our scientific knowledge compared with what we knew a hundred years ago is very great, but compared with what there is to be known it is trivial. The map of the earth used to have on it many great, blank spaces marked 'unexplored.' Now there are very few of them.

Our Chart Is Nearly Blank.

The map of science is still a great blank sheet with only here and there a dot to show what has been charted, and the more we investigate the more we see how far we are from any real comprehension of it all and the clearer we see that in the very admission of our ignorance and finiteness we recognize the existence of a Something, a Power, a Being in whom and because of whom we live and move and have our being—a Creator by whatever name we may call Him.

"I am not much concerned as to whether I agree precisely with you in my conception of that Creator or not, for 'Canst thou by searching find out God?'"

"Both your conception and mine must in the nature of the case be vague and indefinite.

"Least of all am I disposed to quarrel with the man who spiritualizes nature and says that God is to him the soul of the universe, for spirit, personality and all these abstract conceptions which go with it, like love, duty and beauty, exist for you and for me just as much as do iron, wood and water. They are in every way as real for us as are the physical things which we handle.

"No man, therefore, can picture nature as devoid of these attributes which are a part of your experience and mine, and which you and I know are in nature.

"If you, then, in your conception identify God with nature, you must perforce attribute to Him consciousness and personality or, better, superconsciousness and superpersonality. You cannot possibly synthesize nature and leave out its most outstanding attributes. Nor can you get these potentialities out of nature, no matter how far back you go in time.

"In other words, materialism, as commonly understood, is an altogether absurd and an utterly irrational philosophy, and is indeed so regarded by most thoughtful men.

Thinking Is Believing.

"Without attempting, then, to go farther in defining what in the nature of the case is undefinable, let me reassert my conviction that although you may not believe in some particular conception of God which I may try to give expression to, and although it is unquestionably true that many of our conceptions are sometimes childishly anthropomorphic, everyone who is sufficiently in possession of his faculties to recognize his own inability to comprehend the problem of existence bows his head in the presence of the Nature, if you will—the God, I prefer to say—who is behind it all and whose attributes are partially revealed to us in it all, so that it pains me as much as it did Kelvin 'to hear crudely atheistic views expressed by men who have never known the deeper side of existence.'

"Let me, then, henceforth use the word God to describe that which is behind the mystery of existence and that which gives meaning to it.

I think you will not misunderstand me, then, when I say that I have never known a thinking man who did not believe in God.

What We Thought We Knew.

"How little we know about the ultimate nature of things is strikingly shown by the changes in our conceptions which have come about within the past thirty years. When I started my graduate work in 1893 we were very sure that the physical foundations of the world were built with some seventy unchangeable, indestructible elements.

"Also we made a sharp distinction between matter-physics and ether-physics. We believed in the conservation of energy, the conservation of mass, and the conservation of momentum, and we knew exactly how, with the aid of these principles, the universe managed to keep going. But we are much less certain about this now than we were then.

"In 1895 the X-ray came in as an absolutely new phenomenon and then came radio-activity, which has shown us that 'the elements' are not at all ultimate things, that atoms are continually undergoing change, and are not indestructible. It appears now that the electromagnetic laws no longer hold in the interaction of electrons within atoms. Einstein has concluded that mass and energy are interchangeable terms and we all now agree that the former distinctions between material, electrical and ethereal phenomena must be discarded. And so I am very chary about declaring that our present scientific conceptions and hypotheses are going to last forever, and I am a good deal more chary about making dogmatic denials or affirmations in the field of religion—a field which by general assent lies outside the region in which intellectual knowledge is possible.

"This much I can say with definiteness—namely, that there is no scientific basis for the denial of religion—nor is there in my judgment any excuse for a conflict between science and religion, for their fields are entirely different. Men who know very little of science and men who know very little of religion do indeed get to quarreling, and the onlookers imagine that there is a conflict between science and religion, whereas the conflict is only between two different species of ignorance.

"The first important quarrel of this sort arose over the advancing by Copernicus of his theory that the earth, instead of being a flat plane and the center of the universe, was actually only one of a number of little planets, rotating once a day upon its axis and circling once a year about the sun. Copernicus was a priest—and he was primarily a religious rather than a scientific man. He knew that the foundations of real religion are not laid where scientific discoveries of any kind can disturb them. He was persecuted, not because he went against the teachings of religion but because under his theory man was not the center of the universe and this was most displeasing news to quite a number of egoists.

"The Christian church, or that part of it which is possessed of intelligence and understanding, no longer has any theological interest either in astronomy or in evolution. These are in fact purely scientific matters about which our ideas necessarily change as our knowledge increases.

"We firmly believed for many years that the sun was merely a white-hot body gradually cooling off. Now we know that if it were merely that it would have cooled off long ago, and we are searching for the source of its continuous supply of heat and are inclined to the belief that it is due to some form of sub-atomic change. Our discoveries in this realm are as revolutionary as were those of Copernicus, but no one thinks of them as anti-religious.

"The impossibility of real science and real religion ever conflicting becomes evident when one examines the purpose of science and the purpose of religion. The purpose of science is to develop without prejudice or preconception of any kind a knowledge of the facts, the laws and the processes of nature. The even more important task of religion, on the other hand, is to develop the consciences, the ideals and the aspirations of mankind.

"Many of our great scientists have actually been men of profound religious convictions and life. Lord Kelvin's estimate of the earth at around a hundred million years did not seem to him or to the church to be in conflict with the first chapters of Genesis. He said:

"I believe that the more thoroughly science is studied the further does it take us from anything comparable to atheism.' And again: 'If you think strongly enough, you will be forced by science to the belief in God, which is the foundation of all religion. You will find it not antagonistic but helpful to religion.'

The Process Of The Suns.

"Take other great scientific leaders—Sir Isaac Newton, Michael Faraday, James Clerk-Makwell, Louis Pasteur. All these men were not only religious men but they were also faithful members of their communions. For the most important thing in the world is a belief in moral and spiritual values—a belief that there is a significance and a meaning to existence—a belief that we are going somewhere! These men could scarcely have been so great had they been lacking in this belief.

"And it is because of this belief that men are willing to work and to die for causes. Men and women prefer to die rather than to live in the consciousness of having played the coward, of having failed to play their part worthily in the great scheme of things. It is true that not all men are like that, but I am optimist enough to think that most men are. Why? Simply because most men believe that there is a world scheme, that they are a part of it, that their deaths are going to contribute to its development; in short, because most men believe in God.

"This is the obvious inference from the fact that men are willing to die for a cause. They may not know whether there is a personal immortality for them or not, but they do know with absolute certainty that they live on in memory and in influence; many of them, too, have faith to believe that they live on in consciousness, but in either case they are a part of a plan of development which gives meaning to life. In other words, men who have the stuff in them which makes heroes all believe in God—in a power in the world which makes for righteousness.

"And it is becoming more and more clear that to man himself has been assigned a very large role in the scheme of development. The processes of evolution have been enormously accelerated since man became conscious of himself and of his powers. We seem to be approaching, through science, nearer and nearer to the control of our own destinies. We are now building plants and fruits and even animals to our taste. We make drought-resisting wheat and seedless oranges and grapes. We breed cattle and sheep and hogs for the climate they are to live in and for the ends which we wish them to serve. The common laborer in this country receives roughly twenty times the wage of a similar class of laborers in China or India, because science has provided him slaves of iron and steel.

"Through the discovery of radio-activity we have gained a new conception of the universe and of the way matter is behaving. The amount of heat given off from one gram of radium in disintegrating into lead is three hundred thousand times as much as the amount of heat given off in the burning of one gram of coal. There is not enough radium in the world to make the energy derived from it of much practical value, but similar energy must be locked up in other atoms which we have not yet tamed. Somewhere, somehow, it is probable that what we know as the elements are continually forming—that they are being put together somewhere in the laboratories of the stars. Can we learn to control the process? Only research can tell.

"It is not beyond belief that we may some time be able to do in our laboratories what the sun is doing in its laboratory. Then it is conceivable that science could, if given the chance, transform this world within a generation.

"But to what end? Without the moral background of religion, without the spirit of service which is the essence of religion, our new powers will only be the means of our destruction."—Collier's Weekly.

REVELATION AND AUTHORITY.

Revelation as conceived by Schleiermacher and Ritschel is not the communication of a system of truths, and religion does not consist in their acceptance. Revelation is the awakening of human consciousness to the presence of the divine, or the eliciting of human devotion to a divine ideal; and to be religious is simply to have this consciousness or this devotion.

But where religion and revelation are thus interpreted, authority is a matter of small moment. It is not authority we need, but inspiration; not a code or rule or creed or system of doctrines, but the presence of God and the compulsion of a divine purpose. Codes and rules are mechanical and cramping in their effects. Spiritual and ethical authority is attained only when dependence upon them is outgrown. It is therefore not simply that the idea of religious authority has changed, but that the need of it has ceased.

We are living in an age when communion in religious things and co-operation in all good works are becoming more and more generally possible to those whose religious beliefs, like their philosophical and scientific beliefs, are widely diverse; when not creed but purpose is the force that binds men together in a common institution and a common cause.—Arthur Cushman McGiffert in The Rise of Modern Religious Ideas.

Sun., Nov. 1. Topic—Can we live by the Golden Rule? Matt. 7: 12; Lev.19 18; Gal. 6: 1. (Consecration meeting.)

The Happy Rule.

The Golden Rule is undoubtedly the happy rule by which to direct our lives. Jesus was happy practicing it to a greater degree than any one has done since. The Golden Rule gives us a happy attitude toward life and a new look at our fellow men. It is a death blow to selfishness which is the foundation of most unhappiness and nearly all the sin of this old world. There is no happier season than the Christmas season and it is the thought of others and of administering to their happiness that gives the greatest thrill of joy. So it would be every day of life—every one would be a glad Christmas day if we would practice bringing joy into other lives rather than trying to get a monopoly of it for our selves. In this mad scramble for self and self interests how interesting it would be—but what a jam

—if someone would just call a halt as the traffic cop does, and tell us that the Golden Rule is the law of life as he tells us the law of the road.

The Golden Rule Proved a Success in Business.

"Mr. Nash, of Cincinnati, has proved that the Golden Rule pays in business. He doubled the wages of underpaid employees, and they responded by increasing output. He said to his employees, 'To practice the Golden Rule means that every garment that we sell shall be of a quality that we ourselves would accept, and sold at a price that we ourselves would be willing to pay if we were in the customer's place.'" Sometime ago the employees of the Nash Company voted to take a vacation in order to provide work for others who were unemployed. They practiced the Golden Rule on others because their employers practiced it on them. This company has never had to lay off its employees or cut down on the number of workers and they always have more orders than they can fill. Nash has grown wealthy so has others in his employ and everybody connected with the plant is contented and happy. Some people say it is impossible to live the Golden Rule and continue in their present business. Then change business is the only safe rule.

"Big business has discovered that it pays to be honest. Merchants are now calling imitation silk by its real name, which is a step in the direction of the Golden Rule."

Not Doing.

The Endeavors Daily Companion says "Begin by not doing to others what you would not like done to you, and then go on to doing." The writer read of a young couple who found it hard to get on happily together. One evening while visiting an aged couple who had grown together as the years went by and were so happy together and so companionable, in answer to a question the elderly lady said "Ever since we have been married my husband and I have avoided doing the things that would in any way grieve or hurt the other." The young wife decided that she would try it, practice the Golden Rule this way and in a little while she found her entire attitude toward her husband and his toward her changed. The Companion's suggestion is a good one "begin by not doing the irritating thing and lead on to doing the kind thing."

"President Hyde of Bowdoin tells of a house owner who, to save $10, did not have an infected house fumigated. The children of the next tenement died of the disease. How would the golden rule have worked there?"—Anon.

"Some employers say that it is impossible for them to live as God intended. Then change the business."

AN OPEN LETTER TO STUDENTS.

By Luther K. Long.

Dear Mabel and Lionel:

I am making good my promise, given some weeks ago, to write you a letter.

You have now been in college long enough to have become somewhat wonted to your surroundings and, I trust, are beginning to feel comfortable among your instructors and fellow-students.

Certain twinges and depressions of homesickness—which, no doubt, have visited you—here, I hope, experiences through which you have safely passed. It is rather a good thing to have had the love and interest of your home and family impressed upon you, even in this rather trying way. Home will never be quite the same place it has been—you have broken some of its ties, and you are now citizens of a larger world. But you will go well to cherish all those sweet and lovely experiences of childhood—may they ever enrich the years ahead of you.

You have come to realize by now that the studies and methods in college are more advanced, more grown up, than you were accustomed to in high school. No doubt you have suffered somewhat of a shock in being suddenly shifted from the slight responsibilities of boyhood and girlhood into manhood and womanhood, with the greater amount of self-reliance required. Some effort will be necessary to adjust yourselves to the changed situation. Separation from parents to whom you could appeal for help at every turn is not altogether a disadvantage. As you learned to skate and to swim largely by your own efforts, so now you must depend for the greater part on yourselves to "paddle your own canoe."

You are finding that not all students are alike. This complicates the problem of making friends. One of the best things about college life is the opportunity it provides for making and cementing friendships. That both of you are inclined to proceed slowly in this matter is not to be regretted. Haste just now will make for waste and disappointment later. I have no fear of the results if you keep in mind always the supreme importance of living for intimate friends only persons whose integrity, industry, and devotion to the right are unquestioned.

Your religious life while away from home pursuing your studies is a matter of great importance. Is there real danger that, in college, freedom of thought and investigation will destroy the Christian faith of the young? My own experience in college and university is that study, while it leads one to cast aside what is outworn or unworthy of confidence, is the best possible means of confirming the faith that is worth holding. You are fortunate that your parents, though not highly educated themselves, are open-minded. And I think that you have not been made to feel your home church that there is an irreconcilable conflict between the church and the school. This is fortunate. The church concerns itself largely with the spiritual life. The school concerns itself chiefly with the intellectual life. The spirit and the intellect are really one entity with two sides. The church and the school are both concerned with the same thing—life—each emphasizing its own special phase of the subject.

In school you will no doubt encounter ideas with which you have not hitherto been familiar, and you will find it necessary to make certain readjustments in your thinking. But this need not greatly disturb you. You are in the period of growth. Growth of the body means the breaking down and removal of old cells, as well as the bringing in and establishing of new ones. The mind is not altogether different from the body, which latter is said to completely change its cells once in every seven years—still maintaining its identity. It is well to keep in mind Paul's words, "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I felt as a child, I thought as a child: now that I am become a man, I have put away childish things."

I should like to have you meditate frequently on three brief quotations. The first two are from an experienced worker among college students—dealing with the spiritual life:

"All our lives we should be conscious of spiritual growth, though that growth need not be attended by anything unusual or spectacular. If we grow from childhood in a spiritual environment we should never have thought of ourselves as anything but children of God."

"When we decide to make God's purposes our own we have no experience much different from experiences on other occasions when we have definitely decided to do something fine and right. We may feel only the great peace and happiness that come from a wise and hard decision in a matter that is fundamentally important."

The third quotation is from Dr. James McCosh in his farewell address on relinquishing the presidency of Princeton. He said:

"When a scientific theory is brought before us, our first inquiry is not whether it is consistent with religion, but whether it is true. If it is found to be true on the principle of the induction of Bacon, it will be found to be consistent with religion on the principle of the unity of knowledge."

Rejoicing that both of you are well started in the Christian life, and congratulating you on your opportunities for further study and growth, I wish you the largest possible success.

Most cordially yours, Luther K. Long.

Mrs. Carolina Thorn died in her home near Pleasant Hill, N. C., on October 14, was placed in a family burying ground near by on October 15. Funeral was held at the grave conducted by the writer. Mrs. Thorn was converted in her girlhood days at Spring Church and later in life she had her membership transferred to Pleasant Hill. She was a very kind Christian woman. Meant well and did as she could in her quiet way.

She leaves her husband and several grown children of which she was a stepmother. She was 53 years of age. Having lived well, she will be missed by her friends and companion.

J. B. O'Briant.

On September 5, 1925, Mr. W. J. Stansbury passed away. He was near 70 years of age. He was a member of Corinth M. P.

Church and was faithful to respond to the needs of the church. He liked to see the church prosper, and seemed to be happy always, was of a jovial disposition, and liked by all who knew him.

His body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Littleton, on September 6, and a short service was held at the grave by his pastor and the brethren of the Masonic Order. He leaves two sons and one daughter and a small boy which he had adopted.

We miss his presence at church.

J. B. O'Briant.

On October 14, Miss Irene Williams became the happy bride of Mr. Lonnie Hastings in the presence of a few friends and relatives by the writer at Chestnut Ridge M. P. Church. They left immediately for Raleigh and other points. This is a fine young couple. They will make their home in Orange County where Mrs. Hastings is teaching.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Williams. The groom the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Hastings.

We wish for them a successful and prosperous life.

T. A. Williams.

LIVE CHRIST.

Live Christ!—and though the way may be
In this world's sight adversity,
He who doth heed thy every need
Shall give thy soul prosperity.

Live Christ!—and though the road may be
The narrow street of poverty,
He had not where to lay His head,
Yet lived in largest liberty.

Live Christ!—and though the road may be
The straight way of humility,
He who first trod that way of God
Will clothe thee with His dignity.
Live Christ!—and though thy life may be
In much a valedictory,
The heavy cross brings seeming loss,
But wins the crown of victory.

Live Christ!—and all thy life shall be
A High Way of Delivery—
A Royal Road of goodly deeds.
Cold-paved with sweetest charity.
Live Christ!—and all thy life shall be
A sweet uplifting ministry,
A sowing of the fair white seeds
That fruit through all eternity.

SAYS SMOKING KILLS HAPPY EXPRESSION.

Will H. Brown.

Mrs. Ruth J. Maurer, president of the American Cosmetics' Society, declares that cigarette smoking by women produces sloping lines at the corner of the mouth, making a curve that will "make deep lines of sadness that will kill a happy expression in old age. The whites of the eye will yellow, too, from a too ardent use of cigarettes; the teeth become yellow, and the skin in time will become yellow. Cigarette smoking will kill her beauty."

The sight of so many women smoking in restaurants and other public places has led the Catholic Daughters of America and some other organizations to join in the war against cigarette smoking, especially by young women, says the Pathfinder.

A reader of the Milwaukee Leader wrote a protest to women smoking in drawing rooms, dining rooms, and all other public places, adding: "If they must smoke, why not let them smoke in the smoking room with other smokers, or back of the barn with the rest of the boys. They might at least abide by the rules of the game."

Rupert Hughes, in a long article, published in a syndicate of Sunday papers, endeavors to justify smoking by women, and says: "Nowadays no gentlemen thinks of helping himself to a cigarette without offering a cigarette to every lady present."

Mr. Hughes seems careless in his use of language. The words "Gentlemen" and "Lady" have a meaning that is readily understood by most users of the English language: "Gentlemen—a well-bred and honorable man." "Lady—a well-bred woman." The fact is, many men who smoke, openly express disgust with women who use tobacco.

THE THOUGHT OF GOD

Dear Brother Editor:

I was much interested in your remarks on "Trying to Eliminate the Thought of God."

My first impression was that you were mistaken in supposing that any considerable proportion of people are troubled at the thought of God, and want to get Him out of their minds. However, the responses you are asking for may surprise some of us by the revelations made.

For myself, I like to think of God. I want to know more of Him, His character, and His manifestations of Himself in the affairs of men. Recently, I had a fall that might have resulted fatally—in fact, a few weeks later another man had a similar fall in which his neck was broken, and he died instantly. My comfort is that, had that been my fate, God was near at hand.

Yesterday I talked with a woman who had just returned from a serious operation and a stay of three weeks in the hospital. She had no fear of God. She did not understand all about her afflictions and sufferings; but she did not blame God. She is not a member of the church, but she seems headed that way.

A SHIFT IN GREAT GIVING.

By Luther K. Long.

The death of Victor Lawson, owner and editor of the Chicago Daily News, has left a large vacancy in the newspaper ranks of the Middle West.

Mr. Lawson stood for a clean country and a clean city—and for a clean daily paper and a strong Christian church to help bring about the clean country and the clean city.

The disposition of his large fortune—more than twenty millions of dollars—is a matter of considerable interest. His wife had preceded him in death, and there were no children. On whom, or on what, would he bestow his benefactions?

The tendency in recent years has been to endow colleges and universities, or to establish "foundations." Mr. Lawson's mind took a different turn. For many years he and his wife had been members and active workers in the New England Congregational church of Chicago. Both of them were greatly interested in Christian work in their city. This active interest in the spiritual welfare of the people about them largely determined the objects Mr. Lawson sought to accomplish by means of the wealth he bestowed through his will.

He gave about $3,000,000 to various individuals, colleges, and societies. To the Congregational City Missionary and Church Extension Society of Chicago he gave $1,300,000 for the prosecution of its work.

The remainder of his estate—amounting to around $16,000,000—he divided into four equal parts. The first part goes to his brother. The second part goes to the Congregational City Missionary and Church Extension Society. The third part goes to the Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational). And the fourth part is set aside for the work of the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association.

This will greatly strengthen the work of the Y. M. C. A.—a work that is much needed and which has been very successful in past years. It will help also in putting the Chicago Theological Seminary in a position to do the things its president and faculty have been longing to do. For years it has done splendid work in training young men for the Christian ministry, not alone for Congregational churches, but for many others as well. The fourth part—together with the $1,300,000 specially designated—will furnish a fine endowment for the Congregational City Mission and Church Extension work. This will enable the Society to aid in establishing and maintaining work in many needy parts of the city where it has not been able hitherto to carry on its enterprises.

Let us hope that this will of Mr. Lawson registers a shift toward the church and the theological seminary as objects to be remembered in the wills of the wealthy. The power of these two institutions to serve the city and the whole country can be greatly augmented if they are given more ample financial resources.

—Asheboro has been hard hit by the drought. The water supply has become inadequate and the mayor has arranged to have 100,000 gallons of water a day shipped from High Point.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—OCT. 25.

Paul At Ephesus.

Lesson Text: Acts 19:23-34.

Golden Text: 1 Tim. 6:10.

The Central Truth: "Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing?" Because "if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost; in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them."

Scriptural Points.

1. Upon leaving Corinth Paul stopped at Ephesus for a short time, went on to Jerusalem, and from there to Antioch, thus completing his second missionary journey. After a short stay at Antioch he started on his third missionary tour and passed through Phrygia and Galatia, "strengthening all the disciples." And he came to Ephesus, his main objective, rebaptized a number of disciples who had been instructed only so far as John's baptism, and also imparted to them the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

2. Paul's ministry was greatly blessed at Ephesus. Many miracles of healing were wrought. Many that used curious arts believed, confessed, and burned their books, the estimated value of which was fifty thousand pieces of silver. Hundreds forsook the idol worship to serve the living and true God. "So mighty grew the word of God, and prevailed."

3. The success of the gospel created "no small stir" among the worshippers of the goddess Diana, the chief deity of the city. Quite a profitable business had been gotten up by making silver shrines, or models, of this goddess and her temple. Demetrius, a leader of these craftsmen, called them together to take necessary steps to protect their business. They were losing money, sales had fallen off alarmingly. Paul had turned away much people from the worship of idols to accept Christ. Two dangers were staring them in the face. First, "this our craft is in danger to be set at naught," and the lucrative trade in silver shrines would be destroyed. Secondly, "the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed," if the tide of Paul's success should sweep on.

4. This artful speech had the desired effect in stirring up the unthinking and superstitious populace against Paul and his co-workers. Paul could not be found, but the mob seized two of his companions in travel and rushed them into the theater. Paul was anxious to enter the theater to defend the cause espoused. But the disciples wisely restrained him, for the crowd was in no mood to listen to reason.

5. The unbelieving Jews put forth Alexander, one of their number, to address the mob and set forth that they were not responsible in the least for this new religion. But when the people learned that he was a Jew they drowned his voice in a tumultuous acclaim, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." This vociferous shouting was kept up for two hours, until the crowd became exhausted.

6. At this juncture the town clerk mounted and the rostrum and spoke to the people. He rebuked the people for their rash, unreasonable, and unavailing conduct, exonerated Paul and his co-workers from any blame, stating that they were "neither robbers of churches, or blasphemers of your goddess," and informed Demetrius and his craftsmen that they had any just cause against these men, the law is open, and there are deputies; let them implead one another."

Practical Points.

1. The gospel is both destructive and constructive. Sin and its power must be destroyed before the structure of character can be erected. The Kingdom of God is built upon overthrow and ruin of the kingdom of Satan. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."

2. The age long battle between right and wrong is a fight to the death. Neither side gives any quarter. "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour."

3. False worship use to be the devil's trump card in deceiving the nations. He appeals so powerfully to man's instinct for religion and worship. Ignorance and superstition have stood sponsors to idolatry from the dawn of history till now. People have worshipped stocks and stones, the sun, moon, and stars, money, self, loved ones, and one's own achievements. "Little children, keep yourselves from idols."

4. Persecution is another method of satanic warfare. Threats, slander, destruction of property, injury, and death are set forth to drive men away from righteousness back into sin. The devil is no respecter of persons. Yea, all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution."

5. Compromise with the world is quite a common method of attack. Those who name the name of Christ get to loving the ways, pleasures, the honors, and the emoluments of the world more than they love God. "Love not the world, neither the things of the world. For any man love the world, the love of the father is not in him."

6. Hypocrisy is another method. So many are led to profess what they do not possess. They have a name that they live but are dead. Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones and uncleanness."

7. And false doctrine is another method of destroying the souls of men. Millions in our day are being led astray by false teaching. It is becoming popular in circles of high learning to deny the Bible record of creation, the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, the virgin birth, the miracles of Jesus and other supernatural portions of the Bible, and the fact of hell and eternal punishment. "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts all they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—NOV. 1.

The Fight Against Strong Drink.

Lesson Text: Eph. 6:10-20.

Golden Text: Eph. 6:10.

The Central Truth: The strength of Jesus Christ is the key to victory in every battle of life.

Scriptural Points.

1. "Finally." This word introduces a heart to heart exhortation to the Ephesian Christians to be true to their Leader and "fight the good fight of faith."

2. "Be strong in the Lord." The Christian's strength comes from a vital touch or fellowship with Jesus Christ. The wire connected with the dynamo has wonderful power. So has the believer whose faith unites him to Christ. "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me."

3. "The whole armour of God." The Father of mercies does not leave His children defenseless. In the armory of redemption there are weapons a plenty for every soldier of the cross. They are spiritual weapons wielded by the faculties of the soul. "For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." 2 Cor. 10:4.

4. "Stand against the wiles of the devil." One of the most winning of the devil's wiles is the offer of "the pleasures of sin for a season." Another is the spirit of the world, or worldliness. To be in the world you must do like the world. Still another is, put on a good appearance—false profession. Retaliation is manly, is another artful trick of Satan, and millions are deceived by the plea of covetousness and unholy ambition. They suppose that "gain is godliness."

5. It is not a physical warfare. The Christian soldier has to contend with the organized "rulers of the darkness of this world," as they stand entrenched behind the rum curse, the love of money, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life.

6. "Be able to withstand in the evil day," the day of temptation, the day of overpowering carnal inclination,—the day that tries men's souls.

7. "Your loins girt about with truth." This girdle of truth is the encompassing power of the word of God. "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and victorious.

8. "The breastplate of righteousness." To be right with God, is to share the omnipotence of God. "Thrice-armed is he that hath his quarrel just." Their strength is as the strength of ten, whose hearts and lives are pure.

9. "The preparation of the gospel of peace." The preparation to meet God in peace in the judgment is the indispensable preparation to meet and vanquish the forces of sin upon the battlefield of earth. And it is the gospel of salvation that supplies this preparation.

10. "The shield of faith." Faith closes up the avenues of sin. It is the heart of unbelief that departs from the living God. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

11. "The helmet of salvation." This is the fifth and last part of the Christian's defensive armor. As the helmet and breast-plate protect the two most vital organs of the body, so salvation and its resultant righteousness, in their completeness, supply ample protection to the immortal soul.

12. "The sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." The revealed word of God, its principles, precepts, and promises, is a mighty weapon against the powers of darkness. With this weapon Jesus put the tempter to flight. Three thrusts of this sword, three assertions from Holy Writ were sufficient.

13. "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit." Prayer is the method of putting on and keeping on the christian armor. It is also the power of wielding the sword of the Spirit. Without prayer and reliance upon the higher powers every conflict with sin would be a failure.

Practical Points.

1. Legal prohibition is not the best care, or preventative, of the liquor curse. The best remedy is the power of the indwelling Spirit,—the power "to touch not, caste not, handle not" the damnable stuff.

2. There is power in salvation to keep saved. The strength of grace that put fallen man upon his feet can keep him from falling. "My grace is sufficient for thee."

3. Five parts of defensive armor and one weapon of offense is the right proportion. For "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

4. Prayer is the surest method of putting the devil to flight. "Satan trembles when he sees the weakest saint upon his knees."

5. Victory is always through the timely aid of the Lion of the tribe of Judah. "Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Savior, be glory, and majesty, and dominion, and power, both now and ever. Amen."

SAD END FOR THE MAUD.

The maud, Capt. Roald Amundsen's ice-breaking exploration ship, is back in Seattle, Wash., after three years in the Arctic. She will be sold to pay debts of Captain Amundsen, made while preparing for North Pole expeditions.

The famous old ship sailed from Seattle in June, 1922, bound for the Far North. Captain Amundsen hoped that the Maud would drift over the North Pole from Alaska to Norway in from three to five years. He left the Maud in Alaska and returned to the United States to prepare for his attempt to reach the North Pole by airplane. Eight men (one of whom died) stayed with the Maud on her dreary trip.

The Maud drifted with the ice for many hundreds of miles but instead of drifting northward over the Pole she was carried a little north and then west from Nome, Alaska. Finally, Captain Amundsen, by radio, ordered the crew to bring the Maud back to Seattle.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Concord.—The conference year is coming to a successful end we believe for Concord Church. Already the complete budget is met and things are in good shape for the final reports. This means our church will be on the Honor Roll this year. As pastor I wish to express thanks and congratulations for this splendid work.

Our C. E. is planning a "Trip to High Point College" next Saturday night. Not that any one is to go to the city of High Point next Saturday but that we are planning a series of exercises at different homes that will represent the various activities of college life. There will be a registration office with equipment and Registrar at one home; at another the chapel exercise will be conducted as much like the regular college services as possible. Then the class-room work will follow. Even athletics and home economics will be there for those who wish to take part in these affairs. Let all the people of Concord church, Sunday school and community be sure to take this trip to High Point College. You will enjoy it.

The fourth quarterly conference will convene on Thursday night, October 22, at seven o'clock.

I am glad, too, that the Sunday school Band is making fine progress. There is music in the air frequently now around the church at Concord.

As the year nears its close we feel like singing anew "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow."

P. E. Lindley, Pastor.

High Point.—The spirit of God was present at the 11 o'clock service last Sunday, and manifested Himself in great power to the congregation. After a splendid sermon by Dr. Brown from 1 John 4, he asked all those present who wished to consecrate anew their lives to His service, to come forward and almost the entire congregation gathered around the altar, and mingled their prayers and tears with those of their pastor. Then one grasped the hand of his neighbor, and all united in singing, "Blest be the tie that binds." A number praised God aloud. It was truly a touching and thrilling scene, the most wonderful doubtless which the First church has ever experienced. Just at the close of the service four persons united themselves with the church, Mr. W. C. Ferree, Mrs. Jane Ferree, Miss Mary Hammer, and Grover Angel, a student in High Point College. These new members were gladly welcomed into our membership by the pastor, and the right hand of fellowship was extended by almost the entire congregation. Truly it was good to be in that service, and the memory of that sacred hour will linger long in the minds and hearts of all those present.

The Stephens Evangelistic Campaign is entering its sixth week in our city with greatly increased interest and fervor. A meeting for men only was conducted at the Tabernacle at 2:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon by George T. Stephens, which was attended by thousands, while at the same hour Miss Jean Lamont and Mrs. Geo. Stephens conducted a service for women at the Wesley Memorial M. E. church.

The cottage prayer meetings, which are such a delightful season of communion and fellowship among friends and neighbors, will continue through this week. High Point is being stirred as never before, and scores of people are confessing Christ for the first time, and many Christians are pledging their lives anew to service for the Master.

The stewards held an important meeting at the church last Monday evening, when Committees were named for the entertainment of the approaching conference. Plans are rapidly being formulated for this interesting occasion.

The Ladies' Aid Society met at the church last Monday afternoon with the following associate hostesses, Mrs. S. P. Montgomery, Mrs. J. G. Snipes, Mrs. W. D. Burgess, Miss Blanche Burgess, Mrs. J. C. Welch, Sr., Mrs. J. C. Welch, Jr.

The Mission Band will meet at the church Monday afternoon with Mrs. D. A. Neese in charge of the meeting.

The pastor, Dr. Geo. R. Brown, went to Statesville Friday as fraternal messenger to the Western N. C. conference of the M. E. church South, and was introduced to the conference in session. In his address to that body he urged all Methodists to fulfill their God-given mission to bring the world to the feet of Jesus, and appealed to Bishop Denny to send Dr. E. K. McLarty back to High Point as pastor of Wesley Memorial church.

Mrs. Minnie P. Harrell has resigned as organist on account of her health, and Miss Novella McIntyre of the College Faculty is playing while Mr. Dan W. Smith directs the choir.

At the Sunday morning service the congregation was delighted to hear a beautiful vocal solo by Miss Bertie Loes of the Stephens party.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Robbins and daughter Annie attended the wedding of Miss Beulah Robbins and Mr. D. W. Bulla in Greensboro last Wednesday evening. The bride is a niece of Mr. Robbins, and Miss Annie Robbins was one of her cousin's bridesmaids. The wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Penny.

Dr. and Mrs. R. M. Andrews and children have moved into their handsome new home on College Drive, where they will be pleased to see their many friends.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Auman and two children have moved from White Oak St. to Monticue Ave.

Misses Ruth and Elizabeth Welch went to Raleigh last week to attend the State Fair.

Mrs. Ben T. Moore and sister, Miss Elizabeth Reitzel, and Bro., Mr. Brooks Rietzel, have gone to Avon Park, Fla. to join Mr. Moore, who is in the Real Estate business there.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Reitzel are occupying the Reitzel home on North Main St.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Peacock have moved into their attractive new home on Farris Ave.

Guilford Circuit.—A summary of special meetings.

Fairfield.—Rev. D. R. Williams was the pastor's aid, being there from the first service and continuing until the close. He is an old acquaintance and favorite of these people. The visible results; a revival; about twenty accessions.

Hickory Grove.—Rev. W. L. Carson pulpit help. He was a new man, but made many friends. The community was stirred as perhaps never before. Result; between forty and fifty professions, mostly reclamations; six accessions.

Midway.—Rev. W. F. Ashburn assisted, being with us from beginning to end, except one service. Result here, a revival which among other things meant every member present at the next communion service partook; two accessions.

Mitchell's Grove.—Rev. D. A. Braswell with great zeal and earnestness came for the first service and preached acceptably until the close. Result; a revival which brought the membership closer together.

Vickery.—A divided and discouraged community yielded to the earnest and faithful presentation of the truth by Rev. W. L. Carson. The indigent became interested, the estranged came together, sinners were convicted, nine professions, including reclamations.

Finances are hopelessly behind on the circuit, though more money has been paid on the G. C. B. than ever before, and perhaps will be on the A. C. B. But when that has been done only a beginning has been made. However, if the increase in amounts paid to the two budgets continues in the same ratio for ten years as the last two they will have reached the goal.

Mrs. W. P. Bowman, of Midway, is critically ill in a hospital in Winston-Salem. We hope for her improvement.

C. H. Whitaker, Pastor.

Dawilson Ct.—I will give a brief report of the work that has been done on this charge during the revival season. Held six meetings on this charge and assisted in four meetings elsewhere.

Alleghany. We had a splendid meeting at that church. Eleven professions and five united with the church.

Bro. E. W. Jones from the Wesleyan church High Point, did the preaching and did it well.

Liberty: We were assisted in the meeting here by Bro. J. W. Hulin. He seemed to be at his best and his preaching was greatly enjoyed by the large crowds that heard him; had a good revival, eight professions, no additions at this writing.

Pleasant Grove: Rev. E. A. Bingham of Bess Chapel came to our rescue here and did the preaching. The folks were delighted with his preaching.

Had a glorious meeting, 19 professions and 12 joined the church here.

Lineberry: We were assisted here by Rev. Geo. W. Clay of Farmer, Pastor of Uwharrie, Ct. M. E. Church. He did some able preaching from start to finish, and the meeting was a success. Five conversions and nine additions to the church here. Three came by letter.

Chapel Hill: Here we held our annual camp meeting. Rev. W. F. Ashburn came and did most of the preaching, and he preached the plain truth, and the people heard the Word gladly. Our meeting here was not what we had hoped for, yet there was much good done I am sure. Fifteen conversions and reclamations. Only two have joined the church.

date. We were delighted to have our president, Dr. Dixon, preached to us on Wednesday at the meeting. A large crowd heard him.

Here we have around $300.00 subscribed and paid in for a new Tabernacle that we expect to have erected and ready for use by 3rd Sunday in September, 26.

The work is to begin as soon as wheat is down.

Pine Hill: We held our meeting here the last week in October. Rev. E. O. Shaver of Chandler's Grove M. E. Church came and assisted in the meeting. Bro. Shaver is a good teacher and a good singer. Here we had a great revival and eight professions. Five joined the church. So far we have lost only five members this year by death and removals on the entire charge. I am expecting others to join before conference.

Will say in conclusion that things are going well on this charge and I am confident that great and lasting good has been done in the advancement of God's Kingdom here in the world. C. E. Ridge, Pastor.

Henderson.—We were glad to have Rev. Lawrence Little preach for us at the Sunday morning service October 11. Rev. Mr. Little says has a worthwhile message. He talked the C. E. Societies of Vance Co. in our church at the evening hour.

The Ladies' Aid continues to put on good programs each month. The whole society seems to be taking on new life.

The Young Ladies' League conducted a booth at the County Fair, clearing fifty odd dollars.

The missionary societies are meeting in the houses now. They will meet with Mrs. F. R. Harris today.

The fourth quarterly conference was held October 14. The pastor gave a splendid report of the work accomplished in the five years of his pastorate here. The church voted his return for another year, and we trust the conference will see fit to return him.

The stewards hope to have all of the finances paid in full by conference, although behind now.

There will be a congregational meeting Wednesday, Oct. 21, 7:30 P. M., for the annual election of officers.

The congregations both in the Sunday school and the church continue to be good.

Reporter.

State Street, Lexington.—The press of other duties has kept me out of print for some time now and possibly the space has been more profitably.

Our meeting conducted by Mrs. Dixon during the second week in September was very full one in many ways. We have some men taking part now that never did that since I have been here. Our membership has been strengthened some. We now have 55 on our church roll. Have received 31 since coming, and have lost one so that gives us a net of thirty-five over double.

Our Sunday school has more than doubled and we are talking building now, for the present rate of increase keeps up we soon be overcrowded. In fact now we are having to send one class up stairs at the parsonage.

We have a debt to raise on the parsonage and then we hope to begin on the church building. We have some plans on foot now.

There is a long hard pull ahead of us here, but that is the kind of pulling that develops the people who are worth while in the Kingdom.

We are glad to have President Dixon with us in our fourth quarterly conference. All reports denoted progress and he seemed to be very much pleased with the progress that is being made.

Our people never forget our temporal needs as you will see by this report, for since the regular pounding given in August, they have continued to remember us single handed. From Mrs. J. B. Leonard, potatoes and milk, Mrs. J. W. Lindsay gives us bread milk regularly, Mrs. A. H. Evans sweet milk, peaches, eggs, J. W. Lindsay flour and peaches, Mrs. Venus Berrier, onions, M. L. Tesh, a broom, Mrs. Burkheart, grapes and green corn, Mrs. M. Creary milk, tomatoes, Mrs. J. F. Cox pants goods for the boy and peaches. We thank you all good people and we hope to repay in faithful service.

There are so many kind words of appreciation along with these material gifts that it makes the burden much lighter in more ways than one.

Our growth is necessarily slow because we should have been up town here a long time ago for we have lost much by not beginning earlier, for we have twenty eight churches in this county; and a growing town like Lexington that means that there is a loss when there is no church to get them when they move in. And then when a new project like this is started, there are always those who want to see it tried out before they lend a hand. But with a faithful little band like we have here there is always an attraction that will cause a development that is worthwhile. Pray for us, friends, and help us when you have an opportunity, for if you could see the work that is going on among our Sunday school folks you would rejoice with us. Sincerely,

N. G. Bethea.

Concord.—The many friends of Rev. and Mrs. D. A. Braswell will be sorry to learn that several nights ago while standing before the fire Mr. Braswell's clothing in some way caught fire and burned him pretty bad, and for nine days and nights he has lain in pain not able to rest or sleep. Across the hall in another room Mrs. Braswell is confined not able to walk a step or help herself. This is a pitiful home and you cannot but sympathize with them in these days of trial and suffering.

Mr. Braswell has been a faithful minister in our church for a long time and I am sure he has lots of friends all over the state.

He will appreciate your prayers and anyone who wishes to give financial aid.

D. A. McLaurin.

Mebane.—Our revival meeting began the first Sunday in October. Rev. L. W. Gerringer of Calvary church, Greensboro, came Monday afternoon and stayed during the entire meeting which lasted ten days, closing last Wednesday night.

Mr. Gerringer did some fine preaching, and we were glad to have him in our midst.

We feel that the church has been revived. There were two conversions and several reclamations. Two united with the church at the Sunday morning service; they were Miss Mary McLeod and Mr. Fenley Steward. The church presented Mr. Gerringer with a purse of about $35.00.

Last Thursday afternoon at three o'clock the Ladies' Aid Society met at the home of Mrs. W. J. Sykes; nineteen members and one visitor present. After business matters were disposed of Mrs. Sykes assisted by Mrs. J. E. Barnette served ice cream and cake. The next meeting will be with Mrs. J. W. Nicholson.

Reporter.

Efland, Orange Circuit.—Sunday was a full day for us. We had preaching, communion service and elected officers for the coming year. We only have one other preaching service before conference. We hope by that time to be ready for conference as we are now somewhat behind financially. Our fourth and last quarterly conference will meet at Union Grove Saturday, October 24. We hope to hear good reports from every church on the charge.

We have had a good Sunday school this year. Two or three Sundays ago we had 100 present. I think that breaks our past record. Let's all pull together and asking God's help try to do better work during the coming year than we have in the past. We are glad to have Mr. E. Goodwin for our Supt. again. He is a good one. Mrs. E. S. Taylor, Reporter.

St. Paul.—The fourth quarterly meeting convened on the night of the 14th. Our beloved president, A. G. Dixon, was with us and presided over the conference. We had a good turn out of the official members, notwithstanding the weather. All reports were good.

The president made us some splendid talks on the different departments of church work. He said with the exception of an item or two the church was one hundred percent organized.

On Monday night last, about forty of our best people came upon us loaded with almost everything for family use. We shall not take space to enumerate the different articles left, but we will say that it was one of the largest poundings we have received for many years.

After they had made their deposits we had a splendid song service. The pastor then took the opportunity to thank the donors and prayed the blessings of God upon each of them.

May the Lord bless each one that took part and may He direct our cause for the best at St. Paul's church. I. H. Moton.

Auttman—Reynolds.

On October 19, 1925 at the home of Rev. and Mrs. J. B. O'Briant, Rosemary N. C., Mr. Tom Auttman and Miss Lelia Reynolds were united in marriage, the writer officiating.

This happy couple are both from Hopewell, Va. Our good wishes go with them. Being from Hopewell may they Livewell.

J. B. O'Briant.

Saxapahaw Charge.—On the second Sunday night our pastor, Brother Isley, was with us and delivered a very inspiring sermon, taking for his subject, "The Call of God." It was a beautiful message for all but mainly for the young people, stressing the need of young men and women answering the call to service in the ministry and both foreign and home mission work.

This is just one of the many wonderful sermons that Brother Isley has given us, messages that are not easily forgotten, always presenting the truth comprehensible to all of his hearers. We feel that he has done a great work among our people during the time he has been with us, always going to those who needed him either in sickness, death, or any kind of spiritual help. Knowing how much he is liked among the members here and what he has done for our people we would be very sorry to lose him from our charge.

After the service Sunday evening a meeting was called of the members of the Saxapahaw Church for the purpose of electing officers. The following were elected, G. W. Winningham, Trustee; Dr. R. G. McPherson, Miss Laura Marlett, Ozzie Thompson and H. H. Lindley, Deacons. Arthur Lindley and Dr. R. G. McPherson Class Leaders and Conner Winningham Reporter.

Our class book was revised at this time, showing a large number of members added to our church this year.

Our last service this year will be the fourth Sunday in this month and we trust that there will be a large number present to hear the pastor, but we hope it will not be the last time in the future. And let us not forget our conference claims which we know are very important.

Conner Winningham, Reporter.

Union Grove Charge.—Conference is almost here, and I have made no report to the paper.

This people give their pastor in their homes the old time welcome.

During the last two months in their pounding and at other times they have given us extracts, soda, sugar, flour, meat, chickens, eggs, butter, milk, fruit, preserves, jellies, etc., nearly enough to last till conference.

During the year they have furnished the parsonage with a bed and six chairs, and a table.

The fourth Sunday in September till the following Friday night, Dr. Dixon and his wife conducted our revival. An old time revival it was. They held three services a day. Rev. David White of the M. E. church preached once. He also during the meeting labored zealously in the congregation. Members of other churches joined heartily with us in the services. The Evangelistic Club of Elkin conducted two services. There were about eighteen conversions and quite a number of reclamations. Twenty-four joined our church. Two joined the Baptist church.

Our people have paid a little on their college pledges and a little on the budgets. They have promised much more.

At our special meeting on Sunday two of Union Grove ex-pastors, Brothers Matthews and Hardy, worshipped with us. Sunday night Brother Hardy preached for us a splendid sermon.

There are great possibilities here. If we could only get the most of our members as wide awake, as a few are, to see their opportunities of doing something for the Master, this would be one of the most desirable places in the conference. W. T. Totten.

West End, Greensboro.—Rally day was observed Sunday, October 18, with a specially prepared program by the Children's Department of the Sunday school, and a rally day play. Miss Annabel Thompson was chairman of the program committee. The entire program was impressive and instructive and was pleasing to an unusually large congregation. The liberal offering will go to the Board of Education.

Rev. E. L. Ballard is spending a few days with his parents in Baltimore. In his absence Mr. Elwood Carroll, one of our ministerial students at High Point College, filled the pulpit Sunday evening. Such an earnest and consecrated representative of the College is indicative of the training the students receive there and make us even more determined to help support our beloved H. P. C.

One of the most delightful missionary programs of the year was that given by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society Monday evening, with Dr. Joy Harris Glascock as hostess. The meeting was held at Dr. Glascock's home on Asheboro Street and the attendance was the best the society has had in quite a while. Two new members were cordially received into membership, they being Mrs. Watts and Miss Nell Eldridge. After an interesting program and the adjournment of the business session, a delightful social hour was enjoyed and the hostess served a delicious salad course. The invited guests were Mesdames Watts, Herman Highfill, O. G. Williams, Ogburn Stafford, Roy Begin, and Misses Nell Eldridge and Kozelle Whitt.

During the business session the society discussed plans for a "Trip Around the World," to be given Friday evening, October 23. The church will be the central station and different homes in the community will represent various foreign countries.

At the October business meeting of the Senior Christian Endeavor Society Miss Emily Ward was chosen president to succeed Miss Gladys Routh, who has so efficiently and faithfully served in this capacity for the past three years. A great deal of credit for the splendid success of the society is due Miss Gladys and we regret to lose her as president, but we rejoice in the fact that we have another who is sufficiently capable and familiar with the work to carry it right along without a hitch. Other officers elected were vice-president, Charles Routh, recording secretary, Margaret Osborne, corresponding secretary, Helen Stockard, treasurer, Cleto Routh, and pianist, Lurlei Smith.

The Endeavorers have been very much interested in a series of missionary lectures mapped out by the Missionary Committee, with Miss Annabel Thompson as chairman. They are using as a text book "The Leavening of Japan."

An old fashioned "quilting party" was held in the church basement Friday afternoon under the auspices of the Woman's Home Missionary Society. Two quilts were made and sold for $5.00 each. The proceeds will go toward the work of the Woman's Home Missionary Society.

The annual election of church officers will take place Wednesday evening, October 21, at the business session following prayer meeting.

Shelby.—We held our regular services during the past two Sundays with the usual attendance. The Sunday school is holding its own in regard to attendance and also in interest.

Our fourth quarterly conference was held on Tuesday night of last week. Bro. A. O. Eaker was elected alternate delegate to the annual conference. The pastor's salary for next year was fixed, and is to be $750 for a half-time pastor. Shelby and Caroleen churches are expected to be served by the same pastor next year. The finances for the present conference year were reported to be considerably behind and the stewards were instructed to do all possible to bring up the finances by the time the annual conference meets. The pastor's salary is more than $400.00 behind at this time. A donation from the Shelby Cotton Mills to the amount of $50.00 was counted on the salary last week. The quarterly conference decided to have the election of officers and correct and revise the church register at a regular business meeting of the church. The pastor has called that business meeting for Tuesday night of next week, Oct. 27.

We have two more Sundays for regular services before the arrival of the annual conference. We are hoping to be able to have a fairly good report to make to the annual conference. C. B. Way, Pastor.

—Dwight F. Davis, of St. Louis, Mo., is the new Secretary of War in President Coolidge's Cabinet. He was named by the President Oct. 13, after John W. Weeks, of Massachusetts, Secretary of War since March 4, 1921, had resigned because of poor health. Mr. Weeks has been ill with heart trouble since last April and his resignation was expected. Mr. Davis has been Assistant Secretary of War since 1923 and has been serving as Acting Secretary of War since Mr. Weeks was taken ill. His work in the War Department has pleased President Coolidge and he has now been promoted to head that Department.

—Among those injured in automobile accidents we are sorry to see the name of Mrs. J. B. McCollum, of Reidsville. We trust her injuries will not prove to be serious.

—Winter seems to be drawing in upon us early this year. Some weather prophets are predicting that we will have no summer next year, but we will not be troubled by the prediction till we see it in process of fulfillment.

Bro. G. O. Coble is engaged in preparing a lawn for Calvary Church. This he does out of the generosity of his heart, and we thank him heartily.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Dixon.

Brother Arthur Jesse Dixon was born December 7th, 1881, and died September 29th, 1925.

In youth he professed faith in Christ and joined with Midway Church where he became a staunch pillar. On June 20th, 1920, he was united in marriage to Miss Lee Measamer. His union constituted one of the happiest homes I ever knew. Their devotion to each other was beautiful—they were still sweethearts. I feel that in his death Sister Dixon has lost one of the best husbands the Lord ever made. The heart throbs of love and tenderness were not only felt in the home but in the church which he loved so dearly. All hearts grieved about him as they leaned upon him as a great pillar of strength.

After his sainted father died a year ago, the mantle fell upon his noble son Arthur, and the same harness in which father fell Arthur fell.

Everybody who knew him loved him. So many have said to me: "We didn't know that he was so much loved until since his death." He was a friend to the poor regardless of color. The colored people spoke of him as their best friend, and paid beautiful tribute to his funeral.

In his going the pastor has lost one of his best friends. No pastor ever had a more loyal friend than Arthur Dixon was to us—we loved him. Oh, why God took him, we don't understand, but for the fact that he demands the best. His going has made the community, church and home vastly poorer, but, thank God, heaven is richer.

The funeral was conducted by the writer assisted by Revs. Ashburn, and Lowdermilk, other pastors, Rev. Downs of the Baptist church, Rev. J. D. Williams, and Dr. Dixon, president of our conference.

REV. MR. PRITCHARD WILL LIKELY LEAVE.

Rev. J. E. Pritchard, for the past five years pastor of the Methodist Protestant church in this city, will in all probability not return to this charge for another year following the annual conference of that denomination in North Carolina, which convenes at High Point on Wednesday, November 4. This developed at the fourth quarterly conference of the church held last night, and attended by officials of the church.

When it came time to give instructions to the church's delegate to the annual conference, Mr. Pritchard arose and asked to be heard. He reminded his congregation that he had been here for five years, and that he thought it might be well for the church that there be a change at this time. Members present expressed their great surprise at the statement by Mr. Pritchard, who said that he would ask the conference to move him and to send another pastor here, despite the fact that he had enjoyed his stay in this city and, would leave with the very best of wishes to every one. The discussion of those present finally resulted in the definite instructions to the delegate to the annual conference to ask for Mr. Pritchard's return here for another year as the first choice of the church.

Mr. Pritchard came to Henderson five years ago from Burlington, where he served five years as pastor. He succeeded Rev. S. W. Taylor at the local church, who had likewise served here five years, and who, in return, succeeded Mr. Pritchard in Burlington, where he is now closing up his fifth year.

The Henderson minister is considered one of the leading ministers of the conference in this State, and he has made many friends in this city outside his own congregation. There is general regret at his departure.—Henderson Daily Dispatch.

THE GOOD TEACHER.

Henry Van Dyke.

The Lord is my teacher,
I shall not lose the way.

He leadeth me in the lowly path of learning,
He prepareth a lesson for me every day;
He bringeth me to the clear fountains of instruction,
Little by little He showeth me the beauty of truth.

The world is a great book that He hath written,

He turneth the leaves for me slowly,
They are inscribed with images and letters,
He poureth light on the pictures and the words.

He taketh me by the hand to the hillside of vision,
And my soul is glad when I perceive His meaning;

In the valley also He walketh beside me,
In the dark places He whispereth to my heart.

Even though my lesson be hard it is not hopeless,

For the Lord is patient with His slow scholars;

He will wait a while for my weakness,
And help me to read the truth through tears.

AIR MAIL CARRIER KILLED.

A plane of the air mail service between New York and Chicago was wrecked in the Allegheny Mountains, near Bellfonte, Pa., on the night of Oct. 1. The Pilot, Charles H. Ames, was killed. For more than a week searching parties roamed the mountains on the lookout for the lost flyer and his plane. Finally, on Oct. 11, Johnny DeArmitt, a 15-year-old boy, found the wreckage. Thirteen sacks of mail were not damaged.

The place where the plane crashed is on the most dangerous part of the air route of 734 miles between Chicago and rough with no places for landing. The wreckage showed that the plane had crashed into a giant tree in the mountain forest.

FLIVVERS OF THE AIR?

Are Ford airplanes soon to become as common as Ford automobiles now are? That seems to be a question for the people themselves to decide. Henry Ford stands ready to build as many planes as the public will use and to build them at a low cost, like his "flivvers." Mr. Ford announced last week that his laboratory at Dearborn, Mich., had almost finished work on an engine for the "plain people's air flivver."

Meanwhile, Mr. Ford has sold his first commercial airplane to Rodman Wanamaker department store in Philadelphia. Messrs. Ford and Wanamaker are partners in a plan to establish an airplane passenger service between New York City and Miami, Florida.

GOVERNORS TO PROTEST.

Governors of many of the States are going to Washington next week to appear before the House Ways and Means Committee. That committee is drawing up a new tax bill for action by Congress, which meets in December. The Governors will try to persuade the members of the committee to repeal that part of the present law which provides a tax on the estates of dead persons. This is known as an estate tax.

Most of the States have what are known as inheritance tax laws. Under these laws the heirs of the dead person pay a tax to the State. Thus, when a man dies, his property is taxed by both the Federal and State Governments. President Coolidge agrees with the Governors that all taxes on estates of dead persons should be left to the States and that the Federal Government should get its revenue in other ways.

COLUMBUS DAY IN ITALY.

Italy as well as the United States celebrated Columbus Day (Oct. 12) this year. That date has been made a national holiday in Italy. Italians claim that Columbus was born at Genoa but some Spaniards dispute this claim and say he was born in Spain. Americans do not need to pay much attention to this quarrel over Columbus' birthplace. They know he discovered America and are not especially concerned over his birthplace.

—Friends of Rev. D. A. Braswell will be grieved to read of his painful accident.

Flat Rock Circuit.—The fourth quarterly conference met at Gideon Grove church, Oct. 10, at two o'clock. We entered into the business in a spirit of love, and had a very sweet conference. Many of the reports were very encouraging while some were not what they should have been. The claims were much behind and the pastor's salary not all paid, but I believe it will be before I start to conference. Bethel Church paid pastor in full. Palestine paid pastor and all their A. C. B. yesterday, and I feel sure I will get more on the claims before conference from all the churches. Bro. Walter Jones was elected alternate delegate to conference. The conference instructed for the return of the present pastor.

Let us pray that the Spirit of the Lord may direct in placing each pastor next year.

Joel B. Trogdon.

Greensville Ct.—In my last communication I told you I had heard something over an air-wave. It has really come to pass and I am going to tell you about it. On Thursday night before the second Sunday the pastor was notified he would have company, I was looking on course. In came Bro. Sim Pearson and wife, Bros. Ernest Chambliss and J. S. Branscomb and wanted to groom their pastor for conference as he is rather large and hard to fit, they presented him with a purse to get him a suit of clothes for conference. The pastor has been measured and the suit is in making. We are now looking for it every day. On Sunday the Ebenezer folks got busy and presented him with another purse for a nice pair of Kangaroo shoes and I don't know what else may happen before conference.

They say when the people fix their pastor up so nice for conference they want to trade him—so look out! But I think they will have a hard time to trade for this preacher—I am satisfied that no better people is to be found in all the bounds of conference than I have. We have worked two years in the most congenial harness that has ever been thrown on a preacher. It is a pleasure to serve a people like these. They seem to love their pastor and I am sure the pastor loves them. This relation seems to grow as we know more and more of each other. I have no words adequate to express our appreciation for such kindness. I can only say thank you, brethren! and pray the blessings of heaven upon them.

The fourth quarterly conference was held at Philadelphia on October 17. A good attendance. The Greensville Twins were present with Bro. Ben Pearson, the three oldest men, doubtless that attends conference anywhere.

The pastor preached at eleven o'clock. A nice dinner was served by the ladies of the church and community. After a little rest we reassembled to transact the business of the last quarter of year. I never saw a finer spirited body of men. A large representation from all the churches. It would be needless to say that this number of spiritually minded men transacted the business in the spirit of unity. I have never seen a greater spirit of love and harmony. It was, indeed, pleasant to be there. The pastor's salary was fixed at $1500.00 for another year and a unanimous vote was cast by standing for the present pastor's return. Two churches have paid up pastor, namely,

HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

Catalogue and application blank will be forwarded upon application. Those desiring further information should address The President, High Point College, High Point, N. C.

Ebenezer and Wesley's Chapel, Philadelphia and Matthew's Chapel almost out and a guarantee all will be paid at these churches. We are now looking to Hobbs Chapel.

We have had a pleasant year. We will make a better financial showing than last year.

May the Lord bless us in our annual session.

Yours in the Master's service.

H. L. Powell, Pastor.

Philadelphia, Greensville Ct. Our Sunday school is moving along nicely. Although the attendance is not so very good.

The fourth quarterly conference was held at Philadelphia. Mr. Powell preached a splendid sermon in the morning. The reports from the pastor, Sunday schools and Endeavor Societies, were very encouraging. May we finish this year's work with credit and be ready to start the new year aright. Mr. J. S. Branscomb has been elected as delegate to the annual conference from this charge.

We must thank Mr. Powell for the good sermons he has preached to us this year. His messages are always enjoyed. Mr. Powell seems to be much liked by the people on this circuit, and hope we may be fortunate in having him as our pastor for another year.

We are getting on very well with our Christian Endeavor Society.

Best wishes to all, Bernice Pearson, Rep.

Friendship, Stanly.—Our fourth quarterly conference commenced at Friendship Saturday, October 18. Almost all the official members were present from all the churches. The business was transacted in a spirit of love. The delegate was instructed to recall Mr. Ridge for another year. Mr. Ridge has served us faithfully for four years and we are not tired of him yet. Some have said, "I think more of him now than I did at first, for I have got acquainted with him now and would hate to see him leave."

Mr. Ridge certainly did present two good sermons yesterday. Probably he would say that he did not preach yesterday morning the Lord's supper was administered and election of officers for another year and other church business to attend to, he did not talk very long, but I think he preached a sermon any way. He used as his evening subject "Judgment."

We have only one more preaching Sunday before conference and may this be the best yet.

Martha Ann Harwood, Reporter,

My dear Brother McCulloch.—

The year is coming to a close. It has been a year mixed with pain and pleasure. I have been very busy all the year. It has been a pleasure to get out and help in some meetings.

As you know, I have no salary. The work that I have been doing hasn't paid me very much. My expenses have been a great deal more than my income.

My wife has had another stroke. She has lost her mind and is helpless. I received a very serious burn about ten days ago, and am confined to my bed.

I will give a report of my year's work as soon as I am able. I don't think I will be able to fill any more appointments before conference. I hope to be able to go to conference.

We should be very glad to be remembered by our friends in these hours of suffering. If it was not the brightness of Christ presence, these hours would be dark, but with His presence there is light in darkness.

We heartily thank all those that have helped us in the past, and would ask them to continue to remember us.

Praying heaven's richest blessings upon the entire church, I am yours in His name.

A SPECIAL CALL TO PRAYER.

All of us need to pray most earnestly that the Spirit of our Lord may have right of way in us, and also in every action of the annual conference in its sessions November 4 to 9. If we are in accord with Him, then His will must be done, and we will all be happy in the results.

Special Object of Prayer.

Please read again on the front page of last week's Herald, the article written by Mr. J. Norman Wills, in which he says, "One cannot do it but a thousand can," and then pray and pay to the limit.

I am hereby calling upon every Methodist Protestant pastor where services are to be held next Sunday, Nov. 1st, to call his congrega- tion to special prayer for the High Point College. And in all the Sunday schools let the Superintendents call to special prayer for the college. And to all our people, whether you go to church or not on Sunday, November 1st, I call upon you to make it a day of prayer for the College. Please don't forget,—all Chris- tian people who love the Methodist Protest- ant Church, and who are interested in its fu- ture are asked to make next Sunday, Nov. 1st, a day of prayer for our college and for our conference.

God has answered in stress of times before, and he will answer now if we expectantly ask. "If two of you shall agree on earth as touch- ing anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heav- en." Matt. 18:19.

Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." John 14:13, 14.

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." John 15:7.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

—Mockeville charge ask for the return of Rev. J. T. Sisk as their pastor.

LUTHER'S UNFORTUNATE SECOND CHANGE OF AUTHORITY.

He Would Better Have Held to God's Forgiving Love in Christ.

When driven to break with the authority of the Roman Catholic Church, Luther at first substituted for it the word of God, by which he meant the gospel of God's forgiving love in Christ. This gave him all he needed for life and salvation, and other authority was quite unnecessary. The believer, as a child of God, possesses the impulse to live as a child of God should; and without the pressure of any external law does instinctively and spontaneously what God would have him do. All questions of orthodoxy are unimportant. Faith in the forgiving love of God in Jesus Christ supplies motive and guidance adequate for all the emergencies of life.

But gradually Luther was driven by theological controversy to substitute the Bible for the gospel, and to put the word of God in the traditional sense as the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament in place of the Church upon which his Catholic opponents were standing and in place of the indwelling Spirit or inner light to which his radical adversaries were appealing. His early indifference to aught but the gospel of God's forgiving love gave way in course of time to concern for many other things. Divergences in matters which might fairly have been regarded as entirely unimportant loomed large in his eyes when they became symptoms of another spirit, an alien set of ideals, or a different practical program from his own. The Bible to which he then appealed as his authority, often reading it in the most slavishly literal fashion, had long been the favorite resort of all critics of the principles or practices of the Church, and his use of it gave it permanent and supreme authority within Protestantism.

The change is the organ of authority from Church to Bible did not mean the abandonment of the medieval for the modern point of view. As a matter of fact, the new authority was just as external as the old, and submission to it just as slavish. The change, to be sure, promoted liberty, both by breaking the control of the Catholic Church, the greatest foe of freedom, and also by encouraging the formation of mutually hostile sects, based on diverse interpretations of the Bible. But the principle of authority was as medieval in historic Protestantism as in Catholicism, and it was only lack of historical imagination which for so long prevented Protestants from realizing the fact.

Theoretically, indeed, the Protestant conception of authority was even more mechanical and inelastic than the Catholic, for the latter at least had a living court of appeal which might conceivably take account of the new revelations and the growing wisdom of the ages; while the former had a finished revelation and a closed canon which could never be subtracted from or added to until the end of time.

Fortunately for themselves Protestants have commonly been better than their principles, and have so re-read the Bible in successive centuries as to make it practically a new book and thus adapt it to the needs of one age after another. Had the various Protestant sects not seen fit to record their interpretations of Biblical truths in credal forms, and to make the acceptance of these forms binding upon their adherents, the process of reinterpretation and readaptation might have gone on more freely and with much less friction than it has. But there are limits after all to the possibilities of such a process, and there can be little question that the Protestant doctrine of an infallible and self-interpreting Bible is bound to disappear from the minds of thinking men long before the Catholic doctrine of an infallible church.—Dr. A. C. McGiffert in "Religious Authority."

A DIVINE PATIENCE

Rev. Albion R. King

The popular impatience with the doctrine of evolution and the scientists who uphold it raises the question of the Divine patience. Not that God is liable to become as impatient as His would-be champions and strike with one blow all who hold such heresies. His providence strikes not only the Whales in their banquet hours when they take His name on their lips in a blasphemous toast, but likewise the Bryans in the moment of their greatest efforts for religious faith. The point is raised by the fact that the doctrine in question is one of the greatest proofs of, and incidentally a most excellent opportunity to expound, the patience of God.

But first let us examine this idea of patience as applied to God. It is not a quality of character which is calculated greatly to distinguish its possessor. The patient parent is not continually making his authority felt by outbursts of temper and the application of the rod. He is wise enough to direct the child's development from an inconspicuous vantage-point and let him learn some things for himself. The patient God provides opportunities for His children and trusts them to work out their own salvation. It is not easy to understand God in this fashion. It is the easier and much more common thing to find God in the unusual and spectacular events of life. Let an earthquake overturn a city, or disaster overtake a liner at sea, or a noted atheist fall dead with blasphemy on his lips, and men who pursue their own ends daily as if God did not exist will fall on their knees in holy terror.

The rabbinical view which Jesus faced was after this form. God's creative activity took just six days. He rested the seventh day, and then withdrew into heavenly realms to visit the world only at irregular intervals in a supernatural manner. To purify and sanctify the common life had been the great task of the prophets, but their message was lost on the day of Jesus. The good deeds of service, the pure life that He lived, and the truth that He taught were no evidence to His compatriots of a Divine character. They required a sign.

Against this mechanical deism, Jesus threw all the weight of His teaching powers. For Him God was never absent. Everything lovely, beautiful, and good spoke to Him of a Divine purpose. Everything ugly and vicious challenged the fire of Divine Love in His heart. The intimacy of Jesus with God was a source of astonishment to His critics. He knew of no Sabbaths or other vacation which God ever took from doing good. Every opportunity to do good, whether on a Sabbath or any other day, was eagerly seized as an opportunity to be at one with God in His work. "My Father worketh even until now, and I work." The persistent presence and power of good in the world is, then, an evidence of the presence and power and patience of God.

Evidence From Science

But modern science as it reveals the creative activity of God furnishes the foremost evidence of a Divine patience.

When God desires to create a solar system it is quite evident from what has been discovered through the great telescopes that it is not done in the twinkling of an eye. There first appears in space a great mass of gaseous substance at white heat and revolving at a terrific velocity. This very gradually cools and slackens its pace. The outer edge becomes red and later breaks off into smaller whirling masses. These finally become solidified into planets and satellites, whirling at varying velocities, and moving around the sun or "fixed star" as a central point. The earth probably came into being by such a process as this over a period of time which the mind of man is scarcely able to compute.

When God designed the earth for the comfort and development of the human race, He began no less than twenty-six million years ago to store the mountains and underground strata of the plains with coal and oil. These are the compressed and mummified deposits of animal and vegetable matter which lived in the later Paleozoic and Mesozoic periods.

When God planned the White Mountains to add the crowning touch of beauty to New England He began not less than four million years ago in the Great Ice Age of the Cainozoic period to carve the Flume and the Giant Potholes of Lost River. Even in that greatest wonder of all, the Great Stone Face, time wielded the carving knife which executed the design of the Infinite Sculptor. Thousands of years ago the side of Profile Mountain began to crumble and at its foot lies the largest pile of fallen boulders to be found in the world. One by one as these rocks have loosened and fallen, they have left there at a comparatively recent date the majestic profile, whose noble brow, mirrored against the blue sky or a floating cloud, suggests not only the grimness of Father Time, but the infinite patience of a kind Heavenly Father.

Evidence From History

The evidence which has been gathered in the fields of anthropology and history reveals the presence of the Divine in a patient process of human development. There are two theories of the origin and destiny of the human race. One view is that man began in a state of perfection from which he fell and has been falling and growing worse ever since, and the final end is destruction for all except a chosen few. This is a view of Divine impatience, featuring wrath and vengeance as Divine attributes. The other view is that the human race had humble beginnings, but by the power of the Holy Spirit and the guidance of an infinite Divine patience it is slowly achieving a Divine ideal. The first view has the sanction of certain portions of Scripture, notably the Apocalyptic writings, and a certain pessimistic type of philosophy. The other view is grounded on the great mass of evidence from both natural and human history, and is in fundamental harmony with the prophetic writings and the New Testament. It is the view of optimism, the view of progress, the view which Jesus taught in His parables of the kingdom, and the view of God as a Divine patience willing to trust humanity.

Illustrations are not wanting in the realm of recorded history. We choose two from Bible history.

When God wanted a race of people to whom He could entrust the revelation of Himself in the person of His own Son, did He go out into that Oriental land and create by fiat a race of people essentially different from all the other peoples around? Indeed, there were some Jews who felt, and there may be some who feel to this day that they are essentially different and superior to other peoples, just as some Anglo-Saxons feel that they are by Divine right different and superior to the black and yellow and Iberian races. But such is not the truth. The greatest of the prophets, the apostles, and Christ Himself taught otherwise, as St. Paul declared God "made of one every nation of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." No, the Divine patience could trust human processes. So God chose a man, Abraham, the son of an idolater, in a materialistic age and empire. God gave him spiritual vision and sent him out of his native land on a great spiritual adventure to found a nation. Then God raised up Moses and Joshua and Samuel and the prophets, men like all other men, and committed to their leadership the great trust.

"In the fulness of time God sent forth His Son." His very coming is an incarnation of Divine patience. He was not let down from heaven in full possession of His faculties. God entrusted Him in birth to a Jewish family, and nourished Him to maturity in a Jewish home. In building His kingdom Jesus definitely rejected the way of impatience. He would not jump off the Temple. He would raise no armies, and commit no violence against His enemies. Job was not a patient man. To Jesus belongs that honor. He pronounced no curse either upon the day of His birth or His friendly tormentors. The cry of His heart was for pity, not vengeance. Never did He long for death, but He accepted death when the violence of His enemies overwhelmed Him. Yet what a glorious death—glorious in the majesty of His faith and patience! "Put up thy sword." Feed my sheep." These words to the impatient Peter were a revelation of a patient father.

Impatience of Men

If our review of natural and human development is correct, then God is at work in the evolutionary processes and the world is fundamentally good. This is the common faith of religious souls, and their prayer is that they may be at one with God in His work. We want to be "laborers together with God." We crave the confidence of Jesus, "My Father worketh even until now, and I work." This doctrine of Divine patience ought to help us to find that unity with Him. It is by finding the good in the world and throwing the weight of our personal power into the scales on that side.

Patient application to this end is not easy to practise. If history reveals the patience of God, it likewise reveals the impatience of men. Most of us enjoy the excitement of an open fight. When we face the evils of the world we like to be crusaders. Saracens take the Holy Land, but the Christian does not send missionaries, build schools or hospitals, or exercise any of the virtues of good-will. That is too slow. He dons his shiniest armor and mounts his strongest charger and goes out to kill in the name of the Prince of Peace. The result is the most conspicuous failure of history, the branding of Christianity as "blood-thirsty," and the confirmation of the Turk in his brutal ways.

John Brown is a hero of abolition and Carrie Nation a heroine of prohibition. But when we view from this distance all the actors which entered into American slavery, we are led to wonder if more patience and economic forces at work would not have secured abolition without bloodshed, as happened in Europe. And surely the violent aspect of his liberation has not served to enhance the status of the black man or solve our racial problems. One of the chief obstacles to progress in this matter has been the fear and hatred which grew out of war. In regard to prohibition the Christian church has certainly learned that the reform will never be accomplished by violence. Unreservedly she is giving herself to the patient task of training a new generation to know the evils of liquor and the values of sobriety.

War is the "most colossal and ruinous" instance of man's impatience. Surely we have learned that if war is ever to be abolished it will be with the power and by the method of the Divine patience. Military preparedness, whether by individual nations or by international forces, is doomed to failure because it rests on fear, hate, and pride—those qualities of character which make men impatient and quick on the trigger finger. To cultivate the sense of human solidarity and to build a bulwark of resistance in good-will is more difficult and less glamorous, but it is the way of God and the only hope of peace.

A common mistake of human impatience is to brand any opponent with some mark of total depravity, such as "Hun" or "Bolshevik." The popular appellations of foreign groups carry the sting of constitutional inferiority. This is wrong and a contradiction of the Divine character. Good and evil are personal attributes. Evil is always relative and never absolute in any person or institution. Neither can any person or group claim a monopoly on goodness. It is the inalienable possession of every personality. To find it is to find God. To encourage and develop it is to work with God.—Zion's Herald.

WHAT REALLY MATTERS

It matters little where I was born,
Or if my parents were rich or poor;
Whether they shrank from the cold world's scorn,

Or walked in the pride of wealth secure;
But whether I live an honest man,
And hold my integrity firm in my clutch,
I tell you, my brother, plain as I am,
It matters much!

It matters little how long I stay
In a world of sorrow, sin, and care;
Whether in youth I am called away,
Or live till my bones and pate are bare;
But whether I do the best I can
To soften the weight of adversity's touch
On the faded cheek of my fellow man,
It matters much!

It matters little where be my grave,
On the land or on the sea,
By purling brook or 'neath stormy wave,
It matters little or not to me;
But whether the Angel of Death comes down
And marks my brow with his loving touch,
As one that shall wear the victor's crown,
It matters much!
—The Methodist Protestant.

ONE CANNOT DO IT, BUT A THOUSAND CAN.

The financial situation of High Point College has become exceedingly acute. While the treasurer's report each week shows a number of payments, the amount is altogether inadequate to meet the needs.

Many of our people situated in the Piedmont section have failed to make any crops, on account of the dry weather, and are simply unable to pay. There are, however, those in other sections who are able to meet their payments, and there are, of course, a great many in the region affected by the drought, who can command the cash with which to meet this obligation.

According to Dr. Andrews' report, the total pledges received amount to $240,000.00. About $150,000.00 has been collected, leaving $90,000.00 unpaid.

I have done the best possible by becoming personally responsible for loans to meet the situation, but the point has been reached that I cannot do so any longer.

I wish, therefore, to make an appeal to those who have unpaid pledges, and who could even by a great sacrifice, meet them, to forward the money to Dr. Andrews at once. I wish to ask also that any who have not made pledges, or who have paid their pledges in full, and can make a contribution, will do so before November 1.

We have a great institution, with property worth over a half million dollars, with 199 students enrolled. We have said that we must not think of failure as being possible, and yet we must realize that unless we can take care of pressing obligations, failure is not only possible, but imminent. One person, or a half dozen, cannot meet this emergency, but a thousand can do so.

Whether we should have undertaken to build such good-buildings, or so many of them, need not now be considered. I did not myself think it was wise, but I yielded to the popular demand, and acquiesced in the decision to borrow the money and erect the buildings. Now we have them—there are no better anywhere. To pay for them is not beyond our ability, in spite of unfavorable crop conditions. We need not fail, but to avoid failure will require prompt and concerted action.

WHITAKERS CHARGE—PASTOR'S REPORT

Brother Chairman, Members of the Quarterly Conference and Visiting Friends:

We have met in this room for the last quarterly conference of this conference year. We do not meet primarily to make plans for the future, but the purpose of this meeting is more retrospective in its nature. The history of another conference year is about made for this charge. Are you proud of it? If this history should be recorded so that your children and your children's children could read it, do you think they would rejoice and would your work of this year be an incentive for them to be more faithful in kingdom service. While we have not done all that we could and should have done, yet there are a number of things which are worthy of notice.

Revivals

In the Whitakers church the same plan was followed this year as last. We united with the Methodist Episcopal church in our evangelistic campaign and had Brother C. Morgan Compher, of Washington, to do the preaching. His sermons were powerful, appealing and persuasive. The attendance at every service was splendid. But no one united with our church as a result of this campaign. The membership was spiritually quickened and strengthened and we shall never forget Brother Compher's attractive personality, pleasant association and powerful sermons.

There is a different story to be told about Speight's Chapel. Here we held a remarkable meeting and one which was indeed encouraging. We had Home-coming Day on the first Sunday in September and the meeting the following week. Dr. C. L. Whitaker was the pulpit help. His preaching was also powerful, appealing and persuasive. All people were glad to have him in the community. He was compelled to leave after the Thursday night service, but the pastor carried the meeting on until the following Monday night. The church was greatly awakened and seven people united with the church. Since this meeting the attendance is much better, there is more interest manifested and the outlook is more encouraging than at any time since I have been on the work.

Specials

We have observed all special days at both churches. Those who trained the children deserve much credit. The children did well their part and every special service was a splendid success.

We also held a special service for young people. The young people were urged to give their best to the Master in some field of kingdom work. Several came forward for a consecration service.

There is another special which much be mentioned—the Father and Son banquet. This was an enjoyable occasion and it was an inspiring scene just to see the fathers and sons together. We give the ladies a vote of thanks for the success of this banquet.

Finances

Not much needs be said concerning this phase of the work. You people have established a precedent and you live up to it. The A. C. B. was paid in full as soon as I returned from the conference in Reidsville. Whitakers church has paid her part of the G. C. B. Speight's Chapel has a deficit of $35.37. Whitakers has paid $752.50 on pastor's salary and Speight's has paid $181.85, making a total of $934.35. But I am sure that you will send me to conference with everything paid in full. (Everything provided for and I go to conference with everything paid in full).

Repairs

At Speight's Chapel we have not done any repair work at all. In the church here we have had installed a heating plant at the cost of $1,600.00. Other repair work is in progress and we hope it will be completed at an early date. The house of God should, by all means, be attractive and beautiful.

Attendance

This has been gratifying during the entire year. There have been some "off days," but the attendance on an average has been splendid. We have not suffered from the usual summer slump. This is an encouraging factor on the work.

Conclusion

Your pastor is sincerely grateful for every kindness shown him during the year. The gifts of money, of room and board, are all appreciated very deeply. I also thank you for your co-operation in the work of the church. May God's richest blessings ever rest upon you and may the peace that passeth all understanding abide in every heart.

Faithfully yours,

FRED W. PASCHALL,

Pastor.

Gibsonville, Fountain Place.—We have not been heard from very often, but have been exceedingly busy all the year. We have not accomplished any astounding results perhaps, but both churches of the charge have been steadily going forward along all lines.

Gibsonville.

This church, has made substantial gain in every way. The Sunday school of 356 is in a very flourishing condition. The best in its history. The three C. E. Societies of more than 100 members are at their best. The Ladies' Aid Society has done a wonderful year's work. Have bought and furnished the parsonage, paid for a new piano and have given to various other objects. A Woman's Home Missionary Society has been organized and is going forward.

This church will have the best financial record in its history. A. C. Budget paid in full, a large percent if not all of the General Conference Budget as well. About fifty members have been received into the church. A lot has been given by Mr. D. M. Davidson on which to build a parsonage. A parsonage committee was just recently created and instructed to proceed with the project. It will perhaps be under way by time conference meets.

This church has voted to become, and will ask conference to make it a station church next year. All church officers for next year have been elected and the budget for full-time pastor of $2800.00 adopted.

Fountain-Place.

Work here has been carried on under adverse circumstance nearly all the year. The people have not had a comfortable nor convenient place to worship until the opening of the new Sunday school building on Oct. 4th. However the work has gone steadily forward. This church is composed of a group of contentious, and loyal workers. All claims will be paid in full: Annual, General, and local. This church has also voted to become, and will likewise ask the conference to make it a station next year. Officers for year 1925-26 have been elected and a budget of $3500.00 adopted. will have a gain in membership of more than 50 percent.

As pastor I have greatly enjoyed the work this year. I have found the churches both appreciative and responsive. In each of the churches there are some of the world's best.

At both of the annual church meetings I have been unanimously requested to become the pastor at each place. A thing of course that can't be done if both are made stations. I am glad to see both churches take this advance step. I hope they will suffer no disappointment but will carry out their plans.

Our last quarterly conference will meet Wednesday 7:30 P. M. Dr. Dixon is expected to be present and preside over the conference.

Very truly yours,

G. H. Hendry.

ELSIE'S TREAT

Elsie carried the big dish of ice cream carefully to the very back of the garden. She hurried because she knew that Helen or little Frankie Green might appear any minute. And Elsie had no notion of dividing with anybody.

Sometimes the other children thought Elsie was rather selfish, for she was an only child and used to having things for herself without sharing them.

This afternoon she sat down on the velvety lawn under a little tree that had shed most of its leaves. The hedge, however, which bordered the garden, completely hid her from the street. Here she could enjoy her cream without being disturbed.

Just as she put the spoon into it, a voice from the tree above startled Elsie, for as plain as anything, the bird called:

"Cheep!" Cheep!" Cheep!"

"I'm not cheap, either," scolded Elsie. "My daddy says its cheap to be selfish or to brag, but this is my own ice cream and why shouldn't I eat it myself?"

The bird up in the tree stared and put his head first on one side and then on the other.

"Cheep! Cheep! Cheep!" he insisted, scornfully.

Elsie frowned.

"I don't care what you think," she flung back. "You better go, and hunt worms."

Just at that moment, the cry of a child in pain floated across the hedge. It was from the back upper window of a small cottage

THIS ISSUE OF THE HERALD.

On Monday morning this issue of the Herald looked impossible. Last week our Linotype Machine began spouting hot metal here and there. Some of this melted lead would fall among the cog wheels where it would quickly harden and stop the machine. We sent for an expert machinist who tried repeatedly but in vain to stop the machine's new bad habit. Every line it cast it would send out a stream of metal to do damage somewhere. Finally the machinist decided that a new part must be ordered from the factory in Brooklyn, N. Y. This was wired for on Monday and has not yet arrived (Wednesday). Under these conditions it was impossible for us to set enough type for the paper. But—thanks to a good friend—arrangement was made to have some composition done in the office of the Greensboro Daily Record. You can tell by the face of the type how much was done there for us. This good friend was once a linotype operator in our office. While he does not now operate a machine, he has not forgotten how; in fact, he is a very speedy operator. He made arrangement to have our type set, and himself set it for us after his day's work was done. Not satisfied with that, he brought it down to us in his car. A friend in need is a friend, and we feel that this is a friend indeed. You will wonder who he is to whom all the readers with the publisher are indebted for this timely help. Some of you may guess that it is none other than our young brother in Calvary church, James W. Swain, son of the late Dr. W. E. Swain, of our Conference. He has done the Herald and its publisher a great favor indeed. He is now machinist in the Daily Record office where he watches over a great group of machines.

"OTHERS."

Lord, help me live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way
That even when I kneel to pray
My prayer shall be for—Others.
Help me in all the work I do
To ever be sincere and true
And know that all I'd do for You
Must needs be done for—Others.
Let "Self" be crucified and slain
And buried deep; and all in vain
May efforts be to rise again
Unless to live for—Others.
And when my work on earth is done
And my new work in heaven's begun
May I forget the crown I've won
While thinking still of—Others.
Others, Lord, yes others,
Let this my motto be Help me to live for Others
That I may live like thee.

THE CHRISTMAS OFFERING FOR THE BUDGET.

The attention of the Pastors and churches has already been called to the action of the General Conference in providing for a special service during the Christmas season with an offering for the Budget.

This offering is to be divided pro rata between all the General Boards so that all the general interests of the denomination will be benefitted thereby. It is not necessary to enlarge upon the financial needs of the respective Boards. Their programs are all larger than they have means to carry them forward.

No season of the year is more appropriate for a church or individual to make a special offering for the advancement of our Lord's Kingdom than the anniversary of our Savior's birth. When the wise men from the East came to Bethlehem, guided by the star, and saw the young child with Mary, his mother, they fell down and worshipped him, and opening their treasures they presented unto him gifts, gold, frankincense and myrrh.

There is a legend somewhere that these treasures were used by Joseph and Mary when they fled from the wrath of Herod into Egypt and remained there until the king's death. This does not seem unreasonable, for they needed funds in caring for Him who should be the Savior of the world. For what better purpose could these treasures have been used?

Christmas is a season for gifts. Fabulous sums are spent in expressions of friendship and love one toward another. What could be more appropriate than for the entire church to give a practical expression of its love and devotion to the world's Redeemer by making an offering on this anniversary occasion to be used for the promotion of His Kingdom? The program prepared will prove interesting and helpful.

May we express the hope that this Christmas service will be entered into in the spirit of devotion and enthusiasm. Let every church participate and make this a time of joy and profit.

CHINESE CROWS AND POND OF DUCKS.

Miss Ethel M. Long, of Michigan, is in charge of "The School of Many Friends," a boarding school for Chinese girls at Lintsing, in the province of Shantung, China. She includes Chinese animals, birds and fishes, as well as the people and their customs, in the range of her observations. Writing to her father, Rev. Luther K. Long, she tells of a brood of ducklings a Chinese teacher had brought to her school. Miss Long writes:

"These ducklings—eight of them—are more fun than a picnic. Ts'ai Feng, the teacher at our chapel school, brought them up a few days ago when her pupils came to practice for our annual exhibition. I had asked her to get some for the school as soon as she could find them, for I wanted to keep a pair of them in the hollow where we have the water-jars with the fish in them. Ts'ai Feng bought all of them, two for each of us in the Ladies' House and two for Mrs. H. Our carpenter made a box for the ducklings, and we take them out every day—with some of the industrial girls to look after them, so the crows will not carry them away.

"The crows are a dreadful nuisance which I had not counted on—though I did know that they were very bad about carrying off little chickens. Our school man says the ducks will need to weigh a pound and a half—more than a pound and a half—before they will be safe from these horrid big crows.

"On the first day we had ducklings I took them down, just before noon, to the hollow where were some of the industrial girls. When the ducks smelled the water they made a mad rush for it—swimming, diving, wash-themselves, and playing as I have never seen them do to such an extent since! It must have been their first experience in the water. The girls thought it was great fun, and it surely was a circus for all of us.

"The next day we took the ducks down to the water again. We have, at the edge of the water, jars containing gold-fish and small fish from the river. I was called away for a short time, and left the girls in charge. When I returned I found them all greatly excited. They said that the ducks, catching sight of the little river fish swimming near the surface of the water in their jar, had stretched their necks to an astonishing length, grabbed almost all the fish there were in the jar, and had swallowed them! I was sorry to lose the fish, but regretted still more to miss seeing the ducks do their stunt. However, I was glad that the gold-fish kept out of danger, discreetly remaining near the bottom of the jar. We can easily get more of the small river fish, the gold-fish are more difficult to find—and they cost us good money."

NOW IS THE TIME.

The long evenings are at hand, and our young people need to be interested in things worth while, and this is where the wide-awake pastor, the alert chairman of the missionary committee of the C. E. Society have a splendid opportunity to do helpful work.

One evening a week in a home or in the church can be most profitably spent by a group of people, from the teen age up, in reading and discussing one of the valuable books put out by the Missionary Education Movement, or in conducting a more formal Mission Study Class under a selected leader who can have all needs helps provided.

While the Foreign Mission theme for 1925-1926 is Latin America, the Movement publishes valuable books on nearly all the countries in which missionary work is being conducted, and the prices are reasonable for paper and cloth binding, and all can be secured at our own Book Concerns in Baltimore and Pittsburgh.

The authors were selected for their personal knowledge and experience in those lands, and in each a wealth of interesting material has been gathered of the people, their history, customs, religions, etc., and account of the work of the missionaries in reaching churches, hospitals, schools, orphanages and other institutions for the higher welfare of the people.

Our young people need to become informed in regard to the people and conditions of other lands, and to trace the progress of mankind as shown by the onward march of Christianity over the earth, in order to be more appreciative of our goodly heritage secured to us by the labors and sacrifices of Christians workers in the lands and times back of the beginnings of our country, as well as in its formative stages and the era of greatest development which marks our present period.

It is the record that those churches which have had Mission Study Classes, those denominations which have large numbers of such classes have felt the reaction from them, in awakened interest, enkindled enthusiasm, increased service, more generous giving, deeper consecration of those who shared the blessings.

Our pastors would render themselves and their churches great benefit by organizing either Reading Circles or Mission Study Classes without delay.

It would tend to tie the young people to the church, it would enrich their fund of knowledge, it would lead to their devotion to the work of the church in greater degree, and they would form a corps of workers ready to serve the Kingdom where needed.

It is simple, for announce a meeting of young people, or regardless of age, on a certain evening, and then present the matter, and call for names of those who will unite to organize, and carry the plan through, and select the book of the country desired, set the time for meeting, elect a leader, order the books as needed, and start off in the good work.

We owe it to our young people especially to provide them with this help, and the pastor who does will find he has made a fine investment of his time, and efforts, and will find his people to him more than ever, for they will appreciate his interest in them, and exert themselves to get out of it what they can for their own good and the good of the church.

I will be glad to give any information needed, address Berwyn, Md. Fred C. Klein.

HOME MISSIONS

To the Methodist Protestant Church At Large Greetings:

This is my first communication to the denomination through our church papers since my election as executive secretary of the Board of Home Missions, which occurred September 24. The board and the entire church regretted the resignation of Dr. Beck. He had filled the office so long and so acceptably that all felt that his resignation was a distinct loss to the work of the board. My election was as great a surprise to me as anyone in the denomination.

As the board has already stated in its published statement, I accepted the office only after the earnest solicitation of the entire board, and for no longer period than the next session of the General Conference. Therefore, without further explanation I send this letter of greeting to all members and friends of our beloved church, North, South, East and West. I already have a personal acquaintance with many of our church people in every section of the country. My membership in the Board of Home Missions for 25 years has brought me in close personal touch with many of the churches which have in the past, or are now receiving aid from the board. I hope in the near future to extend this acquaintance to every one of these churches.

I have no special program to present at the present. My time has been fully occupied in becoming acquainted with the general routine of the office. I shall largely follow the course pursued by my predecessor, and can only promise to devote myself faithfully and unreservedly to the duties and work of the office. Whatever I have in strength, character and experience will be freely given. In addition to the office work it is my purpose to visit the pastors and churches under the supervision of the board that I may know their problems and, as far as I can, to help them solve them, and I hope to receive from them hearty co-operation in making my administration a success.

The first act of my administration on the day I took charge of the office was to send a letter of fraternal greeting to the missionaries under the supervision of the board. It is gratifying to state that nearly all of them have replied assuring me of their hearty support. I am ready, as far as time and circumstances will permit, to go into any of the conferences and churches to present the work of the Board of Home Missions, or to assist in any way my services may be helpful. While I live within the bounds of the Maryland Conference it will give me special pleasure to extend my labors to the other conference.

The needs of the Board of Home Missions are great, as are also the opportunities. These can be met only with the full support of the denomination. Can we depend upon you to do your part?

The office of the board will be in our Book Rooms, 516 North Charles Street, Baltimore, Md. I expect to use the columns of our church papers frequently, but not weekly. What I write will bear directly upon the work we have in hand or contemplate undertaking.

Soliciting the prayers of all for the blessing of God upon our united efforts, I am,

Yours for service,

J. M. SHERIDAN.

A Correction: It was Mrs. Jacob Baxter, of Cherryville, who gave her three grandchildren each a pair of shoes and not Mrs. J. P. Beam, as was reported last week.

The following are our teachers this year: Mrs. J. N. Atwater, of Bynum; Miss Annys Hull, Cherryville, and Miss Ruth Voncannon, High Point. We are pleased with their work.

The good offerings and the rains all help us to be thankful.

SYMPATHY WITH CHILDREN

"Bother! There are the children home from school," was a remark I overheard one day as a group of happy children came running down the lane.

The children, certainly, were glad to be home again. Couldn't the mother have shared their gladness and welcomed them eagerly? Of course, she saw an interruption in her day, but she saw the best of the afternoon, as the day was practically wasted. I sometimes wonder why some women have children if they have so little sympathy with them.

A childless house is a pleasure but I'd rather have a house a little less tidy and have the greater joy of children in it. A childless house is always lonely.

There are women who never seem to have an ounce of feeling for their children. If the little ones get hurt, they say, "It's your own fault; you're always in the way."

"You haven't any feeling for your mother," I have often heard a woman say, and when I've heard this, I've thought to myself, "You never have any for your children."

It doesn't make a child oversensitive to stop in your work for a minute and "kiss the place to make it well." Nor does it take from your dignity to join your little ones in a game now and then.

I have seen mothers study pamphlet after pamphlet in an endeavor to find the right kind of diet for their babies. I have seen them make slaves of themselves, cooking over hot stoves, and yet these same mothers had no real sympathy with the children. They would work themselves almost to death to supply material needs, but they never considered the needs of the mind and heart.

It is often the children of the well-to-do whose parents are the least sympathetic. They see their children so seldom that the little ones grow up almost strangers to them.

A child is happier with fewer things and more love. Nothing can ever take the place of sympathy. A tiny mite once made the remark, "O mother, I said my piece without a mistake and you were not there." It was as if the joy of success had been almost spoiled because "mother was not there" to share it.

We are fortunate if our little ones feel that way. Let is not be said of any one of us in later years: "My mother never cared." It is the power of every mother to become a parent of whom her child will say: "My mother understood and always sympathized with me."—Mrs. Neston Noel, in National Kindergarten Association.

A REQUEST AND AN ANNOUNCEMENT.
Let Us Pray.

All Christian people who read this are requested to pray most earnestly that the Spirit of the Lord may have right of way in every action of our annual conference sessions. If we thus pray and believe then His will must be wrought out among us and we will be happy.

An Announcement.

For some years now we have been designating one day of our conference as "Young People's Day." Thursday, November the 5, is young people's day this year. Business will go on just as it would if no young people, and other visitors, should be present. Your young people are asked to sit in on the conference that day just to see and hear the workings of an annual conference.

The evening session, opening at 7:30, will be given over to addresses on young people's work, by Rev. Lawrence C. Little and Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, D. D. Workers in Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies should be there in goodly numbers.

Faithfully yours, A. G. Dixon.

THE CHRISTMAS OFFERING FOR THE BUDGET.

The attention of the Pastors and churches has already been called to the action of the General Conference in providing for a special service during the Christmas season with an offering for the Budget.

This offering is to be divided pro rata between all the General Boards so that all the general interests of the denomination will be benefitted thereby. It is not necessary to enlarge upon the financial needs of the respective Boards. Their programs are all larger than they have means to carry them forward.

No season of the year is more appropriate for a church or individual to make a special offering for the advancement of our Lord's Kingdom than the anniversary of our Savior's birth. When the wise men from the East came to Bethlehem, guided by the star, and saw the young child with Mary, his mother, they fell down and worshipped him, and opening their treasures they presented unto him gifts, gold, frankincense and myrrh.

There is a legend somewhere that these treasures were used by Joseph and Mary when they fled from the wrath of Herod into Egypt and remained there until the king's death. This does not seem unreasonable, for they needed funds in caring for Him who should be the Savior of the world. For what better purpose could these treasures have been used?

Christmas is a season for gifts. Fabulous sums are spent in expressions of friendship and love one toward another. What could be more appropriate than for the entire church to give a practical expression of its love and devotion to the world's Redeemer by making an offering on this anniversary occasion to be used for the promotion of His Kingdom? The program prepared will prove interesting and helpful.

May we express the hope that this Christmas service will be entered into in the spirit of devotion and enthusiasm. Let every church participate and make this a time of joy and profit.

Order the program from Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, D. D., 516 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Maryland.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

There has been a contest used by one of our wide-awake young people's societies in order to familiarize its members with the names of our missionaries, both home and foreign workers. We are indeed fortunate in being able to get this contest for our department, and will suggest that auxiliaries use this in some monthly program soon. Then will the president or secretary keep all papers in the contest and write me for the "answers" in order to grade their contestants? Those who get perfect answers, may I have their names to publish in this department? Later on, when many auxiliaries have used the contest, the list of correct answers of the contest will be printed also herein.

Let's give this a try. We will learn more about our missionaries, and it will do us good. Who will be the first secretary to write you have used the contest and wish the list of answers? Each question can be answered by either the Christian name or the surname of our workers at home and abroad.

AS I GO ON MY WAY.

day is done—

Leave countless marks for good or ill ere sets this evening's sun.
 Shall fair or foul its imprint prove, on those prevail?
 When to the last great reckoning the lives I meet must go,
 Shall this wee, fleeting touch of mine have added joy or woe?
 Shall He who looks their records o'er—of name and time and place—
 Say, "Here a blessed influence came," or "Here is evil's trace?"
 From out each point of contact of my life with other lives
 Flows ever that which helps the one who for the summit strives
 The troubled souls encountered—does it sweeten with its touch?
 Or does it more embitter those embittered over much?
 Does love through every handclasp flow in sympathy's caress?
 Do those that I have greeted know a new-born hopefulness?
 Are tolerance and charity the keynote of my song,
 As I go plodding onward with earth's eager, anxious throng?
 From this dear world of struggle to the land I do not know.
 So this the wish I always wish, the prayer I ever pray:
 Let my life help the other lives it touches by the way!

THE SUNNY SIDE OF LIFE.

Don't forget that all people are not constituted alike—that what is a pleasure for one is monotony for another. Don't forget also, that nobody but the man himself can know the reason for his doing this or that; and don't forget that the man may not have chosen to make public his own business. The one who seems stingy may be applying his money in some entirely honorable way known only to himself. The one who seems cross or gruff may be a silent physical sufferer from the acts of a relative or friend. Don't be too ready to judge others. Perhaps if you knew that you yourself under similar circumstances wouldn't have done so well. Remember that many persons shrink from publicity and will bear in silence all things rather than to make their troubles known. And remember that these people are entitled to privacy if they want it. Remember that there has never been any better rule for personal conduct in all the varied departments of life than the one laid down nearly two thousand years ago that says something about doing to others as you would like to have them do to you. That's a rule that applies to everyday life, and can be recommended for daily use.—Selected.

SOME FIGURES ABOUT YOUTH.

There are over 27,000,000 American children and youths, nominally Protestant, under twenty-five years of age, who are not enrolled in any Sunday school or Cradle Roll and who receive no systematic religious instruction.

There 8,000,000 American children, nominally ally-Protestant, who are growing up in church homes.

There are in the United States 8,600 Catholic children and youths under twenty-five years of age. Of this number 1,870,000 are in religious schools and 6,806,000 or 78 percent are not in religious schools.

There are in the United States 42,800 Protestants and nominally Protestants under twenty-five years of age. Of this number 14,361,900 are in Sunday school or week-day religious schools, 740 are on cradle rolls and 27,275,110, or 64 percent are not enrolled in any religious schools.

It seems as though there is a lot of "finished business" on the table of the Christian Church. In spite of all these dizzy statistics we think we are busy—with our local programs and individual plans. Just how busy are we? Or are we merely marking time with solutions and motions that have no place where outside of the minutes of the meeting? Whoever would shape America's future, do it only as he molds, these young lives. The question resolves itself into whether the Church or the Church shall dominate the thought character of our future citizens. We are rather baffled before the crime-wave of today, but there is no reason why we should not earnestly invoke such a wave for tomorrow.

Youth is the world's fresh beginning—the world in its youth a square deal. —Selected.

 Live the Gospel

R. P. Anderson says: "Nothing makes international friendship like the Gospel. We win people to Christ we dispel hate and strife." There is no better way to win people to Christ than by living the Gospel lived and taught. If Christ had simply told His wonderful truths and then had lived a selfish, self-centered, indifferent life giving worldly pleasures, we would not today have the New Testament Scriptures, for He would not have won followers, nor would He have had any lasting influence in the lives of men. He came in contact with. And His followers cannot hope to do so, either. Our attitude and the Christ-like attitude always toward people will do more to win or to lose than any words we can possibly speak or deeds we may do, however kindly the intent. The heart determines the attitude, influences may determine the words and deeds and even a kindly deed repels if the attitude is right. By living a true Christian we will be kind and thoughtful to a stranger even though he be of another color or language and appear very insignificant. No one can tell how far an influence will travel and impress either for good or evil.

evil, or how soon it may reach the ruling powers of some foreign land and wield an influence for or against our own nation. This we know, that if our attitude has been friendly and kindly and, above all, Christ-like, we need not fear results at home or abroad. This we need to remember, that foreigners judge whole nations by the conduct of an individual and often the whole nation suffers because of the conduct of an individual.

Again, Mr. Anderson says, "As long as men do their selfish will, the world will be red with blood. Teach them to do the will of Christ and peace is here. We must look upon men as brothers. Differences are superficial, our common humanity is fundamental. If we have the Jesus spirit our hearts will overflow with love to all who love Him and to all the world. He unites races."

Help the Needy

"Let love be without dissimulation." In the spirit of Christ we helped the dear little innocent babies of Germany as well as other needy and helpless ones. Our nation may rejoice in this one supreme Christ-like act of that dreadful time of the World War. We are helping to feed all nations that are in need of food, whether they are, or were, enemies, or not. Thousands in this world are without the needed clothing and food. These we can help, and render fine, Christ-like service. A permanent remedy for these evils is to help by giving these people the Gospel of Jesus through our missionaries, and our missionary work. We must give them immediate and temporary help, but no permanent help will come to them until all nations live the spirit of Christ and treat each other as brothers, cease robbing, cheating and profiteering on the weaker and all learn to use the gifts for earning that the loving Heavenly Father has given to all and through knowing Him learn to make the most and best uses of the natural resources at their command. Everyone needs God, whether they need anything else or not. All Christian Endeavorers can help fill this need through the avenues of their own churches.

Cultivate Understanding Hearts

We would love other nations if we understood them and looked for the good in them and did not judge whole nations by the conduct of a few. If we gave to them the same charity that we would like to have them extend to us. We do not like to be judged harshly because some of our people misbehave in foreign countries. How we dislike the verdict of the English because they adjudge the whole of us by the comparatively few they see in their country. A close study of nations reveals the fact that there is much to love in each one. Go at the study in a spirit of sympathy and of trying to find the best there is to find and not a spirit of criticism.

Again we quote from Mr. Anderson: "The problem today is how to transform the spirit of suspicion and hatred into the spirit of trust and love among nations. We can begin among individuals. The heaven spreads."

Keep Ourselves Worthy

I read somewhere the other day a fine thing that I cannot quote, but this is the meaning:

How very much we could wish for a moral armistice that would bring about a cessation of crime, sin and immorality engendered by the war—a heart armistice that would establish us again in a natural, healthy and wholesome life, as the armistice brought about an end of fighting and established us again in a sane and sensible attitude toward other nations.

It will be well for each Christian Endeavorer to examine his life and associations with others and see what each one as an individual can do to bring again a revival of sane and sensible recreations and a social life that will be free from the very appearance of evil.

LUCILLE'S GARDEN

Dorothy skipped along on her way to school. Wasn't the sun shining, and didn't she have in her hand the very first spring jonquil! Why shouldn't she skip and jump this lovely sunshiny morning?

When she had tucked the old brown bulbs safe in the ground last fall it didn't seem possible that such beautiful golden flowers could come out of them; and now they were all up. Rows and rows of slender stalks, tender green leaves and tiny baby buds; and this one beautiful blossom. She would give it to Miss Woodwreath when she reached school, and how pleased she would be! No doubt it would be placed in the vase on her desk, and all the school would know that Dorothy Alford had brought the first spring blossom.

Occupied with these thoughts, she half walked, half skipped down the long street, with the tall elms and maples on either side just beginning to show their springtime promise, until she reached a tiny house almost on the sidewalk; just a narrow strip of dirt before the house on each side of the front door. She glanced at it as she went past as usual, thinking it was too bad that such a small house was right there among all the pretty houses in the pretty street; then she noticed a tiny, white, pinched, wistful face looking from the front window, and big brown eyes gazing at the yellow jonquil.

"Oh," breathed Dorothy, "I remember; last time Nanette came to sew for us mamma said she was going to bring her little sister to live with her here."

Suddenly there flashed into Dorothy's mind just what mamma had said:

"Poor little Lucille has been very ill in the hospital for months, and although she is better it will be a long time before she is well and strong again. I am afraid she will be very lonesome with Nanette away sewing every day."

Dorothy glanced again at the yellow jonquil in her hand. "It wouldn't be much," she said soberly, "and I did so want to be the first to bring a flower to Miss Woodwreath; but I just know I shan't be comfortable unless I go back and give it to Lucille; and yet, I will be horribly disappointed, and—"

There was a flash of twinkling feet, a rush, a hasty knock at the door of the little cottage, then the door was opened and Dorothy stood in the doorway, then rushed across the room and laid the yellow jonquil in Lucille's lap.

"Oh, oh, oh!" cried Lucille, gently laying her cheek against the golden blossom. "What a pretty, pretty flower. May I hold it just a minute longer?"

"It is for you," answered Dorothy. "See, I will put it in this glass of water. I planted the bulb myself last fall, and there are lots more coming out fast, but this is the first blossom."

"Oh," whispered Lucille, softly, "to see the green things grow into such beautiful blossoms. It must be wonderful to see them come day by day."

"Why, yes," answered Dorothy thoughtfully, "I suppose it is, but you see I've always seen it. I must go now or I will be late for school, but I will bring you some more when lots of them are out," and away she went, for already she must hurry or be tardy.

The geography lesson was all about France and Dorothy couldn't help thinking of the stories Nanette had told of that far-away country where she was born, but which the little sick sister had never seen; for Lucille was a child of the tenements, born after her father and mother had crossed the seas to America. Now they are dead, and it was for Lucille that Nanette had taken the tiny cottage in Peace Dale, and spent every day busy with her needle, making pretty Frenchy clothes for the people there.

All at once, right in place of the pink country on her map, Dorothy saw the bare strip of ground in front of the cottage. Then a vision flashed before her of how it would look covered with pretty flowers, bright and cheerful, for Lucille's wistful eyes to look upon.

Then she glanced at Ralph Chatterton sitting just across the aisle. "We could do it," she half whispered to herself. "The boys could spade it, and they would if Ralph asked them to; and if I said the word the girls would bring lots of flowers, for they always do as Ralph and I say."

Two days later, Lucille sitting at her window, as usual, looking out into the street warm with the spring sunshine, saw a procession coming down toward the cottage—seven boys, carrying spades, rakes and hoes, and behind them 10 girls with arms full and overloading with plants and roots. They stopped at the cottage, and Dorothy came in, followed by Ralph, while the others remain outside.

"Lucille," she said, "we are going to make you a garden of your own where you can see the green things growing. We know you can't take care of it yet, but one of the boys will weed and water it each week, and one of the girls will see the flowers are picked for you before they fade, and look after all the things the boy doesn't do."

Then they all fell to work with a will. Lucille was too astonished to speak; all she could do was to sit and watch them.

It seemed no time at all before the garden was nicely dug over, all ready for the plans. Then the boys placed them in the earth, a great clump of yellow jonquills, one row of lavender and white, pale blue hyacinths and bell-

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

PINNACLE AND MT. ZION

It has been some time since I have reported from this charge, but it isn't because our people have been idle. They have been up and doing, but from the press of other duties and probably a little neglect on my part, I have failed to report as often as I should, but will now give a report of my meetings held on the work.

We first began our special meetings at Shoals the second Sunday in July, with Brother Fred Paschall for our help, who did all the preaching, earnestly and faithfully, and was greatly enjoyed by all present. Yet we had no conversions here. It was partly due to the fact that most of the attendants here were already members of some church.

The third Sunday we began our meeting at Mt. Zion. Brother Gerringer came to our help on Monday and did all the preaching until Friday night. Brother Lawrence Little came Friday afternoon and gave an interesting talk to the young people which was greatly enjoyed. We had quite a number of conversions and others reclaimed. We had 25 to join the church.

We began our meeting at Pinnacle church the fourth Sunday in July. Brother Little took charge of the services Sunday at 11 a. m., and the services were thoroughly enjoyed by everybody. Brother Gerringer came to us on Monday and did all the preaching up to Friday p. m. It would be useless for me to say he preached well, for he is well known by our people and he was at his best. The meeting ran on into the second week, R. A. Hunter helping us the second week. We had quite a number of conversions and a number that were reclaimed; seven joined the church.

We didn't begin our meeting at Pilot church until the first Sunday in October. Here we had Brother Collins (a Baptist brother) to help us. We had several conversions and two accessions.

We are very grateful to all of these brethren for their faithful service in these meetings.

We have had 36 accessions this year up to the present, and consider the work in general has improved this year. We have organized four missionary societies, a foreign society at Shoals, a home society at Pinnacle, a home and foreign at Mt. Zion. All seem to be doing good work and growing in number. We are hoping and praying for great success of all these societies in the future.

We have bought new pianos for both Pinnacle and Mt. Zion churches. We intend organizing a ladies' aid very soon.

We have received many kindnesses from this people during the year, such as melons, potatoes, corn, beans, etc., also a large truck load of wood from one of the brethren, besides many other things too numerous to mention.

Brother S. F. Hallam is our delegate to the annual conference. We are praying for this to be our very best conference yet.

A. L. HUNTER.

MT. ZION

Our average in Sunday school has, to our sorrow, fallen off considerably lately; 80 present today. We ought to have had at least 200 there. We sometimes grow discouraged when things don't move along just as we would like to have them, but every cloud has a silver lining. There are a goodly number that never miss a service of any kind; we are glad of that fact and so long as even a few keep the faith and stick to the church and Sunday school through thick and thin, we feel sure that there are better and bigger things in store for us in the future.

Sickness in several of the homes of our members, and the fact that so many people are having family reunions in our midst, has reduced our Sunday school average quite a little.

Sickness, of course, we can't help, and as I have said before in the Herald, reunions are all right, and seems like since we are living so fast that we don't visit our kindred and friends—but I honestly believe when we let even family reunions come between us and our sacred vow to our Master and church that we are falling short of our duties to God. Let's put our church duty above everything else by first attending service there—then we can and do have a little over a half day to visit.

Today Brother Hunter preached to us after a month's vacation; seemed ages since we had heard him, but we believe the vacation helped him wonderfully, for he preached to us better, seemed to us, than he had ever preached before. But, my! We are dreadfully behind with his salary and fourth and last quarterly conference coming on next Saturday at Pilot church, there's lots of work to be done this week, as usual.

We have done just what we did for years and years—left about nine or 10 months' work till right now and it must be done in four or five days. I am a steward, too, and I certainly am ashamed of my record.

God doesn't see fit to bless people that put off things like that just as long as we can. Our pastor has (if the writer isn't mistaken) made the remark that he had some of the poorest stewards at Mt. Zion that he had ever contended with. I am willing to confess my guilt, but let's do something and meet our obligations hereafter as they become due.

Sunday was the time for our regular election of officers for Sunday school. C. W. Allen was elected superintendent for the coming year; S. F. Mickey, secretary; W. E. Jones, treasurer. Teachers will be elected by classes next Sunday.

Here I want to say that while some of the Sundays the sun hasn't shone as brightly as I had hoped for, and there were those absent that had so earnestly pledged their support to me as a superintendent when it seemed to me they had no good reason for staying away, (although I am not the judge, I am glad to say). It has been one of the most beautiful and sweetest years to me spiritually that I ever remember, and I can truthfully say that it's been a pleasure to serve everyone that has attended Sunday school and, furthermore, I shall give the very best that I have to the work of being superintendent for the coming year. I am thankful for the opportunity of serving my fellow-members in the capacity of superintendent.

We desire the prayers of the good people that we may have a great and good Sunday school again.

C. W. ALLEN,
Reporter.

P. S.: Brother Oliver Jones has returned to us and is as faithful as ever. Brother Jones has spent a year in the state of Georgia, and has returned to live at his old home near us. We missed him and his very much while away and we are certainly glad that he is with us again, for he is a very strong worker for church and Sunday school. C. W. A.

CID, South Davidson Circuit

We held our special meeting at Cid the third Sunday in August. Rev. Robert Short came to our rescue, accompanied by Sister Short and children, whom we welcomed to the fullest extent. Brother Short brought to us soul-stirring sermons, which appealed to the people and brought a good crowd. There were six converts, all new ones but one.

We had two sermons on Sunday. A bountiful feast was spread on a 36-foot table and a large crowd enjoyed it. Was sorry that Bro. W. L. Carson, our pastor, could not be with us, as his wife was sick; but she got better. Then Rev. Mr. Short left us on Wednesday morning and Brother Carson got a local minister, a Mr. Wright, from Lexington, to help him, and some good Gospel was brought forth. Our congregations increased daily and on Saturday night Cid church was filled up to hear the sermon on "The Unpardonable Sin" by Brother Carson, and he surely did deliver one of them, too. Lots of people remarked that it was one sermon to be long remembered. There was some good spiritual work done by the laymen of the church. The cottage prayer meetings are still going on around here. We have some happy meetings, and it has gone into homes that one would have thought that it would have been almost impossible to have had such an opportunity. It was at Mr. Mose Harrison's last Saturday night. (Was sorry the writer did not get to attend).

Rev. Avery Wooddell and Rev. Ed Tysinger have quit preaching at Cid. They have taken in other fields.

Our Sunday school is getting along very well.

Mr. H. O. Leonard has moved back from Thomasville and is living about three and one-half miles of Cid. He has purchased a home. His daughter, Miss Ida Belle, was married a few months ago to Mr. Claud Pope, of Thomasville.

I am glad always to read in the Herald such good reports from our old friends that we once have enjoyed so many pleasant hours with.

Well, the conference year is fast coming to a close, and I guess, as usual, will bring about some sad changes. Some of the Cid people are talking of attending conference.

The M. P. parsonage at Piney Grove has been sold. Mr. Johnie Gallimore was the purchaser.

Master Baxter Wright, son of J. D. Wright, returned home last Sunday from the High Point hospital, he having undergone an operation for appendicitis there. He is getting on well.

THE POSTAL CARD, W. F. Kennett, Editor Granville Circuit

The Granville charge, composed of three splendid churches, Rehoboth, Union Grove and Mt. Carmel, is now closing up a very pleasant and successful year's work and the pastor appreciates the cordial co-operation which has been accorded him by the good people of the charge.

During the year 24 persons have joined the church. This is an average of two a month for the year. We have suffered very few losses. Mrs. T. V. Bobbitt, of Rehoboth, is the only one of our members who has been called away. Mrs. Bobbitt was a saintly woman and perhaps no one among our number was better prepared to answer the final call than was she.

An Encouraging Fact

One of the encouraging features of the year's work is seen in the fact that the quarterly conferences have been well attended. At the second quarterly conference 22 official members were present. At the third quarterly conference we had the same number, 22 officials present, while at the fourth quarterly conference we had 20 officials present. This is an average of seven officials for each church at the three conferences. This is a fine record and certainly indicates a good interest in the work of the church. At Union Chapel we have been somewhat hampered by the hard surfacing of the Raleigh-Henderson highway. The concrete is now about all down and soon the construction forces will begin to pour the "black top," and perhaps in 30 days, or a little longer, we will have a fine asphalt road from Henderson to Union Chapel. This fine road will make a trip to Union Chapel very inviting and should result in increasing our congregations and giving an impetus to church activities.

The year's work has been exceedingly pleasant for the pastor and his wife and the action of the fourth quarterly conference in instructing the delegate to ask for their return for another year is very much appreciated.

The Annual Conference

Taking everything into consideration, it seems to us that the annual conference to convene in High Point November 4th, should be the greatest conference the church has ever held in North Carolina. Let us all go and go to stay all the time and each do his very best to make it the greatest conference we have ever held.

Henderson, N. C., Oct. 20, 1925.

FALLSTON

We are proud of our Sunday school. We think last quarter was the best we have ever had. It seems we are getting more out of the lessons. Everyone takes so much interest. Last Sunday was a rainy day; there were not so many present, but we had a good school.

Our superintendent is always at his post, rain or shine. Mr. Cletus Wright, our leader in the choir, is also very faithful.

We are expecting Brother Morgan back another year. I think everyone wants him back. He still preaches those good sermons. We always have a large and attentive congregation. We believe he is doing great good in our little town.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

GRAHAM

The past month has been a busy one for the Graham Methodist Protestant church. On the fourth Sunday in September we observed Rally day, with appropriate exercises; 162 were present. It was also promotion day and certificates were awarded in the Cradle Roll, Primary and Junior departments.

The Ladies' Aid and Foreign Missionary Society met with Mrs. Heenan Hughes on the first Monday in October. They report a good year's work.

Mrs. D. R. Williams' Sunday school class gave an ice cream supper October 2nd. The proceeds will go toward furnishing their classroom.

At the election of church officers on the third Sunday of the month the following were elected for the coming year:

Superintendent of the Sunday school, Phil S. Dixon; assistant, H. M. Rogers; stewards, Miss Blanche Fuller, Mrs. James Black, John Webster, Harvey Linens, Paul Cheek, Alvis Rich, Clarence McPherson, P. B. Core, J. L. Amick; class leaders, Charlie Holt, A. L. Lewis; trustees of church, S. S. Holt, Dr. W. R. Goley, D. M. Johnson, John Anglin, Odell Bayliff; pianist, Miss Agnes Liner; choir leader, P. B. Core; assistant, Miss Thelma Clapp.

The fourth quarterly conference was held at the church on Saturday evening, October 17. Dr. W. R. Goley was elected alternate to the annual conference. The delegate was instructed to bring back the present pastor.

The Workers' Council of the Sunday school met the fourth Wednesday evening after prayer meeting and perfected plans for the coming year.

Pastor Williams continues to bring us helpful messages every Sunday and good work through each week. He and his faithful wife have grown into the love of the Graham people and it is our earnest desire that they return to us for another year.

With prayers for the coming conference.

FOUNTAIN PLACE, BURLINGTON

Dear Mr. Editor:

We think the joke is on you! We hope to have a photo made of our new plant at some early date, and have it inserted in the Herald, so that our people will know what we have here. We are real proud of our plant.

Our opening was held on October 4th, as scheduled—and things went off nicely. There were about 200 present for the morning service and about 225 for the night service. Dr. Lewis came and delivered two wonderful sermons. We are indebted to him for these sermons, and the interest shown in our work here. We are also indebted to Miss Georgia Boone for a beautiful solo and the orchestra from the First church for music rendered at the morning service, and to Miss Marietta Sowell for a beautiful solo at the evening service. We would also remember our many other friends who helped us out in various ways on this occasion. We invite you to come and worship with us.

The writer was elected delegate to the annual conference, and will go up with a good report. At "The Annual Church Meet," held last Thursday evening we were instructed, by a unanimous vote, to bring Mr. and Mrs. Hendry back to Fountain Place (station) next year. A glance at our report, (which at this time is not in a very systematic form, but will be on the 28th), shows that we have paid our pastor in full, also paid our share of the conference claims in full, $218.00. There has also been a number of improvements made which will be taken care of in the proper reports.

Our fourth quarterly conference meets on the 28th with the Gibsonville church. We hope for a good attendance from both churches, especially Fountain Place. We expect to have Dr. and Mrs. Dixon with us at this time. It is expected that complete reports will be heard covering the year's work on this field.

Our officers for the ensuing year were elected last Sunday at the evening service. Some of the officers elected were: Treasurer, H. W. Wade; reporter, T. A. Amick; pianist, Mrs. H. W. Wade; chief usher, H. M. Scott; superintendent of buildings and grounds, G. C. Fogleman; superintendent of Sunday school, C. B. Amick; secretary-treasurer of Sunday school, Miss Hilda Amick. The list is too long to name them all. The nominating committee did exceedingly well, we think. Our every member canvas is now being made, and we hope will result in a fine showing.

This report is a little lengthy, but it will, no doubt, be my last one for a season, for my successor has been elected, and I trust you will read his reports and learn what Fountain Place is doing from time to time. I have not written much this year; I fear I have been a "poor reporter," but I have not been idle—other things have consumed my time, and now, as the time draws nigh when I shall lay aside my pen, and lay down my duties as reporter, I feel a little tinge of regret that I did not write oftener—and let the people know more about Fountain Place. We must keep her on the "map" of our conference—and grow, or we will go backward, and we can't do that. We must put our shoulder to the wheel and push, push, push, to gain the victory.

I now bid you God-speed until I shall be elected to report again, and commend our new reporter to you. May God bless our church—our conference, and may the work done there be in accordance with His holy will.

SHILOH

On October 25 A. O. Lindley filled his last appointment for this year. He preached an excellent sermon. The church officers were elected for the following year. They are:

Trustees, Mr. J. L. Brown, Mr. Eli Garrett, Mr. J. E. Jordan and Mr. G. L. Whitaker; stewards, Mr. G. L. Whitaker, Mr. Walter Hemphill and Mr. J. S. Pickett; general interest stewards, Mr. Charlie Hemphill, Mr. W. C. Kime and Mr. A. L. Kime; class leader, Mr. W. P. Pickett; assistant, Mr. G. L. Whitaker; Sunday school superintendent, Mr. M. Brown; assistant, Mr. Walter Hemphill; reporter, Gladys Pickett; ushers, Mr. Charlie Hemphill and Mr. Flavius Kime.

Our Sunday school and Christian Endeavor are getting along nicely.

Reporter.

HALIFAX

We have closed all of our protracted meetings. Ringwood was the last one. We were assisted there by Fred W. Paschall, pastor of Whitakers church. We had good congregations at night, and everybody enjoyed Brother Paschall's sermons. We had 17 conversions and reclamations and eight accessions to the church, seven for Ringwood and one for Glenview.

We held our fourth quarterly conference at Bethesda church on Friday, October 23rd. Every church was represented and the business was transacted in a spirit of love and harmony. The conference voted unanimously for the return of the present pastor for another year.

We preached at Hollister yesterday. We had a good congregation considering the downpour of rain. We preached at Ringwood yesterday evening and Bethesda last night.

We are busy trying to bring up a good report to the annual conference. We have had 47 accessions to the church this year. Two prayer meetings have been organized on the work. We have reorganized the Sunday school at Eden church and we have a good live Sunday school here.

We want to thank the following brethren: Frank Thomas, for gas; N. M. Harrison, for gas and beef; Mr. E. V. Neville, for gas; Mr. Vinson, for flour and sugar; Mr. J. R. Dickens, for a gift that was very much appreciated; Mr. Hull, for some chickens.

C. L. SPENCER,
Pastor.

ORANGE CHARGE

The fourth quarterly conference met with the Union Grove church Saturday, October 24th. Notwithstanding the fact of a very rainy day all churches were represented. The business was transacted harmoniously.

The reports showed some progress had been made during the year. Brother Cicero H. Jones was elected alternate delegate. Pastor's salary was fixed at $1,800 for next year.

The conference voted unanimously for the return of the present pastor for another year. We thank these people for this vote of confidence.

May God's will be done in all the acts of our approaching annual conference.

Sincerely,
B. M. WILLIAMS.

Level Cross: Our special meeting began here the first Sunday in October with Brother C. H. Hill our pulpit help. There were two conversions, and the church generally revived. Brother Hill was fearless in denunciation of sin. His messages were forcefully presented and generally well received.

On yesterday, Miss Dollie Vickery was elected Sunday school superintendent. She is a splendid young woman, and we predict new life in the church there. Mr. Paul Gray was elected assistant superintendent.

Worthville: Our meeting at this place had a few setbacks. A few days prior to the beginning, a letter came from my engaged helper stating he could not come, owing to illness in his family. A telegram calling Brother Braswell was sent Friday. Brother Lindley was called and came Sunday night. Then Brother Braswell came Monday and preached Monday night, but was forced to return home Tuesday on account of illness occasioned by severe burns received the previous Saturday night. Then Brother Lindley was again called, and he and Brother Shelton came every night, and Brother Shelton preached. The messages by the three brethren were of the highest order and gratefully received.

Mt. Lebanon: We began here the third Sunday. Brother Shelton came Monday night and preached to the close Friday night. Three were converted and the church somewhat awakened. Brother Shelton preached with earnestness and power, dealing primarily with things fundamental.

Finances: Badly behind, due in part to short crops and mill curtailment.

The quarterly conference voted favorable to the return of the present incumbent.

Brother Dosier preached at Mt. Lebanon yesterday.

BURLINGTON FIRST M. P. CHURCH

Wednesday night was the fourth and last quarterly conference. Much important business was transacted. The delegate was instructed to bring our pastor back.

Sunday morning the attendance for Sunday school was not very good, owing to the weather. Only 175 present. The weather cleared up and a very good crowd was present for the morning service. The sermon was by the pastor. At the night service we had a very good attendance. Next Sunday will be our last Sunday this conference year.

HOLLISTER, HALIFAX CHARGE

The editor must have thrown my last report in the waste basket, as I never saw it in print; would not blame him to throw them all in the waste basket, for I am a poor reporter.

Another conference year is drawing to a close. Brother Spencer preached a wonderful sermon yesterday, last one he will preach for us before conference, but we are in our delegate, Mr. B. F. Lewis, will bring Brother Spencer back to us. Mr. Spencer done a good year's work; we appreciate the effort he has made.

Yesterday was a rainy day, therefore congregation was small, but after prayer and communion service, the officers for the new conference year were elected. We hope Mr. Spencer will get every cent of his claim before conference. Money for preachers is hard to get from some people. If you do not believe this, step out at night. Some people can have money for ever, but they want except the preacher.

Our Sunday school is doing good work under the leadership of Mr. E. T. Ellington. He elected him superintendent for another year. He has done such good work the past year. The whooping cough has gotten in our community; that's keeping some of the little ones away that would go.

Our prayer meeting is doing good work.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Mission society held its monthly meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer. Over 100 people were present. In this writer's home I could not be there, but I know the meeting was enjoyed. Next meeting will be held at T. C. Williams' home.

May conference be a success in every way and each pastor be sent where they can do the most good for the upbuilding of the church.

Best wishes to all for a new conference year.

DRAPER

Our work here is getting on fine. Our pastor and Mrs. Dixon came and held the fourth quarterly conference and our people were certainly pleased with the encouraging words Brother Dixon spoke during the conference.

Our finance is coming along very well. We hope to be able to raise the remainder before conference.

The good people here don't forget to support us, for which we heartily thank everyone.

I have witnessed this year 259 conversions and reclamations. Received in the church 19 new members and baptized 19; held 19 revivals.

Pray for us and our work here.

Your brother in Christ,
J. S. RIDGE.

Mose and Sambo were discussing trees. "Yes, suh, man," said Sambo, "I trace my relations back to a family tree." "Well," replied Mose, "they ain't but a few kinds of things that live in trees—birds, monkeys—and you sho' ain't got no family tree on you."—Exchange.

Shiloh is still on the map of North Circuit, even if you haven't heard us in a long time. We hope to report regularly than we have been doing.

We have a lively Sunday school. The Men's Class which is taught by J. L. Evans is the best which any church might be justly proud of. Almost every chair in the choir is filled by the Ladies' Bible Class which is taught by J. B. Leonard.

Shiloh is famous for the number of young and small children, we have large primary classes, which are taught by Mrs. W. J. Sink and R. B. Sink.

It is not all yet. We have two lively Endeavor Societies,—a Junior and a Senior Society. There is nothing more important than training and making use of the new energy of our young people. That is the best way to keep them saved and interested in the church.

R. S. Troxler, our beloved pastor, has been so faithful even under trying circumstances. Mrs. Troxler, who has so faithfully aided him in all of his work, has just come from the High Point Hospital, where she underwent a serious operation. She is feeling nicely, and we hope that she may soon be able to mingle with us again.

But, but not least, we want to say that some of our homes have family altars. When we have consecrated homes, we will have a place that God can use to lead men and women to Christ. Oh, for more homes where the fires burn around the hearth stone! We are very truly, Mrs. Wiley Shoaf. Rep.

Shiloh.—Owing to rainy weather our attendance at Sunday school and morning service last Sunday was not as large as would otherwise have been. The sun shined brightly in the afternoon and the last part of the day was beautiful and pleasant. At night service there was a much larger congregation present.

We were delighted with an inspiring and edifying sermon by Rev. J. O. Fry, of King's Chapel, a young minister of the Methodist Episcopal church, at the night service last Sunday. Brother Fry's text was from St. Matthew 1st chapter and 29th verse, "Behold the Lamb of God." The outline of the sermon was: (a) Behold the Lamb of God at birth, (b) behold the Lamb of God at the age of 12, (c) behold the Lamb of God in His youth, (d) behold the Lamb of God in Gethsemane, (e) behold the Lamb of God on Calvary, (f) behold the Lamb of God in the resurrection, (g) behold the Lamb of God in the church. Brother Fry preached at our church two months ago and our people were given the opportunity of hearing him again last Sunday night.

We will have our final services for this year next Sunday. The pastor will be at both services. At the morning service the church will consider the matter of electing the delegate as to a pastor for next year. It is understood by both the pastor and the church that this pastor will not be pastor next year. The pastor's salary is still "fully" behind, as some pastors put it. $400.00 is to be raised on the pastor's salary before he moves to another charge. We hope it will all be raised before the annual conference meets is a question, but we are expecting the people here to meet the obligation in some manner.

C. B. Way, Pastor.

FROM REV. D. A. BRASWELL

On the 10th night of this month I read and studied until midnight. It being cold, I built a fire to warm before retiring. I turned my back to the fire and my sleeping gown caught on fire. Having presence of mind, I tore my garments from me, that being the only thing that saved my life. I received bad burns on both hands and a serious burn on my back. For 16 nights I have suffered a great pain with very little sleep. I paid a man $2.00 a night to sit up with me, besides my doctor bill. I hope to be able to be out by Sunday. This has interfered right much with my church work.

My wife is no better. It seems sad for us both to be confined to our beds. It is very sad for my wife to be helpless and mindless and know she will never be any better.

With all this I have tried to keep up my church work. I have preached about 60 times on my work and received about $40.00 salary. I have made about 75 pastoral visits. Received five new members at Allison Grove. I have organized a small society at North Charlotte with about 40 members. I have also organized a small society at Spencer with about 30 members. I have helped in a few meetings, and received right good contributions at each place. But all I received during the year will not cover my automobile expenses.

I am glad there are some good Samaritans in the world. Rev. A. G. Dixon sent us $5.00 and a kind letter of sympathy, for which he has our heartfelt thanks. But to say that does not half express it. If there has ever been a time in the history of our lives when we needed the sympathy of our friends it is now.

Brethren and sisters, remember us in your prayers day and night. Stop and think just a moment of what we have undergone for four years. The nights have been long and lonely. I have counted the stroke of the clock many hundred times and wished for the day.

May our Heavenly Father continue to bless you all. Please remember us in your prayers.

Yours in His name,

D. A. BRASWELL.

Concord, N. C.

Saxapahaw Charge.—The good people of Salem Church gave their pastor a "sure enough" pounding the second Sunday consisting of almost everything needed for the pantry. When the pastor started to leave the church he found the Ford so completely filled that there was hardly enough room left for him. The names of the donors are not known, so we will not give any names lest we miss some. The pastor found his vocabulary too limited to express his thanks in words. May the Lord bless each one. We also desire to thank Orange Chapel members for the following: Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Crawford, apples; Mr. and Mrs. Ben Williams, fruit; Mr. and Mrs. Johnnie Edwards, canned fruit; Mrs. T. E. Williams, sweet potatoes; and Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Ferguson, sausage. Miss Lilian Lindley, of Saxapahaw, has the thanks of the pastor for a box of delicious grapes.

Bro. J. Newlin Thompson, one of the faithful members of Salem church, has been kept from church several Sundays on account of rheumatism. We hope he will soon be better.

lilient tulips. Then they all were gone, leaving the sweet brightness to tell of their visit. How pleased Nanette was when she came home that evening, to see the pretty spot; and what joy to Lucille all summer as she sat at her window and drank in the fragrance; and before the late fall was able to take a few hesitating steps out of doors and pick for herself a bouquet of the bright fall blossoms.

All through the summer the boys and girls kept faithful watch over the little plot, putting in new plants as soon as the old ones stopped flowering; and when the days of frost and cold came all declared the pleasantest part of the summer had been watching and tending little Lucille's garden.—Emma F. which fronted on a rear street. Some new people had just moved there with a little lame child.

"Treat nothing," snapped Elsie. "Uncle Frank gave me the dime for this cream, and why shouldn't I enjoy it? Your are a bad ole bird an' I wish you'd put away!"

Once more Elsie put her spoon into the little mound of frozen sweetness. Again that cry came across the hedge. She wondered how it would seem to be "Sick and a stranger." Perhaps—perhaps ice cream would make the little stranger feel better! There was an opening in the hedge right in front of her. Elsie regarded it soberly. The cry came again.

That settled it. She got up slowly, put the dish on the grass, crawled through the opening and then reached and drew the ice cream slowly after her. It was only a step to the door of the little cottage. Elsie rapped.

"I've brought a treat for your little girl," she smiled to the tired-faced woman who answered her knock. "Please tell her I'm sorry she's not feeling well."

"Oh, how pleased Mary'll be!" exclaimed her mother. "It's help her lots to know that you care!"

Elsie turned back and crawled slowly through the hole in the hedge. There was a warm, happy feeling around her heart, and her friend, the bird, swung on the branch of a little bush.

"Tweet!" "Tweet!" "Tweet!" he chirruped, and lifted up his wings and flew swiftly away into the sunshine, as if he, too, were glad about something.—Selected.

HOW THE NEW ARRIVAL GOT HER NAME

Richard T. Broeg.

Away off in the Land-Where-Strange-Things-Happen there suddenly and without warning appeared a new flower. This was something very unusual. It had not happened for ever and ever so long. All the other flower folk and all the little flower fairies, especially Silverdown, the flower elf, were greatly excited over it.

"Have you heard the news?" they would ask each other. "Why, no, what is it?" would be the invariable reply. And then would come the startling answer—"A new flower has arrived!"

"A new flower? What is her name? Where did she come from? How long is she going to remain? Is she nice?" and so on and so on.

But no one seemed to know the answer to these questions. The more they talked, the more their curiosity increased.

Finally they went to the Queen of the Fairies and told her. She was as much surprised as any of the others. "A new flower!" she cried, "and without our permission? Where is she from, and what is her name?" But no one could answer the Queen's questions.

"Tell my courtiers to get my shell-pink carriage ready," she ordered, "and to hitch to it my fastest fireflies, and we will go and see this new arrival." Then she dressed herself in her loveliest lace dress which was spun out of moonbeams and ornamented with star-dust and trimmed with rainbow ribbon. And then with her attendants she went out to view the new arrival. When the visitation was ended, however, they were none the wiser. For the mystery was as deep as ever.

"Summon my wise men to the Council chamber," the Queen commanded, "and tell them to bring all the books."

Now, you know that the flower fairies have books in which are the names and pictures of all the flowers. So exact are the pictures that one can hardly tell the difference between them and the flower which they represent.

Soon all the wise men of Fairydom were gathered together in the Queen's Council chamber. Then the books were brought and opened. As fast as some one suggested a name, it was looked up. "No, that's not the one," would be the answer. They looked and looked and looked. They read and read and read. Page after page after page was turned over, and still no solution of the baffling mystery.

"This will never do," said the fairy queen. "We must get this information. How shall we get it? Has any one any suggestion?"

The wise men suggested first one thing and then another, but nothing that they mentioned seemed to be suitable. At last Silverdown arose. He had not spoken before because he was not considered one of the wise men. He was only the flower elf that looked after the flower folk. He was a practical sort of fellow and so of course could not qualify for a wise man.

"Your Fairy Highness," he said, "may I say a word?"

"Speak on," said the fairy queen.

"Well," said Silverdown, "it occurred to me as I sat here listening while the wise men were speaking," and here he made a deep bow to the wise men which they very haughtily acknowledged, "that it might be a good plan to appoint a committee to go out and interview this stranger who has arrived so suddenly in our midst, and find out what her name is and all about her, so that it may be entered in our books (in due form)."

At this the queen clapped her hands, and all her attendants clapped their hands, but the wise men just looked bored.

The queen declared that Silverdown's suggestion was a good one, in fact the best one that had been made, and that she would name such a committee at once.

She appointed Silverdown and Dewspite and Moonglow and Starshine and gave them instructions to go at once and gather all the information they could and report it to the Council. Then she dismissed the assembly.

Silverdown, Dewspite, Moonglow, and Starshine started out immediately on their mission. Silverdown was chosen by the others to act as spokesman.

When they arrived at the place where the new flower had taken up her residence, Silverdown very politely stated their business, and asked the new arrival as pleasantly as he knew how what her name might be. But the new arrival would make no answer whatever. No, not a word would she say. She just looked at them in a rather surly manner—at any rate, so it seemed to the committee.

The committee looked at one another in great wonderment. Never had they met such an odd individual before. Dewspite suggested that perhaps the new arrival was dumb and so of course could not make any reply to their questions. Moonglow thought that she must be deaf and so of course she could not hear what they were asking her. But Starshine declared it as his firm conviction that the new arrival must be not only dumb and deaf but blind as well, and so of course they could not expect to gain very much information from her.

Then the committee walked all around and around the new arrival. They wanted to see if perhaps there might be a name on her that would place her. Starshine got pretty close to her, when—snap! went one of her flower jaws. Starshine jumped just in time to avoid being nipped. "My!" said he, "I don't think I was right, after all, about her being deaf and dumb and blind. But I will say that she is dreadfully cross and crotchety. What a snap that was! Lucky for me that I jumped just when I did."

Then the committee looked some more to see if they couldn't find a name or an address or something else on the leaves of the new arrival. Dewspite thought he saw some writing on the under side of one of the leaves high upon the stalk. So excited was he over this discovery that he forgot all about Starshine's experience. Standing on tiptoe, he reached up intending to lift that particular leaf so that he could see more plainly—when, snap! He was caught by both hands and lifted up and up.

How he did shout and call for help! Silverdown and Moonglow and Starshine came rushing to his aid. They were just able to catch his legs as he was being lifted high up in the air—and how they pulled! They were almost afraid they might pull poor unfortunate Dewspite right in two.

But try as they might they couldn't bring Dewspite down—and lift as she might, the new arrival could not lift him any higher. Then Silverdown began to shout for help. "Help!" he cried at the top of his voice. "Quick! Help! Help!" From all sides the fairy folk came running, and they laid to the work with a will. They pulled and pulled. So hard did they pull that the new arrival was bent way down low. Then one of the fairies got a pry and pushed it in between the jaws of the new arrival. And then together with some of the other fairies she pried the jaws open and Dewspite was released.

"My!" they puffed and panted, "she certainly did have a mighty grip on him. How fierce she is! She is a regular old dragon!"

Fortunately, Dewspite was not hurt very much. But he had received a dreadful fright. After the Comfort Fairy had ministered to him, however, he was soon as well as ever again, and something of a hero besides.

After this experience the committee decided that they had better return to the Queen and make a report on their expedition. When the Queen was notified that the committee was back and waiting to render a report, she immediately had the Council and all the fairy folk called together. Then Silverdown in a very earnest and dramatic manner related their vivid experiences.

All the fairy folk were almost breathless while he was telling about Dewspite's narrow escape. When he had finished, Dewspite had to show the Queen his hands and wrists, on which were still plainly visible the prints of the new arrival's jaws.

But as for the name of the new arrival, they were as ignorant as ever. For a little while they all sat in perfect silence, each one busy, no doubt, with his own thoughts. Then suddenly the Queen's face lighted up and she exclaimed:

"I have it—I have it! You say that the new arrival would not give an answer to your questions, and that you could not find any name or address or anything else on her leaves? Very well. If she will not tell us her name, then we will give her one—and her very conduct is the most important thing about anybody. Actions, you know, always speak louder than words. You report that she was very cross and crotchety and vicious, and that she snapped at you like an old dragon?"

"Yes, that certainly is true," said Silverdown, and all the others fully agreed with him.

"Then," said the Queen, I here solemnly declare to this Council duly assembled, that the name of the new arrival shall from henceforth be Snapdragon. Let the name along with an exact picture of the new arrival be entered in our books."

And so it was done. And to this day the new arrival is known as Snapdragon.—Zion's Herald.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—NOV. 1.

The Fight Against Strong Drink.

Lesson Text: Eph. 6:10-20.

Golden Text: Eph. 6:10.

The Central Truth: The strength of Jesus Christ is the key to victory in every battle of life.

Scriptural Points.

1. "Finally." This word introduces a heart to heart exhortation to the Ephesian Christians to be true to their Leader and "fight the good fight of faith."

2. "Be strong in the Lord." The Christian's strength comes from a vital touch or fellowship with Jesus Christ. The wire connected with the dynamo has wonderful power. So has the believer whose faith unites him to Christ. "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me."

3. "The whole armour of God." The Father of mercies does not leave His children defenseless. In the armory of redemption there are weapons a plenty for every soldier of the cross. They are spiritual weapons wielded by the faculties of the soul. "For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." 2 Cor. 10:4.

4. "Stand against the wiles of the devil." One of the most winning of the devil's wiles is the offer of "the pleasures of sin for a season." Another is the spirit of the world, or worldliness. To be in the world you must do like the world. Still another is, put on a good appearance—false profession. Retaliation is manly, is another artful trick of Satan, and millions are deceived by the plea of covetousness and unholy ambition. They suppose that "gain is godliness."

5. It is not a physical warfare. The Christian soldier has to contend with the organized "rulers of the darkness of this world," as they stand entrenched behind the rum curse, the love of money, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life.

6. "Be able to withstand in the evil day," the day of temptation, the day of overpowering carnal inclination,—the day that tries men's souls.

7. "Your loins girt about with truth." This girdle of truth is the encompassing power of the word of God. "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and victorious.

8. "The breastplate of righteousness." To be right with God; is to share the omnipotence of God. "Thrice-armed is he that hath his quarrel just." Their strength is as the strength of ten, whose hearts and lives are pure.

9. "The preparation of the gospel of peace." The preparation to meet God in peace in the judgment is the indispensable preparation to meet and vanquish the forces of sin upon the battlefield of earth. And it is the gospel of salvation that supplies this preparation.

10. "The shield of faith." Faith closes up the avenues of sin. It is the heart of unbelief that departs from the living God. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

11. "The helmet of salvation." This is the fifth and last part of the Christian's defensive armor. As the helmet and breast-plate protect the two most vital organs of the body, so salvation and its resultant righteousness, in their completeness, supply ample protection to the immortal soul.

12. "The sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." The revealed word of God, its principles, precepts, and promises, is a mighty weapon against the powers of darkness. With this weapon Jesus put the tempter to flight. Three thrusts of this sword, three assertions from Holy Writ were sufficient.

13. "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit." Prayer is the method of putting on and keeping on the christian armor. It is also the power of wielding the sword of the Spirit. Without prayer and reliance upon the higher powers every conflict with sin would be a failure.

Practical Points.

1. Legal prohibition is not the best cure, or preventative, of the liquor curse. The best remedy is the power of the indwelling Spirit,—the power "to touch not, taste not, handle not" the damnable stuff.

2. There is power in salvation to keep saved. The strength of grace that put fallen man upon his feet can keep him from falling. "My grace is sufficient for thee."

3. Five parts of defensive armor and one weapon of offense is the right proportion. For "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

4. Prayer is the surest method of putting the devil to flight. "Satan trembles when he sees the weakest saint upon his knees."

5. Victory is always through the timely aid of the Lion of the tribe of Judah. "Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Savior, be glory, and majesty, and dominion, and power, both now and ever. Amen."

SHEPPARD-MARSH

High Point, Oct. 10.—Mr. O. D. Sheppard and Miss Vera Marshe were quietly married Saturday morning, October 10, at the home of the bride. The ceremony was performed by the writer. Only intimate friends and relatives of the young couple were present. Immediately after the ceremony they left by automobile on a bridal trip to Florida, after which they will be at home to their many friends near High Point.

JAMES THOMAS TERRELL

Mr. Jas. T. Terrell, of near Mebane, having been in somewhat declining health for some time, became worse about the middle of July, then gradually grew weaker until he passed to his reward August 1st:

Brother Terrell was a consistent Christian, firm in the faith, quite positive in his convictions. He liked to talk of his hope of the future life. He liked, also, to talk of the days when his pastor had time to spend the day with him or to spend the day and night pleased him better. As long as he lived he felt that his pastor's visit in his home was not complete unless the pastor and the family prayed together. He esteemed it a privilege to attend church when, his health and the health of his family permitted. He was an attentive listener and worshipper.

His church membership for a period of 40 years was first at Hebron and later in Mebane. The funeral was from the church of which he was a member, conducted by his pastor, the writer. The very large attendance and the numerous beautiful floral designs attested the high esteem in which Mr. Terrell was held; also the sympathy of the community with the family.

An interesting fact was the devoted attention during his illness by his sons and daughters and their wives and husbands. His wife wanted to help, but was physically unable. He lacked nothing that loving hands could provide.

He leaves a widow, four sons, Oda, Claude, Eugene and Clarence; three daughters, Mrs. Al Smith, Mrs. L. F. Wilkerson and Mrs. George McCauley; eight grandchildren and three brothers, Mr. "Bill" Terrell, Mr. Henry Terrell and Mr. Joe Terrell.

CHEEK

Fitzhugh Sesco Cheek, son of Richard Franklin and Mary Cheek, was born in Orange county, N. C., on the 29th day of January, 1873. He departed this life October 6, 1925. The time of his earthly allotment is 52 years, eight months and seven days.

In his early teens the deceased came to Burlington to live, and this was his home during the remainder of his life, with the exception of a year and a half spent in Durham.

At the age of 20 he was married to Miss Emma Kenney, daughter of Edwin and Amy Kenney, of South Alamance. The exact date of this marriage is April 30, 1893. To this union were born four children, three of whom died in infancy. One daughter, Miss Arthula Cheek, with her mother, survives. Besides these two members of his immediate family he is survived by four sisters, as follows: Mrs. David Canoy, High Point; Mrs. Charlie Jobe, Mebane; Mrs. J. W. Bradley and Miss Grace Cheek, Burlington.

The religious life of Brother Cheek began when he was about 35 years of age. At that time he professed faith in Christ as his personal Savior and united with Webb Avenue M. E. church, Burlington. For many years he was treasurer of the church and teacher in the Sunday school. In 1923 he transferred his membership to the First M. P. church of this place, and was a faithful member until his death. During much of this time he could not attend services because of his affliction, but he was always concerned for the best interests of the church and the kingdom. He was a long sufferer, and made a brave fight for his health; but there was no rebellion in his heart against the orderings of Providence. If it was the Lord's will for him to go, he was resigned. On the night preceding his death in the morning he called his wife and daughter into his room for prayer. And then, addressing his daughter, he said to her: "Be good, and be ready; we must all go sometime. I want everybody to be good." These were his parting words to his family and to the community as well, though he probably had no thought that the end was so near.

Brother Cheek was both a good and an industrious man. For 23 years he held an important position with the Aurora cotton mill and was one of the most dependable employees of this big organization. At the time of his death he was president of the Cash Store Co., and was the only president of this corporation during the 13 years of its existence. For many years, and up to the time of his death, he was financial secretary of the Junior Order and Daughters of Liberty. All of which shows the confidence that the community had in his integrity. Surely a good man has gone from us.

The funeral service was held at the First M. P. church, conducted by the pastor, and assisted by Rev. Martin W. Buck, pastor of the First Baptist church, and Rev. W. R. Potter, D. D., of the First Presbyterian church. The seating capacity of the church was overtaxed for the service. The Junior Order, of which he was an honored member, had part in the service at the grave. Other orders were in attendance at the funeral, also.

The body was laid to rest in Pineview cemetery under a covering of beautiful flowers, while his spirit, we believe, was at home with God.

The family, to which he was affectionately devoted, and the relatives have the loving sympathy of the community.

IN HONOR OF A GREAT EVENT.

Birthdays are always important occasions, especially if one is very young or very old. Before long The Youth's Companion will be a hundred years old, and the event is going to be made a memorable one for The Companion's many friends. So, although the date is not until April 16, 1927, preparations will begin with 1926.

In honor of its birthday The Companion will come to you next year at the new low price of $2. It will be dressed in its party clothes, with new cover designs, enlarged illustrations, new brilliantly clear type, and over 200 pages more than last year. It will contain 9 book-length serial stories, fascinating mystery stories, tales of adventure on land and sea, the new "Make-It and Do-It" Pages, radio, games, books, and puzzles, interesting special articles, and the ever-delightful Children's Page. Don't miss this great year of The Youth's Companion; subscribe now and receive:

HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

Catalogue and application blank will be forwarded upon application. Those desiring further information should address The President, High Point College, High Point, N. C.

THE LITTLE LOAF.

In the time of the famine a rich man permitted the poorest children of the city to come to his house, and said to them: "There stands a crate full of bread. Each of you may take a loaf from it, and you may come every day until God sends better times."

The children at once surrounded the basket, striving and quarreling over the bread, because each desired to obtain the finest; and they finally went off without a word of thanks.

Only Franziska, a clean but poorly clad little girl, remained standing at a distance, then took the smallest of the loaves left in the basket, kissed her hand gratefully to the man and went quietly and becomingly home.

On the next day the children were equally ill-mannered, and Franziska this time had a loaf which was scarcely half as large as the others; but when she reached home and her mother broke the bread there fell out quite a number of silver pieces. The mother was frightened and said: "Take the money back at once, for it certainly got into the bread by accident."

Franziska did as she was bid, but the benevolent man said to her: "No, no; it was not an accident, I had the silver baked in the smallest loaf in order to reward thee, thou good child. Ever remain as peace-loving and satisfied."

He who would rather have a smaller loaf than quarrel about a greater will always bring a blessing to the home even though no gold is baked in the bread.—Reformed Messenger.

sure of the pure embrace of a pure woman. He could not stand the association, and yet he was backward to speak to the men. His mother had given him a picture of the Christ, and it was in his trunk. He took it out and nailed it upon the wall in the center of these obscene things and left it there. A few days later he noticed that all the old obscene and vulgar images were down, and the only face that was left upon the wall was the face of his Christ. So shall we, if we put Christ upon the walls of our hearts, find everything that is contrary to the whiteness of his purity passed away and He alone will fill our heart and life.

THANKSGIVING DAY PROCLAMATION.

President Coolidge has issued the annual presidential proclamation setting aside the last Thursday of November (Nov. 26 this year) as Thanksgiving Day. The proclamation says, in part: "I recommend that on that day the people shall cease from their work; and in their homes, or in their accustomed places of worship, devoutly give thanks to the Almighty for the many and great blessings they have received, and to seek His guidance, that they may deserve a continuance of His favor."

MAN'S GOD.

From a Sermon by Rev. Merton S. Rice,
D. D., of Detroit, Mich.

O man! the God you need is not One who sits over beyond an infinite gap, which separates humanity from divinity, and there awaits your impossible climb. You must face the other way if you would find the truth. It is shorter from the infinite to the finite than it is from the finite to the infinite. God can reach across. You cannot make your way into the impenetrable shadows. Your compass fails you. Your polestar fades from the blackening heavens. We need a God who will step out of the infinite and, putting at our disposal His love and guidance, will lead us tenderly but safely as a shepherd leadeth his flock.

Man's God must be able to forgive him his sins, and grant him the consciousness of righteousness. This is humanity's supreme need. Of all the words the preacher is ever called upon to say, none is so vital as the word that will declare effectually the fact of an open way from sin to forgiveness. This is the message all other messages are to be used to get more efficiently proclaimed. After a preaching experience reaching across 30 years, and contacting with life from the more remote farming regions, and smallest country villiages, all the way along the gamut of experience into the most strenuous sections of congested city life, I am ready to say that there is no message the world wants to hear as eagerly as the old, old gospel that God forgiveth human sins and does cleanse mankind from unrighteousness. It is a necessity in the God of this race of ours.—From "Advantage of a Handicap."

SHOULD A MINISTER COVET POPULARITY?

Rev. D. W. Johnson.

This is a question recently asked the writer. Much depends upon the meaning of it. If it means, "Should a minister seek notoriety, to be talked about, to be complimented, to be admired by a large circle of friends for his cleverness or eloquence, or pleasing personality?" one would, without hesitation, answer, "No." But if it means, "Should a minister seek the confidence and approbation of men that he may gain their presence, attention, and favorable consideration of the claims of God upon them?" the most emphatic answer should be "Yes." It is then equivalent to asking whether a minister should make the best and most of himself as an advocate, an ambassador of Jesus Christ.

There never was a more uncompromising champion of the truth than St. Paul, but he constantly sought to approach his hearers along popular lines, by measures that would arouse the fewest prejudices, and secure him a favorable hearing. He acknowledges that he was sometimes even crafty, or claimed that he was tactful, in his approaches to them, that he caught them with guile. He says that he commended himself to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

So important did he consider this matter of popularity, or of a favorable reception, that he says: "Though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more. And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews.... To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak. I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. And this I do for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you." Mark the emphatic words. He sought popularity among all classes, not for self-glory, or to spread a sounding name abroad, but that he might gain men for Christ, that he might save his hearers. He became "all things to all men," but he never compromised the truth. This quotation does not imply that with him it was "Good Lord or good devil," according to the company he was in, but that he had a great sympathy for all classes and a great desire for their salvation. It means that to accomplish their salvation, to win them for Christ, he would enter as far as possible into their confidence and good-will. He had a sanctified adaptation to his hearers.

In Whitefield's days of power among the common people, he said, "We use the language of the market." It is said of Lord Haddo, in his great success in winning men to Jesus, that he strove to cultivate the art of conciliating even the careless and indifferent, by talking to them, in the first instance, on subjects in which they would be interested. Visiting a currier in Whitechapel, London, whom he wished to win for Christ, but who was hard and difficult to approach, he talked to him about the various processes of tanning and the preservation leather until the man, with much cordiality, remarked, "Ah, I see you are in the trade yourself, sir," and the way was opened for a heart-to-heart talk on the great matters that make for salvation.

This question is of such importance that it might profitably be considered in detail. Yes, the minister should covet popularity.

In other words, he should determine to be his best and do his best to commend his message to the people, always keeping in view the purpose of Paul.

He should seek to make himself personally popular. He might begin by making a good physical impression—in his person, dress, and manners. Men cannot be equally attractive in appearance, but every man may be neat and clean. The priest, in Old Testament times, who bore the vessels of the Lord, had to be scrupulously clean. So should every minister. No minister should be a fop, or merely suggest a tailor's model, but the impressions made upon the eyes of a congregation begin before any impression is made upon their ears. There is much in the old saying "Cleanliness is next to godliness," and the people expect that much, at least, from a preacher. One of our earliest recollections is that of a preacher who had conspicuously dirty collar and cuffs. We do not remember anything of his sermon but always think of him as the man with the dirty cuffs.

With a presentable person, the minister should covet the popularity that is encouraged by a manner which suggests sincerity and sympathetic interest in the intimate concerns of the people. There is a wireless telepathic connection between the pulpit and the pew which cannot be concealed even though it cannot be seen.

The conduct of the service has much to do with securing a sympathetic contact, which every minister should covet. Attitude, voice, gesture, manner, the reading of the Scriptures, all enter into the success or failure of the desire which every true minister has to find a welcome for his message. It is a reasonable complaint that many ministers can make against their theological schools, that they did not do their duty by them in properly training them to read the Scriptures, to handle their voices and even their bodies—matters of much importance in attempting to secure a favorable verdict for their Lord, whose ambassadors they are.

Much excellent food is rendered unpalatable by the manner in which it is served. So it is with many sermons. As we were sitting by the side of a wise brother, one Sunday, listening to a discourse of much merit, so far as the matter was concerned, but delivered in an outrageous manner, our friend whispered to us, at its tiresome close,

"I wish I could hear — with such a discourse. He would sweep this congregation to its feet." With such a sermon, should not the minister who could produce it have coveted its presentation in such a popular manner as to have had upon the hearts and consciences of his hearers?

It may be too late for some of us to mend our pulpit manners, but all our young ministers should covet the ability of presenting their message in the most spiritually attractive manner possible, not that they may win applause, but that they may gain a favorable hearing and a favorable verdict for their Lord.

Gestures are somewhat dangerous accompaniments. A certain minister, for instance, is said to have had a fashion of frequently pointing upward with his index finger, and then quickly pointing downward. On one occasion, when in the midst of an impassioned portion of an address on heaven, he exclaimed, "When the roll is called up yonder" (pointing upward). "I'll be there" (pointing downward). Is it any wonder that an unpreventable smile passed over many countenances and that the whole effect of the otherwise good pronouncement was spoiled?

A minister should covet popularity in the pulpit by seeking it outside the church and among the people. By coming in friendly contact with them, by a sympathetic interest in their daily affairs, by an evident disposition to cooperate in the general welfare of the community, and by a cordial acquaintance with the children, he should covet popularity, in the best sense in which we have been considering it, that even though he may not be able to preach like Whitefield, and may be lacking in some of the graces, his congregations may consider him their friend and brother, and have such a warm place for him in their hearts that they will receive his message with favor and be impressed with his plea for his Master.

A minister should covet popularity with his people most of all by seeking close fellowship with his Lord. Many other things may be helpful toward securing their attention and favorable consideration of his message, but, if they take knowledge of him that he has been with Jesus, there will be something about him and his message that will compel the kind of popularity we are considering. Of such men it was said that they were "full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord." A minister should covet such popularity, and all of God's people should covet such popularity for their minister, and if both he and they ceaselessly pray for it, he will have it.

To the people we would say, "If you want your minister to be popular, pray for him, and obey the promptings toward him which follow your prayers, and your supplications will be surely answered." Try it.—Zion's Herald.

WORDS OF WISDOM FROM PRESIDENT COOLIDGE.

At the opening of the recent bi-ennial session of the National Council of Congregational churches, held in Washington, D. C., President Coolidge—the Honorary Moderator—gave a most interesting and helpful address. We give here some select paragraphs. All our churches and people will do well to think upon them:

"Without doubt the law acts as a deterrent to wrongdoing and will usually go a long way in the repression of crime. But this reaches its highest application only when there is a very healthy and determined public sentiment in favor of the observance of the law. The utmost ingenuity on the part of the police powers will be substantially all wasted in an effort to enforce the law, if there does not exist a strong and vigorous determination on the part of the people to observe the law. Such a determination cannot be produced by the Government. My own opinion is that it is furnished by religion."

"With few exceptions those who come to us as enemies of society are so because they have always found society enemies to them. Education in the elements and fundamentals of the American principles of human relationship has seldom failed to secure their allegiance. But the mere sharpening of the wits, the bare training of the intellect, the naked acquisition of science, while they would greatly increase the power for good, likewise increase the power for evil. And intellectual growth will only add to our confusion unless it is accompanied by a moral growth, I do not know of any source of moral power other than that which comes from religion."

"But there is another and more basic reason why the Government cannot supply the source and motive for the complete reformation of society. In the progress of the human race religious beliefs were developed before the formation of governments. It is my understanding that government rests on religion."

"The claim to the right of equality, with the resultant right of self-government—the rule of the people—have no foundation other than the common brotherhood of man derived from the common fatherhood of God. The righteous authority of the law depends for its sanction upon its harmony with the righteous authority of the Almighty. If this faith is set aside, the foundations of our institutions fail, the citizen is deposed from the high estate which he holds as amenable to a universal conscience, society reverts to a system of class and caste, and the government, instead of being imposed by reason from within, is imposed by force from without. Freedom and democracy would give way to despotism and slavery. I do not know of any adequate support for our form of government except that which comes from religion."

"If the people are the Government it cannot rise above them; it cannot furnish them with something they do not have; it will be what they are. This is true representation. The Government will be able to get out of the people only such virtue as religion has placed there."

"It is this absolute necessity for support of the Government outside of itself, through religion, that I wish to impress upon this assembly. Without that support political effort would be practically fruitless. It is not in any denominational or any narrow and technical sense that I refer to religion. I mean to include all that can be brought within that broad general definition."

"While I regard the clergy as the greatest power for religious teaching that we have, I do not refer to them alone. I am conscious that the example of devoted men and women, the result of the inevitable social relations, and, above all, the influence of piety in the home, are all forces of immense significance. While certain formalities of the past may have lost the hold they once had, I do not see any diminution of the steadfastness of the religious convictions of the people. If these were broken down society might go on for a time under its own momentum, but it would be headed for destruction."

"The very fact that amid all the complexities and distractions of our present life we are still maintaining unimpaired the foundations of our institutions, constantly increasing the rectitude with which the great business affairs of our country are conducted, all the while improving our educational facilities, answering more and more generously to the calls of public and private charity, continually enlarging the field of art, giving more and more attention to humanities and becoming more and more responsive to spiritual things, appears to me to be incontrovertible evidence that though it may be practiced in a somewhat different manner than formerly the deep and abiding faith of our people in religion has not diminished but has increased."

"There is no form of education which will not fail, there is no form of government which will not fail, there is no form of reward which will not fail. Redemption must come through sacrifice, and sacrifice is the essence of religion. It will be of untold benefit if there is a broader comprehension of this principle by the public and a continued preaching of this crusade by the clergy. It is only through these avenues, by a constant renewal and extension of our faith, that we can expect to enlarge and improve the moral and spiritual life of the nation."

WHAT AM I THANKFUL FOR?

I'm thankful for each happy day
I see a little child at play;
For every blessed flower that grows
For each refreshing stream that flows;
For mountains towering to the skies,
For every bird that sings and flies,
I'm thankful for the rain and sun,
For robes of green the earth has spun
Upon its loom of nights and days,
From sunset threads of gold and rays
Of light the sun doth wean
From out the ocean's breast of green,
To climb the sunlit stairs to God,
And drop again to bless the sod.
I'm thankful for the Hope that springs
Eternal in my heart, and sings
Within me all the winding way
When glory crowns the parting day.
I'm thankful for some work to do
I'm thankful that God gave me you!
That friends He's sent me undeserved
Who love have given unreserved.
I'm thankful for my cot at night
And for the breaking of the light
That summons me to work or play
Another wondrous, happy day.
And as again the season brings
Thanksgiving Day, around which clings
A thousand memories of old.
A thousand precious bands of gold,
Which bind me to the other ways,
Those other precious friends and days.
The day itself, thank God! it sings
A myriad blessed whisperings!

WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY?

What is Christianity? Is it the Nicene Creed? That is a great creed, I think the greatest of all the Creeds. But it is not Christianity. What is Christianity? Is it the Catholic Church, or the Episcopal Church, or the Baptist, or the Presbyterian Church? No. These are important. They have made great contributions, but they are secondary. They are not Christianity. What is Christianity? Is it baptism or the Lord's Supper? They are very beautiful symbols and those of us who know them find in them deep significance. But they are not Christianity.

What is Christianity? Christianity is the spirit and quality of life breathed into people from fellowship with Jesus, and the people in whom it is you will find among all Creeds and Churches. Father Damien, the Catholic, going out to help the lepers and, as Robert Louis Stevenson said, shutting the door of his own sepulchre—that is Christianity. George Fox, the Quaker, proving the reality of the inner light that God had given him by the radiance of his living—that is Christianity. The Protestant missionary, murdered by the Boxers in China, sending back word to his ten year old son that when grown he should go out to China to tell the people who had killed his father about the love of God—that is Christianity. And the folks whom we have known, through whom God hath shined marvelously to make life beautiful—our fathers and mothers and friends—they are Christianity. When you are all through discussing the formal and elaborate things that are needed for the improvement of the Church, this is what the Church needs most of all: more Christians, to whom Christianity is keeping fellowship with the Master and learning how to live.—From a Sermon by Dr. H. E. Fosdick.

A GREAT CELEBRATION.

It is a great thing to have passed through one hundred years in epoch-making times.

The more so when vital principles have been maintained, and the highest possible service has been rendered for world bettering.

A shining example is the Methodist Protestant Church which is now rounding out a century of history, and still holds inviolate the sacred trust handed down by its self-sacrificing founders, and striving to do its part to enthrone the Christ in human hearts at home and abroad.

Memorials of stone and bronze are reared to men and women who represent the highest type of character, evince steadfast devotion to ennobling ideals, achieve nation and world-enriching results such as genius and skill produce.

It would have been extremely reprehensible if our denomination had passed over in silence the hundredth anniversary of its organization.

The General Conference very properly provided for a Centennial Celebration, and left the details to be worked out by a committee of seven to be appointed by the President of the General Conference, he to be the chairman.

Whatever expression may be given to our appreciation of the heroic actions of our church fathers, whatever tangible result may be evolved in the effort to becomingly mark our denomination's progress, and what, under God, our church forces and agencies wrought, one very significant feature was decided upon by the General Conference.

It called upon all Methodist Protestants to signalize the completion of the first century of our church's development and of service to mankind by laying on the altar, each year of the quadrennium, the Budget in full.

It may be inferred that this requirement has not been taken very seriously by the rank and file of our people, although mitigating circumstances may be adduced in some sections, for we failed to reach the goal in the first year of this quadrennium, and the half of the second year has passed with similar result, although two Special Days have been observed, and most of the annual conferences have been held.

On account of this, and because the need of funds is so great and because many Sunday schools have asked for a Christmas Service, since the Board of Education no longer publishes one, now having Rally Day in lieu thereof, the Budget Council has had an attractive Christmas Service prepared for use by our Sunday schools in order to help the churches to raise their budget in full this year, and so worthily begin to commemorate our hundred years of existence.

Samples have been sent to the superintendents from Rev. F. A. Sexsmith's office, and it is earnestly hoped that all our Sunday schools will unite in holding a service, since it will directly aid the church in raising their Budget, and the Boards and Institutions will get their regular percentage.

We are rapidly approaching the time of the year when receipts from the churches are entirely insufficient for the Boards and Institutions to meet their regular obligations, and energetic efforts through holding a successful Christmas Service will, it is hoped, materially help to solve perplexing problems.

Remember we now celebrate our hundredth anniversary by "Laying upon the altars of our sanctuaries at once a worthy memorial to the Fathers, and a pledge of fidelity to their faith by carrying forward the great cause they established in the earth." We expect you to do your part therein. Fred C. Klein.

GOOD-BYE TO MOTHER.

A recent writer on the early Quakers says that the mother of the famous Isaac Hooper, when he was leaving home to begin life, said:

"As to manners, remember, boy, thou wilt never meet a man in the world whose place in it is higher than thine own—or lower."

The son going out into the world was then only fifteen years old. How many boys of that age would have wisdom and tact enough to form a code of manners of the great fact of the equality of men as children of God?

The spartan mother had but a narrow duty to fulfill to her departing son. He had but one business in life—to fight. At parting she gave him his shield and bade him hurry. Return with it, or upon it." Life is more complex in these modern days. Brute courage is no longer the only virtue, or the highest one that is now needed in the struggle.

One of the most success men of business in this country once said to a friend: "When I left home, a poor boy, to begin work, my mother said to me, 'Come back to me with clean hands, Joe—with clean hands;' and with God's help, I have tried to keep them clean for her."

A picture by a famous artist was exhibited at the World's Fair in Chicago, who was constantly surrounded by silent crowds, whose faces showed how deeply it touched them. It showed the kitchen of a farmhouse; the son of the family was starting out to begin life alone; box was packed ready to be carried out. His mother, a poor worn woman, held her hands upon his shoulders, looking straight into his eyes. There were no tears in her own eyes. She had no time for tears.

"What will you do out yonder?" her eyes asked, with desperate pleading. "Will you remember your home and your God? Will you come back to me the honest, good boy you are now?"

Thousands of men looked on that picture. They seldom made any comment on it; but hardened faces would grow tender, and keen eyes dim as they looked. Before each of them another woman's face rose, the mother whom he had left long ago, who had built such high, fond hopes upon him. What had he done? Had he kept faith with her?

In the background of each of our lives there is such a shadowy, waiting face—the mother who gave us life, at whose knee we prayed, who believed in us and loved us as no one else has ever done.

What can we tell her when we meet again? Have we kept faith with her?—Selected.

CONFERENCE DIRECTION.

The annual conference directed that the week beginning November 15th and ending November 22nd be observed as a week of prayer for the High Point College. The College is in great need of money. This money should be forthcoming at a very early date.

Pray that the dear Lord will help us to get the needed money, and pray the blessings of God upon our High Point College in every way.

Pastors and Sunday school superintendents are especially urged to call the attention of our people to this request, and all christians who read this are urged to join us in very earnest prayer for the college.

All our mid-week prayer meetings might well be given over to prayer for the college.

Pray most earnestly, and our prayers will bring God's blessings upon the college, and they will lead us into greater activity in getting the funds.

Faithfully yours, A. G. Dixon.

BEGINNING OUR HONOR ROLL, 1925--26.

Annual Conference Budget In Full.

1. Whitakers.

2. Fountain Place.

The next highest honor goes to who ever gets their A. C. B. in in full next. Besides the privilege of standing in these positions all the year there is the fine thing of having helped your conference over a tight place. When we help God's kingdom over a tight place anywhere we can claim the assurance of the text, "In as much as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

With the fine start and with the fine spirit of helpfulness shown in the standing vote on the conference floor we feel certain that there will be that finer spirit of co-operation in the early part of the year that will help the conference tide over without having to borrow for any of the needs. "Well begun is half done," and an early start assures a better finish and often a complete victory.

God bless every pastor and every charge and help us all to do all the work committed to our charge in this our new opportunity, remembering that each day God gives us a new chance.

A. G. Dixon.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC. GOD'S BOUNTIES.

T., Nov. 17. Bounty in nature. Ps. 106:10-24.
W., Nov. 18. Generous sharing. Acts 4:32-37.
T., Nov. 19. A kindly helper. Job 29:11-17.
F., Nov. 20. The Master's principle. Matt. 5:42; 19:21.

S., Nov. 21. Christian brotherhood. Jas. 2:14-26.

Sun., Nov. 22. Topic—God's Bounties: How can we share them with others? Deut. 28:1-9; Matt. 25:34-40. (Thanksgiving meeting.)

Plans For The Meeting.

It may not be necessary to decorate the room for our meetings every time, but this is one time when it will be fine to do so. The Christian Endeavor World suggests that we put up a motto and suggests this,—"Praise the Lord for His goodness," or some verse of praise. Then use all of autumn's bountiful supply of flowers, bright-colored leaves, fruits, corn and pumpkins and decorate gorgeously. For there is no other time in the year that we can decorate so colorfully as in the autumn. Make this a real feast of color and beauty and praise to the Father for His bounty to us. Have Thanksgiving poems recited and verses of praise from the Bible.

There is an old saying, "We never miss the water until the well runs dry." So many of us never take account of our blessings until we miss them, or they are taken from us, then instead of being glad for a time we had these blessings we complain and find bitter words because they are taken away.

Again the Bible says, "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." This is tragically true in the Christian life. No one can keep God's blessings for himself and have them increase, but to scatter them broad-cast even to the ends of the world they grow and increase. This is not only true of spiritual blessings but it is true of temporal blessings as well.

Our common blessings are the greatest blessings we have—the blessings of our five senses, the use of our limbs and well bodies. How seldom we thank God for them. Some one has said that we should thank God every morning that we have our right minds and all our faculties intact.

Give and receive abundantly. We have never seen what God would do for a person who would give and live as God has commanded us to give and live. His word throws out this challenge, "Give and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom." This has not reference to spiritual gifts, for it says "men shall give." It has reference to those things that men can give. Time, kindness, loving deeds, and money. A spirit of praise and thanksgiving will help us to give of ourselves to others in ways that will be helpful and that will help to establish the kingdom. When we stop and think it is marvelous the blessings we already enjoy. If such great blessings come from partial obedience what would be the result of perfect obedience.

Moody said, "God shall have one man that He can use as He will in so far as D. L. Moody can do His will." How wonderful would be the result if all we have and are were in His hands for service just as D. L. Moody was in God's hands for service. What gifts of money would flow into his treasury, what a host of volunteers there would be in His service! We would never again need to say "the harvest is white but the laborers are few." God gives abundantly. Would that we "thanked" abundantly.

"The man that can use his talents to make work for others is sharing his blessings with others in a very real way."

If we gave out God's abundant gifts to us more abundantly we would enjoy more abundantly all things that come from Him. And this we should do. We should be reservoirs that are constantly supplying needs around us, and then just as the reservoir is fresher, better, so we would be better prepared for service. The reservoir is always supplied with clear and better water because it passes on that which if not passed on would become stale and muddy and worthless. The Dead Sea is useless as a body of water because it does not throw off or has no out let of service to the country around about. It is so salt that it will not support life, because it constantly receives and never gives for the good of humanity or for either animal life.

S. S. Estey says, A just God has no favorites, and if you are a generous soul you do not want to be a favorite....His gifts are supplies for us to pass on to those more needy.

THE NINETY AND NINE.

"Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep that was lost." Luke xv. 6.

There were ninety and nine that safely lay

In the shelter of the fold,

But one was out on the hills away,

Far off from the gates of gold—

Away on the mountains wild and bare,

Away from the tender Shepherd's care.

"Lord, Thou hast here Thy ninety and nine;

Are they not enough for Thee?"

But the Shepherd made answer: "This of mine

Has wandered away from me.

And although the road be rough and steep

I go to the desert to find my sheep."

But none of the ransomed ever knew

How deep were the waters crossed;

Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through Ere he found His sheep that was lost.

Out in the desert He heard its cry—

Sick and helpless, and ready to die.

"Lord, whence are those blood-drops all the way

That mark out the mountain's track?"

"They were shed for one who had gone astray

Ere the Shepherd could bring him back."

"Lord, whence are thy hands so rent and torn?"

"They are pierced to-night by many a thorn."

But all through the mountains, thunder-riven,

And up from the rocky steep,

There arose up a glad cry to the gate of heaven,

"Rejoice! I have found my sheep!"

And the angels echoed around the throne.

"Rejoice, for the Lord brings back his own!"

WHEN A CHURCH BECAME A COMMUNITY CENTER.

A deserted old church in the mountains of Kentucky has just become a community center where a primitive and a mighty race are learning the principles of serving and giving.

As important as any religious mission that was ever undertaken is this movement the story of which has been told by American Red Cross public health nurses.

In a settlement lying partly in the blue section and sloping back to the hills where the sturdy mountain people live was once a little old church. It stood the test of years. Gradually it began to crumble. There was a campaign for funds. A new spire rises now near the site where the old one stood. The little old church had served its purpose. At least so the townspeople thought. But a Red Cross public health nurse came into the town. She realized the need for religion, as exemplified by the new church, but she realized something else also—that there were many people who were not going to church and who could be induced to go if only there were some community interest—some social purpose which would bring the people together. There was no money for a new building. Presumably there was no way to get the money. Then one day the nurse passed the little old church and a new vision came into being. It was bought for a song, it was renovated, it is now a flourishing community center. A social worker is on the job. Hundreds of children are getting a little of the happiness which belongs to them within its walls. They are learning how to cook, to sew and to do many other things. The little church where gospel tunes once were sung, still has its religious atmosphere. Hymns are nightly chanted, according to the beautiful old custom, by a choir of mighty mountain voices. An undenominational Sunday school class has been organized and the word of God is being heard as the mountain folk come together in a common effort to love, to serve and to grow happier.

The ideal of service is a dominating force in the peacetime program of the American Red Cross. If you believe in this ideal, as expressed in its disaster relief work, in the aid extended disabled veterans of the World War and the men of the Army and Navy and their families, in its crusade for health and disease prevention, in its first aid and water safety training and in the union of children in a common bond of unselfish service you will answer its Ninth Annual Roll Call. It comes this month, beginning with Armistice Day and ending with Thanksgiving. It costs but one dollar to join the fellowship but it gives you an unparalleled opportunity for missionary work of the highest type.

THE GOSPEL IN THE INTERNATIONAL SPHERE.

Christendom suffered grievously in the eyes of the non-Christian nations from the great war. She has suffered almost as much from a long series of smaller and less spectacular happenings. Can anyone maintain that Christendom has been generally kind, courteous, considerate, or even just, beyond other nations, in her treatment of the rest of the world? Or that it was someone else than Christendom that divided up Africa, parceled out its sphere of influence in China and put its stamp of inferiority upon the Hindus and the Japanese? Or is it any secret that India and China and Japan and Africa are right now in a deep and growing revolt at the way Christendom has handled herself toward them? Or does it surprise anybody that it is so? How will it fare with the Gospel if the impression goes round the world that the Christian nations, when they face other nations, are no better than the others not really Christian, or if Christian, still no better, no fairer, no more intent upon peace and friendship than the rest?

It is no answer to these things to say that the Christian nations are not really Christian. For other nations will only ask, "Why not?" Or to say that Christianity has not failed because it has never yet been tried. Not much can be said for a religion that can be in the world two thousand years and not even get itself tried. The truth is, rather, that these things, though easy to talk about and in principle easy to state, are in their working-out the most delicate, complicated, and difficult things in all the world. The application of the gospel is never easy. Even in your own home or your own church it is not always easy. In your city or your nation it is harder. In a world where nations are separated by languages, traditions, national ideals, religion, and selfish interests, it is incalculably more difficult. The Gospel in this present time has not fallen on easy days.

But the Gospel has fallen on days of opportunity such as never came before. And it is finding its way, and (though not to an extent or with a swiftness of which anyone can be proud) it is getting its way, among the great issues of the present time. Our intellectual reconstruction is well under way. The world of industry is fuller than it ever was of men who want peace and good will, and who are trying their best to find a way to it. Beneath all the pessimism that covers the surface of the international field are the seeds of altruism and idealism, sown broadcast during the world's greatest conflict, and striking deep roots in the hearts of a generation that has sinned and suffered greatly. But in all these fields there is no salvation apart from the thought, the prayer, the consecrated struggle of the people. Scholars, captains of industry, statesmen, rise out of the community. They reflect what the people want and what the people believe to be possible. In a democracy, whether of church or state or school, the leaders can lead only where the people will follow. The learning of the scholars leaves the common-wealth poor, in a great gulf yawns between the scholars and the people. Pioneers of good will in the world of affairs rest back upon the understanding and the appreciation of the people. Christian statesmen cannot force a laggard public opinion.

Carl S. Patton, D. D., Los Angeles, Calif., in Sermon before the National Council of Congregational Churches, Washington, D. C.

—The war clouds in Europe, caused by the dispute between Greece and Bulgaria, have blown over, thanks to the prompt action of the Council of the League of Nations.

WHILE CONTROVERSIALISTS SETTLE

The circumambient air seems full, these days, of sounds of disputings and scoldings, shoutings and threatenings. Militant theologians argue loudly and strenuously. Modernists and fundamentalists of the extreme and uncompromising order are exchanging verbal volleys, now and then hurling at each other what seems very much like old-fashioned anathemas. Leaders in science and religion are crossing swords here and there.

In the meantime what are we to do? Some of us are peaceably inclined and have no desire to participate energetically in the fray. We are not fitted, either by nature or training, for controversy. Perhaps a few brief counsels may be in order relative to our attitude and action while the war lasts.

Read the Bible faithfully. Read it not as a treatise on astronomy or geology or biology but as the Book of life. It is God's message to our souls, and any man who studies it earnestly and reverently will find the way of peace and truth and righteousness.

Pray persistently. Lay all perplexities upon the heart of God. Submit all problems to the Father of light. Talk to Him, in the secret place, with a wholesome boldness and a serene trustfulness. He will not fail us though the stars fall out of the heavens.

Be not afraid. Amid the noise and the tumult there are many good Christians who seem to fear that the Bible will be discredited, that the Church will disintegrate, that the foundations of religion and morals will be swept away, and that Christianity will lose its power. Fear not. The old Book will stand. Gibraltar may tumble into the ocean, but the Bible will remain. Infidels and atheists will continue to break their swords upon it and down to the end of time, seeking souls will find in it the instruction and comfort and inspiration and strength that they need. Be not afraid that science will overthrow religion for they are in absolute harmony, no matter what may be said by a certain type of professors in schools and colleges, who have acquired a little smattering of knowledge and who talk as egotistically and dogmatically as the ruler of the Vatican. Be not afraid that Christianity will go down in defeat.

Cling to Christ. That is the principal, the essential thing. Above the confusion of tongues, the babel of noises, the din of strife, the shouts of the combatants, there is heard the calm, strong voice of the Christ; "Believe in God, believe in Me." Above all facts, scientific and religious, there looms the supreme and stupendous fact of Christ.

Do all the good you possibly can do in Christ's name. The world has tremendous need of every-day, practical, productive Christianity. Is there danger, amid disputings and strivings, worrying over puzzles and problems, that we forget to be kind and gentle and just and helpful? By all means let us show our colors and not make the grievous mistake of failing to help the Lord against the mighty. But our supreme business is to serve, with devoted hearts and loving hands, to minister rather than to be ministered unto, to do daily those things which shall contribute to the advancement of God's kingdom on earth. Let not kindness become a lost art with any of us. It wonderful how doubts and fears, misgivings and frettings disappear when we get busy and keep busy, following the noble occupation of doing good in the name of Jesus.—United Presbyterian.

SPREAD THE LIGHT.

There is darkness, still, gross darkness, Lord.
On this fair house of Thine.
There are prisoners still in the prison-house,
Where never a light doth shine.
There are doors still bolted against Thee,
There are faces set like a wall,
And over them all the Shadow of Death
Hangs like a pall.
Do you hear the voices calling,
Out there in the black of the night?
Do you hear the sobs of the women,
Who are barred from the blessed light?
And the children—the little children,
Do you hear their pitiful cry?
O brothers, we must seek them,
Or there in the dark they die!
Spread the Light! Spread the Light!
Till earth's remotest bounds have heard
The glory of the living Word;
Till those that see not have their sight;
Till all the fringes of the night
Are lifted, and the long-closed doors
Are wide forever to the Light.
Spread—the—Light!
O then shall dawn the golden days
To which true hearts are pressing;
When earth's discordant strains shall blend
The one true God confessing;
When Christly thought and Christly deed
Shall bind each heart and nation,
In one Grand Brotherhood of Men,
And one high consecration.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Blessing Of Forgiveness.

Text: "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven." Psalm 32.1.

All stand in need of the forgiving grace of God. For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God. "The Lord looked down from heaven upon the children of men to see if there were any that did understand and seek God." The all-seeing eye could not find a single one who had lived entirely above sin. And here is His answer to His searching investigation: "They are all gone aside, they are all together become filthy, there is none that doeth good, no, not one." The entire world lay in darkness.

But full and entire forgiveness has been provided to cover this universal need. Jesus Christ died in man's stead, the just for the unjust, that repentance and remission of sins might be preached in His name. By the supreme sacrifice on the cross He has made a atonement for the sins of the whole world. He is therefore "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." "In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins."

First of all forgiveness confers

The Blessing Of A Clean Record.

The poor sinner has a bad record. All his many sins are recorded in the Record Book on high. Not the slightest sin of omission or commission is overlooked by the recording angel. And that dark record stands to face him in the day of judgment.

But when he comes to God like the penitent publican and cries, "God be merciful to me a sinner," the black record of sin is blotted out by the blood of Jesus. His sins are removed from him as far as the east is from the west. And the gracious Father of mercies blots them even out of His memory. He says, "I will remember them no more."

And now he has a clean record in the court of glory. Angels are made to rejoice over one sinner that repents and comes to God. The returned prodigal becomes a child of God and an heir of heaven. No longer does he lie under the condemnation of a just but broken law. The wrath of God is all turned away and the comfort of the spirit fills his soul.

And forgiveness confers

The Blessing Of Genuine Happiness.

The Psalmist thus describes his experience of forgiveness: "I waited patiently for the Lord: and he inclined unto me and heard my cry. He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God."

It is the song of praise that ascends from a happy heart. It is the joy of a soul freed from a most galling bandage,—a joy unspeakable and full of glory. It is a happiness that the world cannot give nor take away. It is a real foretaste of the joy that swells in tide on the othershore. "Blessed are the pure in heart," whose sins are all washed away in the blood of Jesus Christ.

And forgiveness also confers

The Blessing Of a Good Conscience.

Salvation from sin enables the believer to have "a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men." His soul is now filled with "peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ," yea, "the peace that passeth all understanding." Conscience no longer frowns with terrifying accusations. No longer does it pierce the soul with the awful sense of guilt. No longer does it darken the future with forebodings of despair. Conscience now smiles its approval. It now rules the spiritual realm with the dignity and happiness of a queen. It now imparts the blessed assurance of God's everlasting love.

And lastly forgiveness confers

The Blessings Of Immortality.

By means of the atonement Jesus Christ "hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." "He that believeth on the son hath everlasting life." Jesus said, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever."

In the place of the sins all taken away there comes the life hid with Christ in God, the life of love that passeth knowledge, the life of sonship with the Father of mercies. It is the large, full and abundant life, the life that increases more and more unto the perfect day. It is the life of everlasting bridehood with Christ.

"Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Jesus Christ, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

—The Word of Life.

ATTRACTIVE CHRISTIANS.

"My mind goes back," said a man recalling college days, "to a social affair to which were invited all the students, professors, and friends of the college. While the rest of the assembly were moving about, shaking hands and exchanging greetings, Dr. C. was sitting in one corner of the spacious room. A few of us students began to talk with him. He led the conversation into paths which were new to us. Other students left the delights of hand-shaking, joined the group, and listened with strained attention to catch every word which the man of wisdom spoke. He talked to us of human anatomy, and we listened better and learned more than we would had we been attending a prescribed lecture by the regular professor, because Dr. C. had a way of making knowledge attractive. He was not eloquent, he spoke easily and quietly, but there was in his manner a magic which was nothing less than magnetic."

"Dr. C." he continued, "not only made secular learning attractive; he made religion attractive also. He talked about going to church in such a way that interest was aroused, and his students found new motives for being faithful to their religious obligations."

This earnest Christian found a way to influence others for Christ in the midst of the ordinary experiences of life. We make a mistake if we think that in order to make our lives count in Christian service we must be picked up by the almighty hand of God and set down in another part of the world, or that we must be given some unusual opportunity. A man who paints houses, wears jumpers, and climbs up the sides of houses ought not to think that, unless he wears a starched collar, a white necktie, and can throw his voice out over an audience with oratorical precision, he is at all handicapped in doing service for the Master. He has the privilege of so cultivating the powers that lie within him that he shall be able to make his religion so attractive that others will be drawn to Christ to seek in him the same qualities of attractiveness.

Dan Crawford, missionary to Africa, exhibited this quality. "One day," said a companion, "we went to the railway station to bid good-by to one of our friends who was leaving the town. Mr. Crawford started to speak to two natives who were standing on the platform. Within a few minutes a crowd of natives—at least 75—were pushing each other in their efforts to get near enough to Mr. Crawford to hear what he was saying. The station master came up and said:

"You may not hold a meeting here on the platform, as we do not allow it."

"Why," answered Mr. Crawford, "I was not holding a meeting. I simply began to speak to two of these natives, and the rest came to listen!"

It is often in just such quiet and unassuming ways that Christians are able to attract others to the Source whence they themselves draw their supplies. A Sunday school teacher who did not have a great knowledge of the Bible, but who had the faculty of making attractive the knowledge he possessed, was able so to hold up before the boys who came to his class from Sunday to Sunday the manhood of the Master, that they were constrained to devote their lives to Christ and His service.

When we understand that great things are wrought in the Kingdom "not by might, nor by power," we shall be more content to let the Holy Spirit work quietly and attractively in and through us.

A REGULAR THANKSGIVING DINNER.

"I wish we could have a really, truly Thanksgiving this year, Mother! A Thanksgiving with a great big turkey and cranberry sauce. I wish we could have a huge dish of fruit in the center of the table with raisins and figs and nuts! We haven't had a regular turkey dinner since before the war, Mother! Each year you've said, 'It doesn't seem right to spend so much money for a turkey! so many people are hungry and chicken tastes almost as good!' Don't you think we might begin again this year, Mother?"

Archie looked straight into Mother's eyes as he asked all these questions. Mother looked straight in to his as she answered, "Yes, Archie, let's begin again. Let's have a regular old-fashioned Thanksgiving dinner. Just the kind we used to have!"

The day before Thanksgiving Mother said, "Archie, I have an idea. We've always ordered our turkey from Mr. Hutchinson. But suppose this year we do something really exciting! Suppose we go down to the big market and pick out the very fattest, tenderest turkey! Suppose we carry him home in our arms, the way people used to, years ago?"

"Splendid!" cried Archie. "What time can we start?"

"Let's be ready at half past two! The market will be crowded and we want plenty of time. Kitty will want to come and her legs can't hurry as fast as yours. The pies are ready. We will carry the turkey, the nuts and the fruit."

Kitty squealed with delight when Archie told her she could carry the turkey home.

Never before had Archie or Kitty been to the great market. Every one seemed in a hurry! Every one smiled! Strangers spoke to one another. The whole market was noisy with laughter and good cheer.

On and on they walked till they reached the end of the booths. Then Kitty lisped, "I'm tired! Can't walk no farther!"

"Very well, I'll give Archie the money and let him buy the dinner all himself. We will wait across the street in that pretty flower shop!"

Mother handed her pocketbook to Archie saying, "You'll find twelve dollars. I know you'll get the nicest turkey in Faneuil Hall Market! I leave the matter entirely to you, Archie. Give the turkey to Nora when we get home. Tomorrow you can arrange the fruit and plan the dinner. Father, Kitty and I will play we are your guests."

Archie held the pocketbook very tight. Twelve dollars! And all that he had to buy was a turkey, nuts and fruit. Archie opened the pocketbook and counted out twelve crisp bills. Never had he felt so rich. Never had he realized that a Thanksgiving dinner could cost so much. And the pies and vegetables were at home too. Archie closed the pocketbook and looked up to find an old man watching him.

The man smiled and asked, "Buying your Thanksgiving dinner?"

"Yes, are you?" smiled Archie.

"Well, no, not exactly," said the man.

"It's the day before Thanksgiving. You haven't much time. I'm going to buy my turkey now," said Archie.

"May I watch you?" asked the man.

"Come on," laughed Archie. Together Archie and the man walked from booth to booth. The man poked the turkeys and looked very learned. Suddenly he exclaimed, "This is a beauty. Not so big as some, but young and tender."

"How do you know so much about turkeys?" asked Archie.

"I used to have one of these booths. I may not know much about some things but I do know a turkey when I see one."

"I'll buy this turkey," announced Archie to the salesman behind the scales. "How much does he cost?"

"Eight dollars," answered the salesman.

Archie counted out the eight dollars, took his turkey, turned to the man and said, "That leaves four dollars for fruit and nuts. Why don't you buy yours now?"

"I can't," groaned the man. "I shouldn't have come. I knew I couldn't buy one this year. My little Elsie is sick. The only thing she wants is a turkey. She says she will get well if she sees a real turkey. She says she can't get well. If she could—if she could, we wouldn't need any cranberry sauce or turkey to make us thankful."

Suddenly Archie had an idea.

The man was still thinking when the salesman walked up to him and handed him a package saying, "The boy told me this belonged to you, Mr. Righter! It's good to see you here again."

Mr. Righter looked at the salesman "Where is that boy?"

"Don't know, never saw him before, he's been gone ten minutes."

Archie hurried to the flower shop his arms laden with packages.

That night as Mother tucked him in bed he whispered, "Suppose the—turkey isn't—"

"I know it's to be the best turkey I ever tasted. Now go to sleep, dear, and tomorrow we'll have a regular old-fashioned Thanksgiving dinner."

At one o'clock Mother, Father, Kitty and Archie walked into the dining room. In the center of the table in Grandma's old silver cake dish were exactly four oranges, four figs, a tiny bunch of raisins and a handful (one of Kitty's handfuls) of nuts.

"How pretty the table looks!" exclaimed Mother.

"Yes," said Father, the table does look pretty."

Kitty jumped from toe to toe echoing "How pretty! How pretty!"

Archie cleared his throat. "It doesn't look pretty. There's not going to be any turkey, either. Chickens are almost as good and we'll all be thankful because—"

Then, while every one ate their tomato bisque, Archie told his story.

When he finished Mother said, "I wish we knew the man's name."

"We'll go to the market tomorrow and see if our salesman can tell us," said Father.

At that moment Nora walked into the dining room carrying a large platter. And on it was—a regular Thanksgiving turkey! In his breast fluttered a slip of paper. Father opened it and read, "Here's a turkey instead of the chicken you ordered. I'm thankful there are boys willing to give their turkeys away. We men at the Market know Mr. Righter. We wanted to do something for him. You showed us how. This is from the fellows in the Market." Joseph Bellows.

The next day Father telephoned Joseph Bellows. He told him he was a doctor and wanted to see if anything could be done for Elsie—

I might tell you a long, long story about how Elsie got well. But I haven't time. Elsie smiles every time any one speaks of her sickness. She says: "I knew a real turkey's wishbone would make all our wishes come true!"—Selected.

ADJUSTING THE BURDEN.

Two city youths were tramping through the hill country of one of our Eastern States. Late in the afternoon of their last day they were trudging bravely up the slope of a long hill. As they neared the top, one of them, a rather frail, delicate young man, remarked to his companion:

"If some one had told me two weeks ago that I could tramp almost twenty miles through these hills and carry forty pounds of baggage on my shoulders and not be worn out by nightfall, I might have thanked him for the compliment, but I think I would have doubted its sincerity. Now I am actually doing it, and what is even more wonderful, doing it without excessive fatigue."

"Yes," he continued, "I guess there really is a great art in becoming accustomed to things in this world. Take the matter of carrying this baggage. Do you remember our first day? It seemed to me I never could get adjusted to the weight and irregularities of this bundle. Every time I moved it hurt me in a new place. Had to stop and rest every mile or two, as you remember. Gave out completely the middle of the first afternoon. A hill like this—Well, I would never have gotten to the top, that's all. But now"—he laughed and gave the bundle a twist—"it's wonderful what folks can stand when they become accustomed to it."

It is, indeed, wonderful to think of the burdens some folks can carry from day to day and still bear up and fare cheerfully on. Burdens of loneliness, burdens of business trouble, burdens of physical pain and suffering, of sorrow and bereavement—we do not have to look far in any direction in order to learn that the world in which we live is a world of burden bearers.

Sometimes, it is true, these burdens are hidden from human eyes. There are griefs that hang no crape from their doors and give no outward manifestation of their presence to the world. There are sorrows that are stifled for the sake of others, disappointments that are met with a smile, lest some one else should note the heaviness of the burden and give way to discouragement. It must have been of these that the poet was thinking when he wrote:

"If singing breath or echoing chord
To every hidden pang were given,
What endless melodies were poured,
As sad as earth, as sweet as heaven."

It is not easy always to adjust ourselves to our burdens. Some of us, unfortunately, never do. We cry out against them, complaining bitterly of divine injustice. We carry them, yes, but most grudgingly, querulously; and as a consequence the load is bound to chafe and irritate.

Others learn to accept their burden in the spirit of serene surrender, as a part of life's discipline ordered for them by an all-wise Teacher. When one takes this attitude, it is wonderful what strength he will find. He may discover that God does not always take away his burden or even lighten it; but that God does show him how to bear it, how to adjust it so that it will neither crush nor overwhelm, but instead become a daily challenge to latent powers and hitherto unsuspected strength. Best of all he will find that Christ will walk with him and bear the heavier end of the load.—Forward.

Sun., Nov. 15. Topic—How can we overcome the Spirit of Lawlessness? Rom. 13:1-8.

Some Bible Hints.

However imperfect authority is, the idea of authority is divine, and without it the world would fall to pieces (v. 1).

Law is supported by our doing good, refusing to grasp at the rights of any one (v. 3).

Authorities are "ministers of God's service." If they are false, they are false to God, and must answer to Him. Our duty is to do right anyway (v. 6).

Love solves all problems. When people can be led to love one another there will be no theft or wrong-doing (v. 8).

A selfish person is usually a law breaker. The spirit of selfishness is the essence of law breaking. A selfish person will break every law of courtesy, the home, the school, the state, the country and taken out of a person he would keep every law, civil and scriptural. The only cure for selfishness is Jesus and His power to change hearts.

News Papers Advertise Law Breaking.

Every day the newspaper dump the broken laws into our homes and teach our children the clever trick by which it was done. These stories foster law breaking and the children begin planning how to go it one better. The sad part about it is that in too many of our homes there is no counter teaching. The child is allowed to read and no one explains the awfulness of crime, no one calls attention to the underlying selfishness that caused the crime. The wit and the daring of the act excites the imagination of the child and in his play he tries to imitate the criminal and do just a little more. And the first seed of crime and of law breaking is planted in the mind and begins to grow and no one takes thought or plants any truths that will counteract the facts gathered from the newspapers. Teach children to obey in the home, they will then obey in school and later on there will be no temptation to disobey the laws of the land. This train can be best done by teaching children religion.

Law Breaking is a Disgrace.

In some lands it is not the wrong that is the disgrace but being found out, or caught up with that is the shame. We call these lands heathen. In America we are coming to look upon law breaking as a smart trick and being found out and caught up with as hard luck at the most. Law breaking is a disgrace and a life long shame and should be regarded as such and until people regard it as such we will have law breakers. We must teach our children from early childhood to regard it as a disgrace and as a blighting shame.

Pray for Authorities.

Pray for our men in authority and for those who ought to make good laws and help to keep them. I heard a man say the other day when speaking of some law breakers "I knew that when those men defied God as they did that if the people prayed as they should God would take a hand in the affairs of the community and sure enough he did." Prayers changes things. Prayer will change even the citizenship of a community. If God cannot change hearts so that they become lawabiding and the community can be a lawabiding community at the request of those in the community He can and does move people out and other people in and the scenes change and we get our heart's desire for our communities. If we realized the power of prayer we would do more praying and God would do more for our communities.

Some Quotations.

The following from the "Endeavorer's Daily companion" are so good and so appropriate that we give them here.

"Man cannot break a divine law. He can break himself against one."—A. Nash.

"What can you expect from the people if high officials disregard law and set it aside with impunity."—Senator Norris.

"The official who neglects to enforce the law is a traitor to his country, his oath, and his God."—A. Lynons.

"The law keeping spirit is fostered in the home. Children who learn obedience there practice it in the state. The germ of lawlessness is disobedience in the home."—Anon.

Quoting from the Greensboro Record written by Bishop Murray we have this: "Youth is rampant and aflame, but keen and susceptible of being molded into a vital force for good. The neglect of 'Youth's regard for the law is chargeable to youth's elders."

"The church must help by living with youth, and supplying the young with a program of life.

"Fundamentally, youth has not changed except for the better."

Hugh S. Magill in an article in the "International Journal of Religious Education" says.—

"To every youth there openeth a big way and a low,
And every youth decideth the way his soul shall go."

"Young people get an abundance of advice and admonition. What they need is the convincing proof of lives that demonstrate day by day that the best life, the only worthwhile life, is the clean, strong, upright life. The true worth of a man is the strength of his personality, the quality of his soul.

"Every intelligent young person knows that there are physical laws that must be reckoned with. They know that results follow causes, and that all must pay the penalty for violation of these laws. What is true of physical laws is no less true of moral and spiritual laws. The higher, nobler qualities of manhood can be developed only through obedience to these laws, and their violation must inevitably bring moral and spiritual ruin.

"The youth of today face opportunities never dreamed of by any previous generation. Modern discovery and invention have released forces which, if mastered and rightly used, make possible marvelous achievements. But these same forces may bring destruction. To be able to control and use them, and not be destroyed by them, requires moral strength.

"The future of civilization is dependent upon the development of those strong, enduring moral and spiritual qualities through which the soul of man obedient to the highest laws of God, maintains supremacy over material forces and rises triumphant over those influences which degrade, drag down and destroy.

"This is the challenge to the youth of today."

THE HAPPY LIFE.

How happy is he born and taught
That serveth not another's will;
Whose armor is his honest thought,
And simple his utmost skill!
Whose passions not his masters are,
Whose soul is still prepared for death,
Untied unto the worldly care
Of public fame, or private breath;
Who envies none that chance doth raise,
Or vice who never understood
(How deepest wounds are given by praise!)
Nor rules of state, but rules of good;
Who hath his life from rumors freed;
Whose conscience is his strong retreat;
Whose state can neither flatterers feed,
Nor ruin make oppressors vreat:
Who God doth late and early pray,
More of His grace, than gifts, to lend,
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious book or friend!
This man is freed from service bands
Of hope to rise or fear to fall,
Lord of himself, though not of lands;
And having nothing, yet hath all.

SLUMBER SONG.

This Slumber Song was written by Louis Ledoux. If you want to go to sleep you should quietly relax in bed; then say the lines of the Song slowly, drowsily, while the mind tries to see the sheep coming down the dusty road and making their way to the fold, while the shepherd sings low.

Drowsily come the sheep
From the place where the pastures be,
By a dusty lane
To the fold again,
First one, then two, and three—
First one, then two, by the paths of sleep,
Drowsily come the sheep.

Drowsily come the sheep,
And the shepherd is singing low;
After eight comes nine,
In a dusty line
They come, and then in they go—
First eight, then nine, by the paths of sleep,
Drowsily come the sheep.

Drowsily come the sheep,
And they pass through the sheep-fold door;
After one comes two,
After one comes two,
After two comes three and four,
First one, then two, by the paths of sleep,
Drowsily come the sheep.

POND-LILIES.

Gertrude Fisher Scott.

"Oh, Charlotte, what a beautiful pond-lily! Where did you get it?" asked Mary, as her little friend came upon to the piazza.

"Mother gave it to me; she has lots of them. A friend brought her a basketful this morning. She said one of her boys got them in the lake."

"What lake?"

"Why, ours, of course. There are thousands of them up in the cove near the ice-house."

"But how do you get them?"

"Oh, you have to row up there in a boat and pull them up out of the water. They don't grow very near the shore."

"Can you row?"

"A little. Can't you?"

"Yes—with one oar, anyway."

"Why did you want to know?"

"I was just thinking I'd like to get some lilies for my mother. She hasn't had any this year and I heard her say the other day that she loved them. Do you think we could?"

"Of course—if we had a boat—and our mothers let us."

"You'd better ask yours—mine's away for the afternoon at a party at Mrs. Baker's."

"Mine's there too. But she said I could stay with you until she stopped here on her way home."

"Well, Bridgie's the only one home in my house to ask. But she's gone up to her room to rest and told me not to disturb her. Perhaps if we hurried we could go and get back before she comes downstairs."

"But where are we going to get a boat?"

"I know where father keeps his padlock key. All we have to do is to go down to the landing and unlock it. The oars are under the back piazza. We can each carry one. Shall we?"

"Yes—I guess it's all right—if you're sure your father won't care."

"Oh, I'm sure he won't. He always says anybody can take his boat if they'll only bring it back again just as they found it."

"And your mother?"

"Oh, she lets me go places—sometimes—without asking her. She won't mind. I'll run in the house and get the key, and then we can start."

"All right. Any cookies?"

"Um—fresh ones that Bridgie made this morning! I'll bring a box of them."

Shortly afterward the two girls, munching the cookies, made their way down to the landing where a half-dozen or so row-boats, belonging to the summer cottagers, were fastened. Generally there were some boys about who would have helped them, but this afternoon there wasn't one in sight. They had some difficulty at first with the padlock, but finally got it unlocked. Then they jumped into the boat and, each taking an oar, started off.

But for a time they didn't make much progress and couldn't seem to take their strokes together. One would dip down too deep into the water and the other just barely skim the surface, or suddenly one would "catch a crab" and send the water all over the side of the boat. They didn't say much, for it was hard work and the oars were heavy and the sun overhead was very hot.

Finally, in a disgusted voice, Mary said, "I thought you said you could row, Charlotte!"

"And you said you could, too."

"Well, I can, but we don't do it very well together. Suppose you let me try alone. I think I can do better that way."

"All right—and I'll row alone when we come back."

"But be careful when you get on to the other seat. My father says it's very dangerous to change when you're in deep water."

"Oh, don't worry, I know how," and Charlotte managed it very well, and when she had settled herself comfortably, Mary took both oars and began rowing again.

But still they didn't make much progress. To tell the truth, although Mary wouldn't have admitted it then for anything, she had never done any rowing alone before except up close to the shore where the water was very shallow. This trying to cross the lake was an entirely different matter, and her arms ached with the effort she was making. Still, she kept at it without a murmur and improved ever so slightly, the farther on she went.

After what seemed hours Charlotte said: "It looks to me as if we were going to have a storm. See how dark it's getting! Don't you think we ought to turn round and go back? We're only as far as the ice-house."

"Oh, no," answered Mary confidently, "I don't believe it will rain. It got dark like this yesterday afternoon, but it didn't amount to anything. We'll be at the 'Y. M.' in just a few minutes, and that's where we start up into the cove, isn't it?"

"Yes, if we ever get there, but the wind's coming up. Se how different it makes the water look. It will be harder for you to row now. Please turn round, Mary."

Mary was obstinate. "No," she said, "it isn't any harder. See, I can make the boat go all right. There's nothing to worry about; we'll be in the cove in just a little while."

But even as she spoke, the wind began blow harder and big drops splashed down. "There—I told you so," said Charlotte, "it's beginning to rain and we'll get through and perhaps drowned. O dear wish I hadn't come."

"Stop crying, you big silly, we're all right. The wind won't blow us over in this big bottomed boat; it's taking us right over the shore. I can't row any more, so I might as well stop trying," and she took them into the boat and laid them down on the bottom.

By this time Charlotte was down on the bottom too with her head in her lap, and was crying hard. It was scary—it was dark, and raining in torrents. The wind blew furiously and broke down great limbs of trees. Lightning flashed and the thunder crashed. Big waves broke against the boat and splashed over it. Mary was frightened too, but not a tear did she shed—she just straight up on the seat and clung tightly to it.

If, up to the time of the breaking of the storm, their progress had been slow, now it was alarmingly rapid and before they knew they had been carried directly out of the course and hard up against the opposite shore under a clump of button-ball bushes.

"Oh!" screamed Charlotte, not knowing what had happened to them.

"We're all right," said Mary, "you can get up now. We're up on the shore, near Professor's. I can see his silo through the trees."

"But we're a long way from home and soaking wet. How can we walk all that way?"

"Oh, don't worry! We'll get there all right when the storm's over. See, it's getting lighter now. I think we'd better pull the boat as far as we can, and then go up to the house and wait until it stops raining."

"But I don't know them, do you?"

"No, but that doesn't make any difference. They'd take anybody into their house in a storm like this."

So they tugged and pulled at the boat and then hurried in the wind and rain, amid falling branches, across the road and up the hill to where a big white farmhouse stood. As they stepped, breathless and terrified, up on to the side piazza the door opened and a pleasant-faced woman with half a dozen children around her greeted them. "You poor things, come right in out of the rain. What ever the world sent you out in a storm like this! Take off your wet clothes the first thing you do, and I'll get you some dry ones to put on and something hot to drink. It's the worst storm we've had this summer—almost like little tornado. I guess we'll find later on that it's done a great deal of damage round here."

She hurried the two girls upstairs and answered their questions as she helped them change their clothes. After a little she said: "We girls certainly might have been much worse off than you are. We'd better telephone your mothers that you're here; for they won't know that you started out for pond-lilies. I'll tell them when my husband comes in, he'll tell you home in no time in his car. He and the men went haying this morning down to the other part of the town. Guess they'll be home enough when they get here!"

By the time the two girls went downstairs they had got over their fright but were very sober. Mary had done most of the talking and said she would call up her mother on the telephone. She knew she had done wrong in going out on the lake without permission and in taking Charlotte with her. She expected to be punished, she knew she deserved it, but she didn't want her little friend to be too, so she truthfully explained the whole thing to her mother and asked her to tell Mrs. Lane what had happened and where Charlotte was. And the last thing Mrs. Proctor heard her say was, "But, mother, please remember that I wanted to get the pond-lilies for you because you said you would like some."

So when she had hung up the receiver and joined the others, Mrs. Proctor said, "Come into the front room, girls, I want to show you something."

There on the table was a great green bowl filled with lovely white, waxy pond-lilies. "See these, children. My husband got them up in the cove for me yesterday. You can take them all to your mothers if you'd like to, and any time you want more if you'll come up here I'm sure Mr. Proctor will go with you to get them if he isn't busy. But I don't think it's a good idea for you to go after them alone."

But Charlotte said, "Thank you—I don't think I care for any—my mother has a lot that a friend gave her this morning."

And Mary said, "And I don't believe I want any either. I don't like them as well as I did before. They'll always remind me of something now—but thank you just as much."

Then a rather subdued little girl went over to the window and looked out on the lake where whitecaps were still dancing on the dark troubled water and trees were still bending under the sweep of the wind. And Mrs. Proctor, knowing what was going on in her mind, let her stand there, but she took Charlotte out into the kitchen to play with the other children.—Zion's Herald.

FOR HIS MOTHER'S SAKE.

The florist's boy had just swept some broken and withered flowers into the gutter when a ragged urchin darted across the street. He stooped over the pile of mangled flowers, and came upon a rose seemingly in better condition than the rest. But as he tenderly picked it up the petals fluttered to the ground leaving only the bare stalk in his hand.

He stood quite still, and his lips quivered perceptibly. The florist's boy who had been looking at him severely, felt that his face was softening. "What's the matter with you, anyway?" he asked.

The ragged little fellow choked as he answered: "It's for my mother. She's sick, and she can't eat nothing, and I thought if she'd a flower to smell it might make her feel better."

"Just you wait a minute," said the florist's boy as he disappeared. When he came out upon the sidewalk he held in his hand a beautiful half-opened rose, which he carefully wrapped in tissue-paper; then he said, "take that to your mother."—Selected.

THANKSGIVING.

Thankful for the glory of the Red, White and Blue,
For the spirit of America that still is staunch and true,
For the laughter of our children and the sunlight of their eyes
And the joy of radiant mothers and their evening lullabies;
And thankful that our harvests wear no taint of blood to-day,
But were sown and reaped by toilers who were light of heart and gay.
Thankful for the riches that are ours to claim and keep,
The joy of honest labor and the boon of happy sleep,
For each little family circle where there is no empty chair
Save where God has sent the sorrow for the loving hearts to bear.
And thankful for the loyal souls and brave hearts of the past
Who builded that contentment should be with us to the last.
Thankful for the plenty that our peaceful land has blessed,
For the rising sun that beckons every man to do his best
For the goal that lies before him and the promise when he sows
That his hand shall reap the harvest undisturbed by cruel foes;
For the flaming torch of justice symbolizing as it burns
Here none may rob the toiler of his prize he fairly earns.
To-day our thanks we're giving for the riches that are ours,
For the red fruits of the orchards and the perfume of the flowers,
For our homes with laughter ringing and hearthfires blazing bright,
For our land of peace and plenty and our land of truth and right;
And we're thankful for the glory of the old Red, White and Blue
For the spirit of our fathers and a manhood that is true.

THE BOY WHO WORKS.

Do you feel many days that you have had a hard time? Your hours are long. Your task is hard and wages small. The contents of your weekly pay envelope will scarcely carry you over the week. Sometimes you must wear patched trousers or a frayed coat. Your employer expects a great deal from you. Other fellows dress well and always have money. They have coddling fathers and mothers, while you toil six days a week to make a living.
Never mind, young man. You are ahead of the boy who has every luxury at home. You are getting experience that he must get somehow later on. Because, sooner or later, he must fight the real battle of life himself. And you have the advantage. While life has been made easy for him, he lacks drill and discipline which every life-soldier must go through. You are preparing your self. He may go in without preparation and fail.
Work is a great blessing. You can not see now, but some day you will say that you were fortunate in your boy-hood days because you were compelled to work. Because one cannot get power to do things save by doing them. Look over the successful men you know. Get their history. Nearly every one was compelled to work in boyhood. They toughened their muscles by hard work, and sharpened their brains by looking out for themselves.

Work makes men. Luck usually fails. Pluck nearly always wins. To succeed in anything one must overcome obstacles. Force and fiber are built by hardships. Grit is as necessary in the making of a man as gumption. Hardships are not always handicaps. Often they are helpers. You will understand this better in twenty years. Meantime, permit one who has lived that twenty years and more to advise you in this.—Selected.

A THANKSGIVING FEAST.

It was the day before Thanksgiving and Mrs. Frazer had gone to the station to meet the "company." She took Eddie and Ruth, but she didn't take Emily and Bob. The car would be too crowded, she said, but later she wished she had made room for the lively twins.

She knew they minded pretty well, so she told them all the things not to do.

- Don't light matches.
- Don't eat anything.
- Don't go out the gate.
- Don't turn on the faucets.

"I'll hurry right back, so behave yourselves," she said, as she started off.

Emily and Bob leaned against the fence and looked wistfully up and down the street. It was cold and bleak and the dry brown leaves rustled in the gutter.

Suddenly Bob turned.

"Oh, I have the best idea," he cried. "Let us have our store right here near the street and sell things."

"What things?" demanded Emily.

"Oh, anything," replied Bob.

"We dassn't," said Emily.

"Mother didn't say not to," replied Bob. "Besides we can just pretend to sell. It won't be any fun just us two playing store together."

This seemed quite reasonable, so Emily helped bring out the sewing table over which she spread a clean tea cloth. When that was done, Lewis, the big boy next door, called out and asked them what they were going to sell.

"Things for Thanksgiving!" replied Emily, and that gave Bob another idea. He darted into the house and in a moment out he came bearing one of his mother's beautiful pies in his hands.

"Oh, Bob, that's awful wicked," cried Emily.

"It was sitting out to cool," said Bob, "and the air won't hurt. We won't really sell it."

"But s'pose somebody wants to buy it," objected Emily.

"We'll say it's five dollars and nobody will buy it," Bob replied. "We'll charge an awful lot for everything."

"Oh!" squealed Emily. "What fun! there can't be a mite of wrong in that. Mother won't mind if we're careful."

Four pairs of eager hands set to work and soon the little table bore four magnificent pies, three beautiful cakes, cookies, cranberry sauce, and hanging above it from a branch of the maple tree, was a large turkey, plucked and ready for stuffing and roasting.

My, it was a luscious sight! Every one who passed stopped and inquired: "How much do you want for that pie, or cake?" But when Bob would reply "Five dollars," the customer would go away.

Such fun! "It's a wonder we never thought of this before," said Emily.

There were lots of people passing to and fro, and some of the boys looked as if they would like to grab some goodies off the table, if they dared.

At last a nice-looking young fellow sauntered up. He looked as if he might be a stranger in town for he carried a satchel. He paused longingly at the table.

"How much is that mince pie?" he inquired.

"Five dollars," replied Bob.

"All right," said the young man, feeling in his pocket.

Emily gave a cry of dismay, for the young man was holding out a bit of green fluttering paper which was certainly a five dollar bill.

"Well, hurry up and give me my package," said the customer, sternly. "I'm in a hurry. Make it snappy!"

Poor Bob, didn't know what to do, and while he stared about like one in a trance, the young man stepped into the yard, laid down the five dollars and took the pie.

"And the turkey?" he asked cheerfully. "How much is that? Oh, here is the tag: Ten dollars. All right. I'll take it."

"Oh, please sir!" protested Emily, beginning to find her tongue at last.

"All right," said the young man. "I'll get it myself. Here's your ten dollars."

He opened his satchel, which was a big stuffed the turkey in.

"Good-bye, and good luck!" he sang out as he walked briskly away.

Emily and Bob were so scared, they rushed and hustled about putting back what was left of their Thanksgiving feast. The fifteen dollars lay in Bob's trousers pocket.

"We must buy a new turkey," he told his sister.

"No use," she replied. "I think we ought to fess up."

"Guess you're right," said Bob, miserably. "We won't get spanked nearly so hard if we tell on ourselves."

"They won't find it out right off," said Emily in a comforting voice. "Anything might happen before it's found out."

Two very guilty-looking young ones crept from their playroom when they heard the latch turn in the front door and their mother's step in the hall. She had with her Ruth and Eddie and Aunt Eva and Uncle George. For a little while the twins almost forgot about their crimes they were so pleased with the "company." Then they all went into the living room, and then Mother said: "Here comes Dad. I'll go start the supper."

Aunt Eva said she'd help and they both went to the kitchen, and Mother was saying real loud, "I was lucky. I got a grand big turkey, and I've got all my pies baked. Come on and see them."

The twins ran to greet their father, but both of them were kind of absent-minded, as they were trying to listen to what was going on in the kitchen.

There wasn't a scream or a cry, or anything, and pretty soon Bob couldn't stand it any longer. He motioned to Emily and tipped into the kitchen. What was their surprise to see a large fine turkey on the table surrounded by all the pies, the mince too!

My, it was mystifying! Bob and Emily kept trying and trying to whisper in their mother's ear, but she didn't seem to notice them. They were just as quiet and subdued as two little mice and went to bed extra early without a word.

The next day the turkey was roasted and the feast was spread.

"Only," said Emily, "there's an extra place at the table."

More mystery! But as they were all sitting down, who should walk in and sit in the extra place but the young man who had bought the turkey!

He turned out to be Aunt Eva's younger brother, Clyde, and it was all a joke! Bob wanted to give back the fifteen dollars, but Uncle Clyde told him to buy something for himself and his twin which would help them remember that Thanksgiving always, and their Uncle Clyde.

"Oh, I'm so thankful!" sighed Emily.

Of course, they did buy something, though what it was I wasn't told, but I'm sure they never forgot that Thanksgiving Day.—Sel.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

English St. Church.—We are realizing some of the fruit from the tabernacle meeting which has just closed in High Point. Our Sunday school is increasing. We feel sure that the Stephens party were a great blessing to High Point.

We were very much pleased last Sunday with the stirring messages brought to us by Rev. T. M. Johnson, D. D., at the eleven o'clock hour. And Rev. J. W. Hulin at seven in the evening.

Bro. Johnson's message was mostly to parents in regard to training their children at home in the way they should go, the family altar and the word of God to be the most essential things in the home.

Bro. Hulin's message was to everyone who has accepted Christ. Go into my vineyard and work today. And a good message it was. We invite you again, brethren. Reporter.

Pullen.

Our hearts were made to go out in sympathy to Mrs. J. D. Pullen in the sickness and death of her husband. Mr. Pullen was born Oct. 27, 1868, and died Oct. 9, 1925. He was married to Miss Henrietta Bellamy Dec. 29, 1896. To this union were given six children; two dying in infancy. There remains to mourn their loss three sons, Arlie, Jimmie and Julian, and one daughter, Mrs. Jodie Evans. When quite a young man Mr. Pullen united with the Baptist church but in September, 1906, he joined the Methodist Protestant church with his wife, at Eden church on Halifax charge. Having lived a neighbor to us for several years I can say, we always found him to be a good neighbor. He was a good man to his family, always considerate of his companion. His last act on earth was one of helpfulness to her. On the 1st Sunday morning in Oct. he went out to catch a chicken for her, and while sitting on the doorsteps shelling corn, she heard the familiar call "Ret, come here;" on reaching him he said "I'm almost gone." She saw at once that he had had a stroke of paralysis. With the aid of the boys he was gotten to bed and a physician summoned. All that loving hands could do was done for him, but the kind Father saw fit to take him, so on the following Friday morning he passed away.

On Saturday afternoon he was laid to rest in the cemetery at Whitaker. Quite a large crowd was in attendance and the floral offerings were many and beautiful. Burial services were conducted by Rev. Fred W. Paschall. The home is made sad indeed by the absence of husband and father, and only God can comfort in such a trying hour, so we leave them in His tender care, and pray that they may be given grace and strength to say, Thy will be done.

Yadkin College.

Why Am I writing about Yadkin College? Is she not a thing of the past? Yes, in one way she is; her tall brick building is decaying and passing away, but she is still living in the lives of men and women and their children. I went through her class rooms, went in her auditorium and I stood and gazed upon what seemed a wreck of time; then I wandered down the hill through the massive oaks that had been a shade and comfort to many a student. Then I was in the village and did I see any effect of the College there? Yes, for she lives in the lives of the men and women written on the countenance of all that have come in contact with the College and also there was the same thing to be seen in the boys and girls. They are being trained by parents that were college trained so she is not dead but living on in the lives of people. Her seats are vacant, her bell rings no more on the hill, but her worth is being manifested in the lives of men and women. She helped make some of our best preachers in our C. C. Conference, Rev. S. W. Taylor, Rev. G. Curry and Rev. Robert Troxler. These and others she helped to train that they might be a blessing to mankind. No, old Yadkin is not dead but lives in the lives of her students. A live college, yes, we have one at High Point, N. C., much nicer than the old one, as good as can be found. Her bell is ringing and her study halls, her dormitories are alive with the voices of girls and boys being trained as good teachers as the land has. They are receiving training that will enable them to perform the duties of this life well. The moral and Christian training they receive will enable them to become the noblest work of God, an educated Christian man or woman. We are proud of our college and no father or mother could do better than to place their boys and girls under the training of care of her Christian Faculty, for they will take your boy or girl and return them to you educated, christianized and better qualified to solve the problems of this world. When our parents see the need of college-educated boys and girls, we will have better homes, better better counties, better states and a better nation. Our land will be safer, greater and better to live in, our charity homes, our reformatories, our chain gangs and penitentiaries, will be lonesome for occupants, Oh: may the parents of our land quickly see the need of a christian educated generation of boys and girls and send them to High Point College, for no better can be found.

She will take your boy, she will take your girl, she will treat them kind every day. She will ram and cram their heads full of knowledge, She will fill their hearts full of love for Jesus Christ and return them to you a noble man or woman.

High Point College, may you live long to bless and educate. W. L. Carson, Pastor.

Orange Charge.—Greetings: Am pleased to be assigned to serve you another year.

Will begin the preaching services 3rd Sunday 11 o'clock A. M. at Efland. The other churches may expect services as last year.

May it be our desire to make this the best year yet.

First quarterly conference will be called soon.

Sincerely, B. M. Williams.

Calvary.—It has been sometime since I have made any report to the Herald from Calvary and shall not have time and do not have the information in hand from different departments to make a full report. We have just closed a very successful year which has exceeded our hopes. I account for this from the fact that we have a faithful membership and Calvary was also fortunate in having one of the best preachers in the conference for first year and our hearts were made glad Monday by the information that our annual conference had seen fit to send him to us for another year. We feel that the prospects are good for a successful year. I would say that the success of Calvary church for the past year is due in a large measure to the faithful work of our good ladies. I don't believe any church has ever been blessed with a more faithful bunch of ladies. The following is a report of the Ladies' Aid.

Paid $250.00 on the church floor. Pledged $50. for 10 years on college. Pay $1. per week to have church cleaned. Furnished heavy furniture for pastor's home. Bought baby bed for hut. Sent flowers to 88 persons, eight designs. Made 250 visits. Pieced and sold five quilts. One was a memory quilt with 784 names embroidered on it and received $262.00 for same. Built church hut. Collected $70.20 on a brunswick stew, made a total of $755.20 this year. Made $1096.95 since our society was organized May 11, 1924.

We organized our Sunday school with Brother Hester Causey who has made a most efficient superintendent for the past as superintendent for the coming year and Brother Thomas Waugh as Secy. and Treas. with John W. Dixon assistant. I will try to give a fuller report soon.

A. C. Dixon, Publish Committee.

WHAT AILED MOTHER.

Last summer a famous specialist in nervous diseases visited a little village on Cape Cod. One day a tall, awkward young man called on him. He had a weak face which bore signs of dissipation, he wore cheap clothes cut in the latest fashion; there were rings on his fingers, and a gold chain swung ostentatiously over a gay waistcoat. He came to consult the doctor about his mother who had some obscure and, as he feared, mortal ailment. He spoke with much feeling, but did not forget to adjust his chain, and twirl his mustach as he talked.

"She has been a very active woman," he said. "Had tremendous energy all of her life, but now she seems to have gone all to pieces. She has no pain, no disease; but she can't eat nor sleep much, and she is so weak she can hardly walk. She cries if you look at her. What is the matter? Can you help her?"

"What work did she do?" asked the doctor.

"She was a tailoress, and she worked harder than necessary," said the young man, reluctantly. "She used to sew until two or three o'clock in the morning."

"What is your trade—your business?" demanded the doctor.

"Well—I—I'm not in business at present. It's pretty difficult to make a start, you know. I've considered several different occupations, but I have not found anything suited to my peculiar bent, as yet. But I came to consult you about mother. What do you think is the matter with her?"

"You!" said the doctor. "Nothing else. She has sapped her life for you; and now, when you should be supporting her and bringing comfort and honor to her old age, you are a dead-weight and a disgrace. If she dies, you and you only are to blame."

When he was gone, the doctor said: "It is a common enough case. A woman is unselfish and energetic. She gives her life to serve a husband or a son. Her devotion only encourages them in idleness and selfishness. At middle age her vitality is exhausted. Her nerves give way under the long strain, and tonics are of no more use than putting wood on a fire that has gone out."

Poor, unhappy husband or son whose eyes open too late to the fact that "mother" is sinking under some mysterious disease and who must hear from the doctor the frank verdict, "It is you and nothing else!"—Selected.

GUILTY CONSCIENCES.

"A guilty conscience needs no accuser." The Interior Department has received a letter from two children, who visited the Government's petrified forests in Arizona last summer. They inclosed $5 to pay for some small pieces of petrified wood which they carried away as souvenirs. It is against the law for persons to do this. "We have never felt right about taking this wood and we hope the money will more than pay for it," the letter said.

LET ME BE BRAVE.

Let me be brave to fight the night.
And bear my burden of the fight
With Courage
Not that I may be counted great in victory,
But that another treading on
May still keep heart when hope seems gone.
Grant to me wisdom.
Not that I may boast as one who's clamored high
And count myself superior clay to those less learned;
God, I pray for wisdom and a clearer mind
To aid the ones who come behind.
Let me be strong and brave of heart,
And teach me how to play my part
As one who toils not just for gold
(Thus I would not have my history told),
But let me serve as best I can
My God, my home, my fellow man.—Edgar Guest.

KIND WORDS.

Kind words do not cost much. They are quickly spoken. They do not blister the tongue that utters them. They never have to be repented of. They do not keep us awake till midnight. It is easy to scatter them. And oh, how much good they may do! They do good to the person from whose lips they fall. Soft words will soften the soul. They smooth down the rough places in our nature. Care to say kindly things will drill our natures in kindness. It will help to pull up all the roots of passion. It will give us a spirit of self-control. It will make the conscience delicate and the disposition gentle. A woman cannot make a habit of speaking kind words without augmenting her own gracious temper. But better will be their influence on others. If cold words freeze people, and hot words scorch them, and bitter words madden them, so will kind words reproduce themselves and soothe and quiet and comfort the hearer. They make all the better elements of one's nature come trooping to the surface. They melt out stubbornness. Let us say a kindly word. No one can tell how many burdened hearts may be relieved, how many discouraged souls may be inspired. Say it every day; to the one who disturbs you while you are busy, asking for work; to the one who has almost lost hope; to all. Remember kind words can never die.—Review.

—The Indian population of the United States is increasing, the Census Bureau announces. The number of Indians in the United States (not including Alaska), on July 1, 1925, was 349,595. That was a gain of 2,693 over July 1, 1924, and an increase of 18,976 in the last twelve years. Oklahoma has the largest Indian population—120,163. Arizona ranks second with 43,950.

Eden, Halifax Charge.—Having been elected reporter last Sunday I will proceed with duty. I never yet found any way to get a task done but to do it.

First, we want Brother Spencer to stay with us. He has endeared himself to us by his personal work as well as by his sermons. I often hear such remarks as "His sermons are filled with the real old-time gospel;" and, "He certainly is a wonderful preacher." I will not make any report of finances as you will read that in the conference report.

Our Sunday school is coming on nicely. Mr. J. W. Hardee is superintendent, Mrs. Z. A. Hardee assistant superintendent, Miss Lula Neville secretary. Mr. Hardee has a way of getting the best out of us before we realize it. He is also giving the little people a chance to develop. Our attendance has not been so good for the past few Sundays on account of bad weather.

Our Ladies' Aid Society met with Miss Winnie Burt on Oct. 29, and the following officers were elected: Miss Winnie Burt, President; Mrs. R. C. Rives, vice President; Mrs. L. A. Williams, Secretary; Miss Aleene Locke, assistant Secretary; Miss Blanche Hardee treasurer; Mrs. Z. A. Hardee, Mrs. R. C. Rives and Mrs. J. R. Locke were appointed by the President to serve as program committee for six months. Since Nov. 1924 the Society has paid to the High Point College $33.35; to the Children's Home $50.00; to the Casto Home $26.00; and $9.00 for incidentals and flowers and comforts for the sick. We hope to be able to buy a drugget for the parsonage soon. Mrs. J. R. Dickens has given a set of linen for the communion table. We appreciate this very much, especially as she presented it through the Ladies' Aid.

We are glad to say Mr. Edgar Whitley is able to be with us again. Mr. Whitley spent some time recently at Asheville where he was under medical treatment. I am sorry to say Mrs. B. F. Willy, Sr., is in Richmond this week taking radium treatment. We hope she will be able to come home soon greatly improved in health.

Personally, my husband and I wish to thank our friends for the letters, flowers, financial help and visits during his illness throughout the summer, and most of all we appreciate your prayers in his behalf. We feel that his recovery has been due largely to prayer.

We appreciate also the interest and respect which has been manifested to Mrs. Hardee. She continues very feeble.

Mrs. L. A. Williams, Reporter.

Midway, Haw-River Circuit.—Bro. Reed filled his last appointment for this conference year the fourth Sunday in October. The day was stormy, yet there was a very good little crowd out to hear him. Our pastor has been faithful and has done a good year's work for us. It is our earnest desire that he be returned to us for another year.

At the election of officers on the fourth Sunday the following were elected: Trustees, C. W. Butler, G. W. Apple and W. B. Bartee; Class leaders, Dr. W. A. Johnson and G. B. Wright; stewards, Tom Butler, Dr. Johnson, Milton Wright and G. W. Apple; superintendent of Sunday school, R. P. Butler; assistant, Mrs. G. W. Apple.

Our Sunday school is still moving along very well, though since September 29th we have been sad and at a loss to know what to do, since God saw fit to take from us our beloved superintendent A. J. Dixon. We feel that in Bro. Arthur's death the church has lost one of its best members, the Sunday school one of its best leaders, the community one of its best citizens. We miss him, Oh, we miss him! and cannot understand why it was best for him to leave us. But some day we will understand.

Will ask all who read this to pray that our broken hearts may be healed and that we may be willing to say, "Thy will be done."

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Bess Chapel Auxiliary.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society met Oct. 21st at the home of Mrs. J. C. Beam.

The meeting was opened by the president; devotional exercises by Rev. E. A. Bingham. Minutes of last meeting were read and approved, followed by roll call. Eight members and two visitors were present. Dues were collected to the amount of $1.50. Mrs. T. L. Beam performed the duties of the treasurer in the absence of Mrs. Z. M. Dellinger on account of sickness. The subject for discussion was, "The Budget." Several short but interesting talks were made by those present. Reading by Mrs. B. L. Heaven, "Tithing of Time, Talents, Treasure and the Greater Riches."

A talk on Tithing was made by Mr. Bingham.

This closed our business session. Next meeting is to be held at the home of Mrs. D. H. Bess.

After the meeting was adjourned a social hour was enjoyed. Hot coffee, cocoa and cakes were served by Mrs. Earl Beam and Mrs. Willie Beam.

Mrs. B. L. Heaven, Corresponding Secy.

Orange Chapel, Saxapahaw Ct.—Brother Isley preached his last sermon for this year the first Sunday evening. He preached a very impressive sermon, emphasizing the importance of using our talents to the glory of God, whether we possess one talent or five.

Brother Isley has finished his third year here and the people of Orange Chapel are hoping and expecting that the conference will send him to us for another year.

Pastor's salary is paid in full, but general claims are very much behind.

The church officers for the next year have been elected as follows: Stewards, A. L. Smith, Ben Williams, J. S. Lloyd, Clem Crawford and D. Thompson, the old board of class leaders and stewards were re-elected. Sunday school superintendent, Foust Thompson.

The collection first Sunday was the annual Thank-Offering collection for the Myra Crawford M. C. and amounted to $3.95.

The Woman's Foreign Society will hold their Thank-Offering Service the third Sunday in November. Preaching in the morning by our pastor and an address in the afternoon on Mission work. Music will be furnished by the Y. M. C. A. quartet of Chapel Hill: We are hoping to have a large crowd present.

Mrs. Foust Thompson, Reporter.

WHO STOLE THE HANDKERCHIEF

Grandma was looking at her treasures and showing them to Ferdinand and Mildred. She took up a lace handkerchief and carefully unwrapped it from its protecting tissue paper.

"I carried this handkerchief the day I married your grandfather," she said as she folded it away after they had looked at it.

After the children had left, Grandma looked at her treasures again. "The handkerchief looks rather yellow," she thought. "I will wash it and spread it in the sun to dry. It will be better for a taste of fresh air and sunshine."

She washed it and spread it on the grass near where the children were playing. "Be careful not to hurt it," she cautioned them.

"Yes," they promised, "we will not go near it," and they were very careful not to touch it in their play.

After dinner Grandma took a nap and the children ran to the orchard to play. When Grandma woke up she went down stairs to get her handkerchief. She went out on the lawn, but the precious bit of linen and lace was gone.

"Ferdinand! Mildred!" she cried, and the children came running as fast as they could.

"Where is my handkerchief?" asked Grandma, but neither of them had seen it.

"Skip must have taken it," said Grandma, as he came trotting up with a little bark. "Skip, you naughty dog, where is my handkerchief?" she asked, but Skip only wagged his tail.

"He has been in the orchard with us all the time," said Mildred, "so he could not have taken it."

They hunted all over the yard, but no handkerchief. Father and mother joined in the hunt, for they felt sorry for Grandma, but it could not be found.

The next day Ferdinand was helping father with the orchard work. "See that broken limb," father said. "It broke in the wind storm last night. Climb the tree and break it off entirely, so it will not hurt the other branches."

Ferdinand climbed the tree. Just before he reached the broken branch, a pair of robins flew up from their nest right into his face. He turned to brush them away. "They must have eggs in the nest," he said.

Then he called, "Father, father, give me your knife! Here is Grandma's handkerchief caught in the branches! The robins must have tried to bring it to put in their nest and it was caught in the limb."

He took father's knife and cut the twigs so carefully that there was not a thread broken as he carried it to Grandma.

"The robins were the thieves," he said.

Grandma carefully smoothed out the handkerchief. "It is not hurt at all," she said. "I will put out some bits of lace and ribbon for the robins, and I must beg Skip's pardon for thinking he took my handkerchief."

"That's all right," wagged Skip's tail. "lad you got it back," he barked.—Emma Florence Bush, in The Christian Register.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Allen.

Dora Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. Bailey and wife of Mr. Walter Allen, died at St. Leo's Hospital October 20, 1925, aged 30 years, 10 months and 4 days. She was seriously injured last April when their automobile collided with a bus between Greensboro and Burlington. She received the best of medical care at the hospital, but her condition grew worse till relief came in death. Her suffering for nearly six months was intense. She was patient through it all, and dearly loved the nurses who were so kind to her. Her mother stayed with her all she could which she appreciated very much. She was glad when relatives and friends visited her. "Meet me in Heaven," she would say as she bade them good-bye. She was willing and anxious to die. Her greatest desire was for the conversion of her relatives and friends who were unsaved, and that they would all meet in Heaven. She leaves, to mourn the loss, one so dear, a devoted husband and six dear children, four boys and two girls, also her parents, five brothers and two sisters. She was buried at Cane Creek October 21. Rev. Mr. Talbot, assisted by Rev. Mr. Allen, pastor of Cane Creek church, very impressively conducted the funeral. A large audience assembled to pay a last tribute of love, and many beautiful flowers attested the esteem in which she was held. She was at one time a member of Bethel church, but later moved her membership to Saxapahaw. Dora was a good woman. She had many friends and enemies. She is not dead, only changed, for, "Just thou art to dust returneth was not spoken of the soul."

She is gone to a bright and glorious home, where the smile of the Lord is the feast of the soul, there to begin life anew, with never a sorrow, never a pain, and she is happy, oh so happy. We must not weep for her, we could not wish her back. Rather let us rejoice that henceforth is laid up for her a crown of rejoicing and her works do follow her.

Some time in the quiet hour, dear friends, do you not feel that Dora is with you? Can you not feel her presence. Only your spiritual senses have not yet been opened. You cannot behold her, but some sweet day you too will pass through the gate called death and be with Jesus and Dora will be there to welcome you.

"The nearer I reach the end of life,
The sweeter is Home to me;
I long for the fragrant flowers that grow
On the banks of the Crystal Sea.
"The nearer the fading of the leaf,
The brighter the colors grow;
I sigh when the evening shadows fall,
For the light of the morning glow.
"The nearer I reach the banks of bloom,
The fairer the breezes blow;
The nearer I reach the fount of love,
The sweeter the waters flow.
"The nearer I reach the morning Land,
The fairer the golden light;
My eyes in the gathering mist grow dim,

The clearer immortal sight.

"Home, Home, Heavenly Home,
Fair are my dreams of thee
The nearer I reach the end of time,
The sweeter thou art to me."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON--NOV. 15.

Paul's Arrest At Jerusalem.

Lesson Text. Acts 21:27-39.

Golden Text: 1 Pet. 4:16.

The Central Truth: Persecution is the world's most effective testimony to the performance of an unwelcome service.

Scriptural Points.

1. Paul proceeded from Miletus to Jerusalem. At Tyre and Caesarea he was warned not to go up to Jerusalem; but this hero of the faith was determined to face the severest opposition, and death, if need be, in defense of the gospel. He had a mission to discharge at Jerusalem and he was resolved to discharge it at whatever cost.

2. Paul's successful ministry among the Gentiles had alarmed the Jews, who foresaw that their religion was in danger of being discarded. They were unable to see that Christianity was an unfolding or enlargement of the law and the prophets. They understood it to be rank heresy, and that it must be blotted out with the death of the heretics. So Paul was marked for death.

3. An effort was made to allay the feeling against Paul by his submitting to certain ceremonies. The days of purification were almost ended when a storm of bigoted hatred fell upon him.

4. An Ephesian Jew, who was attending the feast, raised an outcry against Paul. Two accusations were made, both of which were untrue and misleading. Paul had not sought to persuade people to forsake the law and the temple worship. He had not brought Greeks into the temple. His only offense was that he preached Jesus Christ, as the promised Messiah, the fulfillment of the law and the prophets.

5. The outcry of this leader quickly stirred up a mob to the point of fanatical frenzy. Paul was seized and beaten most unmercifully. He would have been killed outright, but there were no deadly weapons at hand. And a higher power was protecting the life of this man of God.

6. Tidings of this riotous assault reached the ears of the captain of the Roman garrison. A squad of soldiers was dispatched to rescue this unfortunate victim of the mob. Upon sight of the soldiers they quit beating Paul, for the Jews had a wholesome fear of the ruthless power of the Roman soldiery.

7. The chief captain inquired of the mob what offence Paul had committed. "Some cried one thing some another." Their charges were at variance and no doubt contradictory.

8. "Away with him." But they all agreed that he ought to be put to death. They were a unit on the death penalty. Some years before a similar mob had demanded the life of Jesus: "Crucify him; crucify him."

9. The chief captain was much surprised to find out that Paul was a Roman citizen, and entitled to the full protection of the Roman authorities.

10. Paul asked permission to address the angry crowd. And upon the stair steps leading into the castle this heroic apostle gave the people, the story of his life and conversion. Through love for them he sought to win them to Christ and salvation.

Practical Points.

1. Differences of opinion cannot be avoided. This is due in the first place to the construction of the human mind, which is more or less warped or biased by inheritance, training, and surroundings. And then the mind has its limitations. Finite mind cannot grasp all of truth, which is infinite. One gets one aspect of truth, another, another; so there arises a wide difference of opinion.

3. Christian charity demands that every one should respect the opinions of another. No bitterness ought to exist between those of widely different faiths. Each should allow the other the same right of private judgment that he claims for himself.

4. Persecution is the poorest scheme the devil ever tried to wipe out Christianity. Death doesn't stop a man's testimony for Christ. "He, being dead, yet speaketh."

5. Citizenship in the Kingdom of God is a privilege of supreme value. It is to become sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty. It is to share in the inheritance of the saints. It is to reign with Christ forever.

"LET DOWN YOUR NETS."

Launch out into the deep,

The awful depths of a world's despair;
Hearts that are breaking and eyes that weep,
Sorrow and ruin and death are there.

And the sea is wide, and the pitiless tide

Bears on its bosom away--away,

Beauty and youth in relentless truth

To its dark abyss for aye--for aye.

But the Master's voice comes over the sea,

"Let down your nets for a draught" for me;

He stands in our midst on our wreck-strewn stand,

And sweet and royal is his command.

His pleading call

To each and all!

And wherever the royal call is heard,

There hangs the nets of the royal Word.

Trust to the nets and not to your skill,

Trust to the royal Master's will:

Let down your nets each day, each hour,

For the word of a kind is a word of power;

And the King's own voice comes over the sea,

"Let down your nets for a draught" for me!

CHURCH SERVICE.

Every one needs at least once a week the uplifting and spiritual nourishment which we receive through attending church service. There are 168 hours in each week. How many of these hours do we spend in idle moments? How many of these hours could be saved by planning our work and eliminating the unnecessary things? One of the divine commandments is to "remember the sabbath day to keep it holy." How many of us keep this one commandment? Sunday by divine command was established as a day of rest and worship. This day was set aside that we may rest . . . from physical and mental care, contemplate the works of the Almighty God and worship

God according to the divine command. Our attendance at church services is the first step in keeping God's command.—Daily Northwestern.

SANTA APPROVES A CHRISTMAS GIFT.

Santa Claus has been down a great many chimneys since he started business and he is intimately acquainted with a large number of people. He knows that the best kinds of gifts are those which please the whole family, and which bring the excitement and enjoyment of Christmas every week. That is why he looks so jolly when he receives hundreds of subscriptions to The Youth's Companion with which to fill his pack. And, being wise from long experience, he knows that people are likely to overdo things around Christmas, so he chuckles when he sticks a Companion into the top of a stocking. "Be as greedy as you like," he thinks, "the more, the better for you."

The 52 issues of The Youth's Companion for 1926 will be crowded with serial stories, short stories, editorials, poetry, facts, and fun. Just send your order to the address below and Santa will take care of delivering the paper to your home or to the home of a friend. Subscribers will receive:

1. The Youth's Companion—52 issues in 1926,
- and 2. The remaining issues of 1925. All for only $2. 3. Or include McCall's Magazine, the monthly authority on fashion. Both publications, only $250.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

Did you see the Missionary Contest, and will your auxiliary use it? We have heard from Asheboro. They enjoyed this contest at last meeting, and wrote for the answers in order to grade their contestants.

Please notice in no. 15, the questions should use the word "adverb" and not "advent."

We hope to hear from many auxiliaries.

From the "Pine Ridge Booster" printed at our Kentucky school we have the following from Dr. Woodford. He says: We need help yet on our building fund etc.

Of course we need more help in completing our new building. Thousands of dollars must yet be provided. There will be about thirty doors and forty two windows in the new building. The doors will cost us just about ten dollars each. By sending us a check for ten dollars, you may feel that you are opening a door of opportunity for the boys and girls of the mountains; or by sending a check for fifteen dollars to pay for a window, you may have the assurance that you are helping to open the way for the light to shine into many a life through the work of Alvin Drew School.

Fourteen counties in three different states are represented in our enrollment so far this year.

Our new High School building is beginning to make a very good appearance. Brick layers are up to the second floor. You may be surprised to know that 15,440 lbs of steel framing, columns and I beams are being used in this building.

We are certainly going to have a fine building and it will mean a great deal to the further development of our work and the building of a great school. We feel sure that every one that has a part in making it possible for us to have this improvement will find gratification in the fact later on. If you and your church have not done your part yet, we hope we may hear from you soon.

November is our Thank Offering month. If you are not ready with a good program for the Thank Offering you will do well to write Dr. Woodford for the complete program material he has printed suitable for this service. Do so at once, please.

IMPORTANT MEETING AT HIGH POINT.

Next Tuesday at noon there will be a meeting of Methodist Protestants from over the State in First Church, High Point. The object of the meeting is to plan for raising $100,000 which has been pledged for our college and which the college must have to pay off building bills. It is hoped to inaugurate a movement by which the money can be collected in a few days. All Methodist Protestants are invited and at least 200 are expected. Lunch will be served. Go if you can, and help pitch across a great achievement.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE MEMBERS OF THE LATE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren:

I am informed that the committee on the Methodist Protestant Herald presented to you a report which, after recommending earnest work on the part of pastors to extend the circulation of the paper, concluded with the following:

"In view of the fact that the church at large is being in some measure disturbed by what may be termed liberalism, we would request our Editor to exercise a vigilant and strict censorship over all articles submitted for publication and to reject all that would tend to reflect upon the teachings of the Scriptures or weaken the faith of any saint. Let us earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints."

Objection was made that the adoption of this paper in the absence of the editor might seem to be an unfair reflection upon him, and instead of this action a committee was appointed to confer with the editor.

This committee had a brief conference with the editor shortly after conference closed in which one member of the committee suggested that the editor make a statement of his position through the Herald. Hence this open letter.

We will assume that the majority of the Conference would have voted for the adoption of the report of the Committee on the Herald, and we have before us a most interesting situation. We doubt whether church history furnishes a parallel to it. We understand that the chief provocation of the report was the publication in the recent past of some articles by a writer whom we will call Rev. Mr. Short—because that is not his name.

When two streams meet there is likely to be a whirling of the waters. Two streams of thought, one in the minds of the members of our Conference, the other in the mind of Rev. Mr. Short, have met and produced a whirlpool.

Why do the views of Rev. Mr. Short differ from the views of the members of our Conference? Because the two parties have imbibed their views from different religious environments. The members of our Conference live in the South. Rev. Mr. Short in young manhood moved to New England and lived there for years. He once lived in Illinois, in a religious environment very like our own, and then he believed as do the members of our Conference now. In New England there are two very diverse spiritual environments; one dominated by rank Calvinism, the other the result of a reaction against Calvinism, and known as liberalism, though it might also be called Arminianism. Rev. Mr. Short fell under the influence of the liberal or Arminian environment and accepted the prevailing views of that environment.

Here in the South we have a religious environment largely dominated by Calvinism. It is not so rank as the New England variety; hence there has not been any strong reaction against it. Unconsciously Arminians in the South have accepted Calvinistic views, especially regarding the Bible. Methodists are supposed to be Arminians, unless they specially brand themselves as Calvinistic Methodists. We presume there is not a minister in our conference who if asked would not say that he is an Arminian and not a Calvinist. Yet in the recent action of our Conference we see the spectacle of a body of professed Arminians objecting to the publication of articles Arminian in their view of the Bible written by a man who has escaped from Calvinism and found Arminianism so much more satisfying that he is willing to give his time to writing that he may convince others of the superiority of Arminianism to Calvinism. We really think the conference would have honored itself more by a rising vote of thanks to Rev. Mr. Short for his well meant efforts to point his Calvinism-bound brethren to a way out to freedom.

There are but three general views as to the way the Bible was produced:

(1). The Calvinistic view, that since God predetermined the course of history in every detail, therefore He determined exactly what the Bible should be. The book is therefore a book of God. The same sort of reasoning would prove any other book to be a book of God, but the objection is overruled. The Bible was the first book to be called the book of God, and the name was exclusively appropriated. It is allowed that men set the type and operate the presses that print Bibles; it is even allowed that men served as amanuenses for God in writing the manuscripts of the Bible, but the words and thoughts are the words and thoughts of God. Objection has been urged that if men were only amanuenses in writing the Bible, if men performed only a mechanical part, there would not have been seen in the different books the marks of individuality that we do see, the style of John differing from the style of Luke, for example. To meet this objection there has been brought forward—

(2). A modified Calvinistic view; namely, that God chose men to write the several books of the Bible and (virtually) said to them: Go ahead and write the book in your own way, and I will not interfere except to keep you from making any error. This would give us a book free from error, but if God would restrain the first writer from error, why would He not restrain every copyist of the Bible from error? The question has never been answered. And yet it is a matter of history that copyists of the New Testament before the days of printing made thousands of changes in the book. Scholars had to wade through all these "various readings," "perhaps a hundred and fifty thousand in number," to get back to the original form as nearly as possible. But reliable scholars worked at the task until they felt assured that they had the New Testament substantially as it was when it came from the hands of Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul and the other writers.

(3). The Arminian view, as we may call it. This view gives to human agency its full place without excluding divine agency. Men have been inspired of God to speak, to write, and to act. Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost—they were prophets of God; Paul speaks of writings inspired of God and declares that all such writings are spiritually profitable. Yet it is not necessary to assume that men were inspired to write such parts of the Bible as they could write from their own knowledge and upon their own initiative. The book contains inspired passages and uninspired passages. The truth of a statement is of course established if it can be shown that it was inspired of God, but a statement may be true without being inspired of God.

Arminians believe in the teachings of the Bible in the main, though they may find here and there a statement recording an erroneous human opinion, but it does not impair the value of the book as a whole. They simply lay the bone aside and eat the meat.

This view does not satisfy some people who want to be assured in advance that every word is absolutely true. But the Bible contains much evidence that this is the true view. Note what Luke says about writing his gospel. He does not say that he was chosen by God to be His amanuensis in the writing of another gospel, but he says, "Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eyewitnesses, and ministers of the word; it seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order that thou mightest know the certainty of those things." Did Luke believe himself inspired?

Do you honestly think that God inspired Solomon or any other man to write: "A continual dropping on a very rainy day and a contentious woman are alike?" If so what might He inspire some woman to write about a contentious man?

It would be a calamity if the Bible were brought into such disrepute that men would refuse to receive its great message to the world. But I know of nothing that is doing more to bring that about than the Calvinistic conception of the book. When you say to men as you hand them the Bible—"You must take all of this or none," you need not be surprised that some will answer, "Then I will take none." Men insist on their intelligence being honored, they know God has endowed them with power of thought and that He expects them to think for themselves. More people will accept the Bible if it is represented to be just what it is, and Christians of the Arminian type should not be guilty of lending their aid in perpetuating the mischievous errors of John Calvin. The faith once delivered to the saints was not belief in an infallible book. It was belief in a personal Savior from sin and death.

The editor does not resent the action of the Conference; he recognizes the sincerity of it and the goodness of the motive, but he thinks fuller consideration of the matter would have shown that there was no occasion for it. Of all the views as to the way the Bible was produced, it seems to the editor that what I have called the Arminian view is the true view and the most wholesome view. And we believe you will think so too after you have been a student of the Bible for fifty or sixty years.

TOBACCO STATES STRIKE BACK.

Will H. Brown.

The Tobacco Leaf, in its issue of January 17, 1925, shows considerable agitation over the action of a number of the Southern states in increasing the taxes on tobacco. The editorial is headed, "The Height of Ingratitude." The closing paragraph reads:

"If our tobacco-producing States are thus to turn against the natural product of their own heaven-sent soil and sunshine, what can be expected of those localities in which the sovereign herb cannot be made to grow?"

What would be your answer to that question? Perhaps the people of the tobacco-growing states are awakening to the fact that tobacco is a curse to the country, especially to the portion of country in which it is raised, and propose to make the dealers pay some of the damage the weed has done to the soil and the people. Much of the soil has been practically ruined because of its continuous use in raising tobacco, while the very best soil is required to raise the weed. "The worst demands the best," is literally true in the production of tobacco.

Official Government figures show that taxes were paid on 69,000,000,000 cigarettes in the United States in 1924—a four-fold increase in nine years. It is estimated, in addition, that the number of "roll your own" cigarettes total twice as many.

Frederick Simpich, in a long article in The Country Gentlemen, says tobacco is grown on every continent; that the world crop for 1924 was estimated at 4,000,000,000 pounds, of which one-third was raised in the United States.

ARE ALL MEN EQUAL? Kendall Bancroft Burgess.

One hundred forty-nine years ago there was drawn up by the Second Continental Congress a resolution declaring the independence of the United States of America. Probably the most quoted portion of that declaration consists of these words: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal." Yet in these latter days so many doubters have expressed a belief that this is but a polite fiction, that it seems time for some one to take up the cudgels in defense of those fathers who were so daring in their ideas. "Of course," men have said, "Thomas Jefferson and John Adams and Roger Sherman and Robert Livingston, who drew up this famous document, did not mean that all men are really equal. What they must have meant is that all men have a right to equal opportunities."

I know that if one happened to disagree with our forefathers so flagrantly along somewhat different lines, he would promptly be labeled "Red" or "Bolshevik." I shall, however, be more lenient in this case and merely lament the ignorance that permits such lax views. Are men equal? Of course they are.

But before we get into too hot an argument, let us ask ourselves what we mean by equality. I am aware that if this thought were suggested to some of our industrial captains, they would laugh at it, saying: "What nonsense! Do you mean to tell me that all other men are my equals? How many are there who could run these vast industries as I am running them? They are few and far between."

I am aware that if I were speaking to the average professor, he would be likely to smile with amusement and say, "Young man, that is a splendid ideal, of course; but not everybody can make A's in college, no matter how hard they may try."

If I were to enter an employment bureau with this curious suggestion that all men are created equal, I suppose I might be shown some of their records in absolute refutation of the fact. Here is one man whose best position is that of lumber-jack or ditch-digger. Here is another who has advanced so high that he can keep books. Here is another who has risen to the superintendency of a great manufacturing plant. Of course men are not equal.

I was talking to a salesman the other day, and it seems as if he were still saying to me: "If it were not for salesmen our industries would not survive for a moment. It is the man on the road who keeps the world's industry moving." Perhaps he would not have actually said it, but this conversation seemed to suggest that no man in any other line of business could be the equal of the salesman.

Imagine speaking to one of our modern "one hundred per cent. Americans" on this subject. "All men created equal?" he would say. "That, of course, applies only to Americans. You can't tell me that a Jap is as good as a Yankee. You can't tell me that a Negro can ever be called our equal. You can't tell me that a dago has as much right in this country as one whose forefathers came over in the 'Mayflower.'" And reflected from this complacency seems the thought, "I belong to the chosen race of Jehovah. I am the superman. None else can be reckoned alongside of me."

Are we all hopeless egotists? Do we all measure the standards of success by ourselves? We are told that Gandhi in India and others in China and Japan are beginning at last to declare themselves against our Western, materialistic civilization, dissatisfied and disgusted with our lust after wealth and our disregard of spiritual values. Is it possible? Well, of course we can't expect those ignorant Asiatics really to appreciate the wonders of our glorious civilization! But time will tell. They will learn in the course of ages that we are the great men of the world—that God intended to put all things into the hands of the white race—the race that He made to dominate the world. Of course the Jews used once to think that same thing and were disappointed. The Romans felt themselves ordained by the gods to uplift all mankind by plundering them. Kaiser Wilhelm thought once that his nation of supermen was destined to overcome the world. But then, why bother with history! It only proves, anyway, that these others were mistaken—that we are the chosen race instead of any of them.

What do we mean by equality? I think we were told long ago in school that it is not possible to compare ten apples and ten bananas and because they are unlike things. Yet I can compare them. Give me my choice and I'll take the ten bananas every time. You, perhaps, would prefer the apples. Some one else might not care one whit whether he received one or the other. I wonder if our estimate of men is not usually according to the same principle—the principle of personal prejudice. If I am a farmer, I measure all men by their ability to grow crops. If I am a business man, I test men by their business ability. If I am a professor, I test them by their intelligence.

But is this a proper test of the equality of men? In spite of my early teacher's dictum that different things cannot be called either equal or unequal, I think there is a certain sense in which men, no matter how different they may be, may yet be called equal or unequal. But we must have something other than personal prejudice for our standard of measurement. We must begin to look at men with the appraising eye of God rather than of men.

And so, in spite of the great unpopularity of our forefathers if I must come single-handed. I hereby make my declaration of independence. I hereby declare that I am the equal of any man, woman, or child in the world—nay, in the whole creation. And though you may outwit me in business, though you may beat me in a boxing match, though I may never be recognized as the greatest preacher or the greatest writer in America, though I may die in the poorhouse, I will still declare to all who will listen, "I am the equal of any man."

Furthermore, I give to you the right to make the same declaration. If perchance the business world of today has not recognized your greatness, if you have made a seeming failure of the tasks of life, though you may never own a Rolls-Royce, though you hunt for a job and cannot find one, though you are one of those whom we Americans are inclined to call "heathen," whoever you are, in whatever land you were born, in whatever land you now live, whether you dwell in a mansion or in an attic, whether you are a captain of industry or a peddler of shoe-strings, wherever you are, whatever you are, whoever you are, rich or poor, young or old, male or female, black or tan or white or red—to you I give the right to name yourself my equal and the equal of my fellows.

I pause for a moment. Have I stated my platform with sufficient emphasis? I think not. For within this partnership of equality I want to admit some others. So often my friend's pet cow has been slandered! So often the toad in my back yard, who has been doing his utmost to rid my garden of pests, has been scorned! So often that spider in my garage has been despised, though he has done his best to rid the place of flies! It was just the other day that I careless and thoughtless, tore down his web. Perhaps, had I been less careless and thoughtless, I should have done it anyway, for a spider's web is unseemly in a supposedly neat garage; but I should have done it more gently, I think, and with more respect. To all of the animal creation I extend a welcome. Come into my new country—the land of the free and the home of equality. Henceforth you are recognized as my equals. I shall not call you the "lower" animals. There is no high or low in this land. We are all equals.

Of course I must eat, and if necessary I shall slay my neighbor's cow. If Brother Fly remains too long in my dwelling, he is very likely to be "slapped." I have found no way yet in which to remain at peace with both myself and the animal creation. But, however much I destroy, I will not despise God's handiwork.

And as for you, my fellow men, with whom I can converse, with whom I can argue, with whom I can plan for the future, I shall not scorn you, either, whoever you are. And I shall give you an opportunity to be heard, even as I myself am granted that opportunity.

There is, however, one condition upon which equality is granted. That is that you solemnly agree to do your best at your task, in whatever realm God has placed you. Whether you keep your promise or not, I shall not be able to tell, and I shall not inquire. I am no wizard who can see into your heart. I am not God. I cannot judge whether you are doing your task as well as you might. You only—with God—can know that. And perhaps, if you are not doing your best, you may carry with you a sense of inferiority. But that I shall never know, except you tell me, whether your limitations are self-imposed or God-imposed. Nay, I dare not call them limitations; for I, with all of my assumed intelligence, dare not say that I know God's will for you.

Now that this declaration of independence is made, perhaps it would be well to explain my reasons to the world. As those early forefathers declared in their document: "When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation."

Somehow, I have always had this feeling embedded in my heart. When some have said that there necessarily were those of low and of high degree, my heart revolted. I have not known how to put it in language before, so that men might hear and understand. I hardly dare hope even now that men will understand. But I shall try my best to have my say.

By what standard shall we judge men? How can we tell who is high and who is low? I have a friend who likes to hunt and trap and fish. Had he lived two centuries ago, when this land was just being settled, he would have been a wealthy man, as wealth of those days was counted. Today he ranks among the least successful. He cannot adapt himself, or has not felt the need of adapting himself, to the call of the civilized world. Yet I can go to him and learn great things about God's ways, things that he has learned and I have not. Shall I, with an intellect "trained in the best schools of the country"—shall I despise his learning because he does not polish his language as well as I? Shall I not rather count him among the most learned, for he knows the ways of God's Nature as I do not.

I have another friend. He is a farmer. He has not had the opportunity to go to agricultural school. There was not much opportunity for that when he was young. And, because the country is at present rather overpopulated with farmers, he has not made a remarkable success. About all he manages to do is to keep his farm going and to make ends meet, with possibly a bit left over for old age. He looks up to President Coolidge as to a great man, almost a miraculous man, I sometimes think. He thinks he has not himself made a great success in the world, and perhaps he has not. If he had lived just fifty years sooner, he would have been among the noblest of his countrymen. Now he lives in obscurity, and "none so poor to do him reverence." Yet he performs his task day by day as best he can. He uses what God has given according to the intelligence that came from God. I cannot find it in my heart to call him less than equal.

There is another man. I do not know his name, but it is legion. He lived on a farm in Texas. It was not especially good land, and he was plodding along, scraping up a living for his family. But one day a man appeared and offered him a fortune for his farm. Oil had been found. Suddenly that man became number among the wealthy of our nation. He has achieved the success the world demands, though not by his own merit. The world respects him. Well—he, too, may enter into brotherhood if he will doff his snobbery. I will grant him no higher place. And, unless he continues to serve God as best he can, he will feel uncomfortable among his brethren. He will know his inferiority, though we may never stop to inquire about it.

I met a man on the street one day. He begged a meal and a chance to sleep at night. He claimed he had found a job to which he could go in a couple of days. I do not know. Some will call me foolish, but I bought him a meal in a restaurant, and told him I would arrange for a room for him at the Salvation Army headquarters for two nights. Shall I admit him to this brotherhood of equality? Yes, I think I may. True, perhaps he was but an ordinary tramp. He seemed to be as capable as you and I. But I do not know God's purposes, and I like not to be hasty in jumping to conclusions. It is not given me to know what God has put into that man's make-up. In this new brotherhood, he may feel inferior. As to that, I shall never inquire. He may be one of God's choice jewels, cast by chance into a civilization to which he cannot adjust himself. I am willing to take the chance to let him join this brotherhood. I shall talk with him as an equal. It may be that God will place him higher than I; for God knows his battles and I do not.

I think David Grayson would appreciate these thoughts that I am so crudely writing. For it was in his book "Adventures in Understanding" that I read of a Danish bookbinder by the name of Jensen. He had been a man successful at his task in his own country. He sought for greater opportunity, however, and so he came to America. But he was a workman after the fashion of the old country, slow and painstaking, an artist. The demands of America were "Quick! Quick!" and Jensen was not "quick." As the world measures success, Jensen had become old and unsuccessful in this new land; but he was a man in the sight of God. Besides his beloved bookbinding, he was very fond of gardening, and in his tiny back yard in the city he set a box of dirt, secured at great pains, and there he planted a few vegetables and fed his artistic soul in trying to make those vegetables grow, and succeeded. An impractical old man he was, unable to adjust himself to America. But who can say he was not the equal of any wealthy magnate of the country? My heart says so.

Some time we shall realize that the ditch-digger serves society as well as the farmer; and the farmer as well as the college president; and the college president as well as a Judge Gary. The only real test of a man is whether he fits into the place God made him to fit. And I am not inclined to exalt one above another because God has given him capacity to hang on a higher peg. I am inclined to say with Paul: "If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where would the smelling? But now hath God set the members each one of them in the body, even as it pleased him. And if they were all one member, where were the body?... And the eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee: or again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much rather, those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary, and these parts of the body, which we think to be less honorable, upon these we bestow more abundant honors; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness; whereas our comely parts have no need: but God tempered the body together, giving more abundant honor to that part which lacked; that there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer with it; or one member is honored, all the members rejoice with it."

Some day, I think, we are going to realize those great words of Browning, and it will help us to understand each other:

All service ranks the same with God,
With God, whose puppets best and worst
Are we; there is no last nor first.

—Zion's Herald.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

I am only asking for space this week to put in just the following notice. For several years now Rev. S. W. Taylor has been the efficient and faithful Treasurer of the North Carolina Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, and the recent Annual Conference did him the honor to reelect him by ordering that the Secretary cast the unanimous ballot of the conference for his reelection. Put Bro. Taylor resigned, giving as his reason, lack of time for the work. He also suggested that a layman be elected to the position.

After due consideration, Mr. Vernon W. Idol, High Point, N. C., was elected to serve the conference in this capacity. So from this on all money for the Annual Conference Budget, and for the General Conference Budget, and also the recent assessment laid upon the charges for the High Point College should be sent to Mr. Idol.

Do not get confused about the college money. All the building funds, and the funds for endowment should go to Dr. R. M. Andrews, High Point, N. C., just as before. But a small apportionment was allotted to each charge at the last Annual Conference sessions, to assist in the running expenses of the College. This fund should go to Mr. V. W. Idol, Treasurer, properly designated, and he will pay it over to the College.

A Correction.

For some reason the Spencer charge was left out of the plan of appointments as published last week. Spencer charge is constituted of Spencer, Allison's Grove and North Charlotte, and is to be served by Rev. D. A. Braswell.

Faithfully yours,

A. G. Dixon.

Budgets.

Paid A. C. B. in full:

1. Whitakers.

2. Fountain Place.

Just one Sunday since Conference and the report stands as it did last week. No doubt another week will make a change.

Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C. is now the Conference Treasurer, and all money for the Annual Conference Budget and the General Conference Budget must be sent to him. He requests that it be sent to V. W. Idol, Treasurer. In sending money be careful to state what it is for that proper credit may be given.

THE POWER OF A MOTHER'S FAITH. AND A WIFE'S PIETY.

As we sat one evening on the porch of our hotel at Ocean Grove, talking with an interesting man, we were much impressed with his narration of a personal experience. He was about seventy-three years of age, and had been exposed to many temptations and perils in his long and varied career. When only eight years old, he was left without a mother and had to work his way in life. But that mother had been a godly, praying mother, and had left her impress upon her boy. She had committed him to the care of a covenant-keeping God: nor did she do so in vain. The lad was oft in straits, but a kind providence watched over him. Upon reaching manhood, he had worked himself into the police force of the city in which he dwelt. He subsequently became chief of this department. Under trying circumstances, he stood true to his principles. He neither swore nor drank. He married early. His wife was an earnest Christian, and cast around him the savor of her pious influence. He became a member of the Methodist Church. He increased in worldly goods. In reviewing his career he attributed his preservation and success under God, to his mother's prayers and his wife's Christian character and influence. What a testimony! How many men are indebted for their moral safety and business prosperity, in a large degree, to the same precious agencies? God is not unmindful of his covenant-engagements. He is faithful and we can leave ourselves and our dear ones in his keeping for time and eternity.—Dr. W. W. McKinney, in Philadelphia Presbyterian.

THE PRAYER MEETING.

For a long time the weekly prayer meeting has been one of the regularly established and taken-for-granted institutions of the evangelical Church. There has been no more thought of omitting it from the weekly schedule than of cutting out the Sabbath morning or evening service. It simply belonged, in much the same way, that dinner or supper belonged to the regular life of the properly conducted home.

It would be a great calamity if there should be a change from this arrangement. It would be an irretrievable loss to the Church if there were not the praying and dependable element in each local congregation that has called for the weekly prayer meeting and that has been in the habit of supporting it. For this element has usually been found wherever there has been a church. At no time, probably, and in no place, have all the members of the Church been inclined to attend and support the prayer meeting, but it has been felt that if there were not a considerable group of these persons it would be about as impracticable to carry on a real church as for a man's body to stay alive without a heart.

There are reports, and there are indications that this meeting is not as well supported and attended these days as formerly. If this is true, then there should be very earnest heart-searching and very earnest diligent and vigorous determination to come back to the conditions when this mid-week meeting was a thoroughly established and vital part of the life of each congregation. Time was when it was on the week's program for all really self-respecting Christian people. Women arranged their household affairs so that the whole family could attend. Business men came home in the evening in time to get away to this church meeting. Ministers prepared for it conscientiously as for a regularly expected service, and the congregation came and filled up the house, seriously and substantially being depended on for this evening as surely as for a Sabbath preaching service.

It has always had great advantages and has brought great benefit to the people. In the mid-week it kept the Sabbath spirit from being too far away in either direction. It kept the people committed to the work and worship of God. The cause of Christ was emphasized as a part of the week life. It kept the whole week from being secularized.

It is a hard thing to keep a church in a very spiritual and revived state of heart and mind without this meeting coming in between the Sabbaths. The community knows, and the unconverted know, as the bell rings, that Christian people go to God's house to pray, and that prayers will be offered up for the salvation of the unconverted. Let no church dispense with this meeting, or permit it to fade out of sight. This is a good time of year for all to work for its upbuilding.—Ex.

BRIGHTENING MAIN STREET.

By Mrs. W. T. Reid.

Eloise has a mission. All the drab little girls and boys of Main Street, that play in the dust without any toys, look for her eagerly when she makes her periodical visit to them. She does not stop to speak to them for any length of time, but, passing down the street, she hands out from a large bag she carries old picture postals, pictures cut out of magazines, scraps of clothes or ribbon, old broken toys—anything that is a suggestion of play and brightness.

It is play to her too. On Saturdays, when her bag is full, she sallies forth and has good time watching the smiles come out of grimy, little faces, coming home happy when her bag is empty.

The supply of bright things runs low very often. Even magazines are greatly appreciated in Korea, and they do not become useless as quickly as they do at home, where the world is buzzing with news and entertainment.

Sometimes Eloise gets a few pennies from her mother to help out. There is one tiny, dusty Japanese store down town where colorful rings may be bought for one sen each, and tin crickets that chirp endlessly are available at the same price, wonderful whistling tin toys brightly painted can be bought for two sen each, and colored pictures of Japanese war heroes or movie dramas make a bright splash of color for one sen apiece.

Once when Eloise and her mother were looking at some little celluloid dolls in a Korean store, quite an innovation of recent date, a little girl looked sadly on from the edge of the little crowd around them. She had carried burdens from the time she could walk, her clothes once white were now a dingy gray, and she apparently had never had the bright pink or red jacket that little girls can boast in homes where they are loved. Color, the stimulus that means so much to us all, was denied her. There was not a flower or a tree in Main Street for her to enjoy, and, though spring would be blooming soon not so far away, she would never get to see it. She was one of the little slaves of dusty, smelly Main Street.

All this Eloise and her mother took in at a glance. Their thoughts were simultaneous. From the parcel in their hands containing two of the celluloid dolls, Eloise's mother took one and told her to give it to the little girl.

She received it hesitatingly. "But why should you give this to me?" she said. After some persuasion, she ran off with it, her face lit with smiles.

A little boy, with his feet breaking through his cheap shoes, looked wistfully at the gay counter dressed with colored soap, kewpies, rubber balls, etc. Eloise gave him a cricket, and he suddenly looked sunshiny.

The chief longing is for pictures. "Give us pictures," they cry all the time on the street. But colored postals seldom come to the hospital compound, and the Christmas cards that come now are disappointing, severely engraved with a name, and never a pretty scene any more or a bunch of flowers or an animal.

Eloise and her mother wish so much they would make the old-fashioned kinds again, colorful and full of sentiment.

One sen is less than half a cent, but it can buy a smile, and one yen can buy a hundred. It is hard to realize at home, in "God's country," how rare a smile can be in the Orient, where there is no outlook, no hope, no ambition, where the vision is limited to dusty, garbage-strewn Main Street, flanked by hideous drains, where the question is not "What shall I do with my life?" but "What will ugly Fate do to me?"

Everywhere there is suffering and sorrow. The children overrun Main Street and the little alleys five or six feet wide. What will become of all this aimless teeming humanity? one wonders. But the overpowering desire is to see it smile, and as long as there are pictures and scraps in Eloise's bag the children of Main Street will smile.

"I SERVE."

A novelist tells a story of two commonplace people, a man and his wife, living in poverty in one room in Fifty-fourth Street, New York City. To all appearances they were neither coarse nor vulgar at the start. Then the "miracle" happened, and there came sudden wealth. The wife had an inheritance restored ly, through selfish expenditures, they became gross, mean, vulgar, although their first reaction to sudden wealth had been noble. They had moved from the room in Fifty-fourth Street to an apartment in Fifty-seventh Street. The wife was furnishing the flat when the husband said:

"Are we the kind of people who think only of this—and nothing else—with the ideas and principles we hold?"

His wife later asked:

"And as you always say, Georgie, what's money for if you can't do good for people? Are we the kind that just think of no one but ourselves?"

No, they were not that kind, for they considered how they could do good with their money. She befriended some impoverished artists. He helped a struggling nephew. They both used their wealth in service to their fellow men. But when this motive ceased to control them, wealth began its destructive work.

People everywhere have an itching for vast sum of money. But those who lack wealth little realize the responsibility that comes with large resources. They plan to spend all their fortune on themselves, and they are unconscious of the leanness of soul which will come if they do not put their gold to serving mankind. If they withhold their service, the springs of mercy will dry up within them, and their hearts will become hard.

But we are condemned, not only on the from the service of humanity, but also because we refuse to do what we can with the resources at our disposal.

The story of how one girl escaped condemnation and found satisfaction in service is told by one who closely observed her career. She had prepared herself for teaching, but she could not resist the impulse to give her work a distinctly religious bent. While she was studying in Chicago, a rugged mountain preacher came along telling of the needs of people in the Tennessee mountains. This was a definite call, and she made up her mind to take a little school among the mountaineers.

For six years she found plenty to do. She taught the children, visited the homes, and tried in every way to help. Sewing classes were formed and classes in domestic science were organized. Her home, which was provided for her, became the community center where she gathered the children and grown-ups for recreation and play. It was interesting to note how readily both children and parents overcame their characteristic diffidence, and learned to play. Better clothes and better cooking were early evidences of the effect of her work. She practically determined the styles of her community, a feat which almost any young woman would consider a distinct triumph.

"After seven or eight years of hard work, with home so near by, why not now desist and leave the work to others to finish?" she was asked. There flashed what seemed at first resentment at the subtle suggestion, as if temptation had suddenly befallen her. Then came the eager answer, "Not on your life!"

"Ich dien," "I serve," is the motto of the Prince of Wales. It was also the motto of the mountaineer teacher. May we not all adopt it for our own?—Forward.

LIVE CHRIST.

Live Christ!—and though the way may be In this world's sight adversity,
He who doth heed thy every need
Shall give thy soul prosperity.

Live Christ!—and though the road may be The narrow street of poverty,
He had not where to lay His head,
Yet lived in largest liberty.

Live Christ!—and though the road may be The straight way of humility,
He who first trod that way of God
Will clothe thee with His dignity.

Live Christ!—and though thy life may be In much a valedictory,
The heavy cross brings seeming loss,
But wins the crown of victory.

Live Christ!—and all thy life shall be A High Way of Delivery—
A Royal Road of goodly deeds,
Gold-paved with sweetest charity.

Live Christ!—and all thy life shall be A sweet uplifting ministry,
A sowing of the fair white seeds
That fruit through all eternity.

—John Oxenham.

SOME DAY.

Someday the tangles will be all smoothed out;
The crooked be put straight, the rough made clear;

Poor foolish words, that had so little weight,
Yet weighed so heavily, be sweet and dear;
And friendship shut away—that might have been

A little help, a sunshine gleaming in Upon life's shadowy way—

Will come to us some day.

Some day the hands we once had scarce dare touch,

The eyes that shone too distant for our gaze,
Will stretch toward us with their eager help,
Will bend above us with their gentlest rays:

And voices now receding on the ear
Will nearer come and nearer, sweet and clear;
And dear things far away

Will be our own, some day.

—Mary G. Brainard.

Bess Chapel.—We were all very much pleased when our former pastor, Rev. E. A. Bingham, returned to be with us another year, and it gives us a feeling of confidence to know that he will be with us in our Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work as well as regular church services. An able leader is needed very much in both of these organizations, and our beloved pastor has already proved his worth as such during the past conference year. Bess Chapel prides herself on the fact that she has plenty of willing workers, and we feel a great change will be wrought in the church work with the leadership we will have this year.

At our last church service it was decided to continue the preaching services as they were planned last year. That is at 7:30 A. M. on the first and third Sundays, and at 11:00 A. M. on the second, fourth and fifth Sundays. The Christian Endeavor Society meets at its usual time.

We wish for each of the other churches as successful a year as we hope to have.

OUR CHILDREN'S HOME.

Thanksgiving is approaching and we are again calling on every Methodist Protestant in North Carolina to remember our Orphan Children in a special contribution on Thanksgiving, by giving an amount equal to one day's income or one day's wages to this worthy institution of our church.

The only loss our Children's Home has ever had occurred this year, when the barn and contents were burned, causing a loss of about three thousand dollars.

We hope all Pastors and Sunday school Superintendents will urge the importance of this offering.

We are caring for more children than we were a year ago, therefore our needs are greater.

Send your contribution to Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, Superintendent, High Point, N. C.

Respectfully, J. M. Milikan, Chairman.

THE GREAT ENTERPRISE.

"Every book in the New Testament was written by a foreign missionary. Every letter in the New Testament that was written to an individual was written to a convert of a foreign missionary.

Every epistle in the New Testament that was written to a church was written to a foreign missionary church.

The only authoritative history of the early Christian Church is a foreign missionary journal.

The disciples were called Christians first in a foreign missionary community.

The map of the early Christian world is the tracing of the journeys of the first missionaries.

Of the twelve apostles chosen by Jesus, every apostle except one became a missionary.

According to the apostles, missionary service is the highest expression of Christ's life."

The above, taken from the "Fourteen Points on Foreign Missions" in the Missionary Review of the World, form a summary of facts which emphasizes the place of the foreign missionary enterprise in the onward sweep of the Kingdom and its claims upon every loyal subject of the King to whom the heathen are to be given for an inheritance.

We still hear of some church members who express themselves in opposition to foreign missions, but how is it possible for any one to harmonize such a position with the plain teachings of the whole Bible, especially of the New Testament whose language is distinctly missionary language?

We pride ourselves on our rich heritage as Americans, but it can all be traced back to foreign missionary work by those who toiled and sacrificed to bestow to others the great blessings they received from divine sources.

The Pilgrims who paved the way on this Conference discontinued one Special Day and God and their deathless conviction, surely gained their love of liberty and asserted their inherent rights by what the Bible unfolds, and all that our nation is and has achieved and to what it moves all rests on their heroic actions.

So those first disciples, common ordinary men, imbibed from the great Teacher wisdom, gained experience, acquired power, rose to sublime heights of self-renunciation and noble service, and went forth, guided and girded by God's own might, to make a conquest of the world when their own land was pressed by the foot of an alien conqueror.

No where in human annals is a like spectacle displayed, and every emotion and sentiment within us goes out in admiration, praise and gratitude for their devotion and labors.

We are their successors as followers of the Christ they knew, loved and served, and the obligation on them to make him known to all peoples also rests on us with equal force and surely from their splendid example we should be inspired to render service to the utmost of our ability in the propagation of the Gospel "unto the uttermost part of the earth."

It ought to be enough for us to do this because he wills it in the carrying out of his world program, but there are inexpressible joys and priceless rewards to those who trust him and obey his command.

Surely then all Christians ought to be fully committed to the work of giving the Gospel to the whole world, and loyally support the foreign missionary work of the church, and for you that means the work in charge of the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration of the Methodist Protestant Church.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

To the members of the Woman's Home Missionary Society:—

At the last Executive Committee meeting the undersigned committee was appointed to arrange a suitable program to be carried out in each church in North Carolina on or near Thanksgiving. It has for a long time been the hope of the W. H. M. S. to enlist every pastor in the work of securing a good Thanksgiving Offering for the Children's Home. This is a splendid opportunity to render a good service in His name.

The program printed below was gotten out by a committee from the General Board, and the N. C. program committee has adopted this as our program. If any church or Society has other material that it prefers to use rather than the leaflets and pageants suggested here, they could easily substitute what they have on hand. If the leaflets are to be used, we would suggest that since our State Secretary of Literature, Mrs. Pritchard, is changing her residence from Henderson to Asheboro, it would be well to order supplies from the General Secretary, Mrs. Arthur Hinkle, 405 Spring St., Fairmont, W. Va.

It is the earnest desire of our State officers that we make this the best Thanksgiving Offering, our Home Missionary Society has ever held.

Yours for a service and offering in every church.

Mrs. R. M. Andrews,

Mrs. C. L. Whitaker

Miss Mary E. Young.

Committee.

Any pastor desiring sample copies of The Missionary Record can secure same free by applying to the editor Mrs. H. E. Amos, 928 Gaston Ave., Cambridge, Ohio.

The magazine is only 75 cts a year and comes to you 12 times.

Your State Record Agent is anxious to get some members of each church in N. C. on the Record mailing list.

Yours for a greater missionary spirit,
Mrs. R. M. Andrews, High Point College.

THE CHRISTMAS PROGRAM.

Although this matter has found its way into the columns of our Church Papers several times, it may not be amiss to explain just how it happens a Christmas Program is being promoted and provided when the last General chose jewels, cast by chance into a civilization allowed but three, namely, Rally Day, Easter, and Children's Day.

The action of the Executive Committee and the Budget Council was not intended to establish another Special Day for the special benefit of any one of our four Boards. Although the action has the sanction of the chief interim bodies in the denomination it is more in the nature of a suggestion than a mandate.

Last year many requests were made to the Board of Education for a Christmas program. This was quite natural, in view of the fact that for eight years the Board had provided such a service. Our people were disappointed that we could not grant their request and that the General Conference had discontinued Educational Day. In spite of the fact that the program could not be furnished, many churches held a service similar to that they had been accustomed to hold in former years. Since their people had been accustomed to making an offering, this, too, was included in the program. In some cases it went on the Budget, or to one of the Boards of the Church, and in some cases it was given to some local or general interest outside of the denominational program.

In view of the fact that the General Conference called upon the church to make a special effort to raise the General Budget in full during this quadrennium as a worthy memorial to our fathers, it was considered a wise thing to make use of the habit of holding a Christmas service. The plan has met with what appears to be universal approval. A number of the conferences voted their support and many pastors have sanctioned the idea in personal conversations.

Please send your order at once to Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, 516 North Charles St., Baltimore, Md., specifying the number of programs and envelopes desired. It is the hope of the Budget Council that every effort will be made to make the service a success and the offerings as large as possible; since they will be a credit on the Budget it will be that much toward raising the local obligation.

Frank W. Stephenson, Secy. Board of Ed.

KENTUCKY.

Pine Ridge News Letter.

Our trials this year have been too numerous to mention. Indeed, I think it would not be worthwhile to mention them at all, but I do want to say, this has been, so far, the most trying of the seven years Mrs. Woodford and I have been here. Most of our difficulties have been in connection with our building operations. However, it is not unusual for increasing undertakings to bring increasing difficulties.

We are very grateful that the Lord has continued to stand by and that so many of his followers here and yonder have given loyal co-operation.

The drought of the late summer was very hard on us. Not only shortening crops and killing pastures but water became very scarce indeed. For making mortar for our new brick building, we had to have the greater part of the water from an almost inaccessible pond. Thanks to Sister Everett, however, for having the dam built years ago, which made the pond possible. Then before we were quite ready to put the roof on the building, the rains and snow came, hindering quite a bit. But we now have the roof finished and the interior work is going forward rapidly. The more we see of the building, the better we like it. We expect to sing God's praises in it for the first time on Thanksgiving Day, though it will then be far from finished.

At that time we are to have with us, representatives from Hazel Green Academy, a school of the Christian Church, twenty miles away, and after an appropriate union Thanksgiving service in the morning, we will have basket ball games and other athletic contests.

We were quite pleased lately to see the following notice of our work, written by the editor, unsolicited, in the Clay City Times, a paper published in an adjoining county:

"Using Home Material."

"The new Alvin Drew school building at Pine Ridge will be built as far as possible from home material. The foundation has been laid from stone quarried on the school farm, and a saw mill is sawing the necessary lumber from the timber on the place, and a small planing mill has been installed to dress this lumber on the farm. In this the school is teaching a valuable lesson in home economics, as well as teaching valuable lessons in studies in the school room.

"We have the natural products in Eastern Kentucky and the natural home talent to build a great state, but we need to learn that we can do it at home and by ourselves. That's what they are trying to impress upon the youths at Alvan Drew, and their action is very commendable."

Just one correction—the timber was not grown on our farm, but within two miles of our school. All of this material is first class, but the cost is just about one-half what it would have been if it had been "brought on."

The bill for doors and windows is now due. The doors, put in place, cost about fifteen dollars and the windows, ten; how many will you pay for. Or maybe, somebody wants to pay for our heating plant. The furnaces will cost $500.00; pipes, freight, registers and installation, about $200 additional.

Your check would warm our hearts as truly as the heat from the furnaces will warm our bodies.

Our second-hand clothing store is almost out of stock. We need especially clothing for children and men; the women seem to make theirs last longer. If you ship by freight, send to Campton junction, Kentucky. Our road to Slade is impossible. Shipments preferred by parcel post, direct to Pine Ridge.

The kind of Christmas presents we like for our children are included under these headings: stationary; toilet articles; clothing, including gloves and shoes; medicines that are generally used without a doctor's prescription and money for candy, fruit, etc.

We thank you for all sorts of cooperation but especially for your prayers.

Sincerely, Thomas R. Woodford, Supt.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

The stream of orders for Rally Day has apparently come to an end. The first one was received August 24th, and the last one November 13th, covering a period of nearly eleven weeks. Last year we filled four hundred and fifty-five orders, and this year five hundred or more. Four hundred and ninety-six were filled from the Pittsburgh office, and a half dozen or more at Baltimore, giving us a total of over 500. That is an encouraging increase. Now, quite naturally, we are hoping the offerings will make an even better showing.

Twenty conferences were represented, and the number from each is as follows:

Maryland, 129; Ohio, 94; Indiana, 53; Michigan, 29; Pittsburgh, 28; North Carolina, 28; Eastern, 6; Onondaga, 24. West Virginia, 18; Illinois, 17; Iowa-Missouri, 15; Kansas, 11; Missouri, 10; Texas, 5; South Carolina, 3; Kentucky, 3; Alabama, 3; Arkansas, 2; Colorado-Texas (Col.), 2; Georgia, 1. Total, 501.

The diligence of our pastors is evident, judging from the promptness with which the offerings are being sent in. We expect to be able to report early in December a substantial sum from the Rally Day Service. The delay is due to the fact that all such money must go to the conference treasurer first, and then to the General Conference Treasurer, Mr. H. C. Staley, Baltimore, Md.

So far the Secretary has obligated himself to provide for nineteen young people in our colleges this year through the Student Loan Fund. That will require $2,850.00 of which $300.00 has been taken care of to date. We were able to take care of the seventeen last year without difficulty, and we anticipate that many of the friends who made that possible will not forget us this year.

Last year thirty-five ministerial students received help from the Ministerial Education Fund, and the same number have so far made application this year. This will require $6,500.00, approximately half of which will come from our invested funds, while the rest must be secured from Return Payments and interested friends. That is quite a responsibility, but we are confident every obligation to our splendid ministerial students will be fully met.

Occasional letters from Rev. J. C. Berrien, D. D., for fifteen years Secretary of the Board of Ministerial Education, bespeak an unfailing interest in the work the Board of Education is trying to do. Every year he holds a little service in his room with some of his friends at Amittville, and sends the offering to the Secretary. These tokens are greatly appreciated. His interest in his church is greater than ever, and any evidence of success or progress gives him the greatest satisfaction.

The splendid response from the church in support of Rally Day has given us great encouragement. To have the orders increase over 10 percent in one year is gratifying, and indicates the denomination intends to support our educational endeavors to the best of their ability. We hope our pastors will turn their attention just as loyally and as numerous to the support of the Christmas service as to any of the regular special days. If this day is adequately observed, it will mean a substantial addition to the payments on the General Conference Budget and make up entirely this year the 2 percent decline in the receipts for last year. A number of the conferences voted unanimously to support this plan and assurances have come from many individuals giving their hearty approval.

It is impossible to communicate personally with all those who have given our Rally Day Campaign such wonderful support, and thank them accordingly. This brief note must suffice. The splendid group of young people being helped by the Board to secure their college training, the promising body of ministerial students, as well as the great work being done by our different educational institutions, must be our reward.

The following letter will be of interest. It was forwarded to the office by Dr. T. R. Woodford of Pine Ridge.

"Rev. Thos. R. Woodford, D. D.,

Dear Bro. in Christ:

Will write just a few lines. We held a Rally Day Service at the Mayo Mission at Little Hurricane appointment Oct. 18 and had a wonderful service, but as it was the first meeting of this kind ever held around here, some of the people did not understand what it was until after the service. I believe it was a help to our church here, as the people have caught the vision of what Christian Education really is. I believe we can have a better success next time. The offering was $8. You will find enclosed check for same for the Board of Education, and the Budget.

Your Bro. in Christ and for lost souls,
Rev. Basil Hodge,
Hubbardstown, W. Va."

One of the important tasks of the Board of Education is to arouse our people to a livelier sense of the vital significance of Christian Education. Such letters as the one quoted above indicates that some results are being secured.

The questionnaire sent out this last summer by the Adrian College Commission brought forth some interesting facts. Of those making reply ten percent were not inclined to express any opinion as to the removal of the college, thirty percent were inclined to think re-location advisable, but many of these were qualified; sixty percent were decided in their conviction that the school should remain where it is. The one thing needful is an adequate endowment, and there seems to be a disposition to support a campaign with that end in view.

Rev. J. A. Phipps, D. D., President of Westminster College, Texas, visited most of the conferences of that territory this Fall, and secured a hearty response to the plan for raising $100,000.00 for the college. Texas Conference assumed responsibility for $75,000.00 and all the other conferences supported the plan to canvass their districts for their apportionment. Westminster College has the largest initial enrollment in its history, and has an exceptionally fine faculty. It is prepared to do splendid work as a Junior College, and could do so with the funds it is sought to secure.

THE EMBARRASSING BURDEN

Most of us have read with a good deal of sympathy the story of Sindbad the Sailor and the troublesome Old Man of the Sea. We remember how Sindbad, out of a kindly desire to render assistance to one who seemed to be in need, took the Old Man upon his shoulders, only to discover later that he could not rid of him. Everywhere he went he was compelled to carry his unwelcome burden.

In much the same way we burden and handicap our lives. An invitation to do something questionable or downright sinful comes to us through some friend or companion. Conscience tells us we should not do it but for fear of offending or of appearing discourteous, we finally yield, often times against the protest of our better natures. Once an evil appetite or habit fastens itself upon its victim, the mischief is done. Out of a false desire to please others, many of us make our own lives displeasing to God and to ourselves.—Selected.

"The American's Creed."

"I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people; whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect union, one and inseparable; established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes. I therefore believe it is my duty to my country, to love it; to support its Constitution; to obey its laws; to respect its Flag; and to defend it against all enemies."—W. T. Page.

Plan for the Meeting.

If possible decorate with the Chinese flags and the American flags crossed especially in the front part of the room. Perhaps you can get some Chinese rugs for the floor of the room. After the meeting serve tea—without sugar or cream as the Chinese do and use Chinese napkins and the beautiful Chinese porcelain ware, and for his part use the Chinese lanterns for lighting the room. In this way you can call attention to the many things of beauty that we get from China.

To the Leader.

Friendliness is a valuable asset to any one in any of the walks of life but in getting acquainted with strangers it is indispensable. Here friendliness will win out even when all else seems likely to fail. What is true with individuals is also true with nations. America won China for a friend when we remitted the Boxer Indemnity, and that money was put to the use of young Chinese students. It was a two fold blessing. It established the friendliness of America for China and through educating the young Chinese they were led to see things very different from what their parents did. It gave them larger visions and greater knowledge about the big world in which they lived and of which they were and are a part.

These young people educated largely outside of China have imbibed new ideas about education and have decided that it is good for their women too and so the women in China are coming into their day. The girls are allowed to go to schools and parents are having their girls taught in private schools when there is not public school that will admit them.

The Christian Endeavor movement has had much to do in showing our friendly attitude. The missionaries have shown them the advantages of western ways of doing things, of western medical treatment, of school systems, agriculture, mail system and many of the industries.

Looking Ahead.

There was for years the spirit of looking backward in China, and the saying that what was good enough for Father is good enough for me was the attitude of most of the Chinese, but that is not true today. They have developed a spirit of progress and of a forward look, and are anxious now to be abreast of the other nations in all that pertains to life. It was once said that the great difference between the Chinese and the Japanese could be illustrated this way. "Show a Chinese your watch; he would look at it a bit and then give it back and say, 'My father did not have one and I do not need one. But show a Japanese your watch and he would look it over carefully and go away and make one like it.' However that may have been there is not that difference between them now. The Chinaman is just about as enterprising as the Japanese is.

Learning to Appreciate Their Girls.

It used to be considered a great misfortune to have a little girl born into the home. And a father did not like to admit that he had any girls among his children. If asked how many children he had he would, if there were three boys and two girls, say, "I have three children and two animals." This is no longer so largely true but the little girls are welcomed in the home and valued as children, sometimes the parents being very proud of their girls. Schools are being established for girls and when there is no school and they cannot hire private teachers the fathers teach their little girls themselves.

Friendly with the Chinese Laundryman.

Here in our Southland we do not have opportunity to meet many Chinese but in almost all of the larger cities there are Chinese laundrymen. Perhaps the only Chinese you and I will ever know, or ever have the opportunity to show any friendliness toward. They are the representatives of their nation and you of yours. Are you going to establish friendly relations for the two governments? If strife and unjust treatment or ridicule for just a little fun causes bitterness between you and the laundryman may be of far more importance in his home country than you think and at all events it adds to the sum of unfriendliness while if you two establish friendly relations it adds to the total friendliness of the nations.

Pass It On.

God has been very good to America and we ought to pass it on. Last summer we had a small glimpse of what it has meant through all these years for countries to be without rain in season, what it has meant for industries to lag. The lack of rain not only caused a poor harvest but it caused our mills and factories to close down for the lack of water. Just the withdrawing of that one common blessing, rain, caused a great deal of suffering. God has heretofore given in such abundance that we rather forgot that he could withhold in spiritual gifts and in all kinds of opportunities and advantages he has been just as generous as he has been in temporal gifts. We have forgotten to pass them on as graciously as we might have done. Especially the teachings of Christ which is the foundation of all the rest. God will expect great things of us because he is giving great things to us. If He disappoints us even in little things we are sore distressed; how about our disappointing Him?

SUNDAY SCHOOL HAPPENINGS.

The following items, gleaned from reports from our Sunday schools to the Board of Young People's Work, may be of general interest to our workers:

Concord Sunday school leads the entire Conference in gifts to the Children's Home, having given over $350 last year to this great institution of the church. This school regularly contributes $25.00 every first Sunday in addition to a special Thanksgiving offering.

Burlington Sunday school comes a close second to Concord.

Whitakers has contributed $23.00 to the general expenses of our Alvin Drew school at Pine Ridge, Kentucky, $16.00 to the Pine Ridge Building fund, and $4.00 for magazines for High Point College.

Nine officers and teachers in the Enfield Sunday school are subscribers to good Sunday school magazines.

Fallston has a teacher's meeting just before the school session in the morning for a discussion of the salient points of the lesson.

Mt. Pleasant Sunday school won the banner for largest attendance at the Guilford County Sunday school convention for 1923, and 1924, and would have won for 1925 had the convention not been held in their church! (Banner not given to entertaining church) 300 members were in attendance at this convention this year.

Pleasant Hill, West Forsyth Charge, contributed $27.00 to the scholarship fund at High Point College.

Siler City received about $10.00 from a special offering of a penny for each year's age of members and sent to Pine Ridge school.

Community Church, Thomasville, contributed $212.00 to the Scholarship Fund at High Point College.

Sarapahaw Union school has a special training class for prospective teachers with at least one new teacher for each department under the direction and training of an experienced teacher in that respective department.

Efland Sunday school paid $70.00 for new hymn books for the church.

Shiloh Sunday school, North Davidson, furnished a room at High Point College.

Mebane had a very fine Daily Vacation Bible school and is enthusiastic about the work done.

First Church, High Point, has completed a very splendid and modern church with adequate educational facilities. They have added nearly 200 new scholars to their Sunday school since entering their new church. Forty-two members of the Sunday school united with the church during the year.

Henderson, also, has completed a new Sunday school building and many new scholars are being attracted to the work of the school.

West End, Greensboro, received $80.00 in a special "White Gifts to the King" service last Christmas.

Other items will appear from time to time. If your school is doing anything outstanding or worth-while, won't you please drop me a line and let us know about it. We shall be glad to tell other folks about it. That would be an inspiration to all of us. And if you have not sent in any report at all please do that at once! SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—NOV. 22.

Paul Before Felix.

Lesson Text. Acts 24:10-16, 22-25.

Golden Text: Acts 24:16.

The Central Truth: "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." 1 Cor. 1:30.

Scriptural Points.

1. Paul's attempted defense before the council won him some friends, but made his enemies more furious. More than forty put themselves under an oath-bound curse that they would neither eat nor drink until they had killed Paul. Being informed by Paul's nephew of this conspiracy the chief captain immediately sent the apostle to Caesarea and put him into the custody of Felix the governor of the province.

2. After five days the high priest and elders came down to get judgment against Paul. Their spokesman was an orator named Tertullus who presented four charges against this man of God, three of which were false and one of which was true. No evidence was presented to prove the accusations that he was a pestilent fellow, a mover of sedition, and had gone about to profane the temple. In fact there was not the least evidence to prove these charges. The other charge that he was "a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes," was true. He was a great leader of the church of Jesus Christ.

3. Paul flatly and most unqualifiedly denied the false charges. He denied the existence of any proof whatever.

4. He pleaded guilty to what his accusers called heresy. He worshipped the same God they worshiped, believed the same Scripture that they accepted, and acknowledged along with them that, "there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." He differed from them in the interpretation of the Messianic prophecies. Paul asserted that these prophecies were fulfilled in Jesus Christ. His accusers denied this. And here was the animus of their hatred and murderous hostility against Paul. As it was with Jesus, they hated him without a cause. It was a sectarian quarrel.

5. This leader of men was extremely conscientious. He followed an enlightened conscience in holding forth Jesus Christ as the Messiah of the race and the Savior of the world.

6. Felix, like Pilate, was a weak and hesitating ruler. He deferred his decision under the pretense that he wanted to confer with Lysias, the chief captain. He granted Paul the liberty of association with friends and acquaintances.

7. But Felix was a lover and taker of bribes. His kindness to Paul was a bait for a bribe. He was willing to be just and let him go free, but he wanted a goodly sum of money for it. He sent for Paul often, and communed with him, in hope of getting a bribe.

7. On one of these visits this hero of the cross, preached a great sermon, with three divisions, "righteousness, temperance and judgment to come!" It was a message of most convincing argument, most tremendous earnestness, and most powerful demonstration of the Spirit. Under this terrific exposition of holiness, sin, and the judgment, this hardened sinner was affected most deeply. He trembled upon the very brink of perdition. But he again deferred the performance of a most solemn duty. He was a prince of procrastinators.

Practical Points.

1. Patience in tribulation is a grace of priceless value. "Tribulation worketh patience; and patience experience; and experience hope; and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." Rom. 5:3-5.

2. Patience is the crown jewel of christian experience. "But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." James 1:4.

3. Tribulations are a means of grace, for which we should be deeply grateful. "Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distress for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong." 2 Cor. 12:10.

4. Trials are the fires of purifying the soul of selfishness and worldliness. "And he shall sit as a refiner and purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness." Matt. 3:3.

5. Afflictions are stepping stones to heavenly places in Christ Jesus. "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." Heb. 12:11.

6. Conscience is a safe guide when fully enlightened by truth and Christian experience. A perverted conscience is a grievous handicap, and leads into many a path of error and sin. Paul was doubtless as conscientious as a persecutor as he was as an apostle of Christianity. Beware of a conscience "seared with a hot iron" of rebellion against the living God. But cultivate the good conscience, that bears witness in the Holy Ghost.

—The Word of Life.

NOT AS THE WORLD GIVES.

By Ella Parks Martin.

John 14: 27.

"Not as the world gives" dost Thou give, O Master,

Lord of my life and Saviour of my soul!
For peace the world gives when the sea is suffling,

But Thine comes when the stormy billows roll.

"Not as the world gives," when the sun is shining,

And all of life is one glad, happy song,
But Thy peace dwells in hearts that walk in darkness,

When life is bitter and the way is long.
Thy blessed, wondrous peace, O Christ my Saviour,

Steady it keeps our hearts in hours of pain;
"Not as the world gives," but as Thou dost measure,

We look into Thy face and loss is gain!
—Selected.

Omission.—The name of Rev. R. E. Andrews was unintentionally left out of the list of preachers in the hands of the president.

I LOVE JESUS.

I love Jesus, I love Jesus;
I love Jesus every day,
Love Him in the sunshine hour,
Love Him when the storm clouds lower,
Every day, on life's way,
Yes, I love Jesus.
I will serve Him, I will praise Him,
I will love Him every day,
Serve Him in the sunshine hour
Praise Him when the storm clouds lower,
Every day, on life's way,
Yes, I will love Him.

The above are additional chorus verses to the song, "I Need Jesus" which was sung in every nook and corner of High Point during the recent revival conducted by Rev. George Stephens, with music director Mr. Powell Lee. Hundreds of souls were regenerated and the city has been wonderfully blessed.

Grownups, as well as children, love the song, "I Need Jesus" and blend their voices with such pleasing effect that it has become very popular. The above verses, composed by J. W. Thacker should be sung in the tune of the chorus, thus making three chorus verses.

Learn them and teach them to the children and see how they will like them, taking special thought as you do so, of the words "love," "serve," "praise."

WHAT AILED MOTHER.

Last summer a famous specialist in nervous diseases visited a little village on Cape Cod. One day a tall, awkward young man called on him. He had a weak face which bore signs of dissipation. he wore cheap clothes cut in the latest fashion; there were rings on his fingers, and a gold chain swung ostentatiously over a gay waistcoat. He came to consult the doctor about his mother who had some obscure and, as he feared, mortal ailment. He spoke with much feeling, but did not forget to adjust his chain, and twirl his mustach as he talked.

"She has been a very active woman," he said. "Had tremendous energy all of her life, but now she seems to have gone all to pieces. She has no pain, no disease; but she can't eat nor sleep much, and she is so weak she can hardly walk. She cries if you look at her. What is the matter? Can you help her?"

"What work did she do?" asked the doctor.

"She was a tailoress, and she worked harder than necessary," said the young man, reluctantly. "She used to sew until two or three o'clock in the morning."

"What is your trade—your business?" demanded the doctor.

"Well—I—I'm not in business at present. It's pretty difficult to make a start, you know. I've considered several different occupations, but I have not found anything suited to my peculiar bent, as yet. But I came to consult you about mother. What do you think is the matter with her?"

"You!" said the doctor. "Nothing else. She has sapped her life for you; and now, when you should be supporting her and bringing comfort and honor to her old age, you are a dead-weight and a disgrace. If she dies, you and you only are to blame."

When he was gone, the doctor said: "It is a common enough case. A woman is unselfish and energetic. She gives her life to serve a husband or a son. Her devotion only encourages them in idleness and selfishness. At middle age her vitality is exhausted. Her nerves give way under the long strain, and tonics are of no more use than putting wood on a fire that has gone out."

Poor, unhappy husband or son whose eyes open too late to the fact that "mother" is sinking under some mysterious disease and who must hear from the doctor the frank verdict, "It is you and nothing else!"—Selected.

PERSONAL TOUCH WINS.

A noted evangelist was once holding a series of services in a church whose minister was a man of long experience and of great influence. One night as they sat on the platform together the minister pointed out to the evangelist a man in the audience.

"For twelve years," he said, "I have tried to win that man to Christ; I have preached to him so long that I sometimes find myself doing it unconsciously."

"From the pulpit?" asked the evangelist.

"From the pulpit, yes."

"How many times have you gone to him with the love of God in your heart and said, 'I want to see you become a child of God?'

"I must confess," said the minister, "th I have never spoken to him personally at directly concerning his salvation."

"Then," said the evangelist, "perhaps I is not impregnable after all."

That night the evangelist, after the service, caught the man before he got to the door. He spoke only a few words, but they were earnest and loving. And the next evening in the "altar service," in which many souls have found lasting peace and eternal life, the man was on his knees with the tears streaming down his cheeks. It was the personal touch that did it.

The sermon is effective with many. Music has brought salvation to many a life. But it is thousands and thousands of cases it is only the personal touch that wins.—William Thorpe as McElroy.

THE SADNESS OF THE EMPTY SEAT

"Thou shall be missed, because thy seat will be empty."—1 Sam. 20:17-18.

David had decided not to go to Saul's feast. There was good reason. The king might throw his javelin on him again. But David had his own seat at the table, and Jonathan said to him, "Thou wilt be missed, because thy seat will be empty."

The empty seat revives many memories and teaches some important lessons. You remember the time you came back from the cemetery, after those sad days? You found that the sad days were just beginning. It is the empty seat that hurts.

There is the empty seat in the house of God, when you stay away without cause. It is your place, and no one else can fill it. If people only knew how they are missed in the sanctuary! Perhaps you are habitually absent. If you could but visualize that gaping vacancy in the sanctuary, you would not be able to stay away. There is an empty seat at the Lord's table, too, and it is for you. It belongs to no one else. No other can fill it. How many communions must pass by in the Lord's house until you come and take your appointed place? The individualism of the Gospel is tremendous in its appeal. God wants the vacancies taken. "That my house may be filled."

How many empty seats there are in the world! Some place of duty has been summoning you, lo! these many days, and your seat is still empty. We are missed when our places are empty.—Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work.

THE LOOKING GLASS.

A man was complaining to his neighbors. "Never saw such a wretched set of people," he said, "as are in this village. They are mean, greedy of gain, selfish and careless of the needs of others. Worst of all, they are forever speaking evil of one another." "Is it really so?" said an angel who happened to be walking with him. "It is indeed," said the man. "Why, only look at this fellow coming toward us! I know his face, though I cannot just remember his name. See his little shark-like, cruel eyes darting here and there like a ferret's and the lines of covetousness about his mouth! The very droop of his shoulders is mean and cringing, and he slinks along instead of walking." "It is very clever of you to tell all this," said the angel, "but there is one thing which you did not perceive."

"What is that?" asked the man. "That it is a looking glass we are approaching," said the angel.—Baptist World.

ADJUSTING THE BURDEN.

Two city youths were tramping through the hill country of one of our Eastern States. Late in the afternoon of their last day they were trudging bravely up the slope of a long hill. As they neared the top, one of them, a rather frail, delicate young man, remarked to his companion:

"If some one had told me two weeks ago that I could tramp almost twenty miles through these hills and carry forty pounds of baggage on my shoulders and not be worn out by nightfall, I might have thanked him for the compliment, but I think I would have doubted its sincerity. Now I am actually doing it, and what is even more wonderful, doing it without excessive fatigue.

"Yes," he continued, "I guess there really is a great art in becoming accustomed to things in this world. Take the matter of carrying this baggage. Do you remember our first day? It seemed to me I never could get adjusted to the weight and irregularities of this bundle. Every time I moved it hurt me in a new place. Had to stop and rest every mile or two, as you remember. Gave out completely the middle of the first afternoon. A hill like this—Well, I would never have gotten to the top, that's all. But now"—he laughed and gave the bundle a twist—"it's wonderful what folks can stand when they become accustomed to it."

It is, indeed, wonderful to think of the burdens some folks can carry from day to day and still bear up and fare cheerfully on. Burdens of loneliness, burdens of business troubles, burdens of physical pain and suffering, of sorrow and bereavement—we do not have to look far in any direction in order to learn that the world in which we live is a world of burden bearers.

Sometimes, it is true, these burdens are hidden from human eyes. There are griefs that hang no crape from their doors and give no outward manifestation of their presence to the world. There are sorrows that are stifled for the sake of others, disappointments that are met with a smile, lest some one else should note the heaviness of the burden and give way to discouragement. It must have been of these that the poet was thinking when he wrote:

"If singing breath or echoing chord
To every hidden pang were given,
What endless melodies were poured,
As sad as earth, as sweet as heaven."

It is not easy always to adjust ourselves to our burdens. Some of us, unfortunately, never do. We cry out against them, complaining bitterly of divine injustice. We carry them, yes, but most grudgingly, querulously; and as a consequence the load is bound to chafe and irritate.

Others learn to accept their burden in the spirit of serene surrender, as a part of life's discipline ordered for them by an all-wise Teacher. When one takes this attitude, it is wonderful what strength he will find. He may discover that God does not always take away his burden or even lighten it; but that God does show him how to bear it, how to adjust it so that it will neither crush nor overwhelm, but instead become a daily challenge to latent powers and hitherto unsuspected strength. Best of all he will find that Christ will walk with him and bear the heavier end of the load.—Forward.

ADVENTURE OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

"The Christian religion, then, in calling us to a life of adventure, does but repeat, with a special emphasis, the invitation of life itself, at the same time indicating the truly adventurous path. It is thus pre-eminently the religion of the young and those who never grow old. One of our best living novelists has divided men into two classes—the adventurers and the stay-at-homes—but in truth all men have within them, at all events when they are young, both the instinct for adventure and the love of home. Unfortunately many, perhaps the majority, of men as they grow older lose the spirit of adventure, and often in doing so they make home itself seem a dull place to the young. In youth it is indeed physical adventure, chiefly if not solely, that appeals to us, and of course the time must come when we are no longer fit for such adventure; but, however old our bodies may be, there always remain open to us the adventures of the spirit. To go on to the end exploring new realms of beauty, discovering, or at least making our own, new treasures of knowledge, and, above all, learning to voyage more adventurously on that ocean of love which is our true environment—this is possible to us all, while life lasts: this is to gain and to keep to the end the spirit of perpetual youth, and to make of death itself but the last great adventure which this life has to offer us."—C. H. S. Matthews,

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Three Burdens.

Texts: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee." Ps. 55:22.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Gal. 6:22.

"For every man shall bear his own burden." Gal. 6:5.

These three passages from the holy scriptures do not in reality contradict each other. They represent three classes of burdens that fall to the lot of fallen mankind. There are the burdens of sin and that disabilities that result from sin, that God alone can bear for us. There are the burdens of tribulation that each may bear for the other. And there are the burdens of duty that each one must bear for himself.

Let us first consider

The Burden Of Sin.

It is a heavy, crushing burden, that weights the lost soul down to the lowest hell. It is a burden that each sinner brings upon himself. He has no one to blame but himself. He brings this burden upon himself by the exercise of his free will. He chooses sin and its awful consequences as his portion.

In the council of the Godhead it was arranged that God's only begotten Son should bear the burden of the world's sin, guilt and penalty. In the fulness of time, this second Person of the Godhead came into the world born of a woman. At the close of a life of perfect holiness and a ministry of marvelous enlightenment and uplift, He died on the cross to atone for the sins of the whole world.

It is written in the prophecy of Isaiah: "But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all."

In Heb. 1:9 we have this testimony, "But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man." And Peter adds this statement, "Who his own self bare our sins in his body on the tree."

Jesus Christ is therefore provisionally the burden bearer of the sins of the lost race. The sinner comes to share the benefits of the atonement when he accepts them by faith. And he cannot share them until he does. "Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." "Without faith it is impossible to please God," or receive the least blessing of the atonement.

"And he shall sustain thee." And this is a most precious promise. It is the all-sufficient guarantee and a life of perfect love. It ought to encourage every sinner to come boldly to the throne of grace to obtain mercy and find grace to help in every time of need. This promise gives assurance of salvation unto the uttermost of sin and for all eternity.

In the next place let us consider

The Burden of Tribulation.

Tribulation is one of the inevitable consequences of the life and conditions of sin. "Man is born to trouble as the sparks fly upward." Distress flows from four sources. A man suffers the results of his own wrong doing. Or he may be the victim of another's meanness. For "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." One may suffer from effects of bad heredity. And some undergo privations, pain and sorrow on account of unhealthy and immoral surroundings.

"Bear ye one another's burdens." One way of doing this is by the exercise of heartfelt sympathy. A fellow-feeling is a wonderful lever to lift heavy burdens off the hearts bowed down to the earth. Many a load of trouble has disappeared at the touch of a loving hand. Another way to bear such burdens is to remove the cause. Is it hunger? give food. Is it sickness? give healing, or provide suitable and adequate remedies. Is it loneliness or friendliness? be a friend in need and a friend indeed. Is it the loss of a good name by slander? restore the good name by denouncing and punishing the slanderer. Is it distress of yielding to temptation? restore such a one by prayer and brotherly council.

"And so fulfill the law of Christ." This law of Christ is recorded in John 13:34: "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you that ye also love one another." This the love that extends the helping hand, that pours forth a message of sympathy, and that gives for the relief of benighted and sorrowing multitudes. It is the imitation of the love of Christ. Or rather, it is the spontaneous outflowing of the love of Christ in the believing soul.

In the last place let us consider

The Burden Of Duty.

"For every man shall bear his own burden." As a free moral agent a man is a responsible and accountable being. The moral law puts him under obligation. His own conscience weighs him down with an awful sense of duty. And a world of need about him places upon him a heavy debt. With Paul he can say, I am debtor to the Greeks and to the Barbarians; to the wise and to the unwise."

Every one is in debt to himself. He owes it to himself to take care of his body and his health, to keep his body clean and strong as a temple of God's indwelling. He owes it to himself to train and cultivate his mind, that it might shine as the candle of the Lord. And he owes it to himself to care for his immortal soul, to embrace the conditions of its salvation, to keep it unspotted from the world, and to preserve it holy and blameless until the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

And each one owes a debt to his fellowmen. He must be his brother's keeper. He must love his neighbor as himself. He must act the Good Samaritan to relieve the distressed. He must lift up the fallen, reclaim the wandering, instruct the ignorant, and point the lost to "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

And every rational human being owes a countless debt to Almighty God. It is a debt of worship. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." It is a debt of prayer. "Call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." "Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." It is a debt of self-sacrificing giving. "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give unto your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again." And it is a debt of praise. "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name." "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord."

"He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doeth the Lord require, but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."—Word of Life.

EVERY-DAY RELIGION.

Giving Joy To Yourself And To Others.

In "The Private Papers of Henry Rye-croft" an incident is given of the author's finding in a lovely wood a 10-year old lad who utterly crushed in spirit and crying bitterly, all because he had lost a sixpence. The coin was given him to pay a debt, and the boy was in the "anguish of despair" at his loss. The writer adds that his supplying the amount "wrought six pennies worth of miracle," and changed bitter grief into normal life and happiness.

This simple incident prompts a valuable consideration. Many of the problems of this old world just now center about the old commodity of money. Deny it we may; complain of it; denounce it; deplore it—still it is a fact. Social difficulties relate to it; economic conditions are occasioned by it; labor and capital discuss it, and the wage rate centers in it. International relationships must adjust themselves to it, and commercial and industrial progress are dependent on it.

When we consider the broad questions of material and educational development, money seems to supply or withhold means of promotion and advance, either through public tax or private philanthropy. The money question is an important one and is uppermost in practical consideration among nations and people.

Essayists, moralists, preachers and philosophers may arraign themselves against this earthly and mercenary fact, but there it stands like a Gibraltar at the very entrance of the harbor, and its cold, long-distance guns defy opposition.

What then are we to do? Denounce money as evil along with those who misquote Scripture by calling it "the root of all evil?" Or, are we to honor it, and rejoice in its proper value and use?

No, "money is not the root of all evil," but the "love of money" is.

If money is to be used with highest valuation, it must be gained and used aright.

There is no greater joy on earth, we are told, and we know, than the joy experienced in giving money heartily to worthy objects and people.

Money's damage has come from hoarding it for and bestowing it upon those who have not the character or wisdom to use it aright.

There have been notable examples in the past and there are those today who give and spend, not only to the glory of God but to their own joy and benefit. Their personality is shown in the type of gifts they make, and at the same time their gifts enable them to extend their personality through a wide range of social need.

The very faces of great benefactors grow warm and kindly and sympathetic. The soul grows beautiful as the heart finds benevolent expression.

Men of benevolence are not only large hearted; they are loved more and by greater masses of mankind than all others.

The Church of Christ is doing much in training her membership to give regularly and systematically, but there is still before us the task of teaching mankind the "fun of giving;" the joy of making presents to God and man.

All through Italy and France and other parts of Europe one can see beautiful roadways and walks lined with young trees—evergreens, maples, elms, beech, linden and others. These have been set out since the war, and each bears the name of a loved brother, son, husband, father or sweetheart who was lost in that fearful struggle. Loving hands water and train those young trees, and on through the years to come, until they are strong and old, this will continue. In them saddened and lonely hearts find their joy of giving to those they love.

The joy of giving must find its heartway into money giving too, if men are to grow less selfish; if society is to be reclaimed; if the Church is to be properly supported, and if nations in debt and despondency are to learn to beat swords into pruning hooks.—Jno. Timothy Stone, in The Continent.

GODLESS LEARNING.

Piety has not kept pace with the increase of learning. Faith has declined in about the same proportion as knowledge has advanced. We are approaching a godless age. "Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith in the earth?"

With widely-diffused knowledge has come many blessings and conveniences of civilization. The marvels of aircraft, electricity, and the radio have tended to expand immensely the human ego. Man's achievements have been lauded to the skies and God is forgotten. Man glories in his self-sufficiency and raises the flag of independence of God. The family altar is becoming rare and the closet of secret and victorious devotion is sorely neglected. Prayerlessness has become a sad characteristic of the age.

In the pride and presumption of learning man has sought to drive God out of His universe. He has found a natural method of accounting for creation, which he calls evolution. He claims that man evolved from the lower order of animals, and these in succession from a primordial germ, that might have gotten into the world by chance.

The man of godless learning denies the divine inspiration of the Holy Scriptures and says that the Bible is like any other book of ancient lore, full of legends and incredible incidents. He denies the divine-human personality of Jesus Christ, and says that He is just a man, only better than the rest of the race. He denies the exercise of the supernatural in the Scriptures, in redemption and in history. All the superhuman achievements in each of these realms are rejected or accounted for on natural grounds. All-sufficient naturalism has become the slogan of modern thought.

The church of Jesus Christ has become the unfortunate victim of this faithless onslaught of modern learning. Men in the high councils of the church have joined hands with the enemies of Jesus Christ to discredit the purpose of the cross and the efficacy of the blood. They deny the necessity, the reality, and the uplift of the new birth and make salvation a merely human achievement. And the church is becoming rapidly filled with unsaved members. And the great Head of the church is being deeply wounded in His own sanctuary. "But thou, O Lord, how long" shall man prevail against thee?—Word of Life.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Welch Memorial Church.—We are pleased to have Rev. T. E. Pierce and family returned to us for another year.

We had large attendance at all the services Sunday.

At the 11 o'clock hour Mr. Pierce preached an inspiring sermon using as his subject Unity. Much thought was taken from the 17th chapter of John, where it is recorded that Jesus prayed that the Church be one even as he and God are one.

He also chose further reference from the 12th chapter of 1st Corinthians, where Paul compared the Church to a body with Christ as the head exhorting united effort on the part of the members.

Sunday night at the 7 o'clock service he used as his subject Self-examination. Text: "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith: prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?"

At the close of the morning services the doors of the church were open for the reception of new members. 6 came forward; two joined by letter. We have had quite a number of accessions to the church since the George Stevens revival: He was a great man of God and did a power of good in High Point.

Our Sunday school is very large. Still growing. But yet we are not satisfied, as there are so many children and grown ups as well that never darken the door of Sunday school. We trust we may do something that may interest them and that they will join in later.

Mr. C. R. Ward is our Supt. He puts his whole heart in the work, and likes to see the Sunday school grow.

The following are the officers for this year: Choir leader, Mr. I. B. Ridge; Assistant, Mr. W. O. Elkin; Pianist, Miss Cathrin Gill; Assistants, Mrs. D. B. Elridge and Miss Annie Hiatt; Mr. D. B. Elridge is Chairman of Board of Stewards. Mr. C. W. Hoover is Assistant Sunday school Supt.; Sunday school Secy., Mr. L. F. Cassell.

We are hoping for this to be the greatest year yet at Welch Memorial Church. We have been laboring under a heavy burden for more than six years, our church debt. But we are beginning to see through to the brighter side. We hope to pay out of building and loan this year and that will be such a relief to all who have been so faithful.

We were glad to have Rev. D. R. Williams preach for us the Sunday of conference. He is a former pastor of Welch Memorial church and has a warm spot in many hearts, who were delighted to have him visit us, and to hear him preach again.

Prayer meeting will be led by Mr. E. F. Seagroves next Wednesday night.

We have quite a number of sick members and friends at this writing. We trust all will soon be well again.

Much love to the Herald and readers,

Mrs. J. W. Mitchell, Reporter.

Lineberry.—Rev. C. E. Ridge filled his last appointment in last conference year, the first Sunday in November. As usual he preached a good sermon. The following church officers were elected for the coming year: Trustees—W. T. Morris, B. K. Taylor and W. A. Frank; Stewards—W. A. Frank, Jessie Taylor, Elmer Morris, and L. M. Ballard; Reporter—Kate Frank; Sunday school superintendent—Lester Lanier; Assistant—E. S. Morris.

We are very glad to have Rev. C. E. Ridge back again for our pastor. He has been faithful and done one of the best year's work that has ever been done on this work.

Our Sunday school has been good this year. E. S. Morris was our superintendent. He served us faithfully. Sunday school was re-organized Sunday, November 15. The following teachers were elected. J. P. Elliott, E. S. Morris, Mrs. B. E. Lanier, Mrs. J. P. Elliott. We are looking forward for another good year.

We have been having prayer services every Sunday night.

NEW ADDRESSES.

Rev. R. A. Hunter, Henderson, N. C.
Rev. J. E. Pritchard, Asheboro, N. C.
Rev. L. S. Helms, Caroleen, N. C.
Rev. H. F. Fogleman, Concord, N. C.

—We await notice from moving pastors before changing their addresses.

Fairview Church.—This church has just passed through a very prosperous and fruitful year with Rev. C. G. Isley as pastor. During the year the church has received 29 new members and has lost three, two by letter and one by death.

It has increased the pastor's salary from $350 to $500 for the coming year.

The Sunday school has shown a marked increase in attendance during the past year. There is under way a campaign for the raising of funds for the building of Sunday school rooms. The church has every indication to hope for a prosperous coming year.

F. D. Murr.

High Point.—The finest and most harmonious Conference, the best in the history of the church, so the preachers say, has just been held in the new First Church. The attendance was splendid, and the entertainment by the host, Dr. Brown, and the members, who co-operated so faithfully, was hospitable and gracious. The Conference has grown to be such a large body that it is no easy task to entertain it for six days. The addresses and sermon by Dr. T. H. Lewis of Washington were inspiring and uplifting. The addresses by Rev. E. A. Sexsmith and Rev. Lawrence C. Little on the Young People's Work were splendid and encouraging. The service on Friday evening was given over to the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary work and we were delighted to hear a timely address by Mrs. Henry Hupfeld of Catonsville, Md., who is President of Executive Board of W. F. M. S. Mrs. W. C. Hamner, Mrs. H. A. Garrett, and Mrs. Geo. R. Brown made interesting and encouraging reports on the work. The students of High Point College attended in a body on Thursday afternoon, and presented a very enjoyable programme. The presence of this large body of splendid young people seemed to be an inspiration to the members of the Conference, who received them very enthusiastically. An Organ Recital was given by Miss McIntyre, and the preachers appreciated the opportunity of hearing this fine instrument. On Sunday morning the service was truly inspiring when three young ministers were ordained by the laying on of hands, the ordination sermon being delivered in a most appropriate manner by Dr. C. L. Whitaker, after which 38 new members were received into the church by Dr. Brown. Chas. Reiner Jr. of Baltimore, was present, and represented the Publishing House interests. We were sorry not to see Dr. Benson, who was prevented from coming by a recent illness in the hospital. Dr. Dixon was re-elected President of the Conference on first ballot, and Rev. C. W. Bates was re-elected Secy. for the tenth year. Rev. Fred Paschall served as Ass't. Secy. Dr. R. M. Andrews presented the claims of High Point College, and it is earnestly hoped that the entire membership of the Methodist Protestant church will rally to its support at once. Rev. E. G. Lowdennilk presented the interests of the Children's Home, which is in good financial shape. Mr. J. M. Cardin Jr. of Entfeld, was the lay member of Stationing Com. with Dr. Dixon, and their report was read about noon on Monday, and this report has already been published in the Herald. On Monday afternoon the members if Conference dispersed to their different homes and fields for another year's work. The people of the First Church welcomed them royally to their homes, and feel that it was a great privilege and blessing to have entertained the Annual Conference of 1925.

We were delighted to know that Dr. Geo. R. Brown has been returned to us as pastor for another year. His labor in our midst for the space of eight years has been exceedingly acceptable and fruitful, and we rejoice with him in the recent acquisition of a large number of splendid members. One hundred and one persons have united with our church in the past four weeks, all of whom are fine people.

We now have a membership of more than six hundred, and it is a foregone conclusion that Dr. Brown must soon have an assistant in his work. A large number of the members met at the church last Wednesday evening to meet and welcome the new members.

The Mission Band, composed of young girls, met at the church Monday afternoon with Mrs. Geo. R. Brown and Mrs. D. A. Neese as leaders. There were 12 members present, and the girls are packing a box to be sent to Pine Ridge school.

The Brotherhood will hold a meeting at the church on Tuesday evening, to which all the men are cordially invited. Immediately after this meeting, the Stewards will effect an organization for the coming year.

The Library Committee of the Woman's Club is calling a meeting on Friday evening, Nov. 20th, for the purpose of forming a Library Association. The people of the city are becoming interested in a public library, and the City Council has decided to donate a room in the Municipal Building for this purpose, and also to pay the salary of a trained Librarian.

Congratulations are being extended to Mr. and Mrs. W. C. King of Howell St. upon the arrival of a little daughter, who will bear the name of Sara Gilbert, and also to Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Kocace, who are rejoicing over a baby son.

Mrs. H. S. Meredith of Tampa, Fla., who has been here on a visit to her mother, Mrs. W. P. Pickett, and other relatives during Conference, has returned home.

Wyatt A. Pickens, who has been on a trip to South America for 10 weeks with the Pan-American Highway Commission, has landed safe and well in New York, and went at once to Washington City, where he will be employed for several weeks. He writes that he enjoyed a delightful and profitable tour among our Southern neighbors, but is much pleased to set foot on the soil of good old U. S. A. again, and is homesick for High Point, the old home town. Says he expects to spend Christmas with home folks.

West End, Greensboro.—The West End congregation welcomes with pleasure and satisfaction the return of the pastor, Rev. E. L. Ballard. His report to the fourth quarterly conference was evidence of the fact that the past year was the best in the history of the church, and Dr. Dixon declared that it measured up one hundred per cent according to the standard set by Dr. Lewis. We begin the new conference year with the hope that the coming year will be even more successful. The first and greatest undertaking is the erection of Sunday school rooms, which will begin at an early date.

Misses Eva and Clela Routh entertained the Senior Christian Endeavor Society at its November business and social meeting at their home on Lexington Ave. Friday evening.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met at the home of Mrs. J. A. Campbell Monday evening. A number of visitors and a large number of members were present and enjoyed a very interesting program.

On Sunday evening, November 22, the children from the Children's Home will have charge of the service. This will be the annual Thank Offering service of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, and the program is under the auspices of this society. The public is invited.

The Fount Bible Class will open a series of inspirational lectures along the line of young people's work Thursday evening of this week with an address by Rev. Lawrence Little, associate pastor of Grace M. P. Church, and the newly elected president of the Board of Young People's Work of the North Carolina Conference. Mr. Little needs no introduction to the West End community, especially to the young people, and suffice is to say that "Lawrence Little" is going to be there. This mass meeting follows a Father and Son Banquet at 6:00 o'clock in the basement of the church.

We are grieved to learn of the passing Saturday morning, November 14, of Mr. Arrington Coble, one of our older members. He and Mrs. Coble had recently moved to a farm near Julian and the funeral was held from there Sunday morning at 11 o'clock by Rev. E. L. Ballard. Interment was in the cemetery at Shiloh M. P. Church.

In the absence of the pastor Sunday morning Rev. P. E. Lindley, head of the department of Religious Education at High Point College, brought to us a stirring message. Using as his text a part of Matthew 3:16, Mr. Lindley declared that it is possible for every person to have this same Christian experience, and the four outstanding things that debar that privilege are Ignorance, Idolatry, Impurity, and Idleness.

These services will be Thanksgiving services. At each service our annual Thanksgiving Offering will be made.

We hope to have Dr. Dixon with us for services, also to hold our quarterly conference.

Sincerely, B. M. Williams.

Married.

At the M. P. parsonage at Pinnacle, October 25, 1925, Mr. Roy Stone to Miss Sula Estmoreland.

Mr. Charlie Mickles to Miss Addie Stone, the writer officiating.

Mr. Stone and bride are making their home in Winston-Salem where he is employed by the Phillips-Stone Co.

Mr. Mickles and bride will make their home in Fancy Gap; where Mr. Mickles is teaching in the High School.

We wish the best of success to each couple.

A. L. Hunter.

Concord.—The church was filled to capacity for the morning service to welcome our new pastor, Mr. H. F. Fogleman, who brought an inspiring message from the subject—"The Church." A large crowd also gathered for the evening service at which time two new members united with the church. We are very glad indeed to have Mr. Henderson and his family join with us.

The subject for the evening worship was, "An Humble Beginning."

Friday night, at the former home of Rev. Lawrence Little, an informal reception was held for the purpose of welcoming our new pastor, Mr. Fogleman, and to bid Brother Little goodbye.

Mr. Little is taking up new work this year at Grace Church, Greensboro. We are sorry at Mr. Little has to move, and we will miss him greatly in our midst; yet we are happy to see him take up this new work. Many interesting games were played and several good gifts. The Sunday school Band rendered some fine music for the occasion. At the end of the program refreshments were served. About one hundred and fifty people were present. Every one had a wonderful time, as is always the case if Lawrence Little is present. The attendance at Sunday school Sunday was 232 and the offering amounted to $22.33. We are starting the new year right.

The Stewards of the church made the November Canvass Sunday afternoon. We are glad to report that the entire budget was met with the exception of a few dollars, which we are sure will be pledged this week. The Stewards are doing fine work.

The Senior C. E. Society held its regular service at the County Home Sunday. A large crowd attended the service, and an excellent program was rendered. The Junior Society took part in the program by singing songs and quoting memory verses.

Every one is pleased with our new pastor, who has already entered into the work here wholeheartedly, and we welcome him into our midst.

Entertains Concord Missionary Society.

On Saturday afternoon, November 7, at 6 o'clock, the Junior Missionary Society of Concord Church, Saxapahaw Charge, met at the home of their leader, Mrs. B. S. Curl.

First, the members played various games which were directed by Misses Gladys Guthrie and Evelyn McBane, after which hot chocolate and cookies were served by Mrs. Curl.

A business meeting was then held. Each member presented to their leader a quilt square for which a quilt was to be made as a Thanksgiving present for the M. P. Orphanage at High Point. They then adjourned after declaring a pleasant afternoon spent.

This Society consists of 42 lively members and is doing good work. Edith Gulhrrie.

Loy.

John Haywood Loy, son of the late John and Sallie Loy, was born in Alamance County, N. C., December 15, 1844. He was suddenly called home November 9, 1925.

In the year 1866, he was married to Amanda M. Neese, who with one son, O. C. Loy, Sr., survive him. One son and daughter, Jordan Alexander and Mary Augusta, preceded him to the spirit world a number of years ago. He is also survived by ten grand-children and eighteen great-grand-children. Two of his grand sons, Rev. O. C. Loy, Jr., and Rev. W. M. Loy, are pastors in the Methodist Protestant conference and are now serving Guilford and West Thomasville respectively.

In 1914, he professed faith in Christ and joined Friendship Methodist Protestant church. Some years later, for convenience, he transferred his membership to Bellemont church, of the same denomination, where he remained a faithful member until the end.

Brother Loy was a good man and will be missed by the church and community.

The funeral service was conducted by the pastor, after which his body was tenderly laid to rest in Friendship cemetery.

The family and relatives have the sympathy of the community. W. F. Ashburn.

A Bit Of History.

When Mrs. F. R. Harris of Henderson was introduced to the Annual Conference last week, modesty prevented her from giving a bit of history which would have been very interesting to the conference, so I am passing it on to those who might be interested. Mrs. Harris' father, Rev. Jesse H. Page, was an M. P. minister; her grandfather, Rev. W. E. Wills, and her uncle, Rev. R. H. Wills, were able ministers of our conference; her uncle, Rev. G. A. T. Whitaker, was a minister; two of her cousins, Rev. C. H. Whitaker and Rev. C. L. Whitaker, D. D., are now members of our conference; two brothers-in-law of her father were ministers and her 6th great-grandfather Rev. Alexander Whitaker, son of Rev. Wm. Whitaker, Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, England, in about 1587, baptized Pocahontas. This is a record for ministerial ancestry which I believe very few people have.

Mrs. L. R. Gooch of Henderson is a sister of Mrs. Harris and of course shares with her these honors. J. E. Pritchard.

Mirpah, Haw River Charge.—Conference is over and we have our old preacher back transformed into a new one. We are very glad to have Mr. and Mrs. Reed with us for another year.

I think the world is getting better as Haw River Charge voted the preacher back for the third year. A very unusual thing for this work to do. Mr. Reed was a friend indeed for us while we were building our church. He was always ready to speak words of encouragement, which meant so much.

Our pastor did not do any more for us than he has done or would do for any other church if they would only let him and help him.

We are hoping and praying that this may be our very best year ever.

Our new officers have been elected: Stewards, Gilmer Huffines, George Diamond and Lonnie Wagoner. Sunday school Supt. Roy Stewart.

Miss Lula Hill, one of our faithful members, continues quite ill.

Mrs. Fred Jones, Reporter.

West Forsyth Circuit.—Notice: I expect to fill the appointments according to last year's plan. Began yesterday at Pleasant Hill. Good attendance there and at Tabernacle. The first quarterly conference will meet at Pleasant Hill, Saturday before the third Sunday in December at 11 A. M. Let all officials come, and bring plans for a forward move in the Master's business, that he may have pleasure, and we profit thereby. C. H. Whitaker, Pastor.

Henderson.—The Baraca and Philathea classes gave a Farewell Banquet, Thursday evening, November 12, in the basement of the church for Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Pritchard, who are leaving us this year.

The guests were welcomed by the teacher and president of both classes. At 7.30 they were all invited to the basement by Mrs. Polk Garret. The color scheme being yellow and white, the room was beautifully decorated in yellow and white chrysanthemums, crepe paper and autumn leaves. The guest table was elaborately decorated with large yellow and white chrysanthemums. In the center was a candelabrum with yellow candles. Mrs. Pritchard's place was marked by a corsage of American Legion red roses and fern. Mr. Pritchard, by a boutonniere of the same flower. Seated at the guest table were Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Pritchard, Rev. and Mrs. E. R. Nelson, Mr. W. R. Vaughn, Mrs. H. A. Jordan, Mr. Edison Hicks, and Miss Katie Coone. After the blessing was asked by Rev. E. R. Nelson, Mr. Hicks made the address of welcome and the evening's program was carried out as follows, with Mr. Edison Hicks acting as toast master.

Solo, by Prof. Lindsey, who was accompanied on the piano by Miss Sallie Charles Cheatham. Mr. W. R. Vaughn spoke a few words of regret that Rev. and Mrs. Pritchard were leaving us this year. Mrs. H. A. Jordan then toasted Mr. and Mrs. Pritchard in behalf of the Baracas and Philatheas. Miss Elizabeth Fox then sang a solo, which was followed by a piano solo by Miss Sallie Charles Cheatham. Rev. E. R. Nelson spoke a few words in appreciation of the work done by Mr. and Mrs. Pritchard during their stay in Henderson. Mr. C. L. Finch sang a solo "A Perfect Day." After which Miss Katie Cooke presented a beautiful floor-lamp to Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Pritchard as a parting gift from the two classes. Miss Elizabeth Fox then presented to them a lovely silver tray in behalf of the Young Ladies' League. Mr. Pritchard accepted these gifts for himself and Mrs. Pritchard, then spoke a few words of parting to the classes. After singing "God be with you till we meet again" the benediction was pronounced by Rev. J. E. Pritchard.

The Willing Workers, dressed in white, assisted the Philatheas in serving. Reporter.

Reidsville.—We are delighted to have Dr. Williams and his family returned to us for another year and we hope that this may prove the best year for pastor and people in the history of the church.

Last Sunday was a good day for our Sunday school and church, there being the largest percent of members present for both services that we have had for a long time. Dr. Williams explained the various duties of all the officers of the church and Sunday school at the Sunday school hour. Then at the eleven o'clock service all the members sat in family groups and listened to a most helpful and inspiring sermon from the following text, "Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here?"

Prof. J. H. Allen will begin his duties as Sunday school superintendent next Sunday and we hope that all the members will stand loyally by him in advancing the work.

[We were glad to have Mr. and Mrs. Fred Jones, Margaret and Carol Jones, Bob Stanley, George Diamond, Bruce Hill, and Rev. and Mrs. W. D. Reed of the Mizpah church worship with us Sunday. Come again, Mizpah people, for we are always glad to have you.]

The many friends of Mrs. H. S. Dixon and Miss Cordell Gunn will be glad to know that they are both improving and we hope will soon be able to be back in their place, for we miss them so much in the work.

We trust that this will be the most successful year for every pastor and church in our conference. Lola McCollum.

Creswell.—Creswell charge has started its regular work again for the next conference year, only it seems to be more wide awake and on the alert; due to the fact that we have had our same pastor safely restored for another year.

Rev. Mr. Hethcox has been with us for the past six years and has done excellent work; but we feel confident that he will be able to accomplish more in the future than in the past.

The church at this time is a little weak in members, but is very strong in spirit, and throughout the church there is a spirit of perfect unity and co-operation.

The Sunday school is now doing wonderful work. It was organized in with the other Sunday schools of this district; and a few of the other Sunday schools in the surrounding territory into a Sunday school convention (which is being held once a month). This convention is proving beneficial to all Sunday schools of the different denominations.

We have two organized Christian Endeavor Societies; the Juniors and the Seniors. Both societies are doing good work.

The first quarterly conference will be held at Mt. Hermon, Tuesday night, December the

HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

Catalogue and application blank will be forwarded upon application. Those desiring further information should address The President, High Point College, High Point, N. C.

first. We would like for all official officers to be present. Louise Hatfield, Reporter.

State St. Church.—We enjoyed the first sermon by our "new" preacher Sunday. The Sunday school had the largest attendance it has ever had—12 new scholars and two visitors. About seven new members have been added to the church membership in the past few weeks. Hope we may be able to express to these new members the pleasure we feel in having them come and join us.

Our quarters are rapidly growing too small. Already many eyes of faith are seeing a new church on the corner.

Soon the children will begin preparing the Christmas program. I don't know just who will direct their training. Reporter.

Liberty, Davidson Circuit.—Our pastor, Rev. C. E. Ridge, filled his appointment the past third Sunday; there was a right good congregation out to hear him. I am sure every one enjoyed his sermon and was pleased to have him back again. As this is the beginning of a year's work we all must do our best, if we make the future more successful than the past. Our Sunday school is still running with a right good attendance. Prayer meeting at the usual time Saturday night before the second and fourth Sunday. The church elected an organist the past Sunday, Miss Eva Hopkins. Best wishes for the future. Reporter —May every pastor find his field, if not exactly to his liking, one that can be made more to his liking by his earnest and tactful work.

—We trust that many of our people have observed the week of prayer for our college. Without the guiding hand of God it cannot succeed. Under His blessing it may achieve great success. Let us continue to pray for our college as we pray for our ministers and our churches.

THE GLAD RELEASE.

"No; I can't say I dread the coming death," said a man who had long been a patient sufferer. "You know," he continued smilingly, "if one had been in prison a long time, suffering almost every conceivable pain living upon worse than prison fare, because all other foods are denied him by his jailers, disease and ill health, he cannot be glad to see the walls fall and get a glimpse once more of blue skies and sunlit fields."

This is what death means to the believer in Christ. It means release from prison walls, vision of wider horizons and fairer outlook. As Dr. Holmes truthfully says, "Most of us die before we really leave this world." We die to all its pursuits and pleasures and activities so that, as he intimates in another place, "Death is but the locking of the door of the deserted mansion from which the tenant already has fled."—Ex.

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL PRAYER.

A meeting was held in the First Methodist Protestant Church in High Point today which will mean much, within the next few days, for the High Point College.

That meeting requested that I ask all our people to continue in special prayer for the blessings of God upon us in this campaign for $100,000. Pray earnestly that God will direct all who canvass in securing this needed money.

Pray that God will make all of us willing to pay to the limit. In your private devotions pray in your prayer services and in your church services pray, and call upon the people to pray that the Father of us all may bless us and direct us in getting the full $100,000. And also pray that God will lead men of means to give liberally to this institution, which has been erected and which is being run that young people may be so trained and developed that through them His name may be gloried, and His Kingdom be advanced in the earth.

All of us believe in the power of prayer; let us continue our special and united prayer for the High Point College through the month of December. Faithfully yours,
A. G. Dixon.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Lack of time forbids my writing much this week, so will just say two or three things.

The after-conference adjustments have nearly all been made, and so far as I know the work is starting off splendidly for the new conference year. Already good reports are coming in from several of the fields. In some cases salaries have been increased since conference, and where this has been done, the people seem all the more determined to pay the budgets in full.

The charges that get an early start on the budgets are the ones that come most nearly paying up in full.

100 Percent. Organization.

One pastor suggests that thus early in the year I call attention again to the 100 percent. organized church. Look on the back cover of the 1924 Journal and you will find the president of the General Conference calling our attention to this. The church that is well organized almost invariably does good work. Such a church has its stewards organized and working, an organized Sunday school, a C. E. society, a ladies' aid society, a woman's home missionary society, and a woman's foreign missionary society. Each one of these organizations has its place to fill in any local church, and without each one of these organizations some part of the work is neglected.

First Quarterly Conferences.

I would be glad if I could reach all the first quarterly conferences; but as that is impossible I am hereby calling attention to the plan we have followed for the last three years.

Any pastor feeling the need of some one to aid him in laying his plans in the first quarterly conference may feel free to call upon the chairman of his district, or any layman within reach of him to come to his quarterly conference and help in this planning. This has worked well in many cases, and I predict that it will work well with you.

Some, I know, do not need this help, but others do. Let us strive from now until next Conference to make each charge and each church 100 percent. on pastor's salary and on budgets this year. Faithfully yours,

A. G. Dixon.

OUR TASK AND OUR PRIVILEGE.

Paid Annual Conference Budget in full:

1. Whitakers,
2. Fountain Place.

Paid College Assessment in full.

1. Whitakers.

A. C. B.

1. Saxapahaw—$1.00

Our budget is begun in earnest this week. Whitakers claims first honors in paying the College assessment first as well as the A. C. B. It would be rather remarkable if they were to send in all the G. C. B. first too.

Saxapahaw starts the list of contributions for the A. C. B. Just one more week in November and the treasurer will have several bills at the end of the month. We are waiting to see who will be next with the A. C. B. in full and first to start the G. C. B. Let's get busy. What we do now will be done no matter what kind of last part of the year we may have. Get in a full year's work financially as well as in the church services.

Yours in His service,

A. G. Dixon.

—That meeting of ministers and laymen at High Point last Tuesday adopted a plan to raise money urgently needed to pay building bills for the college. We have the buildings and are proud of them, but our pride would be turned unto shame if we should fail to pay for them. Let us not fail!

—Union Thanksgiving Service for South Greensboro churches was held in Calvary church with a good attendance and a good sermon.

CONVENTION OF THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

By Luther K. Long.

The Biennial Convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America—held in the new Methodist Temple, Chicago, Nov. 5-9—was an outstanding event. It attracted unusual attention to itself and to the whole question of law enforcement—with special emphasis on the 18th amendment and the Volstead act.

I went to the convention because I wanted to get into closer touch with leading temperance thinkers and workers. Papers and magazines have been sending out investigators to look into the status of prohibition enforcement. Many of these spies have brought back reports which, if not wholly adverse, were at least disquieting. The report of Mr. Johnson, research worker for the Federal council of churches, has stirred everybody. The wets have, as it seems, taken unwarranted comfort from it, and some dry workers have repudiated its findings with unwise vehemence.

Though unable to remain to the close of the meeting, I am glad I went—for I received more than enough to compensate for the trouble and effort. I shall, preacher fashion, enumerate some of the facts and impressions.

1. The findings of Mr. Johnson—investigator for the Federal council of churches—should have been reviewed and discussed in our early session. Bishop Cannon, of the M. E. Church, South, was to have analyzed and estimated it toward the end of the session, but was unexpectedly called away. Dr. Robert Speer, closely connected with the Federal council, was called in and made some explanations in defense of the report. He testified that the Federal council stands firmly for the 18th amendment and the enforcement of the Volstead act. Notwithstanding this explanation, there was all through the convention, as it seemed to me, a feeling of resentment against Mr. Johnson on the part of the league. I think that Mr. Johnson's findings, studied without prejudice, are bound to be received with an increasing sense of their fairness. The wets will find no real grounds for comfort in them, and the dries will be helped to a more rational and determined stand in favor of the law and its enforcement.

2. Due recognition was given to the value of the temperance cause of the Christian church, of women's work, and of the educational factor. Miss Anna Gordon—long-time C. T. U.—brought greetings from her organization and intimate associate of Miss Frances E. Willard, now president of the W. C. T. U., the Bands of Hope, the Loyal Temperance Legions, and the legislation requiring that there be given in the public schools scientific instruction concerning the effects of alcoholic drinks on the human system. Without a church and a minister Rev. Howard H. Russell could not have organized the Anti-Saloon League in the Second Congregational church of Oberlin, Ohio. Bishop Nicholson and others repeatedly emphasized the necessity for the religious appeal in the fight for temperance and law enforcement. Delegates were present from all the churches, including the Roman Catholic, prayers were offered and inspiration was received from the singing of Christian hymns.

3. The saloon has been legally out-lawed, and it will remain an outlaw. Wet speakers and writers are admitting this. Of course, we know that allowing the manufacture and sale of beer and wine with increased alcoholic content could mean nothing else than the return of drinking places. The wets would readily forget that they had bade the saloon farewell forever—and make all necessary preparations for its return. Nothing short of eternal vigilance and activity will keep this acknowledged adversary of human well-being effectively suppressed. At the organization of the Anti-Saloon League the founder, H. H. Russell, announced a program: "Agitation, legislation, law enforcement." That is to be the program for years to come.

4. A largely attended luncheon at the new Hotel Sherman was one of the features, followed by a program in which many business men from over the country testified concerning "Prohibition, before and after taking." Dr. H. H. Russell presided and read telegrams from Roger Babson and others who could not be present. A few of these testimonies will have to suffice.

A hotel man from Minneapolis said that with the hotel bar closed and the saloons gone his business was better than ever. They used to pick up two bushels of empty bottles a week, now it takes two weeks to find one basketful of bottles.

An Alabama man testified to the good effect of prohibition on the characters and lives of the colored people—they are making much better citizens.

From Milwaukee a delegate reported a department store in which some unique signs are displayed. Over the shoe department one reads, "From Booze to Shoes." Above baked goods is this sign, "From Booze to Bread." While over the delicatessen department one reads, "From Poison Things to Pies and Things."

A Florida man started a laugh when he announced with unction that his state was never so prosperous as now, under prohibition. But the crowd grew more serious, as well as more enthusiastic, when he continued: "We have heard much about making the world safe for democracy. I am much more concerned about making this country of ours safe for democrats. I am here to say to you people of the North that if you want to make this country safe for democrats you must never nominate a wet democrat for the presidency." So say we all!

5. Several speakers—specially Judge Gemmell of the Superior Court of Cook county (Chicago)—resented the misrepresentations so constantly made of conditions in Chicago. Judge Gemmell said that while he is not a democrat, he must bear witness that Chicago has never been better governed than it is now under the administration of Mayor Devener and Commissioner of Police Collins. "Who are the lawless people?" he asked. They are the same old liquor gang who were lawless under the reign of the saloon. Nobody has been made a despoiser of the law by the 18th amendment and the Volstead act. This liquor gang are doing all they can to discredit and break down the law and its enforcement, that they may get back the saloon with all the lawlessness and vice that it has always brought in its train. "The fact is," declared Judge Gemmell, "that—with all the present laxness in enforcement—the law is now entirely too well enforced to please the people."

6. What of the future? That a great work has been done by the Anti-Saloon League and other agencies in securing the passage of the 18th amendment, and that material and moral good results have followed, are facts not to be disputed. Neither can it be denied that the good results of the past five years. This is what gives point to Mr. Johnson's report to the Federal council. That the agencies and personalities which secured the prohibition law may not be adequate to its enforcement is becoming increasingly apparent. I saw no evidence that the Anti-Saloon League quite realizes this. Enforcement is a far more difficult and delicate job than securing legislation, a job that may require a new set of people to man it. This is not knocking old agencies and veteran workers. As a rule new times, new problems, and new situations require new men.

Their investigator has placed the Federal council of churches under obligation to go to the bottom of this matter and to come forward with a positive, constructive program. It begins to look as though the churches will need to get into the game in an even more direct way than formerly. At any rate we shall do well to watch for suggestions that may come, possibly soon, from the executive committee of this great organization.

Who knows but God is in this way, in these times, leading his people out into larger and truer views of service? It seems to me entirely possible that the way to heal theological strife is to get together on a program of worth-while social service. The evening preceding the opening of the League convention I attended the closing session of the convention of the Baptist Bible Union at the Chicago Gospel Tabernacle. Some of the most noted fundamentalists were there and spoke. They were quite jubilant because, as they said, they had taken such action as would make this meeting historical. The action referred to was the withdrawal of the Baptist Bible Union from the support of the foreign missionary society of the Baptist denomination, and the organizing of a separate missionary society of their own. They will send to the foreign field only missionaries whose fundamentalism meets the approval of the Baptist Bible Union.

I confess that their enthusiasm left me cold. Hasn't the Christian church enough divisions already in its home and foreign work? Then I went the next day to the convention of the Anti-Saloon League. There I found people who held, doubtlessly, many and varied theological and political views—all united on the proposition that liquor must relinquish its hold on our people and that our nation must become a God-fearing, law-abiding nation. A splendid Christian spirit prevailed. May we not find in this common purpose and effort to make our nation temperate and godly, common ground on which a God's people, of whatever theological complexion, can stand and work.

THE CRIME OF SMOKING OTHERS.

Will H. Brown.

In some places some smokers have become so brazen as to say "If folks don't like tobacco smoke, why don't they stay away from it?" In order to stay away from it, many persons would have to resign their jobs, stay away from restaurants, refuse to ride on street cars, or to use elevators. In other words, they would almost have to "get off the earth."

Dr. William Brady, the noted writer on health topics, received a letter from a sixteen-year-old girl who worked in an office where the men smoked a great deal, and where she had developed a cough, besides losing twelve pounds in weight in seven months. She asked Dr. Brady for advice as to what she should do. He advised her to "find a place with a properly conducted business house." Writing further he said: "The condition to which she is exposed would predispose to tuberculosis. It is certainly unjustifiable and inexcusable for a business man to subject an employee to such poisoning."

Bruno Lessing, who writes for the Hearst papers under the heading, "Something to Think About," commenting upon the expenditure of $3,000,000,000 annually for tobacco, says: "The tremendous sum spent for tobacco is nothing but a monument to man's folly. Smoking would be stupid enough if you obtained your cigars or cigarettes for nothing. To pay for them is idiotic. Smoking is one of those stupid habits that must be deliberately acquired in order to be enjoyed. And, after that, the consolation derived from it is merely the gratification of an Artificial Craving that has been deliberately created."

In face of this severe arraignment of tobacco, Mr. Lessing admits he is a smoker.

CHRIST AS A VITAL PRESENCE.

To Paul as to Jesus, the Christian is a new creature whose faith works in love, because God dwells with him and in him. So intensely does Paul feel this to be the very center and essence of the Christian experience, that even the facts of the life of Jesus, through which he has come to know God, are seen by him as active and present rather than past. Christ "is," and not "was," crucified. We know Him after the flesh no more; we know Him as a dear and vital presence. The cross is here, and by it I am crucified to the world, and the world to me.

The core of Paul's faith is found above all in the constantly recurring phrase "in Christ," which is found in His writings some one hundred and sixty times. This is, in truth, as has been said, "really the characteristic expression of his Christianity." Here is the heart of his body of doctrine; nothing else is so vital, so necessary, so central.

All through the New Testament this is Christianity, this is salvation, this redemption: to know God in personal fellowship, through faith in Jesus Christ through whose life, teachings, death, and resurrection, or rather, let us say, through the personality that comes to full expression in these experiences, the grace of God comes afresh every age, every day, every moment, bringing fullness and freeness of life. And the most essential thing about Jesus Christ, that through which He is "the wisdom of God and the power of God," is not that He did thus and so in the past, but that He does "in me" what I need now. In that Paul, Peter, John, all agree; and in that they are all one with the mind of Jesus Himself.—Rev. William Pierson Merrill, D. D., in "Liberal Christianity."

THE NEW INTEREST IN THE SALVATION OF THE SOUL.

Professor Daniel Evans.

We have observed for some years the passing of interest in concern for the salvation of the individual soul. It was once the great and only interest of the church, it was the minister's objective in all his preaching, the teacher's aim in all his instruction in all its activities, and the center of thought in theology. It is true that salvation was most inadequately conceived and interpreted; it was a matter of the individual alone and not of his daily interests and social relations. It was largely a matter of forensic or legal transaction between God and Christ and the sinner, and its chief value was as a guaranty for the future world. Here is the explanation for the recent decline and passing of interest in the salvation of the soul. There has been much depreciatory criticism of salvation. Bunyan's pilgrim has come in for much drastic and cheap excoriation because he sought his own salvation and left his wife and children and friends and neighbors behind. Stranger still, in the thought and preaching of many a minister the very word "salvation" has been consciously and deliberately discarded. It has been distasteful and alien to his thought world.

The live interest for some time has been in social salvation. Thought has centered on the problem of a broader and fuller, if not deeper, life of the individual here and now. The salvation of the body, if not the soul, has had a large place in the recent thought and work of the minister, the church, and other social agencies. The task has been to make the outer conditions of life better and more comfortable. The physical and the social environment have demanded and received much attention. The interests of the community, the policies of political parties, the affairs of the nation, and the problems of world relations have challenged the attention of our best thinkers and greatest workers. This social interest has been all to the good. It gives our idea of salvation a larger content, our vision a wider scope, our churches broader interests, and it relates our religion to the great currents of the world's life.

And yet at present the men who are most profoundly concerned with all these problems of interest are the very persons who now realize that individual salvation is absolutely necessary as the essential condition, the sure guaranty, and the potent agency for social salvation. It is now clearly seen that we cannot even get the bodily life we want without saving the mind. Physical health is largely dependent upon mental states, nor can we get the man who can change his environment or live up to the new environment secured for him by others without changing his inner life and releasing the potential energy of his will. Nor can we get the kind of man who has social usefulness and worth without creating a fund of altruistic feeling in his heart, and our civic life and social institutions and world problems all wait upon the creation of men socially adequate and wholly devoted to these interests. The fundamental problem is to get the right kind of man, but such a man cannot be produced without a profound inner change of life. Let us see what some social servants are saying on the subject. The new practice of medicine gives more and more attention to the mind of the patient. The physician ministers to the mind as well as to the body and to the body through the mind, and if there are insidious vices and bad habits such as addiction to liquor or drugs, it is not enough to have recourse simply to medical treatment, the patient requires spiritual treatment. Thus in a recent book on the cure of the drug habit, by a physician, the author declares it is not enough to send the man to some "cure," and to depend upon physical means. Recourse must be had to religion that the man's will may be reached, and there is no sure cure apart from, but only through, religion.

A few years ago the secretary of the Conference of Charities and Correction testified after twenty-five years' experience in social work that the final problem of the social worker is not to change the environment of the persons whom he would help but to change their inner life. The problem is to tap the inner springs of action, and this problem is one that must be passed over to religion and the churches.

It is profoundly significant that Justice Holmes, that learned lawyer, social philosopher, progressive thinker, and sagacious man, should testify after his long study of the law that the fundamental security of the people and the urgent demand of the day, the required obedience to law, are to be found in the souls of men. It is a new reading of the old concept of the Law and the Gospel.

Some of us have been eagerly waiting for the new wisdom of German thinkers, distilled from their awful experience in and through the war, and Ercken has not disappointed us. He remarks in his recent Life: "Much that we thought self-evident now seems to us a difficult if not an insoluble problem. In particular we have the unpleasant experience of seeing life grow weaker on one side and more brutal on the other. Our most serious problem is therefore how to bring about a moral and spiritual strengthening, renewal of the spiritual life."

And it is with deep interest that one reads in The New Republic statements from two of the editors which have their significant bearing on our thought. One of the editors writes on the "Better Prospect" and thinks that there are "sound reasons for anticipating a gradual turn of the tide and the tentative start on a progress of physical and moral recuperation" of Europe and America. But how can this process be furthered? Here is his reply:

If liberals and radicals are ever to infuse into public opinion the vitality and the specific knowledge which the carrying out of any thoroughgoing program of social reconstruction demands, they will have to abandon their preoccupation and their consequent concentration on problems of power. They will have to substitute for it a search for an increasing knowledge of human behavior and how it can be modified, economized, and fertilized. And this substitution will be equal on their part to the old problem of getting innocent and easily diverted human beings to believe in the reality and necessity of human salvation. If and when these liberals and radicals do this, they will find a harder problem confronting them than the editor imagines. For human beings are not so innocent as he thinks, and they are diverted from their present courses of thought and conduct with great difficulty, and it is this fact and difficulty that constitutes the problem of salvation.

The other editor, whose task it is to review books, which he does in a masterly fashion, in reviewing Norman Angell's "Fruits of Victory," after going with the author all the way and highly estimating the worth of the book and in particular the weapon suggested, namely, critical suggestion or the free expression of truth, says, "And there he stops," and then remarks:

It is noble, but we need something else. Men need to feel, to believe, that the game of competitive life—of which war is simply a projection—is not worth living. The mechanism by which we go ahead in our attempt to secure domination—that mechanism must be broken. But it cannot be broken so long as men in thousands are victimized by state, church, school, press. Thus, following up the steps which Norman Angell has hewn with such courage, such devotion, such large purpose, you come once more to the revolution of which Ibsen spoke so many years ago, namely, the revolution in the soul of man. Before there can be any worthy and beneficent revolution in industrial, social, or world affairs, there must first be a revolution in the soul; in that inner world all the nobler and finer repressed and oppressed instincts, impulses, desires, longings, must find freedom and rise to power and dignity.

Here then upon the part of these social thinkers and social servants there is a return to the soul, even to the individual soul, and the church must make the same return. Before we go further into social, national, and international spheres we must go deeper into the inner life. We must get back into the soul. This return, however, must not be made without the new wisdom gained from interest in social and world salvation. The salvation of the individual must be fully ethical and not simply forensic, profoundly social and not simply individual, here and now, not merely in and for the future. It must be the salvation of the desires and the thought and the will and the conscience, yes, and of the very disposition itself out of which come the desires and thoughts and action and ideal. If and when the church attempts this great task again, in grim earnestness, it will realize the great difficulty of the task and the absolute need of divine power, and when it succeeds it will make a great moral contribution, for it will give the world what it most sorely needs, namely, a new man of ethical character, social purpose, and religious powers.—Zion's Herald.

Sun., Dec. 6, Topic—How can we translate Christmas into service? 1 John 4:7-14. (Consecration meeting.)

Our Topic.

The question of our topic "How can we best translate Christmas into service?" is fully answered in the life of Christ, and by studying His life, getting under and seeing the motives, and following Him, we have no trouble in translating. The true spirit of Christmas is the spirit of love, generosity and helpfulness. It is wholly unselfish, and stands for others altogether. The great trouble is that Christmas has been so largely commercialized that we have altogether lost the real true spirit of the season and of the day we celebrate. Gifts are selected and given not as a token of love and esteem but very much with the idea of matching what is expected from the donee.

God's gift to us came to bring joy and gladness and was the embodiment of love.—He came to meet our need which meant serving us, and we will truly serve when we respond our best to meet His need. "In the voice of woe, His voice to me is calling." Every human need we know is His voice calling for service and if it is in our power to help it is His call to us for our service. Christmas time presents unlimited opportunities.

How Can We Serve?

The shepherds served when they witnessed for Christ. The angels served when they sang His praises. The wise men served when they came to Him and when they gave gifts. We cannot lay our gifts at his feet as they did but He said "In as much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these ye have done it unto me." Teaching us that if we would serve Him we find our opportunity in the human needs all around us. This is a good time to remember neglected groups all over the country and especially near home. Mission schools, orphanages, prisoners in jail, hospitals, homes for the aged. These we can serve by gifts, and visits. "Christmas is Christ, and if there is no service in it, if its watchword is not 'Others,' then it is not Christmas, but a feast of selfishness that can not bring joy to the world."

Richard Fuller says, "Today let us rise and go to our work; tomorrow we shall rise and go to our reward."

Milton said, "The joyous are always willing."

As Societies we can do much to make Christmas merry by sending toys to children, by carol singing, by visiting shut-ins, by feeding the poor, and by clothing those that need winter clothing. But all this must not rob us of the exquisite joy of doing individual service which is after all the most personal and the most appreciated.

A CHAT WITH DADDY CHIPMUNK.

"Oh, you dear little thing!" Peggy exclaimed as the wee little chipmunk scooted out from the grasses almost under her very feet. "Where in the world did you come from?"

"Hush! don't breathe it to a soul," chattered Daddy Chipmunk; "I've been gathering corn."

"Gathering corn?" Peggy laughed. "Why, daddy's corn isn't up yet. Where did you get it from—the barn?"

"No, indeed!" replied Daddy Chipmunk; "I should have said cornseeds. We chipmunks never bother the corn after it's ripe, but we do like the freshly planted seed."

"Ho! ho!" laughed Peggy; "so that's why my daddy's corn doesn't grow like it should! Oh, well, I guess if you leave some of it he won't mind. But where's the little chipmunk house? Don't you have a little path like most of the meadow folks do leading up to their houses?"

"Well, I should say not!" and Daddy Chipmunk shifted the corn seeds he was carrying from cheek pouch to the other. "That's one thing I never could see."

"Come along and see my place. I'll bet you every seed I have in my pockets you can't find my burrow," and he led Peggy over where the grasses were lovely and green.

"Is it around here some place?" Peggy asked. It was like a game of hide and seek, for she could not discover the doorway to Daddy Chipmunk's house. "See, I told you you couldn't find it," laughed Daddy Chipmunk, very much pleased. "Had there been a path leading up to the doorway you couldn't have missed it. Well, here it is," and he pointed to a wee little doorway just under the edge of an old stump. "And I'll have you know I dug every bit of the dirt myself."

"Where did you put the loose dirt?" asked Peggy, looking for the tell-tale dirt.

"Over in the bushes," chuckled Daddy Chipmunk.

"So many of the woodfolks just leave the dirt piled around their doorways, but not me. I carry every bit of it away in my pockets and dump it away from my doorway. That's why you couldn't find my doorway."

"Hello, there, mamma," he called and a tiny squeaky voice answered him from down in the ground. He led Peggy down through the long tunnel into the chamber at the very end, where Mamma Chipmunk and her family of five were as comfy as could be on a nice little bed of soft grasses.

Daddy Chipmunk was very proud of his little house and showed Peggy all the little store rooms he had made to hold winter supplies.

Mamma Chipmunk hustled around and spread the wee little table and Peggy had the loveliest time you could imagine, and when she heard her mamma calling her she bid her new friends good-bye and hurried home.—Selected.

THE BOBOLINK.

Once upon a time there was a bobolink that was not a bird, and that sounds as though it was a riddle. If you had asked little Ruth Harlow, "When is a bobolink not a bobolink?" she would have known the answer right away, and would have said, "When it is a bumpy little trolley car."

If you had lived where Ruth lived, you would know right away, too, that a better name than "Bobolink" could not have been found for the car that she rode on to school when the weather was not pleasant enough for her to walk so far. The car tracks were not the right sort for the funny little short cars that had been brought from another city after car fares became higher. So the cars bounced up and down, and bobbed from side to side, and the best word Ruth could think of to describe the way they acted was "juble;" and when you rode on this funny little car you had to bobble and juble with it whether you wanted to or not.

Most people did not like to bobble and juble, but Ruth thought it a jolly sort of fun, and she laughed with the other children who rode. It was as much fun as a merry-go-round to them all.

It was Ruth who had thought of the name for the car, and even Mr. and Mrs. Harlow now called it the Bobolink.

"Come, Ruth, hurry!" Mrs. Harlow would say on a dark, rainy morning. "Here is your umbrella. The Bobolink is just coming over the top of the hill. If it rains when you come out of school, be sure to wait for the Bobolink!"

In Sunday school Ruth had been taught to be cheerful, polite, and good. At day school she had been taught the same things. At home, before she was old enough to go to school at all, she had been carefully taught these same things. Always she had been told that, no matter where you are or what is happening, you must try to be cheerful, polite, and good. Never can there be any excuse even for a little girl to be cross, impolite, or bad. So even in the funny little Bobolink, Ruth was cheerful, polite, and good. If the car were crowded and she had a seat, she cheerfully and politely gave it to some woman or to some elderly gentleman who might be standing, even though the Bobolink bobbed and jubbled so she herself could hardly stand.

That's Bobolink must have been a magic sort of bird-car, for he made every one show whether or not he or she had learned to be cheerful, polite, and good. Ruth found that almost all children laughed and found the ride pleasant. They practiced the lessons they had been taught in Sunday school, day school, and home. But, strange, to say, it was the grown-ups, who had known so many years about being cheerful, polite, and good, who were made by this magic Bobolink to show that they had not learned these three things well enough to practice them when being bobbed and jubbled. Oh, my! One man even said a most bad word! A young woman—I nearly said "lady," but the name would not have fitted her just then—rudely snapped out cross words in a loud voice at the motorman, as though her discomfort were all his fault. A middle-aged man scolded about the railroad company all the way to town. A middle-aged woman said the passengers ought to be paid for having to ride on such cars instead of giving higher fares to a company which ran things like this.

Of course it was hard to hold packages, and get out your fare, and look after a little child at the same time, but a woman who tried to do it need not have forgotten to be cheerful and polite and good about it, but she did; and she was so angry that her face grew red as red, and she said she would report the motorman to the company, so she would!

It was a good thing that the motorman at least was polite. Some of the things he had to hear and some of the actions he had to see could not make him feel happy, but the Bobolink showed that even the motorman could be made to let the world know whether or not he had learned well those three things which all people are taught when they are children.

Ruth was always glad when she heard some of the grown-ups say funny instead of cross things about the Bobolink. "Daddy," said she one day to her father, who was a minister, "I can tell you how to find out if your sermons are making people good or not. Just take your whole congregation for a ride on the Bobolink!"

Father laughed, and said perhaps it was just as well the Bobolink wasn't big enough for that, and added that at least he hoped Ruth would never fail in the test.—Blanche Elizabeth Wade, in The Christian Register.

WHAT THE CLOCK SAW.

The Old City Clock high up on the Church Tower was tired. He had been running for years and the townspeople had forgotten to oil his wheels often enough. This morning his wheels turned especially slow as he looked out over the city thoughtfully. How natural everything seemed to him that he saw in the streets! And how strange to us, for it was one hundred years ago!

An old stagecoach went clattering down the street drawn by six horses. Several "one-koss' shays" went by. People were going to a picnic that day. Men and women and children walked down the street in their quaint suits and high hats, and hoop skirts. Once in a while an Indian strode past, silent and stolid. It was all so natural and peaceful that the Old Clock felt sleepy and ticked a little slower.

He dreamed of the old fashioned rowboats and sailboats on the river close by, how the first steamship had puffed up the river to his wonder, a little pygmy of a boat. He heard the weak whistle of the first locomotive as it struggled on its wooden tracks, wheezing and jolting along. A prairie schooner was seen now and then that had come from the West. On the outskirts of the city there were still a few log houses. And so the Old Clock dreamed and stopped.

When the people noticed the Clock they said:

"We'll have a new one some day."

But some day was a long way off. The years came and went. Time changed. The City was torn down and built up again, but the Old Church was left and remodeled. And the Clock still remained silent.

One day a man climbed the tower and examined it. He cleaned its great wheels and oiled its works. And then on a great day the Clock awoke, startled by the great din and roar which came to its ears. He looked out over the city. The people shouted, "It runs! It runs!"

What a scene met the Clock's gaze!

The streets of the City were wide and paved. Autos were rushing up and down and traffic officers stood at the corners directing them. Electric trolley cars ran on tracks up and down the streets, stopping often to allow passengers to alight or get on. To one side of the Clock a great depot rose and in its yards a dozen shrilly screaming locomotives pushed a hundred freight cars this way and that. A passenger train came rushing out of the hills with shrieks which made the Clock's face tremble. A steamboat, an object of beauty to the Clock, came up the river and passed under the bridge. Great factories belched forth smoke. It was just noon and thousands of people rushed about in the shadow of great skyscrapers.

Gleaming wires stretched on these high buildings, the work of Radio stations. And off to the Clock's left another clock ticked away the seconds several hundred feet higher than he. This was the new clock for the new City, and he was the old Clock for the old City.

A giant airplane hummed overhead and settled to the ground with a swoop. The poor old Clock gave a gasp and stopped dead! But it was instantly started and the clock fixer said:

"He'll run all right soon as he's used to it!"

And the Clock did run and is running yet!—The Presbyterian.

THE CHRISTIANITY OF GENERAL FENG

According to Feng Yu Hsiang "the Christian general of China," his soldiers are forbidden to smoke, drink, gamble, or loot, and every recruit is required to declare himself a Christian. Is there another such army in the world? In order that Christian discipline may exhibit its beauties and virtues in full measure, here is one of the general orders issued to these soldiers "with the cross of Jesus going on before:" "Shoot the enemy at long range until your ammunition is exhausted, then use your bayonet until it breaks; after that hammer him over the head with the butt of your rifle; when that splits, clinch with him." That is an orthodox Christian order. It accords with the recognized practice of the "Christian nations." And who is "the enemy" deserving such rough treatment? Ponder a long time over that question, for it may involve the fate of an empire, of a civilization, of a race, and of a religion.—The Baptist.

THE DANGEROUS AGE FOR MAN. Everett Spring.

Why is it that the percentage of mortality in the United States between the ages of thirty-five and forty-five is steadily increasing, while the ratio of deaths to population of those under thirty-five is steadily diminishing? Can it be that the American people is losing its stamina, its much boasted "punch" and staying powers? Is it true that we are growing "weaker and wiser?" Does the fact that modern science enables us to save many puny babies that formerly could not survive, mean that we are injecting into the race a serious element of weakness? Or does it simply mean that the average American man, in his consuming passion of business, refuses to take time to put his physical house in order?

Whatever the conclusions may be, it is unescapable that certain experts are in despair over what is happening to men and women for the ten years after thirty-five. It may be that these worthy gentlemen are needlessly alarming themselves, but it cannot be denied that they have managed to work up no small amount of consternation first and last.

There are in existence organizations having for their prime purpose the obtaining of statistics to show people the necessity of realizing the importance of preparing for the crisis in life when a decreasing mortality leaves off and an increasing one begins. The figures are startling.

Based on the 1000 population, there were 45 per cent more deaths in Chicago from degenerative diseases of the heart, arteries, kidneys, and so forth, in the decade covered by the last United States census than there were in the three previous decades. The increase in Cleveland for the same period was 37 per cent. It was 43 per cent in Cincinnati, 30 per cent in Milwaukee, 24 per cent in New Orleans, and in Pittsburgh it reached 53 per cent.

A glance at the mortality tables in the last United States census shows that it is precisely this class of devastating death rate among persons who ought to be on the threshold of life's most vigorous and productive season—from thirty-five to forty-five years.

From a study of the causes of 2500 deaths of men and women between thirty-five and forty-five years of age, it was discovered that tuberculosis accounted for 537; pneumonia and broncho-pneumonia for 200; Bright's disease for 270; heart disease for 191; cancer for 191; cirrhosis of the liver for 78; apoplexy for 55, and intestinal disease for 26.

Now, tuberculosis and pneumonia are the curses from which we suffer most. One would naturally expect them to take a greater toll of lives from among persons of this vigorous age than would purely degenerative diseases. Yet out of these 2500 deceased, 811 were taken away by degenerative diseases of the heart, arteries, kidneys, and liver as against 737 who died from tuberculosis and the various forms of pneumonia.

Adding the figures, we are confronted with the amazing fact that out of 2500 persons who passed away at the age when body and mind ought to be at their best, 1545 died from tuberculosis, pneumonia, or some disease due to degenerating tissues. Less than half of those people died from all other causes.

The pathetic part of the whole business is that most of those people could have saved themselves by taking proper precautions before it was too late. They paid with their lives the price of neglecting their bodies in the decades before.

Bad as this situation is, it becomes worse when figures for other countries are examined. In England and Wales, where the best comparative statistics are obtainable and where a different mode of living prevails, the figures show that the percentages of deaths to population have been steadily diminishing at all ages, including the period from thirty-five to forty-five.

Another surprising thing about it is that on the whole the American death percentages have been constantly diminishing.

The great saving has been of infants. We no longer hear much of the dreaded "second summer" for the baby. Our men of science have found a way to intercept the appalling procession of little white coffins that formerly marched incessantly to the cemeteries. We are saving babies today that would not have had the remotest chance twenty years ago, and this accounts largely for our aggregate diminishing death rate.

Not a few thinkers have been bold enough to say that our diminished baby death rate explains our increased death rate for middle life. Science, they argue, takes a child without the essentials of robust vitality, patches up his weakened tissues and keeps him going, the inherent weaknesses hidden until he reaches the age when youth no longer renews itself. Then the defect becomes apparent. The patchwork can no more be mended.

This view of it, however, is seriously challenged. Those who oppose it maintain that the statistics show that the wear and tear of modern life on the vital organs are weakening in resisting power to life and strain.

It cannot be that this increase is due to saving infant lives and those of children and youth from the germ diseases. For the great reduction in the death rate from these causes has occurred within the past twenty-five years, since the discovery of the cause and the means of preventing some of these diseases; therefore, these children are not yet old enough to reach middle life and old age, where the death rate has increased so rapidly during the last thirty years.

Moreover, the death rate from the germ diseases, such as tuberculosis, typhoid, and diphtheria, has declined at even a greater rate in kindred nations in Europe than it has here, and at the same time the degenerative diseases previously referred to have stood still or actually declined as a cause of death in these countries.

It is clear that the cause of the increase in degenerative diseases in our country is local and apparently due to our failure to adjust our lives to the extraordinary changes that have occurred in recent years as a result of the increase in wealth, and of the extraordinary development of time-saving and labor-saving devices.

If the present indicated trend of physical decline in the power of the American people to resist the wear and tear of modern life continues, the time will come when we shall have to depend upon a weak, soft-muscled, flimsy-fibered people for the future of the republic and the perpetuity of the race.

The life waste in war, enormous as it is, is almost trifling compared with the life waste in peace from ignorance and neglect of ordinary preventive measures.

According to most medical men, the average American is a little too lazy and a little too self-indulgent. He views with complacency the increase in his waist line, not realizing that if the time ever comes when his waist line is of greater girth than his chest when expanded, no careful insurance company will consider him a safe risk.

We must adjust our habits of life to the new conditions. In time we shall doubtless awake to this national need and take steps to check these degenerative tendencies, but just at present the habit is to ignore them. This is an excellent time to "wake up."—Zion's Herald.

THANKFUL FOR "NOTS."

Margaret thoughtfully smoothed her dress. "We must enumerate the things that have happened, this year, for which we should be thankful," she remarked to her sister.

"And the things that have not happened, for which we should also be thankful," added Katherine.

"I am thankful we have enough to eat," continued Margaret, gravely.

"We don't always have enough of some things to eat," Katherine reminded her, promptly. "We didn't have enough cake, last Wednesday, because mother was away in the forenoon. And so I am thankful that the minister and his wife did not stay to tea when they called; for there wasn't time to make any."

"What a queer reason for being thankful!" exclaimed Margaret.

"They would have been thankful they did not stay if they had known how little we had for supper that night," persisted Katherine. "If the minister had seen only one piece of pie and no cake on the table, he would have felt like praying: 'For what we have not, make us truly thankful!'"

"He would have said that bread with nice butter is more wholesome food, and beer thankful for that," declared Margaret.

"Ministers like cake," insisted Katherine, "and I'm thankful he didn't stay. That isn't stinginess, for I wanted him to have some."

"I am thankful we have enough to wear," Margaret dropped the discussion of culinary affairs and continued her enumeration.

"I am thankful my plaid gingham dress was not big enough this spring, and that it could neither be let out nor let down any more," emphatically asserted Katherine. "It was a terribly long-wearing sort of goods, and the only way I could get rid of it was to alter it. I won't put it in the missionary barrel, for I don't want even a heathen girl to have to wear it. When I have a new one I'll ask mother to make a 'twin' and I'll put that in the missionary barrel with a note saying it's just like mine."

"That would be nice," agreed Margaret. "I'd like to send one too. We might try to have enough money to buy the dresses; then we could feel that we were really giving them, ourselves."

"I guess we can," replied Katherine. "Father said we helped him save a lot when he broke his leg, because he didn't have to hire a man to do the chores. I'm glad I could help a little."

"Milking is hard work," sighed Margaret. "Not when it's done for father," declared Katherine. "And some one has said that whoever sweeps a room, in the right spirit, makes the action fine. Father used the same word when I brought in the pail of milk, the day he was hurt. 'That's fine, little daughter, dear,' he said. Oh, I'm so thankful he did not suffer much, or get discouraged, or stay sick long."

Mother found the "thankful" lists on the table when she was dusting the living-room. She read that of her younger daughter and smiled and said softly:

"I too am glad the minister and his wife did not stay to tea, last Wednesday, though I love them dearly. I am thankful my little girl does not want to put her old dresses in the missionary barrel, and does want to give a new one. I am thankful our invalid did not get discouraged, and that the hurt limb is fast healing. Above all, I am thankful my dear girl declares that 'nothing is hard when it is done for father.' May each of us ever feel thus when we are doing things for our heavenly Father!"—R. C. Young.

This is our final report for the year. Our record as we made it. Only those that went over the top cannot be improved in the coming year. I am sure all are going to try to advance. We will hope for better crops and better industrial conditions. But even these will not help us do our best unless we begin at once and get a good start before we know what is going to be the future. May God deepen our earnestness and strengthen our determination and give us the energy and the generosity for a great year's work. It will be noted that 14 charges and nine churches paid all claims in full, while 23 churches paid the salary and A. C. B. in full. A. G. Dixon.

ONCE MORE—BOOKS FOR JAPAN.

Gratifying responses have been coming, in the way of excellent books, to the appeal made in this column two weeks ago.

Our missionaries in Japan, have been very anxious to render some signal service to our Japanese pastors in their desire to fit themselves in every way possible for their ministrations to the churches and the people at large.

They are hampered considerably by the excessive cost in Japan of books published in foreign countries, and, as they must still seek many from that source, it was thought that a number of devotional and kindred publications which had been found helpful to friends in America might be secured as gifts for our Japanese workers, hence the first appeal by Dr. L. Layman, supported by repeated solicitations on my part.

The books will be given the widest possible sphere of usefulness, and, as the Japanese are great readers, they will be handled a great deal, hence the need of books being in first class condition as to binding and cover.

The books have been coming the last week or two, while not so very numerous, are just the kind that are needed, and our kind friends can be assured that they will be deeply appreciated by the recipients across the sea.

We would like to make shipment at an early date, and all friends who are thinking of sending one or more are requested to do so at their earliest convenience. Send to Rev. Fred. C. Klein, Berwyn, Md.

Those Large Missionary Pictures.

We promised a set of large missionary pictures to all the schools that sent in on Children's Day an offering amounting to fifty dollars, or more, so long as the sets in hands lasted.

By writing to quite a number of annual conference treasurers I have secured the names of a number of the schools that met the conditions, and sets have been mailed to all of them, and a letter to either the pastor or the superintendent giving explanation thereof.

The pictures are beautiful, full explanations are printed on the back of each one, and it is hoped they will stimulate the interest of our people and increase their contributions to the growing foreign missionary work of our church.

The receipts from Children's Day to November 1st, were a little in advance of the same period last year, but were not up to expectations based upon urgent needs.

Will pastors please see to it at once that the Children's Day offering from their schools is sent to the annual conference treasurer at once, if not already forwarded. There is no justification for holding this offering for any reason, inasmuch as the great cause to which the money was contributed needs the money most urgently. Come to the help of the Union Board, brother pastor, if your school's offering has not been sent in.

The Japanese Banners.

It was announced that they had arrived, and they are beautiful, one of blue velvet, other of heavy red silk, embroidered in gold, with tassels across the bottom, and heavy cord to cross bar of cherry with which to suspend it.

We have been trying to get the needed information from annual conference treasurers as to which of their conference's schools sent in the largest amount from Children's Day, and which school sent the largest amount in proportion to membership, but have not enough information yet to make the award. We have also had to wait until some of our conferences met, but they will soon be over, and we will do our best to make an early award of these Banners. They will be awarded one year at a time, and be used permanently that way.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

Thanksgiving is here and indeed there is much for which to praise our God and give thanks—We are trusting that each auxiliary in the State is having a Thanksgiving service—and then continue in that spirit through the other days.

This little story of Barbara is beautiful. It is taken from a copy of our "Missionary Record."

TRY THANKSGIVING.

(By Jane Bennett Heilman.)

Barbara was a plain, working girl in a rich family. She had come to the city from a comfortable farm home, where she had been taught thrifty habits and cleanly household duties. In addition to these virtues, her upright character and honest principles soon made her a favorite in the well-to-do household. In her neat cap and apron, she went through the great house looking after the interest of each member of the family. Quiet and unobtrusive, she won the respect of all in the house.

Barbara soon found a church home in the city, and, for weeks, the stranger slipped into the evening services, never missing the Young People's meeting. Her station was not considered. In the church where she chanced to go, men and women are received because they are the children of God, loving and serving him who made of one blood, all nations.

One evening at a church social, the pastor's wife found Barbara sitting in a quiet spot free from observation, where she could see the throng of happy people as they walked and talked.

"Why, Barbara," she said, sitting down beside her, "what are you doing here by yourself?"

Barbara turned a troubled face to the lady and replied, "Oh, I am just thinking this may be my last look on earthly things. I go into the hospital tomorrow to have this goitre removed. The doctor tells me it is a serious and dangerous operation, and that I may not come out alive from under the knife. I have written home, and now come here to be in church the last place. Though this is not a prayer meeting, it is the house of God."

Then Barbara told about the terrible thing at her throat, growing more unbearable each week, throbbing, throbbing, day and night, robbing her of sleep and of appetite, till the doctor finally said there was nothing more to be done except to use the knife. The risk was great, but not to use the knife was greater risk. She had known for a long time that her strength and energy were being sapped day by day.

A long while the pastor's wife and young woman talked in the quiet corner of the wonderful power of God to hear and answer prayer—of his willingness to respond to the cry of his children, even before they ask sometimes; and when the time came for Barbara to leave, the pastor's wife said, "In peace, Barbara; daily I shall ask God for your life if it be his will, and for Christian fortitude and submission for your own heart."

The next day, Barbara entered the hospital, pale and calm, as goes the trusting heart who leans on the promises and the Promise. "All is well," she smiled, as with steady step, she walked to the marble table where the operation would be performed. A few hours later, she lay in the white bed, quiet and still, hovering between life and death, the surgeon and nurse watching in the shadow of the first indication of life.

"I think she will live," at last said the surgeon. "It is remarkable, but I think she will live."

A few days of feverish suffering, then Barbara was allowed to see callers, and she had not a few. The Young People's Society sent her lovely flowers regularly when they missed her from the meetings and learned where she was. A whispered word here and there sent the church ladies to the hospital and, not even for a day, was Barbara allowed to feel that she was forgotten, though she possessed not many acquaintances in the big city church.

New and strangely sweet thoughts came to the sick girl as she lay upon her comfortable bed in the hospital erected by Christian people, attended by real missionaries and nurses who give their lives in this work because they belong to Jesus and love humanity.

Barbara saw the power of loving consecration and giving of self in a changed light to her faithful nature. She read it in the services of her nurses and the kind surgeon; it was plain to her in the daily fresh flow of life she saw it in the visits of the church people and in the attention of her lady, whose carriage stood before the hospital every day.

Barbara had heard the medical missionary talk in her church and heard her say that there would be no hospitals and no missionaries if there were no Jesus, and so she meditated in the long hours while she lay upon her bed in the beautiful ward. She saw it all, as afterwards said, just what thankfulness for the love of Jesus will actuate his followers to do.

Barbara arose from her illness a stronger woman. She awoke to newness of life, indeed. Her lady's carriage stood before the hospital one day for its last visit. When it drove away, Barbara sat on the back and the silent tears fell fast as she thanked God for her life.

One morning a few weeks later, the pastor was in the study talking with a gentleman, when, hearing a low knock on the door, he opened it to find Barbara standing there with a tiny roll of money in her hand, "No, I cannot come in, thank you, pastor; I just want to hand you this. My bill at the hospital was much less than I expected. Everybody was so kind and God was so good that I must make this thank-offering to Him," and she was gone.

When he was alone, the pastor began to look at the money he held in his hand, put on his hat and went home. When he saw his wife, he said, "There is a thank-offering; you may count it." She smoothed out the bills and saw three $20 bills and four $10 bills. One hundred dollars!

Then the pastor told of Barbara's visit to the study, what she said and why she wanted to give a thank-offering to God. "And to think, only yesterday, our Missionary Committee agreed to pray for the rich; and here our Father has made us ashamed in less than a week, and not with the rich," said the pastor's wife.

After three days, the pastor visited Barbara, thinking that, perhaps, in the joyous excitement of getting well she had been led to imprudence, and said that if she had reconsidered the matter, it was not too late, but Barbara knew what she was doing. She was sure that God had spared her life, and though the money had been laid aside for her burial should it be necessary, it must now go to the work of God.

With such really sanctified thanksgiving there would never be any debt or deficit heard of in connection with any of our Christian work.

—In speaking to a group of students recently of the considerations that led him to enter the ministry, Dr. Charles E. Jefferson of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York City, gave the following explanation of how the call came to him:

There are five gifts a minister must possess—the gift of speaking, the gift of imparting knowledge, the gift of molding character, the gift of moral enthusiasm, and the gift of moral discernment. I found to my surprise that all these gifts were mine, and that in them God was calling me into the ministry. And the call was deepened and strengthened by a growing sense of the world's needs.

FOR HIS MOTHER'S SAKE.

The florist's boy had just swept some broken and withered flowers into the gutter when a ragged urchin darted across the street. He stooped over the pile of mangled flowers, and came upon a rose seemingly in better condition than the rest. But as he tenderly picked it up the petals fluttered to the ground leaving only the bare stalk in his hand.

He stood quite still, and his lips quivered perceptibly. The florist's boy who had been looking at him severely, felt that his face was softening. "What's the matter with you, anyway?" he asked.

The ragged little fellow choked as he answered: "It's for my mother. She's sick, and she can't eat nothing, and I thought if she'd a flower to smell it might make her feel better."

"Just you wait a minute," said the florist's boy as he disappeared. When he came out upon the sidewalk he held in his hand a beautiful half-opened rose, which he carefully wrapped in tissue-paper; then he said, "take that to your mother."—Selected.

All those who journey, soon or late;
Must pass within the garden's gate;
Must kneel alone in the darkness there
And battle with some fierce despair.
God pity those who cannot say,

ELMER'S LESSON.

Having five children and the house and garden and hens to look after, mother was busy from morning till night.

Of course the children helped and were as good as they knew how to be—that is, all of them except Elmer. Eleven-year-old Wesley and Ruth, who came next, worked or played happily all day long; so did the twins, Ardis and Alice, who were only six. Elmer worked or played too, but he didn't want to share things as children must do when there are many. He didn't want any one to pick a single flower in his little garden, no matter how many there were. With his playthings too he was selfish. None of the other children must touch his wagon or play with his toys or read his books or hardly even look at his kite.

Sometimes mother coaxed, sometimes she scolded, and Elmer became sulky and stubborn, and then things were very disagreeable.

One day Cousins Albert and Helen came for a visit. The boys began a game of ball outdoors while the girls played in the house.

"Oh," said Cousin Helen, "there are some tenpins! Let's have a game. Albert and I have lots of fun at home playing with his tenpins."

"But," said Ardis, "the tenpins belong to Elmer."

"Why, he's not using them now, and we can't hurt them," said Cousin Helen.

"Maybe Elmer won't mind if Cousin Helen wants to play," said Alice.

So the tenpins were set up, and the little girls played happily until Elmer came in for a drink. How cross he was about it!

"They are my things, and I don't want any one to touch them!" he shouted.

Cousin Helen was much astonished and a little frightened, and Ardis and Alice felt so bad that they cried.

Mother looked sorrowfully at her little boy. "Elmer," she said, "the tenpins are yours, and you may have them: hereafter none of us will touch one of your things."

Elmer, a little ashamed of himself, played with the tenpins, and the little girls went into the kitchen to help Ruth make candy.

By and by the other boys called Elmer out to finish the game of ball, and he went and stayed until mother called him in to supper.

Elmer was surprised to see his tenpins scattered round just as he had left them.

"Pick them up, Ruth," he said. "I'm too hungry."

"Ruth did want to pick them up," said mother, "but I told her that they were yours, and you didn't want any one to touch any of your things."

Elmer without a word crawled about under the table and chairs and picked up the tenpins.

That night while he was undressing for bed two buttons came off his trousers. He tossed the trousers down to mother. "Two buttons came off, mother," he called.

"Here are needle and thread, Elmer," she said. "Of course you will want to sew on your own buttons."

Elmer had an uncomfortable feeling, but he didn't say anything. He sewed the buttons on as well as he could, but the needle pricked him, and the thread became tangled, and the next morning the buttons came off again because he hadn't sewed them on firm enough. Then he put pins where the buttons should have been, and they pricked him.

He wasn't happy all that day, though not one of the other children touched any of his things.

A queer lump came into his throat when mother gathered flowers from every garden except his and took them to a friend who was sick. She made a wonderful salad for supper and never even looked at his lettuce, which was so crisp and tender.

At night he found his corner of the big room that he shared with his brothers just as untidy as he had left it in the morning: his cot bed had not been made up, though the others were as plump and smooth as ever.

All that week no one except himself touched any of his things. He watched Wesley try to fasten a wheel on an old wagon so that Ardis and Alice might take their dolls for a ride. He wished they would ask to use his wagon: he even pushed it toward them, but they did not seem to notice.

Mother answered pleasantly whenever he asked anything, but the house didn't seem like home. All day long those pins pricked him: and when he crept into his tumbled bed at night, he was a most unhappy little fellow. He buried his face in his pillow and sobbed. Then a gentle voice asked, "What's the matter, Elmer?"

"Oh, mother," he cried, "I don't want any of my things! Please take them all and let me be your boy again."

So mother cuddled him and kissed him and then asked, "Don't you see, dear, that every one must give as well as take?"

"Oh, yes," he replied.

Then mother smoothed the tumbled bed and sewed the buttons on and made things beautiful and happy again.—The Youth's Companion.

THE SQUIRREL AND THE WREN.

Mother Wren was tiny. She wasn't half so big as half a robin; she wasn't half so big as half a blackbird; but she did something one day that made a little girl laugh. The little girl decided after she watched Mother Wren that there is something that counts more than size.

On a fence post near a summer cottage in the Mackinaw woods was a tin dish in which crumbs were kept for the birds. Many different birds used to eat there; it was their dining-room. One bird had as much right to the crumbs as any other bird, and they most politely took turns eating dinner.

One day a young squirrel found the picnic dinner on the post. Two robins were there, but the squirrel ran along the rail to eat with them; he didn't wait to be invited. He could not possibly have eaten the robins because they were too big; besides, it was their dining-room. But they were afraid of him, and both robins flew away.

The squirrel ate a few crumbs, and then he ran away. Soon down came a big blackbird to have a bite of dinner. The squirrel saw him and went with a lean and bound to try to scare him. When the blackbird saw who was coming, away he flew.

After that the squirrel scared away every big bird that came for crumbs, and he was nothing but a baby squirrel. The little fellow had a fine time until he ran along the fence rail in the direction of Mother Wren's house on a spruce tree.

Down came tiny Mother Wren straight toward the young squirrel. If she had been an elephant after him, the squirrel couldn't have been more frightened. There was a pile of poles, and there he stayed while Mother Wren scolded and scolded.

When she stopped scolding, he poked his head out and looked around. Mother Wren saw him. Out of sight under the poles he went. For some time Mother Wren played hide-and-seek like that with him. At last she seemed to forget him and went about her business.

Timidly the squirrel crawled out. In a few minutes he was as gay and full of mischief as ever and scared away more robins and blackbirds from the dining-room. Then he made another mistake. He skipped over and ran up a pole to peep into a deserted wren-house. No one was living in the house.

Out from the front door across the way darted Mother Wren. That time the squirrel couldn't get away. The minute he reached the ground Mother Wren landed on his back, and she whacked his head and whacked his head and whacked his head and picked at him with her bill until he must have had a headache for two or three hours afterwards.

Mother Wren may have laughed about it at home with her family, but for once in her life she certainly took a long ride on a squirrel's back.

At last Mother Wren flew home. The young squirrel was so frightened that he didn't know which way to start for the home tree. He chased around and around for a while and then left that part of the woods.

The little girl who watched it all was sorry for the mischievous squirrel, but even so she couldn't help laughing.

"Perhaps," she said when she told the story, "the brave little wren didn't stop to think how small she was. She just had to drive away her enemy because she had to protect a nest full of little wren children."—Margaret Fox, in The Continent.

WHAT A DOCTOR DOES IN AFRICA.

W. W. Reid.

Dr. Arthur L. Piper of Buffalo has been in central Congo, Africa, for the past twelve years as a medical doctor under the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a native of Knapp Creek, N. Y., and a graduate of the University of Buffalo, from which he received his medical degree in 1907.

Writing recently to the Board of Foreign Missions from his isolated station in Kapanaga, Congo—where he is the only physician for 125,000 native tribesmen—Dr. Piper gives an outline of his morning examination of patients.

"Patient A comes into the dormitory. 'Good-morning, Miss Brass Wire, sit down here and tell me all about your sickness.'"

"Stomach and head, doctor, stomach and head."

"How long have you been sick?"

"Since the last moon appeared. It began in my hand and went up my arm, then it divided, part went to my head and part to my stomach."

After a little examination, the patient is directed into an adjoining room, where two native girls from the boarding-school, in uniforms of blue denim, are waiting to give the medicines or administer treatment to the women patients.

Patient B is next in line.

"Where are you sick, Powder?"

"Abdomen. It is biting, biting, biting. I am sure there are snakes inside."

"I am sorry, but the medicine for snakes is all gone, and I don't expect to receive any more for a month or two."

"Oh, cannibals! I am undone! What can I do?"

"I will give you some other medicine which may give you some relief, then you return, please, in a month, and perhaps the medicine will have arrived."

Patient C has a different malady.

"Head, doctor."

I begin by feeling the pulse.

"No, my hand is all right, only my head. My whole body is well, only my head. I want something to rub on, some of the fire medicine."

Further examination reveals the fact that the patient has quite a high fever, and is suffering from an attack of acute malaria. A few doses of that wonderful specific for malaria, quinine, and our patient feels quite all right.

Patient D comes by proxy.

"My friend is so sick he cannot come to the hospital. I can carry the medicine to him."

"But how can I know what medicine to send him without seeing him?"

"I will tell you all about him. He is sick in the ribs and in the eyes."

"Tell me about his eyes."

"His eyes turn around, and he wants to fall down."

"Does he cough, or spit up?"

"Yes, he coughs much, and spits up blood."

Very frequently people complain of their eyes when they are sick and feel dizzy and faint from some severe disease. Pneumonia is thought to be the probable disease, and the man is given a hospital hammock, and a workman to help carry in his friend to the hospital where he can remain for treatment.

E feels and talks like a desperate case.

"Doctor, I have much pain in my abdomen. I wish you would split me open and take it out."

"Where is your pain?"

"Here."

"But that is your spleen; it is enlarged."

"Yes, doctor, please cut me open and take it out."

"But we cannot remove the spleen; you cannot live without it."

"Yes? I am sorry. What then?"

Then the cause of his trouble is explained to him, and the fact that he must come to the dispensary regularly for some time. It is striking the readiness with which these people commit their bodily welfare into the doctor's hands for an operation.

F and G come together. They are men. They have chains around their necks, and are chained to each other and guarded by a soldier. They are men who have been imprisoned for not paying their native tax to the Government. In the prison they sleep crowded close together and have hard work to do, and not good food. Many become sick, especially with diseases of the lungs.

Patient H has sleeping sickness. In the earlier stages sufferers with this disease do not sleep but show any of a number of forms of nervous symptoms. The diagnosis consists of finding the parasite in the blood or spinal fluid, or more frequently in the glands of the neck. Three marvelous drugs have been discovered which give us hopes that the terrible ravages of this disease may be stopped and eventually wiped off from the face of the earth, as yellow fever has been.

Case J, I want you to remember. It may be a case of leg ulcer, or any other curable condition. The patient has been in the hospital for some time, and is now well and wishes to return home. She has learned what is our custom here; she wishes to be polite, and she means what she says, so she stoops forward and clapping her hands she says: "I give thanks, I give thanks, I thank God, I thank God, for I am well. Good-by, doctor; good-by, nurses; good-by, patients; all, good-by."

DECEMBER 13 IS THE DATE.

It Is The Second Sunday In December.

We are calling it "Men For The Ministry Sunday."

Will you be so kind as to place it in the schedule of days you intend to observe? This idea is being promoted by the Board of Education, and has been given the support of many of our annual conferences and of the leaders of the church.

The purpose of the day is to bring to the attention of our people the great need of men for the ministry of Christ in the Methodist Protestant Church. It is a day when we wish to call the people of our Methodism to their knees in prayer, that God may call more of our young men into the great work of the Christian Ministry.

It is a day when we request our pastors to preach at least one sermon on this, or some related subject. No special program is to be furnished, and no offering is to be taken. It is a time for serious thinking, speaking, and praying.

Repeatedly the Secretary of the Board of Education is being told by leaders throughout the borders of the denomination that what we need probably more than anything else is leaders in our pulpits. Not only that, but opportunity after opportunity to locate and build churches is being passed by, because we have no one to man them.

One brother said, "The greatest need of the Methodist Protestant Church is men; men who are consecrated, energetic, intelligent, and trained. Provide the men, and the other things like money and denominational leadership is bound to follow."

Please remember the date—December 13, 1925.

Sincerely, F. W. Stephenson.

A SATISFYING RELIGION.

There is a religion which is satisfying. I.

will call your attention to four features of it: First, a sense of the conscious face of God. You feel that God loves you, that He loves you in His arms. Second, the consciousness that He has made you good. The Lord poured into your lap all its wealth and honors, you would still be a miserably poor creature unless you knew that you were good and honest and true and pure. Third, the consciousness that you are doing your best for God and to those about you. Fourth, the assurance that all is going to be well. There may be difficulties in the way now, but if we have the assurance in our hearts that all will be well in the end, it will bring satisfaction.—General Booth.

—“Ever try to lose a cat, old man?”

“Yes, once. And I let upon a note that I thought was sure fire. I wrote a note enclosing $10 and tied it about the cat's neck. The note read: ‘Finder may keep both the cat and the money.’”

“And how did it work?”

“The cat returned the following day with another note tied to its neck. The note read: ‘Don't need the cat, but can use the money. Please send $10 more.’”—Selected.

—WHY DO YOU GO TO CHURCH?

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Asheville.—Two Sundays of the new conference year have passed. We are delighted to have pastor Bates and his family with us again.

Sunday afternoon we held a membership meeting at the church. Quite a number subscribed to the budget for the new year. Our pastor reviewed the past year's work. The total amount raised for all purposes $3387.00, $20.00 per member. The membership now numbers 168.

Last year was a good year in many respects.

The goals for the new year, as set forth by our pastor, are—1. A larger interest by the whole membership. Everybody on the job. 2. Enlistment in some organization in the church. 3. Every one doing something financially. 4. A cordial invitation to the unchurched and to the Methodist Protestants in the city who have not yet joined this church. 5. Enlargement of our plant. 6. The organization of a brotherhood.

The work for the new year started off well.

While conference was in session, Brother S. C. Carter passed away. He was one of our most loyal members, a man of fine qualities. He had suffered patiently many months. His body was laid away on the hill top, in the village of Democrat, the old family burying ground. There were many neighbors and friends present to comfort the family and to do honor to Brother Carter. There were beautiful flowers. The procession from his late residence, on Haw Creek, passed through Asheville and Weaverville, and over several detours, in sight of Clark's Chapel and Mt. Zion churches, and on to Democrat. The hills and valleys were adorned in the most gorgeous colors of autumn. An obituary will appear later.

Reporter.

Pleasant Hill, West Forsyth Circuit.—We are pleased to report that we are starting the new conference year with a more than ordinary interest, both in the church and Sunday school, and all the other auxiliaries. Especially is it gratifying to note the increased interest of the young people since our revival, which was the means of bringing quite a number of the younger boys and girls into the church.

Our Missionary Societies held a bazaar in the new city market, of Winston-Salem, last Saturday, November 21, 1925, and the result added quite a neat little sum to the treasuries of both Societies. On Sunday evening of November 22, the Societies held an open meeting in the church, which was a good and inspiring service in many ways. We were very glad to have our new pastor with us for this service and his encouraging address is bound to bear fruit in the form of increased membership as well as increased zeal among the present members of the Societies; with such things going on we are looking forward to a great work in our church this year.

Reporter.

Tabernacle Charge.—The first quarterly conference for this charge will meet at Tabernacle Church on Saturday before the first Sunday in December at 2 o'clock. All officials please be present if possible. Edw. Suits.

Chestnut Ridge, Orange Circuit.—We are all delighted to have Brother Williams and family back with us, and we hope that this may prove to be the very best year in the history of our church. Brother Williams has labored very faithfully in our midst for the past year, and we feel sure that much good has been accomplished. May we each one strive to be more faithful workers in our Master's vineyard, that many more things may be accomplished in the future than in the past.

Brother Williams filled his appointment the fourth Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. A large congregation was present, and he brought us a very inspiring and helpful message.

Our Sunday school is still going, with a right good attendance; still there is much room for it to grow, and we keep trusting that it will do so yet.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.
Mae Holmes.

High Point.—We were delighted to receive another addition of ten members to our ranks last Sunday morning at the close of the service, making a total of one hundred and eleven new members in the past five weeks, a record unequalled heretofore.

On Tuesday evening the employees of the Tomlinson Chair Co. with their families will hold a unique Thanksgiving service in the First Church, to which the public is invited.

The Mission Study Class held an interesting meeting Monday afternoon at the church with thirteen members present. The devotionals from "The Angelus" were led by Mrs. Jones Burns, and Current Events on the Home Missionary work were given by Mrs. L. J. Diffie. The second chapter of the Missionary Study Book "Prayer and Missions" was given in a delightful manner by Mrs. S. S. Cox, and the Question Box was conducted by Mrs. R. T. Pickens, the answers being given by Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, Mrs. H. A. Garrett, Mrs. Jones Burns and Mrs. R. M. Andrews.

The Junior Missionary Circle will hold its usual monthly meeting on Saturday afternoon at the church with Mrs. R. M. Andrews as leader.

According to annual custom, the Christian Endeavor Union of High Point, of which Mr. A. J. Koonce is President, will hold a Sunrise Prayer Service on Thanksgiving Day at 7 o'clock A. M. in the Presbyterian hut. An interesting program has been arranged, after which rolls, butter, and coffee will be served. At the conclusion of the service, baskets of good things to eat will be carried to the poor and unfortunate of the city. Last year thirty-five baskets were distributed and it is hoped that the number will reach fifty this year.

On next Sunday evening at 7:30 the annual Thank Offering Service of the Woman's Home Missionary Society will be held in the Sunday School Assembly Room, and the program will be rendered by a group of boys and girls from the Children's Home. This is the only occasion during the year when the children appear before a High Point audience and it is earnestly hoped that they will be greeted by a large congregation.

The many friends of Mrs. D. E. White, who has been an inmate of the hospital on account of a fall at the church during Conference, will be pleased to know that she returned home, and is improving.

Mrs. Minnie Andrews of Burlington is the guest of Mrs. O. D. McPherson.

Lebanon Church, High Point.—Large congregations have greeted our pastor, Rev. R. Hutton, at all services, which have been held in this conference year. Rev. Mr. Hutton is beginning his second year with us. We trust this will be a very successful year. Our stewards have organized for work and our organizations are getting busy.

The Junior Philatheas will serve a turndown dinner Thanksgiving day. The proceeds will go to pay for the carpet they have recently purchased for the church.

The ladies of the Philatheas class will hold a bazaar and food sale on Saturday December 5.

The entire community was shocked and grieved by the death of J. N. Harvey on October 31. Mr. Harvey was one of our most faithful members. He was a member of the board of trustees and Assistant Sunday school superintendent.

Our hearts go out in sympathy to the relatives. His funeral was conducted at the church on November 2. His pastor, Rev. R. Hutton, and former pastor, Rev. E. Suits, paid beautiful tribute to his Christian life.

Interment was made in Lebanon cemetery. The floral offerings were many and beautiful.

Oak Grove, Cleveland Circuit.—We are delighted to have Brother J. D. Morris back with us to begin another year's work. In former years he has been with us and has been successful, and we hope that this will be the best in our history.

Saturday evening, November 21, the officers and members held a business meeting in order to select some plan to handle the financial side of the church. Everybody enjoyed the meeting very much, and determined to carry over the top this year, in paying the bills in full. Also our pastor brought us a good message on Sunday, November 22, at 7 o'clock.

Our Sunday school is moving along and the interest is good. We are planning on having a Christmas program soon.

The Christian Endeavor Society is in progress.

With good wishes to all. E. O. Peeler, R.

North Davidson Charge.—The preacher family have many things to be thankful for. The good neighbors have been so thoughtful, about our needs during Mrs. Troxler's stay in the Elph Point Hospital, where she underwent a very heavy operation; and since she came home, Mrs. Sink, Mrs. Lanning, Mrs. Evans, Mrs. Berrier, Mrs. Shoaf, and Mrs. Koontz have remembered us with good things to eat, already cooked; this was fine at a home where mother is sick.

We also want to thank, Brother Lanning for a load of wood and straw; Brother Fred Koontz, for a load of wood; Mrs. Harp. Leonard and Mrs. Lanning for sausage; Mrs. Jeff. Berrier for strawberries and potatoes; Mr. Luther Leonard for potatoes and wood; and me one for a sack of potatoes left on the porch Sunday while we were away. We thank you very much. It does not make any difference whether we are at home or not, just have it on the porch.

The ladies of Bethesda church for a nice mono and $1.50; Brother W. M. Byler for $5; Brother Miller for $1; Brother Essie for $1; Brother C. A. Philips for pump, valves and work on car; Brother Jordan for a big pumpkin; Mrs. J. B. Leonard for curtains and draperies for dining-room; C. E. Society of Shiloh church for curtains for seven windows, and it was all new, not second hand. Also we want to thank the Berrier Brothers of Jacksonville, Fla., (sons of Bro. Jeff Berrier) for two substantial gifts, one a $50 gift for preacher and family, the other $500.00 check for the purpose of repairing and painting Shiloh church inside and out. Our boys sometime leave us; but they do not forget the old home, and church, and all who worship at Shiloh church will greatly appreciate this fine gift.

We have about completed our every member canvas.

We are planning now to go to conference next year with every thing paid in full.

On next Sunday night, November 29, at 8:30 the C. E. Society of Shiloh church will hold a Thank Offering service. We are expecting a good service and a large congregation. The program will consist of good singing, short talks, recitations, and praise. Come. We are expecting a good year's work; pray for us.

Yours for service, R. S. Trorler, Pastor.

Welch Memorial.—At our last annual conference, I was assigned to this church for another year. Of course it is a pleasure to return to those good people; our associations were pleasant last year, and we hope to make more pleasant this year. We hope to be a better pastor this year. Our aim is to do everything in our power for the upbuilding of the church. The outlook is more encouraging at this time than it was at the beginning of last year. We have already taken in seven new members since conference and our congregations are good. The Sunday school is encouraging; it is growing in interest all the time, under the efficient leadership of the Superintendent, Brother C. R. Ward. Our C. E. Society had been discontinued through the summer, but it was reorganized in the third Sunday in this month, and last Sunday being the first meeting since its organization, there was a good attendance and much interest was manifest. Many who did not attend before came out and enrolled as members. We hope soon to be able to start an other society, probably Juniors. We have enough young people to have three strong Societies. Our mid-week prayer service is more encouraging; more people are taking interest in it. The church as a whole has been taking on new life; they have been doing every thing they could to encourage the pastor, to make him feel that it is good to be here. We have had many kind expressions of appreciation from them, both in word and in deed. They took us on surprise last Friday night, and stormed the parsonage; the pastor was out calling on one of the families of the church, not suspecting anything of the kind. We noticed the folks seemed to be some restless, but did not think it was on our account. I had not been there long before a phone message summoned me home, under the pretence that a wedding was to take place at the parsonage. Of course I hastened to come and the Brother I was visiting wished to come and witness the ceremony. I did not then suspect any thing, but when I reached home and peeped in side, I soon discovered why I was summoned home. Talk about a pounding, it was one sure enough, the largest I ever saw a preacher receive at the beginning of his second year. Usually the poundings are better the first year, but this was my third and best pounding since coming to Welch. I wish I had time and space to tell what was brought, but for the lack of both I will have to omit mentioning the many things, and could not remember the names of those who came. The pounding began in the afternoon while I was out visiting; one lady gave me a nice ten pound hen and some fresh sausage. I told her that as my birthday was the next day after Thanksgiving I would save the hen and have her for my birthday dinner on Thanksgiving day. And when the pounding proper took place, another nice fat hen was brought already dressed, so we had her for Sunday dinner. There was also brought some nice spareribs and backbones, also more fresh sausage, some money also happened to get mixed up with the pounding, and on Saturday I was out visiting and happened to meet some who were not in the crowd that came at night, and they seemed to have it in for me, so they began to pound away, I do not know when the pounding will cease. We feel as though we could endure it just so long as they have a mind to pound.

With all the good and pleasant things which we are permitted to enjoy there are some things which bring sadness to our hearts. We had two sad experiences just a few weeks before conference. We lost two of our members, one was Brother William

C. Gibson, one of the oldest members of our church, he was a charter member. He was honored and loved by all who knew him; he had been in declining health for some time, and on the 14th of October he passed to his reward. The funeral took place in the church, with Rev. J. Moton, and Rev. Mr. Page, a Baptist minister and neighbor of the deceased, assisting the pastor. The remains were laid to rest in the Oak Hill cemetery.

He was eighty-one years old; he leaves to mourn their sad loss his widow, one daughter, two sons, and several grand-children.

The other death was that of Carl Robertson, a young man of splendid character. He was one of the most loyal of our young people to the church. He had served as president of the Young Men's Bible class and was active in the Sunday school and C. E. Societies; was most always present at each service. He had been in declining health for several weeks, was for a while confined to the bed, but had recovered sufficiently to resume his work, worked all the week and so far as any one knew was well as usual. On Sunday, October the 19, at an early hour he was called to cease from his labors and inherit the Kingdom which had been prepared for him. The funeral took place in the church on Monday, with Rev. O. L. Routh, pastor of the Holiness Church, assisting the pastor. The remains were laid to rest in the burying ground at Yadkinville whence the family came when moving to High Point. He was 21 years old. Besides his parents he is survived by one brother, five sisters. Their loss is his eternal gain.

On the 31st of October Mr. L. F. Castle, and Mrs. Emma Southern were united in marriage, the ceremony taking place at the home of the bride on Main St. Mr. Castle is one of the leading members of Welch Memorial Church, and a contractor in the city. He is very prominent in the social and business world. Mrs. Castle is also one of Welch Memorial's leading members, and she is very prominent socially. They are making their home for the present on Main St.

The ceremony was performed by the writer.
T. E. Pierce, Pastor.

"MUCH IN LITTLE."

The ocean is in the dewdrop;
The sun is in the beam;
Your soul is in the little smile
That in your eyes doth gleam.
The orchard is in the apple;
The field is in the wheat;
The home is in a mother's glance
So infinitely sweet.
A friend is in each kindly act;
A brother in each world;
And God Himself in every prayer
That Heaven ever heard.
The day is in the moment;
The temple in the plan;
So seek in every one you meet presented a variety of colors and at times there were scenes that were capable of stirring the faintest imagination. On the last lap of the journey, between Liberty and Asheboro we came to the top of a hill and from there we had a magnificent view of the mountains of Western Randolph though some of them were almost fifteen miles away. As we saw Back Creek and Caraway and Shepherd's many thoughts and expressions of my childhood were recalled. My mind immediately went back to the Hon. J. A. Blair of precious memory, father of Mrs. A. M. Rankin of High Point, N. C., who used to write beautiful poems about these mountains, one line of one running as follows: "Stately Back Creek and dear Caraway." Before night fall we were within the house in Asheboro that is to be used as a parsonage. The good women of the church had gone in ahead of us and had the house warm and as much of the furniture arranged as possible. We immediately began to unpack and soon had made a comfortable nest for ourselves. Supper and breakfast were brought to us by the good women. Before the week was gone the house had been made to look very home like and we are now ready to receive our friends.

The Board of Missions—W. F. Kenners, Editor.

A Word Beginning.

I shall not forget to say we are glad our dear pastor and family are to be with us for another year. We pray that this may be a better year for all pertaining to good on all that have charge.

I believe Pastor Hunter told this, that Bro. Kenners said to him, if he did not like the people on that rock when he came, if he stayed long enough he would learn to like them.

We always love our pastor and have never had a pastor yet we could not love.

Mrs. Clay Walker was buried at Palestine, October 3, 1925. She was Miss Kate Gibson before marriage. A noble woman has gone to meet loved ones. Leaves husband, little child, dear old mother, brothers and sisters to mourn her loss. They have our sympathy in this sad hour.

Mrs. Walker was not a member of our church but a regular attendant.

Randleman Charge.—The first quarterly conference will be held at Randleman church, Saturday, December 12th, at 2:00 P. M. Dr. A. G. Nixon will be present and preside. Dr. Nixon was present at Mt. Lebanon 11 A. M. Sunday.

The work on the charge is starting off with good congregations and seemingly increased interest. Funds are under way for Christmas services at all the churches. Mt. Lebanon is going to take the annual Thanksgiving offering the first Sunday in December. Local plans is planning to make some interesting suggestions right away.

The ladies' Aid has bought a new rug for a parsonage since conference, and is planning other improvements. W. H. Myers.

A Word from Mr. E. S. Wills.

I have read the request of the committee on the Methodist Protestant Herald and your statement in reply thereto in last week's Herald and would like to say that it would be very unfortunate should restrictions be thrown around you in giving free expression to the results of your long study of the Bible, in printing the results of the careful research of other students. Religion should have the same opportunity to take advantage of progressive study that is accorded to business, art or science.

Sincerely yours,

E. S. Wills.

From Henderson To Asheboro.

On the morning of Tuesday November 17th we left Henderson and turned westward toward Asheboro in the hill country of Randolph County. Brother Elmer Rich and son Henry of Asheboro had gone to Winston-Salem on the previous day and had secured the bunch of woods at Rev. R. A. Hunter's Henderson, and by half past nine the morning were ready to proceed to the new home. The journey was made in a very comfortable and pleasant manner. The weather was just what we would desire. The journey was very pleasant and a happy one. The presence of the journey. The woods presented a variety of colors and at times there were scenes that were capable of stirring the faintest imagination. On the last lap of the journey, between Liberty and Asheboro we came to the top of a hill and from there we had a magnificent view of the mountains of Western Randolph though some of them were almost fifteen miles away. As we saw Back Creek and Caraway and Shepherd's many thoughts and expressions of my childhood were recalled. My mind immediately went back to the Hon. J. A. Blair of precious memory, father of Mrs. A. M. Rankin of High Point, N. C., who used to write beautiful poems about these mountains, one line of one running as follows: "Stately Back Creek and dear Caraway." Before night fall we were within the house in Asheboro that is to be used as a parsonage. The good women of the church had gone in ahead of us and had the house warm and as much of the furniture arranged as possible. We immediately began to unpack and soon had made a comfortable nest for ourselves. Supper and breakfast were brought to us by the good women. Before the week was gone the house had been made to look very home like and we are now ready to receive our friends.

Yesterday was a full day. As we went into the Sunday school yesterday morning everything looked like an opportunity. There were 180 in Sunday school and a full house for the morning church service. At the evening service the auditorium overflowed and the Sunday school annex was used. The pastor of the Baptist church called in his service and so and several of his congregation came to worship with us.

The new church is going to add greatly to our opportunity here and we feel that the membership and all former pastors who have helped to make the present opportunity possible are to be commended. The permanent pews have not been put in yet, neither has the auditorium been carpeted, but we trust these will be on the way before long.

Before closing I would like to say that we enjoyed our five years in Henderson and shall always have a warm spot in our hearts for those dear people. Brother Hunter is to be congratulated on having such a delightful people to serve and I believe the church is to be congratulated on having such a splendid pastor.

Here's hoping that every pastor who was moved by our conference will like his new home and have great success in his new field.

J. E. Pritchard.

Friendship Station.—We are now working in the new conference year, 1926, starting at the beginning to do more in the work of the church this year than we did last.

We are wonderfully pleased with our new pastor that we have had for four years. He is doing a good work here and has been for the four last years and also at Porters. He served at Melton's Grove two years. He is still serving us and we are not tired of his presence.

3. Implicit obedience to the commandments of God is more acceptable than all professions, gifts, and sacrifices. "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken thou the fat of rams." 1. Sam. 15:22.

4. Obedience is the surest evidence of genuine love to God, and the surest condition of being loved by God. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him." John 14:21.

5. Obedience will serve as a safe passport in the day of judgment. "And I saw the dead, small and great stand before God: and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." Rev. 20:12.

11. Thousands approach the line of decision for Christ and turn back to the former life of sin. They are almost persuaded, but lost. They trifle with most sacred responsibilities. "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." Luke 9:62.

Pullen.

On the first Sunday morning of last month Brother J. D. Pullen had a stroke of paralysis. While he was critically ill, yet for a day or two we had some hopes of his recovery. I went to see him almost every afternoon, but on Friday I went in the morning and I was there just a few moments before he breathed his last. Brother Pullen was born October 27, 1868. On December 20, 1896, he married Miss Henrietta Bellamy. To this union were born six children, two died in infancy. The wife and four children survive the loss of a good husband and father. The only daughter, who is married, lives in a near by town, but the sons live in Whitakers with their mother.

The writer is informed that Brother Pullen at first united with the Baptist church but after his marriage, he with his wife, united with Eden, Methodist Protestant church, on Halifax charge. For a number of years

HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

Catalogue and application blank will be forwarded upon application. Those desiring further information should address The President, High Point College, High Point, N. C.

Brother Pullen lived on his farm near Whitakers, but for the last few years he lived in town. While he lived near here and in town he attended church and was known as a good, upright man. A beautiful thing in the life of Brother Pullen was his thoughtfulness and consideration for his wife. He was a good provider and the members of his family were well cared for, but he was especially thoughtful of his good, kind wife. Her health has not been good for the last few years and Brother Pullen did everything he could for her comfort and happiness. His last act was one of helpfulness to his wife. Would that there were more husbands who have the same spirit.

The body was laid to rest in the Whitakers' cemetery and the service was conducted by the writer. We realize that loved ones and friends had spoken kind words and shown their sincere sympathy to the wife and children, yet we believe that no one can comfort and cheer the broken heart as the loving, compassionate, comforting Christ. Therefore, we commend the bereaved to Him and pray that His spirit may ever sustain and comfort them.

GETTING EVEN.

To get even with one who has wronged us is to get down as low as he is. The more outrageous his injustice, the lower we shall have to get if we insist upon getting even with him. So "getting even" always leaves us worse off than we were before. If ever one man was unfairly treated by another, it was David, at the hands of jealous, unworthy, infuriated Saul. But when David's chance to get even came, he preferred to stay on the heights. To "revenge" ourselves is to return the sort of thing that was given to us. It is as though, having been cheated by counterfeit money, we wait for an opportunity to pass some of the counterfeit back to the cheat. No matter what we have suffered, we cannot afford to do that; for then we have been injured twice,

PRAYER.

Beyond this softly closing door
I shut the world away,
The din of sounding street, the cry
And clamor of the day.
One within a cloister hears
The vesper bells repeat
The old refrain of love and peace,
So here the dusk is sweet.
The dials record the speeding hours,
No time or change is here,
The seasons wane, no blossoms blow,
Eternity is near.
There is the peace that long ago
Lay hushed and tenderly
Upon the soul of Him who knelt
In dim Gethsemane.
Arthur Wallace Peach, in The Churchman.

DON'T FORGET TO PRAY.

We are asked to continue our united prayer for the High Point College through December. When you go to prayer be sure to pray for the blessings of God upon the college, and on the present campaign to get $100,000. We must have the full $100,000, and God will help us to get it the sooner if we trust Him.

December Thirteenth.

December 13 is also set apart as a day for special prayer in the entire Methodist Protestant Church that God will call into the ministry many of our own young people. Pray for the college. Pray for the church. Pray that the ranks of the ministry may be replenished. Yours in Christ Jesus,

A. G. Dixon.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

The after-conference adjustments have not been easy to make this time. It has required a bit of time and prayerful planning, but the most of it has been done the very best we could do it, and I trust all will work out well. For the time being we are asking Rev. R.

M. Andrews, Rev. Paul S. Kennett, Rev. P. E. Lindley and Rev. J. D. Hardy to give one Sunday each per month to Winston church.

Rev. J. H. Trolinger has agreed to serve Melton's Grove. Rev. H. W. Kelly of Corsicana, Texas, has been assigned to the Albemarle church, and expects to be in the pulpit there the first Sunday in December.

Rev. P. L. Hinman has been serving the South Winston church since conference and expects to continue there through the year. This leaves Porter's and Roseneath to be cared for. These will be supplied by nearby pastors.

Just after conference Rev. W. H. Neese came with a doctor's certificate stating that it would be detrimental to his wife's health to move her to Weaverville this time of year. This was quite puzzling as well as disappointing; but we finally worked it out by shifting Rev. J. D. Cranford to Weaverville, Rev. J. H. Hulin to Midland, and thus permitting Rev. W. H. Neese to remain at Randleman. Bro. Hulin was exceedingly kind and considerate in this matter, and I am sure the Lord will abundantly bless him for it.

In the meantime I have visited since conference Winston-Salem, Roberta, Albemarle and Maple Springs on Forsythe. This last was a fifth Sunday circuit rally—a harvest home service in the interest of the Children's Home, and the offerings of produce and money were splendid.

December Thirteenth.

Rev. F. W. Stephenson writes. "We are calling it 'Men for the Ministry Sunday.' The purpose of the day is to bring to the attention of our people the great need of men for the ministry of Christ in the Methodist Protestant Church. It is a day when we wish to call the people of our Methodism to their knees in prayer, that God may call more of our young men into the great work of the Christian ministry. It is a day when we request our pastors to preach on this, or some related subject. It is a time for serious thinking, speaking and praying."

The entire Methodist Protestant Church is being called upon to spend the second Sunday in December as a day of prayer and of preaching that God Himself will lay it upon the hearts of some of our brightest and best young people to give themselves to the Christian ministry. We of the North Carolina Conference will do well to fall in with this special call, and observe the day. God calls to the ministry, but he uses human agency to point the way.

Honor Roll.

Fairview church on the Anderson charge should be on the honor roll in the Journal as having paid A. C. B. in full, but word came too late to get it in. So I am making this note here that Fairview may thus be given full credit for paying this budget in full.

Let every church on every charge start in early to pay the budgets in full this year, and get it done in good time to get on the honor roll at Conference.

Quarterly Conferences.

If some pastors and people will just hold their quarterly conferences on some other day than Saturday I can visit more of them.

I plan to go to Randleman for quarterly conference on Saturday, December 5th, and to Flat Rock Saturday, December 12th.

Let any pastor who feels the need of help in his first quarterly conference call upon his district chairman, or some leading layman or some brother pastor to attend his conference. Yours in His service,

A. G. Dixon.

"By canceling European nations' debts, or giving them easy terms, Americans would encourage the spirit of militarism. I do not believe that it is fair to shift the burden of the present insane militarism from the shoulders of European taxpayers upon the American public. European nations could easily pay their debts to America if they would disarm." —Bishop John L. Nuelsen, Zurich, Switzerland.

A GOOD BOOK CHEAP.

I am calling the attention of the brethren to a book by Dr. James D. Burrell on the life of Paul, entitled "The Life and Letters of St. Paul." It may be had from the American Tract Society, New York City, for only $1.50 postpaid. It is a book of more than 500 pages, written in simple language, and wonderfully interesting. The men in the Conference course, and the younger men in the ministry, will find it especially helpful.

THE N. C. CONFERENCE 40 YEARS AGO AND TO-DAY.

Sometimes a feeling of discouragement creeps upon us when we look at some of our failures, and the difficulties that confront us. But let us take a look back to 1885, 40 years ago, and compare what we were then, with what we are today. As we have not the figures for 1925, we will use those of 1924. So it will be a comparison between 1885 and 1924, practically a 40 years space of time.

Then we had, all told, 54 ministers and preachers; now, 102 ministers and preachers. Then we had 34 charges, now 81 charges. (The figures for 1925 will be more.) Then we had 12,000 members, now we have more than 26,000 members, or more.

Then we paid our President $700 per year; now we pay him $2700 and furnish a parsonage. The pastors received, in round numbers, $9000. Now, $99,000. Then, an average salary of $290 per year; now, 1924, an average of $1224. Then we had five parsonages, valued at $2,700. Now 61 parsonages, valued at $265,600. Then 64 church buildings, valued at $836.25; now, 228 church buildings, valued at $1,089,450. No doubt 1925 will show an advance over 1924. Then, 112 Sunday schools, with 3,832 scholars; now, 220 Sunday schools with 22,785 scholars.

The percentage of increase in 1885 was 4 per cent, plus; in 1924, 3 per cent plus. According to this, the spiritual has not kept pace with the material. This should give us concern. In stressing the financial, the material, we should be careful lest we ease up on the spiritual. It seems that to a degree we have done this, as much as we may dislike to admit it.

Then we had three town churches, with one or two in course of construction; now we have 38 town churches. Then we had perhaps less than a dozen organs in our churches, with no pianos, or pipe organs, and what we call "choirs" was almost unknown. But we "praised God from whom all blessings flow," with the "human voice divine," just the same, and the people sang, young and old, without distinction. And at Camp Meetings often the song arose in volume as the "sound of many waters." And many were the sinners that were swept into the kingdom upon the great swells of these heavenly, hallelujah songs. No solos, duets, quartets, nor anthems—nothing for show, but for the praise and glory of God.

We had no Budget as we have it now. But we were beginning to take modest collections for "general interests." Forty years ago we collected $370.81 for Home and Foreign Missions. For ministerial Education $84.15. For Theological Seminary $67.22. For Colleges, $20.48.

The largest salary received 40 years ago was $548, Winston Miss., Rev. T. J. Ogburn pastor. The largest circuit salary paid was $545, Orange Circuit, Rev. R. R. Mischaux pastor. The next largest was $500, Granville circuit, Rev. W. C. Kennett pastor. One pastor, Brother H. W. Peeples, pastor Rowan

Miss., received $35.59. The average, as we have seen, was $290. The pastor of to-day has no idea of what it meant to travel a circuit 40 years ago, on such meager salaries, and the travel was on horse-back, or in buggy or sulky, sometimes through red mud half a hub deep for miles and miles. This writer remembers very distinctly a four miles stretch of this kind of road in Rowan Co., a dead level pull for four weary miles. And he received $140. that year, with board and horse feed.

As we have seen, the President received $700 salary, and traveled the District from Dan to Beer-Sheba in a buggy, and furnished his own house. More than 50 years ago, the pastor who baptized this writer, and received him into the church, at his first appointment, appeared with a slit in the elbow of his Sal-lam jeans coat. But he could preach. He knew God and knew the bible. Strong men quaked and trembled under his preaching, fell at the altar and were saved. No hand-shaking, card-signing, nor "decision day" for children in those days. All came to the altar alike in those days. No difference made between young and old. And they would arise with shining faces and "tell to all around, what a dear Savior they had found."

During these 40 years we have built and disposed of four town churches. Still we have 38 remaining. We've made some mistakes, and no doubt will make others, but upon the whole we've gained. We had no publishing house, Children's Home, nor educational institution save Yadkin College. Suppose to day we had no Publishing House, no Children's Home, no educational institution, we would still have more than a 100 percent gain in membership, about 40 percent gain in number of church buildings, about 1000 percent gain in number of parsonages, and more than 800 percent gain in value. There has been a gain of more than 1000 percent. in value of church buildings. A gain of more than 500 percent in our "general interests"—Budgets. A gain of more than $28,000. We have also gained more than 400 percent in the average of pastor's salary. And just about the same in President's salary, when house-rent is considered, as the President used to furnish his own house. We had no summer conference, no C. E. Societies, no Young Peoples' Conference, did not pay a Secretary, Treasurer, Reporter, Stenographer, nor any body to do anything. Whoever published the Journal was supposed to get his postage and express expenses, but nothing more. Every one was supposed to work for the "love" of it. This scribe served several years as conference Steward, "why he was so called, I never knew) whose duties it was to prepare all the statistical reports, financial and all, neither receiving, nor expecting, any remuneration, save the honor(?), and being critized for mistakes. In this respect there has been little or no change in 40 years. Mistakes are still made, and the critics still criticize. And all goes "merry as a marriage bell."

This review of the past of 40 years ago, and of to-day, should encourage us to go forward.

No ground for desponding, but rather for hope and faith. Though some seeming disaster should overtake us, it need not be fatal. The greatest disaster that could possibly overtake us would be to lose faith in God and in the integrity of his word. As long as we have an unshakable faith in God and in his word, and a genuine christian experience, we will be invincible. If we trust in ourselves, in the material, we will fail. Germany was defeated, but she had her people, her land, her homes left her, and so she is regaining her strength. So a conference might meet with disaster in some respects, but it need not be fatal, as long as it has its people, its lands, its houses, and a grim determination to go on. Suppose we had given way to discouragements and prophets of evil 40 years ago, where would we have been today? Let us not do so now. If we will but move forward with determination and in unity, with unquestioning faith in God and in his word, why may not 40 years hence see as great an increase upon that of today, as today is upon the 40 years past: Let no prophet of evil be heard. Let wisdom prevail.

J. F. Dosier.

WHY A "MEN FOR THE MINISTRY SUNDAY?"

So many demands are being made upon our pastors to observe special Sundays that one feels constrained to give a reason for the proposal being made by the Board of Education, that one be set aside as a "Men for the Ministry Sunday." We have our regular denominational special days,—Rally Day, Easter, Children's Day. Besides, there is Christmas, Mother's Day, Anti-Saloon League Day, Near East, Community Chest, Education, Thanksgiving, and many other days, until our pastors are either bewildered or exasperated. Their inclination is to ignore all such appeals, and they are hardly to be blamed.

That the Church is in urgent need of more men to fill its pulpits, a glance at the reports of the Stationing Committees of the Annual Conferences is the proof. Charge after charge is left unsupplied, and we are forced to admit that there are others inadequately manned.

"Unsupplied." How can we read the word in the list of appointments without a pang of regret. It means a flock without a shepherd, a group of Christian people left without their natural leader. No one who on stated and regular occasions shall break to them the Bread of Life in the preaching of the Gospel. No one to minister to them in sickness and sorrow. No one to give them encouragement, counsel and comfort. No one to help them in their evangelistic campaigns, to direct them in their religious education task, and no one to give to their young people that kindly sympathetic watch-care, that only a faithful pastor can give. No one to be to the sinful and careless a friend and a brother. No one to move among the people as God's man, witnessing by life and word to the things of the Eternal.

What, too, of those charges which must pu up with the services of incompetent and eccentric individuals? Is not their plight almost as serious as those who have no Shepherd? The ministries of the incompetent and eccentric are frequently more destructive than if the charge had no pastor. It can usually be set down that a divided church, a dying church, a stagnant church, a quarrelsome church, is such by unwise pastoral leadership. This is not true always, let it be said with emphasis, as too many churches fail to give their hard working and anxious pastors the right kind of co-operation. It seems better, however, for pastors to accept the responsibility. Needless to say we are forced to keep too many in our pulpits who would quickly be displaced if we had more competent individuals available.

Five colleges and one seminary in the Methodist Protestant Church are well equipped and ready to give the young man studying for the ministry a competent training. Approximately ninety young men are availing themselves of these resources, but we could take care of several times that number, and do it to good advantage. At the present time, however, we are sending out into the active work only enough to little more than take the places of those passing away, or leaving the ministry for one reason or another.

If the Methodist Protestant Church is to continue its service to Christ and humanity, it can do so only with an increased number, and an improved quality of its ministry. No church can succeed in any large way if it is not adequately and effectively led. We suffer today, not only because of a lack of competent leaders in our pulpits but because of an insufficient number. Is it not advisable then to take some time to think and pray about this matter? Is it not in keeping with our Lord's suggestion to pray that harvesters be secured for the field which is ripe unto the harvest? Is there not something thrilling in the thought that simultaneously all Methodist Protestant people in America will be thinking and praying for this interest? Praying not only that God will lay upon the hearts of our young men his call to the Christian ministry, but that these young men will have the grace to respond affirmatively?

It is our hope that every pastor in the denomination will preach at least one sermon on Sunday, December 13th in harmony with this plan. Also that sometime during the service, a special season of prayer will be observed.

Frank W. Stephenson, Secretary.
Board of Education, Methodist Protestant Church.

CONFIRMS BIBLE HISTORY.

The remains of old forts and battle-grounds where David and Saul fought the Philistines have been unearthed on the top of the hill of Beth-Shan, near the Jordan River, in Palestine. The excavations were made by the Palestine Expedition of the University of Pennsylvania Museum.

The very wall on which the Philistines hung the body of Saul is one of the discoveries (i Samuel, 31:10). The inside of the wall is blackened by fire, believed to have been set by the Israelites as part of their revenge for the death of Saul.—Current Events.

THE HOLY TRINITY—GOD THE SON.

One of the most prominent aims of the modernists is to disprove the doctrine of the Trinity, that there are three Persons in the Godhead, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. To this end they deny the Virgin Birth and the miracles of Jesus Christ, including the miracle of His own resurrection. They make the Holy Ghost to be but a manifestation, or force, or influence, proceeding from God. In this editorial we shall endeavor to present a few arguments in defense of the deity of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

In the first place He spoke with the authority of God. "Never man spake like this man," nor ever will, or can. "For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." With authority all His own He changed, added to, and gave new interpretation to, the Holy Scriptures. Six times in one chapter He asserted, "But I say unto you." He said, "I am the door," "I am the good shepherd," "I am the bread of life," "I am the resurrection and the life." No merely human being could truthfully make these claims.

In the second place He declared that He was God and exercised the functions of Godhead. To the man restored to sight He said, "Dost thou believe in the Son of God?" And to the inquiry, "Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?" Jesus replied, "Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee." To the woman at the well of Sychar who spoke of the Messiah which is called Christ, Jesus replied, "I that speak unto thee am he." In these two statements Jesus asserted that He was the Messiah and God. To the paralytic Jesus said, "Son, thy sins be forgiven thee." No one but God can forgive sins, and in forgiving sins Jesus declared that He was God.

The character of the miracles of Jesus proves that He was God. Miracles were performed by Moses, Elijah, Elisha, Peter and Paul. But neither of them performed them in his own name or in the exercise of his own authority and power. They claimed to be the believing instrumentalities through whom God alone performed them. But Jesus performed miracles from Himself, in the exercise of His own authority and power. To the leper He said, "I will, be thou clean." To the blind He said, "Receive thy sight." To the only son of the widow of Nain, He said, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." To the corpse four days old, He said, "Lazarus, come forth." No one but God could consistently and truthfully speak such authoritative commands.

And then He received worship that could be rendered to God alone. He was worshiped by the leper, the rich young ruler, the man born blind, the women on the resurrection morn, and by his disciples. He accepted this worship which was due to Him as God. He did not rebuke or censure anyone for worshiping Him, which He would have done if He was not God. Jesus Christ is God; else He was the most consummate liar and impostor of all history. "But these things are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." John 20:31.—Word of Life.

CHRIST IN US.

Put a piece of iron in the presence of an electrified body, and that piece of iron becomes a temporary magnet, and as long as you leave the two side by side they are both magnets. Remain side by side with Him who loved us and gave Himself for us, and you will become a permanent magnet; a permanent, attractive force; and like Him you draw all men unto you.—Selected.

TELL ME THE STORY OF JESUS.

Tell me the story of Jesus,
Write on my heart every word;
Tell me the story most precious,
Sweetest that ever was heard.
Tell how the angels, in chorus,
Sang as they welcomed His birth,
"Glory to God in the highest!
Peace and good tidings to earth."
Tell of the cross where they nailed Him,
Writhing in anguish and pain;
Tell of the grave where they laid Him,
Tell how He liveth again.
Love in that story so tender,
Clearer than ever I see;
Stay, let me weep while you whisper,
Love paid the ransom for me.

Some time ago I tried to compare what the different religious systems tried to produce, what the aim and end of the whole progress has been. Here was Greece; Greece said, "Be moderate, know thyself;" Confucianism said, "Be superior, correct thyself;" Buddhism says, "Be disillusioned, annihilate thyself;" Hinduism says, "Be separated, merge thyself;" Mohammedanism says, "Be submissive, bend thyself;" Shintoism says, "Be loyal, suppress thyself;" Judaism says, "Be holy, confirm thyself;" Modern materialism says, "Be industrious, enjoy thyself;" Modern dilettantism says, "Be broad, cultivate thyself;" Christianity says, "Be Christlike, give thyself."—E. OUR NEW FINANCIAL PLAN.

As ordered by the last annual conference, a Steering Committee was appointed to carry out a financial plan suggested to the Conference, whereby the pressing needs of the College might be met. This committee called a general meeting, which was held in High Point on Tuesday, November 24. This meeting, considered the plan and decided upon the following:

The Board of Education will issue notes payable four months after date for $1,000.00 each, and for such other sums as may suit those who will handle them. Different churches and circuits will be asked to take these notes and to discount them at their banks, paying the discount and forwarding to me a check for the amount of the note. These notes will probably have to be indorsed by a number of representative laymen.

As soon as possible a list of unpaid pledges will be furnished those handling the notes, and as these pledges are collected the money is to be deposited in the bank which discounted the note, to the credit of the North Carolina Board of Education of the Methodist Protestant Church, Incorporated, and subject only to the check of the Treasurer of the Board of Education. When the notes mature it is hoped that enough money will have been collected and deposited to pay them off, but in the event that the full amount of any note should not be collected, a renewal note will be issued for the unpaid balance. In this way it is hoped that the amount of unpaid pledges, between $80,000 and $90,000, will be made available at once to meet the pressing obligations of the College.

Pastors and others are asked to preserve this article carefully, so that the plan decided upon at the meeting in High Point may be followed.

Of course where pledges can be collected, or new cash contributions secured, it will be even better than handling the notes, but the notes are for use in those cases where it is not now possible for those who made pledges to pay them.

J. Norman Wills, Treas.

WE ARE GREATLY ENCOURAGED.

The following brethren have already had the notes of the Board of Education discounted and have forwarded the money to the Treasurer.

Dr. F. R. Harris, Henderson, $1,000; Dr. T. M. Johnson, Mebane, $1,000; D. A. McLaurin, Concord, $2,000; Rev. H. Free Surratt, Charlotte, $1,000; Rev. C. W. Bates, Asheville, $1,000; Rev. J. F. McCulloch, Calvary, Greensboro, $1,000.

It will be noted that three of the notes handled are by Charlotte, Asheville, and Calvary. Surely, if these churches can thus promptly and generously come to the aid of the college, the older ones should not hesitate.

Dr. Johnson only gives another evidence of his unflinching interest in the college, and Brother McLaurin, the efficient representative of the college at Concord, did not hesitate to accept a double portion, and to forward the money promptly.

In addition to this I have received from Rev. Fred. W. Paschall, Whitakers, a check for $521.00, which I understand to be for new cash pledges. I also have the following letter, which I give in full:

Whitakers, N. C., December 1, 1925.

Mr. J. Norman Wills,
Greensboro, N. C.

Dear Mr. Wills:

I believe you said the one hundred thousand dollars our people were being asked to raise for High Point College included the notes given at the called Conference last Summer. I am enclosing one you mailed me, and check for $500.00. You may give me credit for the $1,000. I hope the people are responding generously. If all pastors are working as hard as ours you will be looking for a place to put the money. We have good crops in this section, but prices are low. With kindest personal regards, and best wishes for the success of this campaign for funds for the college, I am Very truly, J. M. Cutchin, Jr.

This is the same "Mack" Cutchin who sometime ago sent me unheralded and unannounced a check for $1,000.00. He loaned the Board $500.00 as a result of an appeal at the special session of the annual conference last June, and he now contributes this, with an additional $500.00, making a new gift of $1,000.00.

Dr. Harris, the veteran friend of the College enterprise, is also making an extra contribution of $1,000, as he has assumed full responsibility for the note of the Board of Education for that amount. He made an extra contribution of the same amount a few months ago.

Brother R. M. Cox also makes an additional contribution of $500.00, and Brother M. A. Coble of Burlington sends a check for $500.00, and a stock certificate in a reliable investment company for the same amount, in payment of a bequest of $1,000.00 made by his mother.

We are exceedingly grateful to all these brethren for their prompt and hearty response to the appeal. Other brethren have called for notes, and will no doubt be able to discount within the next few days.

We are likewise grateful to those whose payments of their pledges, though of smaller amounts, is an evidence of their interest and their desire to place the college upon a solid financial basis.

The only thing necessary to make the plan a complete success is for all of our pastors to be able to induce their leading laymen to lend their credit to the College, and for every charge to handle its share of the obligation. In it all I see the good hand of our God upon us. He has not yet failed us, but He is working through men. Let us not fail Him.

Paid On A. C. B.

1. Littleton.....$15.00.
2. Saxapahaw.....$1.00.

Paid On G. C. B.

1. Littleton.....$17.50.

Last week we were wondering who would start the G. C. B. We have that answered this week. Littleton has taken that honor. Littleton also claims first place on the A. C. B. Come on everybody. Pastors, lay the matter on the hearts of your stewards to see to it that contributions come up from every charge in the conference. Small amounts each week are better than waiting a long time to do anything. A little each week before you know it it is all done. Stewards, lay it on the hearts of your people to make the heart of your pastor rejoice to see the name of his charge among those who are in the front ranks for the Lord. Our treasurer V. W. Idol does not have funds enough in hand to pay off the last month's bills. Divide your assessments by 52 and see just what a small amount it makes for each week, then raise that each week. Or divide it by 12 and raise that amount each month. Better than either plan raise the whole assessment and let the Lord have the advantage of it for the entire year.

God bless each one in your efforts,

A. G. Dixon.

MEETING OF THE UNION BOARD.

The Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration met in special session on Friday, November 20th, 1925, in the Pittsburg Book Concern Building with the President, Rev. Dr. J. C. Broomfield, in the chair.

Announcement was made of the death of Mrs. S. Wada, the esteemed wife of Rev. S. Wada, in charge of our Tokyo Blind School, and one of the foremost ministers in Japan. The funeral services were held in our Azabu Church, Tokyo, of which Brother Wada had been pastor until assigned to the Blind School, and a large number attended to voice their appreciation of her life and work, and their sympathy in the great loss he had sustained. Rev. E. I. Obee wrote it was one of the most beautiful services he ever saw.

Bro. Wada secured through a Japanese friend a gift of Yen 600. for the Blind school, and the Japanese government annually has been making grants of money to the school, besides special grants for constructing a temporary building, after the great earthquake, which is still occupied by the school.

It has already been published that Rev. S. Wada was signally honored for his good work by the Japanese Emperor bestowing a silver vase embossed with the Imperial crest. The secretary was instructed to express the sympathy of the Union Board to Brother Wada.

The reports from the various departments were submitted and duly considered, and it was gratifying to note that, after the summer vacation, all departments of the work in Japan, the Nagoya College, Girls' school, kindergartens, Blind School, and the work of the churches and mission appointments, had opened up under favorable conditions, and the outlook was promising for satisfying results during the fall and winter.

The erection of the church at Nagoya College was expected to start at once, as bids had been asked, and the Mission called upon the Union Board for the funds for which to make the payments as the work progresses.

This makes a further urgent call to all those who subscribed at the General Conference for this church to be built, and we earnestly appeal to all those who have not paid their subscriptions, or have paid a part, to send at the earliest possible date the full amount they promised for this worthy object. We must have a suitable building in which to do the religious work for over 1100 students in our care. Send your check to Mr. H. C. Staley, 516 N. Charles Street, Baltimore, Md.

The celebration of the forty-fifth anniversary of the Yokohama Girls' School, and the successful field day at Nagoya College, when the teachers and teams of all the lower grade schools were invited, were the outstanding events of the last quarter.

In China, despite the unsettled conditions, and the apprehensions of serious trouble, as civil war, the schools were opened with about the usual enrollment, and the work of the pastors was being pushed in our large territory where our Mission operates alone. Brother H. Williams had taken charge of the boys' school in Kalgan, was enamored of his work, and becoming more attached to the people, and pursuing his study of the language.

Dr. R. Fleagle was carrying on the Girls' School, and attending to her growing medical work, and finding more to do than she could find time for, and anxious for workers to help develop the important work.

The usual course of affairs was interrupted September 25th by Rev. C. G. Soderbom and Miss Maude Lawson of the Newark, N. J., Church going to Peking, where, at the Swedish Consulate they were married, and later the religious ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Carl Felt of the M. E. Mission. We bespeak for them the hearty congratulations and best wishes of our people.

In India there has been rejoicing over the passing of the first year language examinations, Miss Frank gaining honors, Rev. and Mrs. Paul M. Cassen passing, and Miss Miskimen's report not to hand when they wrote last, but is expected also to pass. Rev. and Mrs. I. F. Minnis will have their second year examination in February. Six of the students in the Girls' School passed the government examinations, and will be sent to different training schools.

The India budget could not be granted with its increases, and the Mission will strive to make reductions for the ensuing year.

Sec. Klein and Mrs. W. E. Pettet were elected delegates to the Foreign Missions Conference in Jan., 1926, in Atlantic City.

The meeting of the Board's Executive Committee will be held in Baltimore Thursday Feb. 25th, 1926. Fred C. Klein.

THERE IS NO UNBELIEF.

There is no unbelief;
Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod
And waits to see it push away the clod,
He trusts in God.
Whoever says when clouds are in the sky,
Be patient heart, light breaking by and by,
Trusts the Most High.
Whoever sees 'neath winter's field of snow
The silent harvest of the future grow,
God's power must know.
Whoever lies down on his couch to sleep,
Content to lock each sense in slumber deep,
Knows God will keep.
Whoever says, "Tomorrow," the Unknown,
"The Future," trusts that power alone
He dares disown.
The heart that looks on when the eye-lids close
And dares to live when life has only woes,
Comfort knows.
There is no unbelief,
And day by day, and night unconsciously
The heart lives by faith that lips deny—
God knoweth why. —Bulwer.

BIBLE RULES FOR GIVING.

What did the Lord Jesus say about giving?
It is more blessed to give than to receive—
Acts 20:35.

What kind of a giver does God love?
God loves a cheerful giver—2 Cor. 9:7.
How have we received, and how should we give?

Freely ye have received, freely give—Matt. 10:8.

How much should we give?
Every man shall give as he is able according to the blessing of the Lord thy God, which he hath given thee—Deut. 16: 17.

How much did Jacob promise to give?
Of all that Thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto Thee.—Gen. 28: 22.

How are our gifts accepted?
If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not—2 Cor. 8: 12.

How should we honor the Lord?
Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of thine increase—Prov. 3: 9.

What is said of him that pities the poor?
He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again—Prov. 19: 17.

How often shall we give?
Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him—1 Cor. 1: 62.

What promise is given to those who consider the poor?

Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—
Psalm 41:1.

How should we treat those who ask for favors?

Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not away—
Matt. 5: 42.

What is God's greatest gift to man?
God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life—John 3: 16.

What should we say for this?
Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift—2 Cor. 9: 15.—Selected.

A GRANDMOTHER'S RULES.

Somebody's grandmother has given to her descendants these admirable rules of conduct:

"Always look at the person to whom you speak. When you are addressed, look straight at the person who speaks to you. Do not forget this.

"Speak your words plainly; do not mutter or mumble. If your words are worth saying, they are worth pronouncing distinctly and clearly.

"Do not say disagreeable things. If you have nothing pleasant to say, keep silent.

"Think three times before you speak once.

"Have you something to do that you find hard, and would prefer not to do? Do the hard thing first, and get over with it. If you have done wrong, go and confess it. If your lesson is hard, master it. If the garden is to be weeded, weed it first, and play afterwards. Do first the thing you don't like to do, and then, with a clear conscience, try the rest."—

HIGH POINT COLLEGE NEWS

Recently we have had visits from many of our pastors and other friends of the college: Dr. T. H. Lewis favored us with a talk at a chapel service during his stay at the Annual Conference. Many of the students enjoyed visiting the Conference, especially those of the young men preparing for the ministry. And since the names of these young men have not been published in the Herald I will give them: Carroll, Madison, Bingham, Little, Braxton, Maxwell, O. C. Loy, William Loy, Wall (M. E.), Broome (M. E. S.).

These are all fine young men and will no doubt do good work when they have finished their preparation.

The Sunday evening services are always inspiring. It is quite a joy to visit this service and hear these young people take part in the Christian Endeavor prayer meeting. So very many take part and some of them do exceptionally well.

Some Books Received but not Acknowledged

We regret that quite a while ago a box of books sent by Miss Dela Bustin from Enfield came to us but was confused with some books shipped here by one of the professors and was not opened and acknowledged. It was a fine collection. Mrs. J. A. Fuller, of Middleburg, N. C., recently sent us a box of books which will be of great use to the students. For these also we are most grateful.

Donations to Special Purposes.

We have received lately for beautifying the grounds from D. A. McLaurin $200.00; Mr. Frank Wineski $100; Dr. S. S. Coe, $25; Mr. W. J. Armfield, $100; Mr. J. H. Muckenfuss $25; Mrs. Kate Kime $1,000. This was divided between campus improvements and other claims. The walks have been laid and used for two months; the trees are now being set and we hope as the season comes for it and as we have the opportunity to beautify the campus with evergreens and other shrubbery.

Dr. George Stuart Here Dec. 11th.

Friday, at 8 P. M. This is the third number of the Lyceum course given at the college. Dr. Stuart is well known in this vicinity and we hope to have a goodly number of our friends at this time. Admission will be charged. But on Dec. 9th, Wednesday night at 8 P. M. the college chorus will give its fall concert; there will be no charge for this concert.

The Torch.

This is the college paper, published by the students and issued monthly. It made its first appearance this semester last week.

There were many vexatious delays which tried the souls of the management, but the publication which is in magazine form is a most creditable number.

Registering for Next Fall.

It is interesting to note that we have already received several applications for admission for September, 1926, inclosing the room deposit. Two came in a single mail last week. This encourages a bit and should encourage those who are interested in the college over the state very much.

The High Point Meeting Last Week.

I was impressed most profoundly with one thing in this meeting which is, we have some laymen as well as preachers who do not intend to see High Point College go down in defeat because of her financial obligations. It was a disagreeable discovery that some of our people got last June, but I have yet to hear of one who has relaxed his efforts because of this discovery. The fact that the college buildings were here and that the college was running was taken by many to be sufficient proof that we had all the money we needed; so it has proven to be a blessing to us to let this secret out, and now that our needs are known we have brighter prospects of getting what we needed than in any time since work was started on the buildings.

KEEP ON PRAYING: prayer availeth much. Keep on denying self for the college, for by so doing both you and the college will be benefited. Never before, since I have known the M. P. Church, have we come face to face with a situation which meant so much to our denomination if brought to a satisfactory conclusion, and never before in all this time have we been more greatly troubled over a situation. We believe it will prove to be a great blessing to our church in many ways, and that the blessing will be greater than it would have been had we not been called to wrestle with this difficult problem.

Faternally,

R. M. Andrews.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

Thanksgiving.

Text: "Praise ye the Lord." Ps. 150:1.

Ours is a great God, great in mercy, great in power, great in holiness, great in achievements, doing wonders. Man is the large recipient of His greatness and goodness. All that man is, has, or hopes to be or have comes from the Father of mercies. "It is he that hath made us, and not we ourselves; we are his people and the sheep of his pastures." Out of nature and grace there beams the smiling face, there extends the helping hand, and there speaks the kind, comforting voice. "The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works."

Appreciation of such marvellous goodness is a paramount duty. To express this privilege is a priceless privilege "O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together." And we will speak of the duty and extent of thanksgiving.

First, let us consider

The Duty of Thanksgiving.

It is a most solemn debt that we owe to the Most High God. Benefit always confers obligation, and the first obligation is that of gratitude, both felt and expressed. The Psalmist expressed a sense of this obligation when he exclaimed, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits towards me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people." In another place the Psalmist exhorts, "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name." This is a debt that is the easiest to discharge. It demands the exercise of the breaths that God Himself has given. The grateful soul just breathes out its thanksgiving to God. "He that offereth praise glorifieth me," saith the living God.

We should praise the Lord because He is altogether worthy of it. He is the worthiest of all beings, "the fairest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely." The four and twenty elders "cast their crowns before the throne, saying, for thou has created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created." It is written, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." And who labors for us more largely and unceasing than the God of all mercy? It is He that imparts breath every moment. It is He that sends the sunshine and the shower upon the just and the unjust. It is He that makes the fields bend with golden harvests. It is he that removes our sins from us as far as the east is from the west. It is he that gives "the love that passeth knowledge," "the peace that passeth all understanding," and "the joy unspeakable and full of glory." "Every good and every perfect gift cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning."

And again we are duty bound to give thanks because it is so well pleasing to God. "With such sacrifices God is well pleased." In fact thanksgiving is the most pleasing offering that we can render unto Him, "whose we are and whom we serve." The Psalmist recognized praise as the chief sacrifice: "I will praise the name of God with a song, and magnify him with thanksgiving. This also shall please the Lord better than an ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs."

The duty of thanksgiving pays a rich reward. Material, spiritual, and eternal blessings flow from the faithful discharge of this duty. The Psalmist enumerates these blessings in this illuminating passage: "Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us."

In the next place let us consider

The Extent of Thanksgiving.

All nature, all creatures, and all human beings are commissioned to render praise due unto our God. "Praise the Lord from the earth, ye dragons, and all deeps; fire, hail, snow, and vapors, stormy wind fulfilling his word; mountains, and all hills fruitful trees, and all cedars; beasts, and all cattle; creeping things, and flying fowl, king of the earth, and all people; princes, and judges of all the earth; both young men, and maidens; old men and children: let them praise the name of the Lord: for his name alone is excellent; his glory is above the earth and heaven." "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord."

Not only should every thing give thanks to God, but we are commanded to be thankful for everything. We are enjoined by the inspired apostle. "Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." We are enjoined to be thankful even for the dark and painful providences of God, for these are blessings in disguise, and yield "the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." Paul declared, "We are exceeding joyful in all our tribulation"; "most gladly therefore will I gather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake; for when I am weak, then am I strong."

All time and all eternity will not be sufficient to pay this holy debt of thanksgiving. God's mercies are new every morning, and put us under renewed obligation to praise the Lord. No hope of catching up with this increasing debt. Praise will be the chief employment of the heavenly life, and the happiest. But let us go to the utmost in thanksgiving during the life that now is. Let every day be a thanksgiving day. Let every moment be burdened with the heart's song of praise. "Praise ye the Lord: for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant, and praise is comely."—Word of Life.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—DEC. 6.

Paul's Voyage and Shipwreck.

Lesson Text: Acts 27:30-44.

Golden Text: Matt. 14:27.

The Central Truth: "God is our refuge and strength; a very present help in trouble." Ps. 46:1.

Scriptural Points.

1. Immediately after Paul's defense before Agrippa Festus made arrangements to send his noted prisoner, along with others, to Rome. And he showed undue haste in so doing. For winter was coming on when sea travel was unsafe. The group of prisoners were put in charge of a centurion named Julius.

2. The voyage had not proceeded very far before a most terrific storm arose, which tossed the frail vessel up and down for fourteen days. Death stared them in the face every moment of these weeks. But Paul's mighty faith in prayer brought deliverance. An angel from heaven brought him the message that not one life on board would be lost.

3. The dread of death was so intense that no one had thought of food during all this time. All desire for food had been taken away by the fearful ordeal through which they were passing. Now upon the assurance from God that no life would be lost, Paul urged his fellow-voyagers to partake of some food. This was indispensable in order to endure the experiences of shipwreck that were near. Invoking God's blessing upon the food this man of God urged them all to eat; and they did. It was a meal of much sanctity and solemnity.

4. The sailors, foreseeing the certain destruction of the vessel, were about to flee by seizing the life boat. Paul informed the centurion that unless these sailors remained and did their work no one on board could be saved. Whereupon the centurion gave orders to cut the ropes and let the life boat fall into the sea.

5. With renewed strength and courage, the shipmen, passengers, and prisoners worked to lighten the ship. A valuable cargo of wheat was thrown overboard. The only thought now was to save their own lives, and if possible the ship.

6. The island of Melita, or Malta, now loomed in sight. An attempt was made to thrust the ship into a certain creek. But in the effort they drove the vessel into a big bank of sand and mud. The forefront stuck fast, and the hinderpart was broken to pieces by the force of the waves.

7. The soldiers thought it best to kill the prisoners lest they might escape and they themselves might be held responsible. But the centurion out of respect for Paul would not allow them to do so.

8. All who could swim were permitted to take to the shore. And the rest found some boards or broken timber and floated to safety. So "they escaped all safe to land."

Practical Points.

1. Ours is a storm-tossed life. The prince of the power of the air, who instigates the storms, seeks to make life an earth as jeopardous and miserable as possible. Many a storm of wind has he raised on land and sea to snuff out the lives of human beings. Many a storm of temptation has he fostered to shipwreck immortal souls. And many of these are veritable Euroclydons in their death-dealing power and intensity.

2. But there is a Higher power than that of this prince of evil. Satan rules by suffering. But the God of heaven overrules. He makes the rage of demons and men to contribute to His glory. "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain." Ps. 76:10.

3. Amid all these storms the humble and faithful believer is safe under the shadow of the almighty wings. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." Rom. 8:28.

4. But earthly trials come as stepping stones to heavenly places in Christ Jesus to all who walk in the light of His countenance. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." 2 Cor. 4:17.

5. Since this is true we can afford to welcome every adversity as a blessing in disguise. Like Paul, we may say, "I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation." 2 Cor. 7:14. "But we glory in tribulations also, knowing that tribulations worketh patience; and patience experience; and experience, hope, and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." Rom. 5:3-5—Word of Life.

There is not one of us who would not like to undo some part of our life, nor is there one of us who would willingly live it all over again.

THE RELIGION OF A PERSON.

Christianity is a way of life, a distinctive way of life; and Christianity has a book, the Bible. I do not want any sensitive person to imagine that I am trying to draw a distinction that is sometimes disturbing to certain types of minds, as if by saying that Christianity is not the religion of a book I am trying to lessen my conception of the importance of the Bible. On the contrary, the Bible is absolutely necessary if we are to know what Christianity is, and we dare not give it a subordinate place in our faith. But what I am saying is that Christianity is not the religion of a way, nor is it the religion of a book. It is the religion of a person. That is to say, what you believe, how you trust, how you eventually come to Jesus Christ, is what makes you a Christian; and it is from what you believe of Him, it is from what you trust in Him, it is from what you love in Him, that you finally derive your permanent and abiding interest in the literature of the Bible or in the way of life enjoined by that book.—Rev. Harris E. Kirk, in Record of Christian Work.

PRAYER IS THE INTERCOURSE BETWEEN PERSONS.

A religious life without devotion is inconceivable. Jesus builds on this assumption. "Men ought always to pray;" it should be a fixed habit of life. Yet prayer must not become formal, or a matter of routine. If Jesus teaches the manner of true prayer, He does not intend that we should be restricted within the bounds of the phraseology which He employs. Prayer must be our own.

It was just here that the scribes failed, and with strange facility the early Christian church fell into the same snare: for as we have seen before, they soon asserted that we must use this precise form three times a day, and then that ordinary laymen should use no other form.

According to the mode taught by Jesus, prayer must be an intercourse between persons. While we are not to forget the nature or the majesty of God, we are to remember that He is a Father—our very own Father. Not ours to the exclusion of others, not ours to the ignoring of others, not ours as though we were His favorites, but ours because we are members of His family. What we seek we would have in fellowship with others.—John Gardner, D. D.

Do not weaken the muscles, dull the brain, or discourage the heart by thinking of yourself as a martyr. Probably your real trouble is that you aren't busy enough.

The scientist should be the staunchest believer in the goodness and greatness of the Creator. He cannot take a flower apart without finding God at the heart of it.

Man sometimes thinks he can make converts by force. But people can be led, never driven into righteousness. However, we are none the less responsible for the souls of those about us.

For the Meeting.

Make this a tenth legion meeting. Get the pledge cards and let every part of the meeting lead up to securing members of the Tither's League. Perhaps, next to a deeper spiritual life, we Methodist Protestants need to know more of a deeper consecration of our financial life. Have members of the Tithers' League or those who give a tenth from your own church to tell of the blessings of giving a definite sum, regularly, to God's church. Allow a few minutes for discussion and questions. Make a number of copies of the following statements, and head them "My Declaration of Finance." Distribute these at the beginning of the meeting, asking each one present to check the number or numbers which stand for his present purposes and which may stand for his future purposes. Collect these and tabulate the results for a permanent record of tithers in your society.

"1. I will keep an account of my receipts and of what I give to the Lord's cause.

"2. I will pray earnestly about this matter of giving, and will seek the Saviour's guidance in it.

"3. I will give regularly to the Lord's work.

"4. I will make trial for — months of the method of tithing.

"5. I will adopt the tenth as my minimum gift to the Lord's work and I will join the Tenth Legion."

Each will sign his name and hand the slip to the treasurer of the society. Those who will join the Tenth Legion will be given a pledge card to sign.

To the Leader.

When a Christian Endeavorer pledges to give a tenth to the Lord, not all of it necessarily goes through the C. E. Society, but goes out through the wide ravens of the church into the great work of the Kingdom. However the greater part of it should go through the church of which he is a member.

Our topic leads us away from giving from impulse and urges us to set up Christian principles of giving based on the teachings found in the Bible. After emphasizing giving a definite amount at regular times—weekly or monthly, urge membership in the Tenth Legion. The Woman's Home Missionary Society of our own church have pledge cards and will be glad to supply any quantity to societies. The leader's talk in the Christian Endeavor World is very helpful:

My Part and God's

Some one will say that the topic over this is stated backwards. It was placed that way on purpose, because that is the way we so often look at our finance. How much better it reads if we turn it around and say, "God's Part and My Part." A little leaflet in circulation some years ago had a picture of an old man counting out God's part of his crop of potatoes. In front of him was a pile of nine and then one single potato by itself. Looking at the lone potato the old man says: "One potato out of ten! Is any one so stingy as not to give the Lord one potato out of ten!" We would answer back to the old man, "No, perhaps not, but when it comes to ten bushels out of one hundred it does seem a heap." One dollar out of ten is not so hard, but ten out of one hundred or one hundred out of one thousand seems a great gift and a great sacrifice, if we are forgetful that the greater gift is an evidence of the greater blessing from the Lord. The writer knows a physician who started out giving the Lord a tenth. This he did faithfully until his practice became so large that his tenth ran into the thousands when he decided that this amount was too much to give to the church and Kingdom causes. He cut down his gifts and in an unbelievably short time he went bankrupt, whereas while giving the tenth he never was in any financial trouble. Some heirs had a piece of land to sell; they offered it to an auctioneer for a certain price and the auctioneer was offered a fair price for selling at the stipulated price. Another auctioneer came into town and these heirs asked him to sell for them: He agreed to undertake the sale for a certain percent. They agreed and he sold the land for about three times the amount they were willing for the first auctioneer to sell for; but when it came to paying the percent. for the sale they refused to pay, saying that it was too large an amount for such a short time of service. Though they were getting more than twice what they asked for the land, they overlooked that and could only see what the auctioneer was getting for what they thought a very short service. So often we treat God just that way. We overlook His blessings and the increase He gives us. And yet it is what we keep for ourselves that wins His approbation rather than the amount we give. Let's make our gifts in proportion to His gifts. The widow was not commended for giving the mite but "all her living." In other words the commendation was for what she kept for herself, or her faith that God would provide.

How Much Owest Thou?

"The path made smooth beneath thy feet,
The way made plain before thy face,
He brings thy soul with patience sweet,
Unto His love's appointed place.

And how much owest thou?"

"The thing thou couldst not be, He is;
The goal thou couldst not, He has won;
About thee throng His ministers,
Before thee shines the light of home.

And how much owest thou?"

"Yet thousands wander, far from light;
Poor sheep look on, and are not fed.
His loved ones perish in the night—
Thy brothers faint for lack of bread.

Then how much owest thou?"

BOB'S PLAN.

"It's my turn now!" said Belle. "You had twenty swings! I've counted."

"No such thing!" said Joe. "It's only sixteen. I've got four more."

"That isn't fair!" burst out Belle. "I think you are too selfish for anything, J. Burton."

"Children!" said a voice, "Rob will have to take the swing down if you quarrel!"

"I have a plan, mother," said Rob. "J. wait a minute."

He ran to the barn, where he had a tool shed, and presently he was pounding for dear life. Joe ran to see what he was doing with Belle close behind, but the door was latched.

"Now come and see," called Rob from the swing half an hour later.

The children ran and found a wide seat on the board in the swing, with a little division between, so that Joe could sit on one side and Belle on the other. "How nice!" they cried and scrambled into the new seat. Up in the boughs on either side they went. Selected.

"WHEN WILL THE JOURNAL BE OUT?"

That seems to be the uppermost question along about this time o' year. The brethren came at me with it at High Point last week. Perhaps I had better try to answer it, and relieve the anxiety.

The complete proof was received last Friday; corrected and returned late Saturday. The second proof will be made at once, and the Journal ready for the binders by the last of this week or the first of next week. So you may confidently expect delivery by the second Sunday in December.

I am expecting the best Journal ever. And I am hoping every copy will be sold. If there are, the next Journal will be absolutely self-supporting.

To know what happened at conference, and to be intelligent concerning the work the church is trying to do, you will need the Conference Journal. I trust you who read this will get your copy as soon as they are available. Another notice will appear in the Herald when the Journals are sent out.

—There are seven times more high school students in the United States than thirty years ago. Then, only one student in every ten who were graduated from the grade schools, continued his education in high school. Now one grade school graduate in every three is in high school.

—The Holy See is borrowing $1,500,000 from New York bankers. The money will be used to buy land near the Vatican for the new American College in Rome. This is the first time, it is said, that the Roman Catholic Church has turned to the United States for a loan. The interest rate is less than 5 per cent—much lower than the rate asked by Italian bankers.

The address of Mrs. Hammer at Morristown church last Sunday is highly spoken of.

A Thanksgiving program has been given by a group of the children at the following places. Greensboro, First Church, West End, Maple Springs, Forsyth, and First Church High Point.

Each church responded with a hearty welcome and a liberal offering. Three of these offerings will reach the Home later after passing through the hands of the Woman's Home Mission Board. Remember the bazaar to be at the Home December 11th. Pastors who are near by please make it known to your people that fancy work will be on sale at that time. Supper free for pastors.

We had a good dinner at the Home Thanksgiving day and for that reason feel thankful to all who helped to make it so. The liberal contributions reported in this article makes us feel like traveling on.

Gallburg.—On Sunday night, November 22, at 7:30 o'clock, Rev. M. P. Chambliss, our pastor, preached, his text being: "What shall we render to God for all His mercies?" It was a good sermon and was enjoyed by all who were there.

We re-organized Sunday school and are hoping to do good work in the coming year. Alma Poythress, Rep.

A BIRTHDAY PARTY FOR PHIL.

"Phil," said his sister Grace, "just think you'll be ten tomorrow! don't you feel old?"

"I've asked for a bike," said Phil.

"I know," said Grace, "and I think you are going to get it, if you promise not to ride it on the boulevard where there're so many cars. But, what I was going to say was, I think we ought to have a party for you."

"Don't want a party," said Phil.

"Now, listen," said Grace. "I'm going to give you a party and you've got to behave. Remember how old you are!"

"What else are you going to give me?" inquired Phil.

"Something lovely. It's a surprise," said Grace.

Phil hated parties, but he was told that he would get his present at his birthday party, so he had to make up his mind to be there.

"Who're you going to invite, Grace?" he asked.

"You can have George and Tom, if you like," replied his sister. "I've asked Kate to come and help me, and, of course, I have to have her sister Alice, and if I didn't ask Charlotte she'd be mad, and Jean and Ruth are coming, too, with just a few of the boys. You see, Jack Daly has a lot of dance records he'll bring along and we can dance."

"I don't wanna dance," said Phil, grumpily.

"Oh, no, I don't expect you to," said his sister. "You can pass the things around and all that. You ought to appreciate what I'm doing for you!"

Phil went over and told his best friend Chuck, who wasn't to be invited to the party because he was too rough.

"Sis is giving me a party, but it's going to be a dumb party," he said. "She's invited all her friends and only George and Tom for me. I'd rather go fishing with you."

"Well," said Chuck, "I know I'm rough. I'll cut it all out when I'm ten next month. Now, don't look so glum. I got a idea. You say your sister is going to have good eats and everything like that?"

"Oh, sure!" replied Phil. "Good eats and presents for me. Probably all the guests will bring me presents. But it'll be a dumb party."

"Well," said Chuck, "listen here! Why don't you have another little party on the side for yourself? Have me and some of the other fellers and have it in the garage, or some place where your sis won't see us."

Phil liked the idea, and they decided to have the party in the cellar. Chuck was full of inventions. He it was that drew the big black face on some black lining, made a big hole for the mouth, stretched it over one end of a barrel, made little balls out of twine, and installed the "Hit the coon" attraction for the party. Each guest was to be allowed five shots at the "coon's" mouth. The best shots got prizes of candy. The maza candy was made in a few minutes of fresh boiled potato combined with powdered sugar and flavored. You couldn't tell it from the finest bon-bons.

The y also had a side-show with a curtain over the front of it and a sign announcing the "Biggest Bat in Pike's County." It was a baseball bat!

"We could have lots more things, only we haven't time, seeing as how the party is tomorrow," said Chuck.

The next day, Phil was as good as gold and kept urging his sister to provide lots of grub, because Tom and George had terrible appetites.

Well, the guests began to come, and each had a package for Phil. The presents turned out to be mostly candy, some dance records and some flowers, also a book of poems called: "Gleaned Sun Beams." Phil stood it all nobly. He got the bike he wanted from good old Dad, and Mother gave him three pairs of wonderful warm golf stockings just like Dad's. Grace's present was a cake of soap, wash cloth and towel done up in a funny box. "Now, you can keep your neck clean," she beamed.

As the guests came in the front door, certain little figures fluttered about the rear of the house and finally disappeared. Soon Phil was missing, so was all his birthday candy. Grace wondered what he had done with all the delicious stuff.

"He'll make himself sick," she said anxiously.

The girls started some of the records on the phonograph, and they were sitting around laughing and talking when suddenly they noticed that there were no boys there at all. All the big boys had come. Grace jumped up and went to the kitchen. She heard voices down below in the cellar. Down she tiptoed and such a sight met her eyes! There was Phil and his rough friend Chuck, and all his other friends and the older boys she had invited, having a good time with an old saw-horse. She also saw boxes of candy sitting around.

She ran up to her friends.

"We might as well start refreshments," she said. "The boys are all down in the cellar."

So they sat down and had ice cream and cake. Then they all went over to Ruth's house, after turning out the parlor lights.

When the boys came up to see when the eats were to be served they found the party all over. There was a little ice cream left though, and they divided it, and then started out to find the girls.

Ruth saw them coming, and she and her friends slipped out of the house and ran back to Grace's house, lit up the parlor and began the party again:

The boys went to each one of the girl's home and finally Phil bade them all good-night and came home alone. What was his excuse to find his birthday party in full swing?

He was very tired and dirty from playing in the cellar, and he tried to sneak past the door, but Grace saw him and dashed after him, catching him by one foot on the stairs. The other girls crowded out and helped to capture him.

"Many happy returns!" cried Grace.

"Come on, we're all going to give you ten kisses."

My! How Phil struggled and wrestled. But no use! Most of the girls were fourteen and big and strong.

"Phew," cried Phil: "I'm glad I have a birthday only once a year!"

"Ungrateful boy," said his sister, letting him go:

He dashed up the stairs, then leaned over the banister and called:

"Never mind! NEXT JANUARY YOU are going to have a birthday party, too. I'm going to give you one!"—Selected.

THE VILLAGE DARNING-NEEDLE.

Many years ago some people lived in Mystic, Conn., in New England. There were few houses. It was a small village. There were no stores. Most of the people lived on farms and raised sheep. The men sheared the sheep and women would spin the wool and weave cloth with it. They had no nice clothes such as we have now. They had but very few needles and pins then. All the needles and pins were brought across the ocean from England. There were no railways and cars then. People would travel on horseback or in boats. It took a long time to go from one town to another. Boston was far from Mystic. Sometimes when persons went to Boston they bought many things for their friends. They did not go to Boston often. There was only one darning-needle in the village of Mystic in the summer of 1779. A darning-needle is a large coarse needle used to darn stockings. One day a woman wanted to darn some stockings. She walked some miles to a home to borrow it. She wrapped it in a paper and put it into her apron pocket. Then she went home. She walked through some woods. When she got home she could not find the needle. It was lost. She was much troubled. She told all her friends. Some people scolded her and said she was careless. All the people went to look for the needle. They looked in the road and through the woods and down the paths where she had walked. They looked closely at the ground. A little girl found it and picked it up. Then all shouted. They were very glad to find it again.

A man took her home and she gave the needle to the woman who had lost it. Do you think you could find a darning-needle in the road?—The Canadian.

The miraculous birth of Christ is either a fable, or else it denotes that entrance into humanity of something that is distinct from it.... If God were ever to be incarnate in the world, in what other manner, so natural, beautiful and real, could he enter into the life of the race?

It is for us to tell the message of the Gospel, and keep on telling it. It is for our hearers to choose—each of them being responsible for the choice he makes.

TEDDY AND THE CALF.

Teddy loved animals. He was still fond of the little fur bunny that he found in his stocking on his first birthday, and now that he was four years old, he delighted in live pets, like the puppy next door and the kitten his Aunt Lucy brought him.

He was quite surprised and much pleased one day when his father came home with a little Jersey calf in the back of his car.

"We must take good care of it, Teddy," he said, "and when it grows up it will be a nice Jersey cow and will give plenty of rich milk for us to use. The little field out back of the barn will be a fine place for the calf to live, and when it rains she can go under the shed that has one open side."

Teddy was much excited. He stroked the sleek sides of the calf, and felt of its ears, and laughed when the little animal put a cold nose against his arm.

"What will we call it, Daddy?" Teddy asked eagerly.

"Well, let me see," said his father; "how about Susie?"

"Susie, Susie," called Teddy, and when the calf turned and looked at him he exclaimed eagerly, "She knows her name already, Daddy. We'll have to call her Susie."

"All right," said his father. "Now I am going to ask you to help take care of the calf, for this will help mother and me, and when she grows up you will enjoy the milk better if you have done your part."

"The calf has learned to drink, and she will have to be fed a kind of milk gruel until she is old enough to eat the grass she needs. Now, your work, Teddy, will be to bring out this little two-quart pail of water three times full, and put it in Susie's trough at noon. You will just have to carry it from this faucet in the barn, out through the door and around through the little gate to the corner of the field back of the barn. I will put water in it at night and in the morning, and mother and I will tend to feeding her."

"Oh, that'll be fun," Teddy exclaimed, clapping his hands. "I won't forget, Daddy."

But, alas and alas!—that's just what Teddy did! He gave Susie a nice cool drink of water at noon one day. The next day his mother reminded him of it, but he kept putting it off—and then he forgot all about it. It was a very hot day, and when Teddy's father came home at night, Susie was bawling dismally in the corner by the little gate.

Mr. Totten went out and came back looking grave.

"Did you give Susie her drink of water at noon?" he asked, "or have you left her to suffer this warm day without any water to drink?"

Teddy dropped his head.

"I'll go and get her some water now," he said, pouting.

"It isn't necessary, my son," said his father, "for I have filled her trough. But you may come with me and sit under Susie's shed on a little box that is there, while your mother and I eat our supper."

"But I'm hungry," wailed Teddy. "I want my supper, too."

"Yes," replied Mr. Totten, "and Susie wanted a drink. You pretend to like Susie, and yet you were unkind to her to let her suffer. Now, my son, you must have a dose of the same medicine."

Teddy was led out to the shed where Susie scampered when it rained, and he sat on the box doing a lot of thinking while his father and mother ate their supper. He knew that there was delicious bread and milk for him, and ice-cold custard, and a molasses cookie. The tears rolled down his cheeks as he thought of it, and how hungry he was.

"I'm sorry, Susie," he apologized "I didn't think you felt bad like this. I won't forget your water again."

"I'm glad to hear you say that," said his father's voice, as he stepped under the shed. "If you are sure that you will remember to be kind to dumb creatures under your care, you may come in and get your supper now. Your mother is waiting."

"I'll try hard to remember," said Teddy soberly.

And so well did he succeed that Susie never had to go thirsty again and bawl loudly for a drink.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Henderson.—On Wednesday evening, November 18th, about seven o'clock, we arrived in this beautiful little city to begin our work as pastor of the Methodist Protestant church. We were late getting here, having had considerable Ford trouble, and the good women of the church, who had been getting things in readiness for our coming, had given us out and returned to their homes. We had little trouble, however, in locating the key which has been left at the home of Brother C. F. Tankesley just across the street. Sister Tankesley and her two daughters showed us into the parsonage where we found everything set in order, and in addition the dining table filled and running over with good things to eat and the wood house and coal bin well supplied with fuel. It would take too much space to mention the articles and donors, for the list is a long one. We must say, however, that some were not satisfied at having pounded us upon our arrival, but have continued to repeat the dose from time to time, so that we feel at this writing that every day spent in Henderson so far has been a Thanksgiving day. We thank our Father for these new-found friends and we thank our new-found friends for what they have done and are doing to make us happy.

On Sunday following our arrival we had the first opportunity of seeing the whole church at work and worship. Two hundred and five were present at Sunday school, and everything seemed to be in good running order under the leadership of the newly-elected superintendent, Brother Faulkner. We were introduced to the school by Brother Sam Harris and after a few words of greeting had the pleasure of hearing Brother T. T. Hicks teach the Men's Bible Class. We doubt if there is a better Sunday school teacher in the North Carolina Conference than Brother Hicks.

At the eleven o'clock service we were greeted by a house full of people and were ably supported in the service by a choir of some twenty voices. The evening service was also well attended, and the Christian Endeavor meeting held immediately preceeding this service, was interesting and helpful. Next Sunday the first communion service of the year will be held and in the afternoon the every-member canvass will be made.

We feel sure that Brother Pritchard was right when he said that the present pastor should be congratulated on having been assigned to such a splendid church, and I might say in passing that I feel sure that much of the splendid work done here during the past few years has been due to his untiring efforts and efficient leadership. The people speak well of Brother and Sister Pritchard and we feel fortunate in being privileged to take up and try to carry on the work begun by them.

Last Friday we were called back to Winston-Salem to assist in the funeral services of Sister Hauser, wife of our good friend and brother, R. N. Hauser. Sister Hauser was one of the best women we have ever known—faithful to her family, her friends and her church. At her funeral service, which was conducted by the writer, assisted by Bros. Taylor, Williams and Compber, there was the largest congregation we had ever seen assembled in the Winston church, and the floral offerings were numerous and beautiful. We hope a suitable obituary will appear in the Herald later. Our prayers and sympathy are extended to Brother Hauser and all other relatives and friends in this hour of their sorrow.

Although we regret having been called back on such a sad mission, we were glad to see and shake hands with many of our friends in Winston-Salem, who stood by and supported us so faithfully during our five years' pastorate there. We will never forget them and will continue to pray that God may direct in the work there.

We are earnestly praying that this may be a very fruitful year for the local and general church and that the great Head of the church may bless us even more abundantly than He has in the past.

R. A. Hunter.

North Davidson Charge.—I want to say a word about the annual and general conference budget for last year. North Davidson paid all the annual conference budget, and paid on general conference $177.00. I guess it was my mistake; I failed to put on the financial envelope the amount previously paid. I am sorry we did not pay all the general conference budget. We promise to do better this year. I may fail; but if the Lord lets me live I expect to go to conference with every cent paid. If you will look in the last year's Journal you will find North Davidson had a budget of $1575.00; Burlington, $1672 the only one that stands ahead of North Davidson. We are glad we are so important, watch us next conference.

Yours for service, R. S. Troxler, Pastor.

Calvary.—On Monday evening November 23rd the preacher's home was visited by forty or more members of Calvary Church. Not being accustomed to so many visitors at one time I suppose we were naturally a little excited. After the crowd had dispersed and we had sufficiently recovered to act intelligently we began to unwrap packages. Among the things left for use was a fine turkey, a big hen, 68 pounds of sugar, 24 pounds of flour, a number of pounds of lard, meal, several packages of cereals, several cans of fruit, soap, honey, jellies, vinegar, dried fruit, pine apples, milk, raisins, cocoa, sauer kraut, washing powder, soda, potatoes, rice, jello, an aluminum vessel, a piece of dry goods, five dollars in cash. The folks succeeded in giving us almost a complete surprise. Monday forenoon Mrs. W. F. Medearis called us and told us that they were coming over after supper to bring us a Thanksgiving turkey if we were to be at home, but did not intimate that it would require so many people to bring one turkey.

We could not give all the names if we were to attempt it, therefore we will give none, but will say again that we appreciate the spirit that prompted the good people of Calvary to remember us in this substantial way.

The following day, Mrs. J. H. Coble sent two brooms in addition to the fine basket of good things she brought along with the crowd. And on Thursday some representatives from Mrs. S. Brooks' S. S. class, including Miss Brooks, came and left us a fine lot of fruit, and expressed their regrets that they did not get in on the fun Monday night. Saturday later in the week Mrs. Hardin, who is a member at Tabernacle but whom we claim here too, along with her daughter, Miss Joan, came and brought sausage, cake, pickles, and preserves. Mrs. T. F. McCulloch also emphasized the pounding she had already given us by giving us some fine sweet potatoes. We have also had access to Bro. and Sister J. Cox's turnip patch. Brother J. Norman Kirkman had anticipated the possibility of our having something to cook later on and perhaps thought that we might need to be warm, so he sent us a ton of coal a few days before conference. One and all have our thanks.

The work starts off with a good show of interest at Calvary. We have a right good size job on our hands here. There is quite a debt on our new church building, and we need more space for our rapidly growing Sunday school. Notwithstanding this our people yesterday decided to take one of the Board of Education's thousand dollar note. A spirit of hopefulness and faith pervades our work here.

A good percentage of the officials were here for the first quarterly conference on Friday night. Miss Velma McCulloch was elected to succeed Brother A. H. Causey as secretary, Brother Causey asking to be released. Brother A. C. Dixon who for the past year made such a good reporter was again selected to act as publicity man for the church. Many have read with interest Brother Dixon's reports to the Herald and also to the daily papers of Greensboro.

Two members were added to our number last Sunday. These are John William Coble and W. G. Coble, Jr., young sons of Brother and Sister W. G. Coble.

The evening hour was given over to the Woman's Home Missionary Society's Thanksgiving offering service. Mrs. A. G. Dixon made a real interesting and inspiring address. The offering was good.

Our local interest just now centers about our campaign among our members to raise five thousand dollars that is due in a few days to pay our church debt. Of course we are going to raise it as Calvary usually does.

I am sure that I express the sentiment of our Calvary people when I say that we are wishing and praying for the success of every church in our conference. We want to succeed here, but we want you to succeed. You will do the pastor of Calvary a favor you will let him know when any of our Methodist Protestant people are in the Greensboro hospitals. And when any of our people move to Greensboro if you will let me know about it I shall be glad to make an effort to save them to the Methodist Protestant Church and for the Kingdom.

L. W. Gerringer, Pastor.

Burlington.—Our work here is going forward with steady tread. In the matter of organizations we are a one-hundred percent church, and all of our organizations are functioning. The outlook for the conference year is good. Our budget is more nearly completed than it has been at any time during the five years here, and when the stewards have completed their work, it appears that the entire budget will be provided for. Our special aim for the year will be to keep the church keyed to a proper spiritual pitch, and have all of the membership participants in the work and sharers in the benefits.

At the eleven o'clock hour Sunday the Home Missionary Society will hold their annual Thank-Offering service. Bro. Lowdermilk is to be present, with a group of the children from the Children's Home. We are anxious to make this service helpful in every way, and the coming of the children will add a little to this desired end. We expect a large congregation, and a good service.

An important announcement, that will be of pleasing interest to the local church, is to be made at the eleven o'clock hour. Every member of the church should be present to hear it.

On last Sunday at the morning service, Mr. Champion, assistant to Mr. Wayne B. Geeler, with headquarters at Washington, D. C., spoke to us in the interest of the fifteenth Amendment and the Volstead act. We were glad to have him with us, and Dr. Andrews, from the College, who worked with us in this service.

The mother of Bro. Walter Smith passed away last week. She had lived to a ripe old age, and lived to a good purpose; and now her work here is completed, God took her to himself. We rejoice with her loved ones that there is much to comfort them in her passing.

A marriage of marked interest with us was celebrated on the 24 of November, when Mr. T. Stafford and Miss Flora Winningham became husband and wife. They are both well known here, and their host of friends will wish for them long and happy years of married life.

and they tell us "there are others."

Hauser.

It was my sad duty on last Friday to assist in the funeral of Mrs. Mary Murphy Hauser, the young and devoted wife of Brother Robert N. Hauser. The funeral service was conducted in the Winston church, where she had been a member since her childhood, and the large attendance and the beautiful and profuse floral offering evidenced the high esteem in which she was held in the community where her entire life had been spent. Mary, as I must always think of her, was one of the best women that I have ever known, and it is not surprising that in her last hours she was able to speak assuringly and comfortingly to her loved-ones and her friends. Her good life will always be an inspiration to every one who knew her. S. W. Taylor.

High Point.—A most interesting exercise was held Sunday evening in the Sunday school assembly room, when the Woman's Home Missionary Society observed its annual Thank Offering. A group of 16 small boys and girls from the Children's Home rendered an attractive programme of songs and recitations, and these little tots acquitted themselves most creditably. Mrs. R. M. Andrews favored the audience with a beautiful solo, "The Lord is my Shepherd," with piano accompaniment by Prof. Dan W. Smith, and Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, Supt. of the Children's Home, made an interesting talk, telling something of the needs of the Home. Miss Ruth Vuncannon, who has taught and trained so capably, played the accompaniment for the choruses, which were especially enjoyed by the audience. A group of young girls, Misses Annie Robbins, Dorothy Rankin, Alma Andrews, Frances Bodenheimer, Annette Pickens, and Mary Adams, collected the offering, which amounted to $105.40. Among the needs of the Home mentioned by Rev. Mr. Lowdermilk are a phonograph or victrola, a bus in which the children can be taken to and from church and Sunday school services, and a school building separate and apart from the Home and Dormitory. The children will hold a bazaar of fancy work and a supper on Friday evening, Dec. 11th, to which the people of High Point and Greensboro are cordially invited.

Revival services will be held every evening this week in the First church by the Men's Evangelistic Club of High Point. Dr. Brown says that he hopes everybody will attend and see what kind of a revival the laymen will conduct.

On next Sunday afternoon from 2 to 5 o'clock the Stewards will conduct the Every Member Canvass of the church, and all members are urgently requested to remain at home during these hours in order that their Steward can see them and get their pledge for support for the coming year.

A banquet will be served to the Andrew Jackson post of the American Legion in the basement of the church next Saturday evening. A number of prominent members and state officers of the Legion and Auxiliary will be present.

The campus of High Point College is being beautified by the setting of a number of trees, principally pin oaks and maples. A large order of evergreens and ornamental shrubbery has been placed with the J. Van Lindley Co. This will make a great improvement on the campus.

Much sympathy is extended to Mrs. H. A. Oaks, a popular member, in the loss of her father, Mr. Joseph H. Thompson, who passed away Friday, Nov. 27, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. W. Watkins, of Lexington. Mr. Thompson was a member of a large and influential family of Davidson Co. He was born August 20, 1845, and had attained the ripe age of 80 years. When a youth of 18, he joined the Confederate army, and served with distinction throughout the Civil War. In 1866 he married Miss Cornelia Mock, and nine children were born to them, all of whom survive; Mrs. A. W. Watkins, Lexington, Mrs. C. A. Orell, Advance, Mrs. H. U. Oakes, High Point, Mrs. H. G. Moton, Washington, D. C., Mrs. A. M. Ripple, Welcome, Mrs. Sara Barker, High Point, M. W. Thompson, of Oklahoma, C. L. Thompson, Mocksville, and Odell L. Thompson, Asheville. He is also survived by three brothers, Messrs. C. M. Thompson of Lexington, Duff Thompson of Tyro, and R. B. Thompson of Salisbury: by 29 grand-children and two great grand-children. Funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon at the home of his daughter Mrs. A. W. Watkins, in Lexington, and were attended by a large number of relatives and friends from High Point. Interment was made at his old home, Yadkin College.

We were delighted to receive Mrs. Richard Reitzel into our communion and fellowship on last Sunday morning. She is transferred from the First M. E. Church of Durham, having been Miss Lily Nelson Mason prior to her marriage last June.

We are sorry to note that two of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Idol's children have diphtheria, and are under quarantine. We are pleased to see that Master Joseph Gray, small son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Gray, has recovered from a recent attack.

We are pleased to note that Rev. J. H. Stone is able to attend church services again.

Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Neese and little daughter, Margaret Opal, have returned from a visit to Mr. W. A. Bowman in eastern Guilford.

YOUR CHURCH.

By C. L. Poulston.

If you want to belong to the kind of a church
Like the kind of a church you like,
You need not slip your clothes in a grip
And start on a long, long hike.

You'll only find what you left behind—
For there's nothing that's really new—
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your church.

It isn't the church; it's you.

Real churches are not made by men afraid
Lest some other church gets ahead.
When everybody works and nobody shirks,
You can raise a church from the dead.

And if while you make your personal stake,
Your brother can make one, too,
Your church will be what you want to see.
It isn't the church; it's you.

Selected.

Henderson.—Rev. and Mrs. R. A. Hunter have arrived and Mr. Hunter preached his first sermon Sunday morning, Nov. 22, to a full house. The ushers had to place chairs in the aisles. Needless to say every one is very much pleased with Mr. and Mrs. Hunter.

The Philatheas and Ladies' Aid had the house warm and straightened the furniture by the time they arrived. The members of the church had sent up a pounding during the day, which was placed upon the dining table ready for them.

Rev. Mr. Hunter was called out of town twice last week; once to High Point in the interest of the college, and once to Winston-Salem to preach a funeral.

The girls' mission band gave an entertainment last Tuesday night. They had a fine program and the freewill offering will go to the college.

The stewards will make their every-member canvass next Sunday afternoon, for the budget for this conference year. The holy communion service will be observed next Sunday morning.

The Asheboro people needn't wait to see how they are going to like their new preacher before they start to work, for we can tell them they can't do anything but love him. Just ask him what he wishes done, then hurry to do it. There is no wiser or more successful leader of churches anywhere than Rev. J. E. Pritchard. Reporter.

Halifax Circuit.—We have been very busy since Conference. We have made one round on our work. Everything is starting off very well, and we hope to have another successful year.

The Sunday school at Eden is moving off well under the leadership of Mr. J. W. Hardee as superintendent. The Ladies' Aid at Eden and the Missionary Society at Hollister, are still doing good work.

The next day after Conference closed Mrs. Street came around to the Parsonage with a fine chocolate cake, with a puzzle question, how can the old become the new? It is true many things took place during the recent conference, and what process we passed through, some of the people will never know, but how to prove that the old has become new is up to me. I will try by giving my best service to the work.

We also want to thank Mr. Vinson for a nice new hat, Mrs. W. R. Neville for gas and oil, Mrs. Edwards for stove polish, Mr. Harrison and Mrs. Harrell for beef.

Mrs. A. J. Hunter has gone to Wilmington to spend the winter. We miss her very much.

A Pounding? Yes.

On last Wednesday night—the night before Thanksgiving Day—some of our Eden members gave us a pleasant surprise by giving us an old time Methodist pounding, and it wasn't hot air. After the party had left we found our table filled with flour, sugar, lard, potatoes, rolled oats, apples, raisins, rice, canned fruit, dried fruit, soap, cocoa-nut, grits etc. We found that the following persons had taken part in this: Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hardee, Mr. and Mrs. Z. A. Hardee, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Williams and Alva Lee, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Sykes, Mrs. Lelia Willey, Mrs. J. J. Hawkins, Mrs. W. M. Sykes, Misses Blanche Hardee, Lula Neville, Maggie Willey, May Willey, Elnora Willey, Winnie Burt, and Mrs. E. I. Bellamy. If we have left out any name, it was unintentional. We want to thank every one. Come again, we enjoy it.

Our first quarterly conference will convene with Hollister church on Friday, Dec. 18, at 1:30 P. M. The special committee appointed by the last quarterly conference will meet at 1 P. M. C. L. Spencer, Pastor.

Flat Rock Circuit.—We have started off very nicely in the new conference year. I have made one round on the work. The people at each church have greeted me with many kind words, and the word of God says, "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." So we feel that everything looks promising for a successful year. We had such a good year last year among this dear people we can but look for a happy voyage this year; for as the reporter said in her report from Palestine in last week's Herald, this people always love their pastor and they show it in many ways. They visit his family and try to make us all feel that they are glad to have us live among them. And they 'most always bring something besides a kind word, something for the pantry.

Now we are not looking for smooth sailing nor looking for an easy task, but hearty co-operation between pastor and people and all our undertakings overruled by love makes all tasks easy and all seas passable.

On the third Sunday at 3 o'clock I preached at Bethel church and they paid me $61. Brethren, if any of you got more for your first sermon, let's hear from you. My next place was Flat Rock. They came across with $24 and Bethany with $10. So you see I am in right good shape for Christmas, if I don't spend it before I get there, ha! ha!

There will be a Christmas tree at Bethel church on Thursday night before Christmas. There will be a Christmas tree at Gideon's Grove, the time not decided on yet. I do not know the program for Flat Rock and Bethany. I do know that Flat Rock is having an interesting Sunday school under the leadership of J. Wright Pegram. Their number has doubled since our revival: They have a good prayer meeting each Sunday night.

Bethel has a large Sunday school with much interest under the leadership of Frances Pegram, and I trust they will start prayer meeting soon. Gideon's Grove has a good Sunday school under the leadership of G. A. Middleton, but their number is not so large. They have a good prayer meeting each Sunday night. Bethany has a small Sunday school but good interest; S. M. Walker is superintendent.

I am sorry that the Sunday school at Palestine has gone into winter quarters. I feel it is a great loss to the church, for it is hard to keep up interest in the church without Sunday school.

Our first quarterly conference will meet at Flat Rock church on Saturday before 2d Sunday in December. Preaching at eleven o'clock. Business meeting at 1:30. Dinner on the grounds. May each official member feel it his duty to be there to help plan the business of the Kingdom for our Master. Everybody is invited to come and be with us, to hear the gospel and get a blessing; it is for you if you will come for it.

Joel B. Trogon, Pastor.

Concord.—Regular services were held on Sunday at 11 o'clock. Mr. Fogleman preached a very interesting sermon, and a large congregation was present. There was also a good Sunday school attendance—221, and a thank-offering of $32 which will be sent to the Children's Home at High Point.

Instead of the regular evening service an educational play was rendered by the young people of the Sunday school. The play was very good, and a large crowd was present to see it.

Rev. H. F. Fogleman spent Thanksgiving holidays with his parents.

Miss Ethel Blackwelder spent the weekend at High Point College, visiting her many friends there. Miss Blackwelder was in school there last year.

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society will hold its monthly social and business meeting Tuesday evening in the Baraca room of the church. Bernice Nash, Reporter.

Why Not Circuit—Notice.

The first quarterly conference will be held on Saturday before the second Sunday in December at Fair Grove church; preaching at 11 o'clock. Dinner on the grounds. Quarterly conference afternoon.

D. I. Garner, Pastor.

Orange Charge.—The first quarterly conference was held at Hebron church on Saturday, Nov. 28th. Each church was represented and the conference business was all transacted harmoniously.

Bro. C. H. Jones the efficient Secretary was re-elected secretary of the quarterly conference.

The old board of parsonage trustees was re-elected. Also same advisory and examining committees.

We were pleased to have with us at this conference Bro. H. A. Garrett who addressed the conference.

The following Thanksgiving services were held: Sat. night, 7:30, Hebron; Sunday, 29, 11 A. M., Union Grove; Sunday, 3 P. M., Chestnut Ridge; Sunday, 7 P. M., Effland.

Bro. Garrett was with us at each of above services and addressed each congregation.

Offerings were taken for our Children's Home at each place. The amounts of these offerings as follows: Hebron, $14; Union Grove about $15; Chestnut Ridge, $12; Effland, $130. Of the Eftand amount Bros. O. E. and C. A. Bivins contributed $109: we thank all these contributors, also the Wo. Home Missionary societies for assistance in putting on programs.

[We are grateful to Bro. Garrett for giving Orange charge this much of his valuable time. We feel his visit to us has not been in vain. Come again, Bro. Garrett.]

Sincerely, B. M. Williams.

Hebron, Orange Ct.—Some time has passed since we've sent in a report, but we have not been sound asleep, as our Sunday school is still running, getting ready for Christmas tree. We also have organized a Christian Endeavor society; been running something over one month and has 59 members. We hope it will still grow and that much good may be accomplished thereby.

We had a sermon on the fourth Sunday by our pastor, B. M. Williams; also on that day they paid the debt on the parsonage, of which we are all glad. We are glad to have our pastor back with us and hope this will be a good year for us all in every way.

On last night, Nov. 28th, we had a Thanksgiving talk by Mr. H. A. Garrett, and as you all know we are always interested and helped by his talks and glad to know when he is coming to talk for us. Bro. Williams also made us a good talk on the same topic; then we had a collection or thank-offering of $14, for which we are thankful; only wish that it could have been more. Pray for our success.
Reporter.

Pleasant Grove Station.—As I have been elected reporter for the coming year I will write so the Herald readers can see what this church is doing.

In the first place, this church is 100 per cent. organized except the two missionary societies and we hope to organize them soon.

You will also notice from the heading of this article that this church has been made a station with the return of former pastor, Rev. G. L. Reynolds. We have preaching services at 11 A. M. and 7 P. M. each Sunday. We are grateful for the work of our pastor and family, especially the young people's work.

The greatest thing the church has done in the last year is the building of the Sunday school rooms with new furniture at approximate cost of $3,000. We are glad to say that our Sunday school is in the most flourishing condition in the history of the church. With this new equipment and the co-operation of the people we are looking forward to the greatest year's work this church has ever done. We have two live C. E. societies, senior and junior, that meet every Friday night; also prayer meeting for the adults at the same hour. These societies are preparing a Christmas exercise to be given on Christmas eve night, Dec. 24.

Bro. Reynolds delivered a splendid sermon Sunday night.

If you want to see your church grow, boost it. Mrs. Ralph Kennedy, Rep.

THE CHILDREN'S GARDEN.

The children's garden's different,

The tasseled corn is gayer there,

The pieplant leaves grow large and round

In layer upon layer there.

These inequalities do fret us;

No worms make houses in their lettuce.

The carrots like the children best.

We grown-ups have to coax ours so!

Just see how in the children's patch

The beans and parsnips leap and grow!

I'm sure the sun and rain and air

Help their plot most. It isn't fair!

We take our garden seriously;

We think it's work to weed and sprinkle!

When plants watch people blind as we Even potatoes' eyes must twinkle!

But children have the wiser way:

They know that gardening is play.

Don't let plants think that gardening

Is work, O foolish older person!

The children's way results will bring;

They speak the tongue that plants converse in.

They say "Let's play!" And do you know

That to those plants it's play to grow!

GETTING EVEN.

To get even with one who has wronged us is to get down as low as he is. The more outrageous his injustice, the lower we shall have to get if we insist upon getting even with him. So "getting even" always leaves us worse off than we were before. If ever one man was unfairly treated by another, it was David, at the hands of jealous, unworthy, malicious Saul. But when David's chance to get even came, he preferred to stay on the heights. To "revenge" ourselves is to return the sort of thing that was given to us. It is as though, having been cheated by counterfeit money, we wait for an opportunity to pass some of the counterfeit back to the cheat. No matter what we have suffered, we cannot afford to do that; for then we have been injured twice, and the second injury is far worse than the first. There is a better way of "getting even" with one who, in order to harm us, has descended to a low level. It is to stay above him in God's company, and by love to bring him up to that level.—Sunday School Times.

CHRIST AS A VITAL PRESENCE.

To Paul as to Jesus, the Christian is a new creature whose faith works in love, because God dwells with him and in him. So intensely does Paul feel this to be the very center and essence of the Christian experience, that even the facts of the life of Jesus, through which he has come to know God, are seen by him as active and present rather than past. Christ "is," and not "was," crucified. We know Him after the flesh no more; we know Him as a dear and vital presence. The cross is here, and by it I am crucified to the world, and the world to me.

The core of Paul's faith is found above all in the constantly recurring phrase "in Christ," which is found in His writings some one hundred and sixty times. This is, in truth, as has been said, "really the characteristic expression of his Christianity." Here is the heart of his body of doctrine: nothing else is so vital, so necessary, so central.

All through the New Testament this is Christianity, this is salvation, this redemption: to know God in personal fellowship, through faith in Jesus Christ through whose life, teachings, death, and resurrection, or rather, let us say, through the personality that comes to full expression in these experiences, the grace of God comes afresh every day, every day, every moment, bringing fullness and freeness of life. And the most essential thing about Jesus Christ, that through which He is "the wisdom of God and the power of God," is not that He did thus and so in the past, but that He does "in me" what I need now. In that Paul, Peter, John, all agreed and in that they are all one with the mind of Jesus Himself.—Rev. William Picerson Merrill, D. D., in "Liberal Christianity."

STARTLED BY THE CROSS.

As I was running my eye over a line of new books just from the publisher, I picked up James Montagu's "Everyman's Life of Jesus," and read the following: "Richard Jeffries, the naturalist, once dropped a superficial word in describing the scenery of Somersetshire. In the hamlets 'along the foot of the hills,' he noted, 'ancient stone crosses are often found. Sometimes in the village street, the slender column gray against the green trees, sometimes in churchyard, these crosses come on the mind like a sudden enigma. It requires an effort to grasp their meaning, so long have the ideas passed away which led to their erection. They almost startle modern thought... Life is fresh and green. The stern thought in the stone becomes more cold and grim as the centuries pass away.' Well, the sooner the modern mind is startled by the cross, the better. And so far from being an enigma, cold and grim, the cross of Jesus, summing up the life He lived, is a clue to what otherwise would be an enigma; it is a warm and loving clue, for all its sternness, because it is only stern against what robs life of its true joy and impulse. The plain truth is that it is the cross which is fresh and green in the real life of man. After all, it is not because we are so far from Him in time; it is often because we are so far from Him in spirit and nothing loth to be so far away, so selfish, so dull, so enmeshed in what is merely outward, so satisfied with the passing show of phenomena.—From "The Missionary Evangel," by Bishop Edwin D. Manton.

ALL WERE PRESENT.

There were one hundred and twenty disciples "tarrying" before God. They were "all of one accord." What a prayer meeting that must have been! "Suddenly" the answer came. There rested on them cloven tongues of fire. Their words burned like fire; they pierced like swords of flame. And that day salvation came and the founding of the Christian Church and the beginning of the Christian centuries.

Flat Rock.—We are now working in the new conference year and hope to make 1926 the most successful year in the history of our church. The attendance has been good so far.

Our first quarterly conference will be held at Flat Rock Church Saturday, December 12th. We are planning to run on the old schedule. There will be preaching at 11 A. M., then after lunch quarterly conference will be held; we hope that all the members of the church, and especially the official members will be present.

We are getting proud of our Sunday School. It has increased in number very much, especially since our last revival, and the older people to are taking more interest now than they have for years. The singing has also improved at Flat Rock.

A young people's prayer meeting was organized a few months ago, and both young and old are taking a splendid interest.

I think we young people at Flat Rock should thank the older people for encouraging us to develop ourselves into useful workers for the future.

Plans are now under way for the Christmas exercise. Reporter.

Loiza Ellen Moore-Hopkins was born July 21, 1875, and departed this life November 24, 1925. She was married to our beloved brother, J. W. Hopkins August, 1903.

This union was crowned with 22 years of blissful happiness which was only too soon disturbed by death's approach.

Sister Hopkins professed faith in Christ at the age of 14 years and united with the Methodist Protestant Church at Brown Summit.

Until overtaken by declining health, she was always faithful to attend her church, and when the flesh failed and the body grew tired, she was still loyal in spirit until life slipped away like the closing of a perfect day. Just as the sun was sinking behind the hills, the death angel came with his gentle touch and soothed her into that blissful slumber from which none ever wake to weep.

Sister Hopkins was an invalid for more than a year and suffered intensely, but she bore it with that cheerfulness that only a Christian could do. Even singing the sweet songs she so much loved. Her cheerful disposition made glad the hearts of all who knew her and they loved her.

She was a good woman. No wonder that the self-sacrificing devotion of her husband was so beautiful and touching.

The funeral was conducted by her pastor assisted by Rev. W. F. Ashburn and Rev. E. L. Ballard, of Greensboro.

May the God of all grave sustain the husband and relatives in this sad hour of their deepest grief.

"When through the storm and tempest safely anchored

Just on the other side,

We shall see that dear face throu' death's deep shadows,

Not changed but glorified."

THINGS TO FORGET.

It is a good thing to "write injuries in the dust, but kindness in marble." These are the places of inscription which they deserve. Injuries make wounds, it is true, but they are outlived or grow over; while kindnesses live on and on, and become producers as well as products. To write injuries in enduring form and kindness in that which perishes is a reversal of that which both wisdom and experience teach.

Rev. E. G. Cowan is in Greensboro for treatment. He and family are in the home of President A. G. Dixon.

Dear Brother McCulloch,

Please allow us to express through the M. P. Herald our deepest and heartfelt appreciation to the good people of Brown Summit and community for their unstinted kindness and sympathy expressed to us during the illness and death of my dear companion. Out of the depth of our grief we pray God's richest blessing upon every one.

J. W. Hopkins and Family.

OUR OWN.

I had known in the morning
How wearily all the day
The words unkind
Would trouble my mind
I said when you went away,
I had been more careful, darling,
Nor given you needless pain;
But we wound our own
With look and tone
We may never take back again.
For though in the quiet evening
You may give me the kiss of peace,
Yet it might be
That never for me
The pain of the heart should cease.
How many go forth in the morning
That never come home at night,
And hearts have broken
For harsh words spoken
That sorrow can never set right.

We have careful thoughts for the stranger
And smiles for the some-times guests,
But oft for "our own"
The bitter tone,
Though we love our own the best.
Ah, lips with the curve impatient;
Ah, brow with the look of scorn;
'Twere a cruel fate
Were the night too late
To undo the work of the morn.

...—"He who does not repel a wrong when he can induces it."

cedure, of course, but men are illogical in very many of their important inferences.

The supreme value of the Bible consists not in the absolute inerrancy of its every statement, but in the incomparable value and importance of some of its statements. It is the world's great book because it presents in a convincing way the world's Great Saviour, Jesus Christ. Take Christ out of the Bible, and the book would sink to the level of Confucius' writings, if it did not fall below.

The Christ of the Bible gives men hope, He gives food for the soul, He gives peace, He gives great joy, He sets before us eternal life in His own glorious presence.

The world will never give up such a book. Men will hug it to their bosoms as their greatest treasure. Future generations of men will recognize the worth of the Gospel of Christ, and will perpetuate the blessed story to the end of time. John in his Patmos vision saw an angel in mid heaven, "having the everlasting gospel to preach to every nation and kindred and people and tongue." Instead of fearing lest the book should be neglected by our posterity, we should use all diligence to make the men of our own day see and appreciate the privilege they have of entering into a personal relationship with the Christ of the Bible which will mean everything good to their own souls.

—The children and grandchildren of R. R. Ross met in his home in Asheboro and celebrated his 75th birthday. All were present except Miss Julia Ross who is at Columbia University. Bro. Ross seems to be enjoying good health as well as the regard of his posterity, and is to be congratulated.

—An Asheboro layman in remitting for the Herald expresses his pleasure in having Rev. J. E. Pritchard and wife in the lead in his church.

—Russell H. Conwell, distinguished Baptist preacher and lecturer, has just died at an advanced age. He was one of the country's greatest men. His lecture, "Aeres of Diamonds," was delivered perhaps thousands of times. It never lost its power to inspire. Mr. Conwell was the founder of a college in Philadelphia to which he gave most of his income. He is said to have died poor.

—Otto Wood who has twice escaped from our State Prison, has been recaptured in Mooresville, N. C. His wife has married again, according to his statement. He seems interested in the fate of his children, though he does not blame the other man for marrying his former wife.

—Obituaries are coming fast. Death is busy, and some are going unexpectedly.

CHRISTMAS.

In the December number of the American, Edger Guest has a most readable paper on Christmas, in which he ventures the suggestion that we would have found a Christmas in some way if Christ had not been born, so essential is the spirit of this season to the world's happiness and peace.

However, that may be, the fact is, we have Christmas because we have Christ. He is the very heart and soul of this happy season, and without him it is difficult to see how the world could have ever been possessed of the Christmas spirit.

Since we owe Christmas to Christ, the manner of observing it is a very natural and a very proper reflection. How should Christmas be kept? The first Christmas, celebrated on the hills of Judea, furnishes us an answer. Above everything else, that was a Christmas of praise and worship. The angels sang their heavenly anthems, and the Magi and the shepherds bowed in holy worship at Bethlehem's manger.

And this, I am sure, should still characterize Christmas. On the day that commemorates His birth nothing could be more appropriate than for the people who name his name to assemble in their churches, erected to his glory, and offer unto him humble and glad worship. In Burlington we do this, in a union service, and I can't imagine anything more fitting for all communities.

For a number of years I have been convinced that our way of observing Christmas is, in some respects, grotesque, and altogether out of harmony with the origin, spirit, and purpose of the day. The Church should create more correct conceptions and set more proper standards for this greatest and most worthy of all festive seasons.

Let us have a Christmas not of noise and liberty of indulgence, but one that turns us in praise and adoration to him of whom the angels sang on that first Christmas day. Let us hope that many of our churches will plan for a service on the day that commemorates His birth.

—Rev. W. F. Ashburn has moved from Liberty to Greensboro and is living at 527 Julian street. We welcome him and his family to our city. He has been mayor of Liberty. We do not know whether he would accept the same office in our city, probably not, as it would interfere with his higher work of preaching.

WHY THE BIBLE IS AND WILL REMAIN THE WORLD'S SUPREME BOOK.

When I was a student in college I was amazed and amused to come across this statement in Herbert Spencer's introduction to his Synthetic Philosophy. "Since the Bible has lost its influence over mankind, I have thought it proper to produce a work that would fill the place of the Bible in its influence over the moral life of the world." These are not precisely the words of Spencer, but they fairly state his thought, I believe. I was amazed that Mr. Spencer should think that the Bible had lost its influence, and amused at his presumption in imagining that such a book as his Synthetic Philosophy could fill the place of the Bible. More than forty years have passed since that time, and the Bible has a wider circulation and a greater influence than ever before while Mr. Spencer's Synthetic Philosophy is known only to a few scholars, and has no great influence over them.

Yet there was a grain of truth in Mr. Spencer's claim that the Bible had lost its influence. There were a few people in that day and there are a few people in this day—perhaps more than we realize—who have lost faith in the Bible. Some of these will perhaps regain their faith, but in the meantime they are in a bad way. Spencer saw that such people are in sad need of some form of truth to lay hold upon. The popularity of some of the bogus substitutes for the Bible in our generation is perhaps partly due to the loss of faith in the Bible, though we believe it is mainly due to an aversion to the personal self-denial required by the Bible way of life. If there is any logical ground for loss of faith in the Bible, what is it? We believe it is in misrepresentation of the Bible by extremists. When people discover that the Bible is not what these extremists claim it to be, they conclude that it is unworthy of serious attention and turn from it. This is not a logical pro-

1899—CONFERENCE STATISTICS—1925.

Some Comparisons and Reflections.

By Rev. Luther K. Long.

I was much interested in the comparative statistics of the Methodist Protestant church in North Carolina, as given in the Herald for November the 5th.

Having read from time to time of the marvelous progress made by the Old North state in material wealth, and its increase in expenditures for public schools for both races, I was gratified to see statistical indications of progress along religious lines.

There has been in the North Carolina conference an increase of a little more than sixty percent in the number of charges and pastors, as compared with an increase of less than three percent in the number of churches. This means that instead of there being, on the average, a little more than four churches to a pastoral charge there are now a little less than three—which means, of course, better pastoral oversight.

In the twenty-five years the membership of the churches has increased by nearly seventy percent. The number of teachers and officers in the Sunday schools has more than doubled, and the number of pupils has very much more than doubled. There are more than twice as many Christian Endeavor Societies, with nearly three times as many members as in 1899.

The gratifying increase in the value of church property is, of course, partly due to the natural rise in value of property already possessed. However, many valuable new houses of worship and parsonages have doubtless been erected. The fine increase in pastor's salaries looks good—the average is nearly four times what it was twenty-five years ago, and there are more than three times as many parsonages.

During practically this same period—1900-1922—an unusual development has been going on throughout the South, accompanied by a shifting of relative standing among the sixteen southern states; there has also been some change in the comparisons between the South and the rest of the country. The World's Work gives us some of the figures.

In 1900 the South's per capita expenditure for public education was $1.25—the per capita expenditure in the rest of the country was $3.71. In the period, 1900-1922, the South multiplied her per capita expenditure for schools by 6.67, while the rest of the country multiplied theirs by 4.73. North Carolina leads the southern states in this, having multiplied her per capita expenditures by 16.66 in the twenty-two year period. When it comes to the actual amount of her per capita expenditure North Carolina drops from the first place to the ninth, having spent in 1922 $8.33, while Oklahoma stands first with an expenditure of $14.35. This is not a real fall for North Carolina, for in 1900 she stood fifteenth—at the bottom—and rose to the ninth place in 1922.

The percentage of a state's wealth expended for education is a better standard for measuring its liberality. In this respect Oklahoma is at the top, having spent 0.77 percent of its wealth for public schools in 1922. Texas is second with 0.536 percent, and North Carolina is the third with 0.488 percent. "The two anti-evolution states, Tennessee and Kentucky, stand respectively fourteenth and 12th and Georgia, whose legislature tried to enact similar legislation only last summer and succumbed to the storm of ridicule from the entire state, is fifteenth."

The editor of World's Work makes a statement and then asks two questions.

"Nothing but an imaginary line separates the backward Georgia and Tennessee from the progressive North Carolina. Nothing but a similar line separates the backward Arkansas from the progressive Oklahoma. Why should the people of one state be so much less liberal in the support of their schools than the people of another state that has no better opportunities for obtaining the advantages of civilization? Does the difference lie in the people themselves, in their leaders, or—what may seem the same thing, but is not quite—in a difference in political machines?"

In the same magazine from which I have just quoted is a reference to an important anniversary.

"It is fifty years since the University of North Carolina opened its doors after the Civil War. When it reopened after the carpet-bag government left North Carolina, it was as dilapidated and ill-nourished an educational institution as ever began the task of holding the lamp of knowledge up to the sight of an unlettered and poverty-stricken society. But it had a sturdy inheritance and in fifty years it has become one of the most successful state universities in the country. Its success is founded upon its own service and upon an increasingly effective state school system. It is an important anniversary. The reopening of the university is about as good a point to begin the record of progress as could be found, and in fifty years education in the South has done much to make good the destruction caused by slavery, the war, and Reconstruction."

Twenty years ago, in the place where I lived, a high school building was erected at the cost of $250,000.00. It was one of the best in the state. Fifteen years later I was in a town with only one-seventh as large a population—and it had recently completed a school building that cost $350,000.00. It is easier in these days to get together a large number of pupils and to secure the material equipment for educational work than it is to find a school board, a superintendent, and a force of teachers, all of whom are adequately prepared for the responsibilities that have increased with the increase in pupils and equipment. Some men and women are nobly meeting the situation, others are being trained—but the requirements are much greater than the supply.

Only a few days ago I heard a well-informed man say that a number of the recently built expensive church plants, with which he has had occasion to become familiar, are largely unused and unreliable—because the ministerial and lay workers are not capable of operating the equipment. Increase in salary does not always solve the difficulty. I have in mind a man who is receiving two or three times what his predecessors did—and still he isn't more than half the size of most of them.

One is naturally led to inquire, What effect has the increased material prosperity that has come to the schools and churches on the moral and spiritual condition of the people? Have the preachers—with their larger congregations, better church buildings, and much larger salaries—become really larger and finer men? Have the people, including the ministers, grown in breadth of sympathy, in depth of understanding, in height of aspiration—to correspond with the more splendid equipment of the schools and churches, and the more spacious times in which we live?

I have done some observing from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. I read quite thoroughly several denominational papers, and look into some of the most distinctive books in which current questions and problems are discussed. As a rule I find an unusual alertness and open-mindedness. Of course there are spots in our country, and certain sections of most all the denominations, where the people are more concerned to hold on to the forms of thought and expression with which they have long been familiar than they are to give attention to what God is saying today by the mouths of his holy prophets who are speaking to us in and concerning our own times.

In the main I have no fears for the future of either the school or the church. There are among the ministers many young men and middle-aged men and old men who have the onward and upward look. They not only aspire—they lend a hand.

Certain schools in the North have long been prominent in leadership, but the West and the South are more and more coming to their own. Illinois and California are to be reckoned with in educational matters, along with Massachusetts and Connecticut. The university of North Carolina and Vanderbilt university at Nashville, each has a fine standing. We may expect that Duke university, with its great endowment, and High Point college—which now needs, and should have, the deepest and most practical devotion of all its friends—will each, in its own sphere, give a good account of itself.

Having passed with much credit the last quarter-of-a-century, may the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church gird itself for still greater and broader achievement. And may she come to 1950 with standards held high, and a glad face!

A CORRECTION.

In article of last week, in Herald "The N. C. Conference 40 years Ago and Today," a mistake crept in somehow. Value of church houses 40 years ago (1885), should be $83,625 instead of $836.25 as in said article as it appears. J. F. Dosier.

THE COMPLETE CHRIST.

Rev. Harris E. Kirk.

"Some of us have the scars of our mistakes upon our hearts and bodies. We have tried to get along with an incomplete Christ, and we have failed, and we came back halt and lame, and at last laid hold of the complete Christ. We might have had Him all along. I want you to have the whole Christ when you go out to live. I want you to know Him as your Lord and Master. I want you to know Him as the One that has bought you with a price. I want you to feel, when the stains of the world are strong, when unclean hands are trying to take away your purity of mind, when temptation surrounds and tortures you, that the hand that holds you to God the Father is the pierced hand of Him who gave His life for you and will never let you go. I want you to feel that Jesus Christ is capable and strong and adequate to bear the total burdens even of a world so complex and so lost as this; and that He is able to make you, where you are and under the conditions of life under which you have to live, a fruitful disciple and a true interpreter of His truth to mankind. I want you to know Him not only in your emotions, or to hold Him in your vagrant impulses, but to put behind the clarity of your vision and the sincerity of your faith the courage and sanity of strong and deep conviction. So that in the great hours of trial that lie before you, the larger phases of your education and the perfection of your natures for your eternal life, you may be able to say as His greatest disciple said, 'For to me to live is Christ. I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day!'"

"IMAGINATION IN PRAYER."

By Rev. H. H. Smith.

Dr. Alexander Whyte has given us a great book on prayer entitled, "Lord, Teach us to Pray." It contains twenty-three sermons on various aspects and methods of prayer. Dr. Dinsdale T. Young, an eminent English preacher, referring to this book, said, "It helped me to preach as few books have helped me of late. It put a new song on my lips. Here is a classical work of experimental religion."

Dr. Whyte was endowed with a wonderful imagination and he made good use of it in his preaching. Describing the man who knocked at midnight, he gives this vivid picture: "It is night. It is midnight. The night is dark. All the lights are out, and everybody is in bed. 'Friend, lend me three loaves! For a friend of mine in his journey is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him!' He knocks again. 'Friend, lend me three loaves!' He waits a while and then he knocks again. 'Friend, friend! I must have three loaves!' 'Trouble me not; the door is now shut; I cannot rise and give thee!' He is dumb for a time. He stands still. He turns to go home. But he cannot go home. He dare not go home. He comes back. He knocks again,

'Friend!' he cries, till the dogs bark at him. He puts his ear to the door. There is a sound inside, and then the light of a candle shines through the hole in the door. The bars of the door are drawn back, and he gets not three loaves only but as many as he needs. 'And I say unto you, Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.'"

Referring to the Master's spending all night in prayer, he said. "The Man of all prayer is still on His knees.... See! the day breaks over His place of prayer! See! the Kingdom of God begin to come in on the earth."

His dramatic spirit and vivid imagination brought forth this apostrophe while preaching: "O, Paul, up in heaven, be merciful in thy rapture! Hast thou forgotten that thou also was once a wretched man?"

In his sermon on "Imagination in Prayer," he shows us how the imagination may aid us in our devotional life. Concerning Bible-reading and prayer he makes bold to say:

"Never, then, I implore you, I demand of you—never, now, all the days and nights that are left to you—never open your New Testament till you have offered this prayer to God the Holy Ghost: 'Open Thou mine eyes.' And, then, as you read, stop and ponder, stop and open your eyes; stop and imagine: stop till you actually see Jesus Christ in the same room with you. 'Lo! I am with you alway!' Ask Him, and if He hides Himself from you, ask Him aloud,—yes, aloud,—whether these are, indeed, His words to you, or no. Expect Him. Rise up, and open to Him. Salute Him. Put down your book. Put down your light, and then say such things as these—say, 'Jesus Christ! Son of David! Son of Mary! Carpenter's Son! Son of God! Savior of sinners! of whom I am chief!' Speak it out. Do not be afraid that both men and devils hear thee speaking to thy Saviour. What about them all when thou art alone with the Son of God? And, besides, all men are asleep. 'Art Thou in very truth here, O Christ? Dost Thou see me, Dost Thou hear me? Yes! Thou art here! I am sure of it. I feel it. O blessed One! O Son of the Highest! I am not worthy that Thou shouldst come under my roof. But Thou art here! Here, of all the houses in the whole city! And here with me—O my Saviour: with me of all men in the whole city!' Fall at His feet, kiss His feet. Kiss His feet till thy lips come upon an iron nail in them, and, after that, thou wilt know, of a truth, Who He is, that is with thee in the night-watches!"

Only a devout soul with a rare and reverent imagination could rise to such heights, but it shows us how our devotional exercises may be enriched by the proper use of the imagination.

REPORT ON MISSIONARY MAGAZINE FUND.

The following Christian Endeavor Societies have contributed the amounts opposite their names toward the magazine subscriptions for our North Carolina Missionaries, Revs. J. Clyde Auman and J. F. Minnis.

West End, Greensboro, $2; A Friend, Skipper, Va., $2; Asheboro, $3; Calvary, Greensboro, $3; Grace, Greensboro, $3; Concord, $2; High Point, First Church, $2. Total received, $14.00.

The subscriptions have been renewed. However, not enough has been received to pay for the renewals. I had to renew them without further delay in order that the magazines might reach our missionaries as Christmas gifts from us. Any society that has not made a contribution to this fund now has the privilege of doing so. A dollar or two from a few more societies will be sufficient. I am planning to send to Brothers Auman and Minnis the names of the C. E. Societies that contribute to this fund so that they may thank you directly for your gift.

Send check or money order to Rev. L. W. Gerringer, 1113 Bellevue Street, Greensboro, N. C. No, I have not moved since conference as some one supposed, but we now have city mail delivery on our street. Hence the change of address from 491 Andrew to 1113 Bellevue.

EVERY MEMBER CANVASSING.

You may be surprised at the heading of this article, but really that is not the name of the plan used only as it was named by the writer. The plan is really known as the Honor System.

I am not going to take space and time to tell you how it originated, but I am going to tell you how it worked at State Street.

After giving it due publicity we set apart a Sunday afternoon when all the members of the church were asked to come and make their pledges for the new Conference year. A committee was appointed to be on hand to present cards and have every one make pledges to cover the budget for the year.

Eighty-four percent came that afternoon and pledged, and the remaining ones were seen the following week by one man. The committee at the church enjoyed their work and some remained the most of the afternoon and we had a good social time together, talking over plans for the new year and every one pronounced it the most satisfactory plan they had ever seen worked to get subscribed the amount for the budget.

The hours we set and asked the folks to come were from two to five in the afternoon. Our folks said it was so much better than the old way; let every one have a part in the work, and that we got more to subscribe that afternoon than some had ever known to be at home when so many canvassers went out.

We let every one know that if they were not here some time during the day set that they would be seen the next week.

If I have not made this plain, I would be glad to answer any questions. This can be worked anywhere, town or country, if enough publicity is given it and you will be surprised at the number of folks who will enjoy an afternoon at the church just to talk over the work for the coming year. THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

We are glad to note the good reports, in the Herald, of the work starting so well on so many of the charges. Also glad to note the kind receptions and heavy poundings.

This last Saturday and Sunday were spent with Rev. W. H. Neese and his people on Randleman charge. They held a very progressive and sweet-spirited quarterly conference on Saturday afternoon. The pastor made several recommendations looking toward the betterment of the work. All of which, with some modifications, were adopted. The conference agreed to start out early in the year to raise every cent of all claims for the year.

Mr. Wiley Ward of Asheboro was present and added much to the conference by his timely remarks, and his interest in the work. Though a member of the Asheboro Church he is very much interested in the work on Randleman.

On Sunday I attended Sunday school and preached at the Mt. Lebanon Church, and Sunday afternoon preached at New Salem Church. The people heard the word gladly. Bro. Neese was called away from the afternoon services because of the death of Mrs. Neese's mother, Mrs. W. A. Amick, of Liberty.

Next Sunday, Men For The Ministry Sunday.

I realize that our annual conference by special resolution, set aside the month of May, 1926, in which pastors are directed to preach at each church on the call to the ministry. But the General Secretary of the Board of Education has asked that Sunday, Dec. 13th, be set apart as a special day of prayer that God will call more young men into the ministry. I realize that circuit men cannot preach to all their congregations on any one Sunday; but it has occurred to me that wherever we are gathered in service Sunday, December 13th, whether it be in Sunday school or preaching services, attention might be called to the fact that this is "Men for the ministry Sunday" throughout the Methodist Protestant Church, and a special prayer offered to God that He will call more young men into His harvest. Let nothing interfere with our plans for May, but in connection with our praying especially for the college we can certainly pray for more laborers on next Sunday.

The Every-Member Canvass.

It is getting a bit late for the every member canvass, but where it has not been made it certainly should be made at an early date. The every-member canvass is nothing more nor less than "Seeing Every Member," as one good brother at a country church expressed it, and getting every member to tell the stewards early in the year just what they will pay per week, or per month, for the support of the local church and for the budgets. The newest and best way to make the every member canvass is called "The Honor System."

This system calls for each member to go to the church at an appointed time and tell the stewards just how much they will pay for the year. Of course there will be some who may not get to the church for such a meeting, and they should be sought out quickly by the stewards, or canvassers to know just what they will do. It is not fair to any member of the church to pass them by unsolicited for funds for Kingdom purposes. I take it that no real Christian wishes to dead-head it to heaven. People can pay more, and will gladly pay more, if we have a system of weekly or monthly collections, than if we just follow the old method of calling on them once per year, and then of talking about turning them out if they don't happen to have any money at that time. It is neither right nor legal thus to turn folks out.

Putting Folks Out Of The Church.

I have never been able to understand the desire that seems to be rampant these days to "drop" folks from the church rolls, and in various ways to "get them out" of the church. Our discipline gives a scriptural course to pursue followed by a legal course to take, and if we are unwilling to take the Scriptural and the legal course then they should be permitted to remain in the church, and we should put forth every reasonable effort to win them to a higher and a more useful life.

"Help us to help each other, Lord,

Each other's cross to bear:

Let each his friendly aid afford

And feel his brother's care."

"Help us to build each other up,

Our little stock improve;

Increase our faith, confirm our hope,

And perfect us in love."

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

SPECIAL PRAYER ASKED FOR REV. E. G. COWAN.

Rev. E. G. Cowan and his family are living with us in the district parsonage for the winter.

Brother Cowan does not seem so well as he did a week ago. He is anxious to get well, if it be God's will, that he may continue his work in the ministry. His young wife, a noble christian woman, and his two manly boys are longing for him to get well.

If you are a christian, stop and offer up an earnest prayer to God for His blessings upon this family, and especially that God will spare Brother Cowan and make him well, if in accord with His will. God will hear and answer prayer.

Faithfully,

A. G. Dixon.

KEEP FOR REFERENCE HERALD OF DECEMBER 3.

Every pastor and many laymen should keep last week's Herald, December 3rd, for reference. On page four Mr. J. Norman Wills gives in clear, concise terms, "Our New Financial Plan" for the College.

It is difficult for some of us to carry the details of a plan in our heads, so this copy of the Herald kept at hand will help.

Several of our charges responded last week by falling in with new plan and responding with the cash. But, note, that it was not the stronger charges in most cases.

Come on, brethren, and friends, and let all of us as individuals, and as churches, and as charges pay up early.

"Shop Early" is a slogan we see on every hand. "Pay up Early" should be the slogan for all of us with reference to the High Point College at this time. Much more depends upon paying up early than many of us know.

Many of us believe that Great Things are just ahead of us, if we will move heaven and earth until we as Methodist Protestants have done what heaven knows to be earth's best in this present campaign. A. G. Dixon.

High Point.—The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies held their monthly business meeting with Mrs. S. S. Coe in Emerywood Monday afternoon with good attendance.

Circle number 6 of the Foreign Society, composed of young ladies, will meet at the church on Thursday evening with Misses Ruth and Elizabeth Welch and Pearl Leonard as hostesses.

In the absence of Dr. Brown on account of illness, the pulpit was filled by Dr. Andrews of the College on Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock service, and he gave a very timely discourse on stirring up our talents and gifts for the work of the Master. He says that one of the greatest problems of the church today and one reason why it is not more efficient is that members do not find their proper place to work. In view of the fact that we have a large number of new recruits, we hope that every one will promptly find a job and begin work in it. Our religion needs exercise as well as our minds and bodies, and the busiest Christians are without a doubt the happiest. At 7.30 P. M. the exercise was conducted by "Brother Bill" Stephens, who assisted his brother in the great evangelistic campaign conducted recently in our city.

The Stewards conducted the Every Member Canvass last Sunday afternoon from 2 to 5 o'clock, and met with encouraging success with the increased budget for the coming year's work.

A delightful Concert will be given on Wednesday evening at High Point College by the Choral Society assisted by friends from the city. An elaborate program has been arranged by Prof. Dan W. Smith. The choral feature will be the "Fantasy on a Russian Folk-song" with violin obligato by Mr. Roy. He will also play a solo number. Incidental solos will be sung by Mrs. R. M. Andrews and R. Arthur Elmore.

Miss N. McIntyre will be the accompanist

A rare treat is assured to all who attend, and the public is cordially invited, there being no admission fee.

The children at the Home will hold a bazaar and supper on next Friday evening from 5:30 to 7:30 o'clock. Articles of fancy work will be on sale, and supper will be served for 50 cents per plate.

Dr. George R. Staunt will appear at High Point College on Friday evening, December 11th as the third attraction in the Lyceum Course. This eminent speaker is well known to High Point people, and many will be glad to have the opportunity of hearing him again.

Two married couples in our membership have lately passed their Golden Wedding anniversaries, Mr. and Mrs. Albert A. Halton of Steele St. and Mr. and Mrs. H. U. Bryant of Ring St. and both events were celebrated with appropriate festivities at their homes. Many congratulations are extended to them by a host of friends and relatives upon the rare privilege of enjoying fifty years of life's joys and sorrows together.

We are pleased to know that the children of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon W. Idol, who have had scarlet fever, have recovered and the quarantine has been raised.

Mrs. W. P. Pickett will leave December 18th for Tampa, Fla. to spend the winter months with her daughter, Mrs. H. S. Meredith.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Douglas are rejoicing over the arrival of a new son in their home on December 4th, and Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Gibson are also receiving congratulations on the addition to their little family of a son, who will bear the name Earl Smith.

Mr. H. A. Bencini's handsome new home on Montlien Ave. is almost completed.

Charlotte.—We have started off this year's work in a very encouraging manner. All organizations of the church have manifested great interest in their part of the work. On the part of organization, our church is one hundred per cent. As this is the first year the local congregation has attempted to stand alone and assume all the financial obligations, it will take harmonious and hard effort on the part of every member. Heretofore we have conducted a mission church, but our people are glad to undertake the responsibility of self-support. The local budget is right large this year on account of the parsonage lot which becomes due within a year's time. Besides the Annual and General Conference budgets have been raised and the full amount of pastor's salary assumed. Also the church has voted to carry a note for High Point College of $1,000. However, we feel the membership will loyally raise all obligations.

The Ladies' Aid Society has agreed to raise the remaining debt of $290. on the church. This relieves the situation greatly. Last year this society made a fine record in raising money for the completion of the Sunday school rooms, paying the final note on the parsonage part of the church and various other things, amounting to about $700. So they are starting this year by promising substantial support.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, although a young organization has been a valuable factor in church work. They have been apportioned by the N. C. Branch $100. and they have assumed a scholarship in the Birdwood school in India. Recently a supper was served in the social room of the church, the proceeds, about $35. being applied on this assessment. The society is a member of the Inter-denomination Mission Union of the city.

All three societies of Christian Endeavor are doing splendid work. The young people's division received donations for the Near East Relief, the Intermediates having pledged $25. and the Juniors $10. on the college fund.

The Choir, under the direction of Prof. McIlvain, is undertaking to present a Cantata, Heralds of Jesus, for the Christmas season. The Junior and Senior choirs are uniting in this work. The music for the church has been greatly improved since securing a director.

The people of the church have received us kindly for the third term. It is our desire to put into the work our all, trusting to make this the best year in the history of the church.

H. Freo Surratt.

Welch Memorial Church.—We are in the midst of a great revival. It began November 29th.

At the close of the George Stevens revival held here in the fall, a band of young men who accepted Christ as their Saviour banded themselves together and organized an organization called the "Gang"—gang for Jesus Christ, as they use to be the gang for the "Devil." They are assisting in the meeting. It is just inspiring to hear their wonderful testimonies. They are more than six hundred strong, and they are doing a great work.

There have been about one hundred professions and reclamations. Fifteen accepted Christ last night.

The meeting will continue through this week and maybe longer. The church is greatly revived. Last Sunday at the 11 o'clock service twenty came forward and gave their names for membership. Many more yet to join.

We had a large Sunday school last Sunday and hope the attendance next Sunday will be larger still. I want to say Welch Memorial Church is awake as she never has been. Pray for us, for prayer certainly does change things.

Mrs. J. W. M., Rep.

Matthews Chapel, Greenville Ct.—We are proud that conference saw fit to send our same pastor back for another year. We are not yet tired of hearing and seeing Brother Powell.

Our Sunday school is holding up pretty well so far during the fall months, and I hope the interest may still continue, but several of our neighborhood families are going to move away and we are sorry to give them up, for we will miss them in our Sunday school.

We hope others may move in to take their places.

Brother Powell gave us a very interesting sermon Sunday afternoon as usual.

The first quarterly conference will convene at Matthews Chapel on Saturday before the third Sunday and Brother Powell urges all official members to be present.

The W. H. M. S. of our church is planning to give a play, "Farm Folks," on the evening of December 18th at the Vineland school; the proceeds will be used as a payment on our church organ.

The Christmas holidays are fast approaching and we extend our wishes to the Herald and its readers for a very merry Christmas.

(Thank you!—Editor.)

Charlotte, Richland Circuit.—This church has passed through a prosperous year with Rev. C. H. Hill as pastor. We are delighted to know that he has been returned to us for another year. His first sermon of the year, Sunday, December 6, was an encouraging one and plans were laid to accomplish great things this year.

The first quarterly conference will be held Saturday afternoon, December 12, at Browers Chapel.

The attendance at Sunday school has been unusually good this fall.

Our prayer meeting, also, is progressing and the interest is encouraging.

We are very sorry to know that the pastor's wife, Mrs. Hill, is in High Point Hospital for an operation and we ask the christian people to pray for her speedy recovery.

Campbell Morgan, distinguished British clergyman and lecturer, will become special preacher for the First Presbyterian Church, Cincinnati, O., on Jan. 1, where, according to the terms of his contract, he will remain until June 1. It is expected, however, that before next summer he will have entered into a permanent relation with his new congregation.

STOPPING A SCURRILOUS SLANDER.

How fast and far a lie will travel in a given time if not stopped at its very inception is a problem which even the best of mathematicians are not able to solve. The only way to prevent the problem from arising is to use every means possible to keep the lie from getting a running start.

A salacious bit of slander against the morals and discipline of the University of Illinois given utterance at a recent meeting of the Illinois Federation of Labor was promptly nipped in the bud by speedy and decisive action on the part of the university authorities. Two deans of the university and the sheriff of Champaign county appeared before representatives of the Federation of Labor and completely disproved the statement that drunkenness and its usual accompaniments were common among the students. The evidence showed that this lie started in the diseased brain of a young fellow who had never been in the university as a student and who fabricated the stories out of whole cloth for the columns of a yellow newspaper. It was demonstrated that in a student body of 10,000 the list of those requiring to be disciplined for misconduct is so small as to be almost negligible. On the other hand the evidence submitted proved to the satisfaction of the representative of the federation of Labor that a high standard of morals is maintained in the university and that discipline is rigidly enforced when necessary in spite of the fact that many students are handicapped by the bad example of parents who constantly disobey the fundamental laws of life and heedlessly violate the Volstead Act.

This baseless slander against a great educational institution is only symptomatic of a tendency that seems to grow more pernicious among some folk who have no reverence for truth so long as a lie will serve their selfish ends. Prurient gossip of the backyard fence variety has taken on huge proportions with the cystic growth of the yellow journal and the pornographic magazine. Indeed it would seem as though the tendency to indulge in an intoxication of lying is due to a bootlegging impulse which afflicts America at the present time. We search for the truth only to find that falsehood has outdistanced the truth and thrown such a smoke-screen around the facts as to make discrimination exceedingly difficult.

Even religion is not free from the tendency of propagandists to prevaricate. If the slandering of some men with the opprobrious title of heretic could be met with the same dispatch and determination that was shown in the case of the University of Illinois it would have a wholesome effect upon public opinion and especially upon those who pander to the prejudices of gullible people and exploit them for ulterior ends.—The Baptist

WHY HOLD A CHRISTMAS SERVICE.

Loyalty to our Lord and our church requires that in a signal way we should not fail to observe the memorable occasion.

The greatest event in human history, from which have come benefits which outweigh all others known to man, ought to be most becomingly celebrated, to arouse still deeper interest in the children and young people whose life and career are now being largely shaped under the care and guidance of the church.

The work of Christ's Kingdom, represented in part by the Methodist Protestant Church, needs at this juncture the increased support of all the agencies and membership of our denomination.

The budget called for by the General Conference as the proper amount which our church should contribute for the extending work of all our boards and institutions, known as the general interests, has not been raised in any one year, and as a result great opportunities for service have had to be passed by, and undermanned and inadequately supported work has helped to retard the progress of our denomination at home and abroad.

We are rounding out the first century of our church's life and service to mankind, and the founders, the leaders, and the members who started and built up our church by their sacrifices and toils have set a glorious example for us to follow, and we do well, in the centennial celebration authorized by the General Conference, to honor their memory and voice our gratitude for their heroic actions and great achievements under God.

One part of that celebration calls for the laying on the altar each year of this quadrennium the budget in full, but we failed to do that last year, and we are called upon to exert ourselves to the utmost, and do this one thing this year, and the other two years of the quadrennium.

The Budget Council, created by the General Conference, has sought to stimulate interest in the budget, and to help the pastors raise their local church's budget by sending out specially prepared leaflets, etc., and as a further aid it has prepared an excellent Christmas service for use by our Sunday schools with the distinct understanding that the offering shall be placed in the regular budget from which each board and institution shall receive only the percentage authorized by the General Conference.

The complete service with collection envelopes, in any number required by our Sunday schools, will be sent free, and you have only to mail a card to Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, 516 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Md., for all the supplies you need, but the time is short, so order at once.

Where White Gifts and other special services are held, it is hoped that our Sunday schools will send a suitable part of the offering to their annual conference treasurer with the statement that it is for the budget, and from the Christmas service.

The work of the different boards cannot be maintained as developed unless a larger proportion of the budget is raised, and, as the former Christmas Service issued by the Board of education was withdrawn by the General Conference, and numerous schools asked for a similar service, the Budget Council is trying to meet conditions and demands by the service it has published.

We earnestly appeal for the largest possible offering, every cent of which will apply on the local church's budget, for the need of money was never more urgent.

IRVING BACHELLER ON THE MIRACLE OF MIRACLES.

Hope Beyond.

By Luther K. Long.

One of the notable things in present-day manifestations of religion is the interest literary men of mature years are taking in the subject. Booth Tarkington, Basil King, William Lyon Phelps, and others have recently written on some phase of religious thought or experience.

And now, in the September number of The American Magazine, Irving Bacheller has a distinctive article on "Why I am not afraid to die."

The fear of death is not so common as some religious teachers would have us believe. Mr. Bacheller says: "Many a man have I seen nearing death; but never have I seen one who betrayed the least fear of it. The memory of these brave ones suggested to me the closing lines in Eben Holden. An unconscious, even an unbidden, faith seems to come to those who need it. I suppose there are some who have sold or slain their own souls so that they have nothing to be saved, but I do not believe there will be anything like the amount of damnation in the world to come which many of us expect."

He quotes with manifest approval the words of Benjamin Franklin: "I believe that the great multitude at the Day of Judgment will have to rest content with their own salvation."

Mr. Bacheller tells a personal, boyhood experience that is rather impressive. He says:

"I remember returning to my home once in my boyhood after a day of sinful self-indulgence. I had a heavy sense of guilt, increased by two or three cheerful lies. Suddenly I discovered that I was not fooling my father. In an hour of suffering and repentance I began to know how much my father loved me. The whole incident has been a great help to me. If he had turned me from his home and heart forever, what would I think of him now? If the world has learned anything, it is not that love and mercy are the greatest things we know? Shall we not believe that our Heavenly Father has them and is most generous with them?"

Mr. Bacheller counts a great deal on the power and persistence of personality. The outstanding thing about Franklin and Lincoln and other great and good men, is personality. He says of Jesus:

"Greater than His words, or His deeds must have been the personality of Jesus. Is this thing to perish utterly? If so, birth becomes a misfortune, life a delusion and an injustice, and the power that rules the world a heartless, aimless thing. This to me is unthinkable. The strongest teaching of science is that nothing perishes."

This brings us close to the central, the most vital part of the Christian hope and confidence. What is that on which Mr. Bacheller is willing to base all? He says:

"But my faith is founded mainly on certain miracles. I am aware that many balk at the Gospel miracles. I do not, but my faith has little need of them. I base it on miracles, proved beyond all question, on facts unassailed and unassailable. The corner of my structure is the miracle of the lonely divine personality of Jesus. What care I whether or not he was born of a virgin? Did the dreams of the prophets relate to Him? I have no doubt of it, but with me that is not an essential point. The fact remains that His birth was the most prodigious and unaccountable event in recorded history."

"A miracle greater than the raising of Lazarus from the kingdom of Death was the raising of Jesus from the kingdom of Herod. Think of the environment! The rotten body and the leopard soul of the Idumean tyrant, Herod, with his court of strumpets, sycophants and grafters. The religion of the Jews was a mass of law, stern to cruelty, and largely outworn. Its God had become a heartless tyrant, kept on his throne, as one may say, by stoners, dagger men, and like murderous fanatics."

"Out of this wallow of moral rottenness and savage fanaticism and religious ferocity rose the Prince of Peace, the sweetest, wisest, most loving soul the world has ever known, even in far better days."

"Josephus has described his environment in Galilee. It was such as would naturally have produced in Nazareth a religious tyrant, a man of conquered friends and hated enemies. It didn't. It produced a man who won his friends by love, and who hated no one—not even his enemies. Here was a miracle of God far greater than any recorded in the Gospels. A tree growing to great stature out of a bank of salt without nourishment would be a miracle no more amazing."

It is good to have attention called in so interesting and vigorous a manner to the supreme value of the moral and spiritual qualities of Jesus. Jesus himself—rather than his marvelous physical and healing powers—is what attracts and uplifts those who are drawn to him. Salvation through union with him is one of the distinctive notes in Paul's teaching. This union with Christ is at the same time union with God. The Son has life in himself, even as the Father has life in himself. And those who are united with Christ live in him, even as he lives in the Father. This banishes fear of death and gives us peace as we contemplate the words of Jesus, "Father, I will that those whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory."

SUGGESTIONS FOR "MEN FOR THE MINISTRY" SUNDAY.

First. Let every minister preach a special sermon on "The Call to the Ministry."

Second: Let him call his congregation to special prayer after his sermon.

Third. Let him follow the preaching and the praying with personal interviews with the young men of his parish.

Fourth: Let him send the names of any interested young men of his parish to the Secretary of the Board of Education, Rev. F. W. Stephenson, 316 West Diamond Street, North Side, Pittsburgh, Pa. Or, should he be further desirous of information as to what constitutes "The Call to the Ministry," and will address President H. L. Elderdice, of the Westminster Theological Seminary, Westminster, Maryland, he will send him free of charge a pamphlet on that subject.

MOTHER'S CHRISTMAS GIFT.

It was real Christmas weather, and the snowflakes dancing merrily down were dressing the whole world in white "just for Christmas," as Dolly told Jerky.

Jerky was all dressed up too, with a smart red ribbon around her neck, that Mother had tied in a fine stick-up bow, and looked very pretty against her soft dark fur. Aunt Margy had sent Jerky, then a tiny kitten, for a birthday gift to Dolly, and since then they had been great chums, and indeed Dolly had got into the way of talking to Jerky, as though she understood her. Perhaps she did!

"Who would ever think that little snowflakes like that could prevent a great big train from arriving at the proper time," she went on. "You know Aunt Margy is coming from Montreal, and Mother showed me a tel-tele—, not telephone, of course, I know that word, but a yellow paper that people send when they want to say anything in a hurry, and the train won't arrive till very late, because of the snow, and Aunt Margy won't be here, until long after we are in bed. Jerky could not say anything, but rubbed her head lovingly against her little mistress' shoulder.

"The dreadful part of it is that I have no present for Mother yet. You know Aunt Margy always takes me to choose it, the day before Christmas, and now I have all the money saved up, and Aunt Margy won't be here in time. I can't say anything to Mother about it, 'cause she mustn't know.

Off she ran to her little desk, and was soon back with pencil and paper, and sat busily writing for some time, with many a stop.

At last she was finished. "Now listen, Jerky, I'm going to put this in stocking to-night for Santy, I know he'll help me and this is what I have said:

Dere Santy:

Aunt Margy is not here and I can't buy a present for mother. I saved a dollar to buy her some present, so I put it in my stocking. Will you get it for me? I know you like to help people.

Your loving,

Dolly.

Just then she heard Mother calling.

"Dolly, Dolly. Come and help me decorate Aunt Margy's room with holly."

She tucked away the note safely in her desk, and, followed closely by Jerky, ran downstairs.

Mother helped her hang up her stocking, and then tucked her up with a good-night kiss. When she was alone, she scrambled out of bed, fetched the note for Santa and put it carefully in the top of her stocking, so that a bit of white showed plainly against the black.

"He'll surely see that," she said, as she settled down in bed again, with Jerky in her arms, and was soon in the land of dreams.

She was awake bright and early next morning, and there was her stocking stuffed full of candy, pop-corn—packages of all sizes and shapes. One was tied with a broad Christmassy ribbon, and a note was twisted in the ribbon. Her note was gone, and she eagerly read as follows:

"Dear Dolly—

"Here is the present for Mother, so don't worry. Of course, I like to help everybody, and most of all nice little girls.

"Will come again next year.

"Love from

"SANTY."

"I knew he'd help me," cried Dolly, as she ran down to see Aunt Margy, and show her the wonderful package that Santy had left for mother.—Selected.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAMS.

As the time is short, I am asking that you send in your order for the Christmas Program "Joy to All People" which has been provided by the Budget Council of the General Conference.

The programs are furnished free to all churches which will make an offering to the General Conference Budget. This affords you an excellent opportunity to assist in raising the budget of your Church.

The orders received to December 4th are as follows:

Maryland, 73; N. Carolina, 57; Ft. Smith-Okla., 29; W. Virginia, 24; Eastern, 23; Michigan, 22; Ohio, 22; Indiana, 19; Pittsburgh, 15; Iowa-Missouri, 15; Georgia (Col.), 10; Arkansas, 8; Alabama, 7; Georgia, 7; Onondaga, 7; Texas, 6; Kansas, 6; Louisiana, 2; Colorado-Texas, 2; Illinois, 2; South Carolina, 2; Kentucky, 1; making a total of 359 orders and 20,992 Programs sent out.

No doubt many churches will use the White Christmas program. If so, include the General Conference Budget in the list of gifts.

Please send all orders to Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, 516 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Md.

E. A. Sexsmith.

For The Meeting.

Decorate as elaborately as possible with Christmas suggestions, an illumined star or stars, Angels about Christmas tree if you wish, but make the decorations suggestive of Christ rather than of Santa Claus. Let this be Christ's night with our C. E.'s at least. Many others will be exalting Santa.

Dramatize if possible the story of the birth of Christ, some way but do not use a doll to represent Him. Just cover the manger and let imagination supply the baby Christ. Perhaps Luke will give you the best description of the Birth and incidents with it but draw from all the Gospels as well as from your memory of all the pictures you have seen representing the event and give just a short pageant of the very best.

For The Leader.

This would be a good time to plan a "White Gifts Meeting." Tell the Society of the needs of some one of the church or of the community. If there is no one whom your Society can help in your church or community be prepared to tell them some of the needs of the Children's Home or of the other missionary work done by the church and conference.

Exalt Christ as the first Christmas gift—God's gift to man. God gave all in giving himself in the person of Jesus Christ. Our best is the very least we ought to offer Him. We cannot take our gifts and lay them at His feet as did the Wise Men but in giving them to the needy and for the needs of His church we are as truly giving to Him as did the Wise Men. Plan for as many Christmas carols as possible.

Making Christmas Verify The Bible.

The days which we celebrate in memory of Christ—Christmas and Easter—should be made to confirm faith in the Bible, the Book that tells the story of Him whom we honor. We want to rejoice and be glad and have them filled with happiness. But the source of our joy and happiness should be such as would honor Him and which we could ask Him to share. Christmas is the fulfillment of prophecy. It is the beginning of the revelation of God's plan of salvation. It celebrates the coming of the Saviour and is a religious festival and should not be merely a day for hilarity and for worldly pleasures. Too many Santa Claus has become more the hero of Christmas than Jesus is. Santa has his place but only to represent the spirit of giving, while real service and praise and honor should be given to Him whose birth we celebrate.

Christmas should be made to strengthen our faith in God's keeping power. The helpless little babe in the manger was marvelously cared for and guided into manhood and service so the same heavenly Father will care for each of His children. Let's trust Him. Let's rejoice in Him.

Happiest Christmases.

"One says that his happiest Christmas was spent in a Manchester slum, helping to feed the hungry. Why? Because that work is the result of love, and love grows as we serve. Love is joy."

A minister tells of his happiest Christmas as one on which he and his wife bought some toys, some candy and nuts and some pictures and went into the home of some poor children and got right down on the floor and played with the children and made for them a happy Christmas. Make some one else have a happy Christmas who would not have one but for you and you will yourself be the happier.

All Children at Christmas.

Children who are brought up on the simple things of life are the happiest people in the world. The more we grown-ups can be like children in simplicity and in sincerity the happier we are and Christmas makes us forget ourselves if we want to, and be like children, if we will. Just the season naturally brings happiness, and while our hearts are filled with Christmas joy and we are thinking of others, wishing to make them happy we ourselves are filled with joy and gladness as nothing else thrills us—just the pure simple joy of loving service, a joy that springs from unselfishness.

Christmas Joys Are For All.

"The great joys of life—love, friendship, home, service—are not for the rich alone, but also the poor. So is the joy of Christmas. It is for all, since love and peace may be enjoyed by all."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—DEC. 13.

Paul In Melita and Rome.

Lesson Text: Acts 28:16-24, 30, 31.

Golden Text: Rom. 1:16.

The Central Truth: Paul, a prisoner in bonds, became God's agent to liberate those in bondage to sin and led captive by the devil at his will. And this liberation was wrought by the preached gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

Scriptural Points.

1. The fateful storm had blown the ship about five hundred miles from Crete almost due west to Melita, which was five hundred miles south from Rome. Upon this island Paul and his company spent three months. Paul performed many miracles of healing and won the good will of the people of the island. He doubtless preached the gospel and won many converts to Jesus Christ; "who also honored us with many honors; and when we departed they laden us with such things as were necessary."

2. The first stop-over was at Syracuse, on the Island of Sicily. Thence they sailed to Rhegium, a town in the toe of the Italian boot. They next sailed to Puteoli, a town on the west coast, about a hundred miles from Rome. From here they made their way overland to Rome. At Appii Forum and the three taverns Christians from Rome met Paul and his party and extended greetings and a glad welcome. This greatly gladdened the apostle's soul, who "thanked God, and took courage."

3. Paul was again given special distinction in being allowed to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him. This must have been "his own hired house," mentioned in verse 30. He was given the privilege of free intercourse with his acquaintances and friends.

4. As soon as he became settled in his new quarters he sent for the Jews of Rome for a necessary conference. He explained that he was compelled to appeal unto Caesar, not to bring any accusation against his nation, but for his own self-preservation and to have the opportunity to bring them at Rome the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who is the Messiah promised in the law and the prophets.

5. These Roman Jews had not heard of Paul and his conflict with the Jews at Jerusalem. They had heard of the new religion, but only the testimony of its enemies,—"that everywhere it is spoken against."

6. A day was appointed for Paul to speak concerning this new faith. It was an all day meeting. Paul argued out of the Scriptures accepted by all Jews that Jesus of Nazareth was the Messiah and Savior therein set forth. Many questions were no doubt asked and answered. "Some believed, and some believed not."

7. For two years this prisoner, chained to a Roman soldier, embraced every opportunity to preach the gospel to all comers, and laid the foundations of the most influential church of Christendom.

Practical Points.

1. Sin enforces the most shameful slavery. There is nothing to be ashamed of but sin. "Jesus answered and said unto them, verily verily, I say unto you, whosoever commiteth sin is the servant of sin." John 8:34.

2. The farreaching program of Jesus Christ is to undo the hellish work of sin. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." Luke 4:18, 19.

3. In the forgiveness of sins there is blessed freedom from this galling bondage: "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. . . . If the Son therefore shall make you free ye shall be free indeed." John 8:32, 36.

4. It is the freedom of children to a Heavenly Father. "But as many as received him to them gave he power to become the son of God: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." John 1:12, 13;

5. It is the freedom of a pure heart and holy life. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6:17, 18.

6. It is the freedom of a mutual deadness to the world, with all its emoluments, allurements and power to harm. "But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Gal. 6:14

7. And it is the freedom of a complete life in Christ Jesus. "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." Gal. 2:20.—Word of Life.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

About that Missionary Contest of October 29th. It is for both Home and Foreign societies. We hope after the Christmas rush many of the auxiliaries will take time to use it. Those we have heard from, say it is very interesting and proved to be instructive. The names of those correct in answers will be printed later after we hear from more auxiliaries.

We are nearing the Christmas season, and thinking of the places to make happier by our gifts. As a suggestion to the committees in charge of distribution of gifts we use here an extract from a letter by Dr. Woodford:

As Christmas Approaches.

We appreciate very much the kind interest of our friends who wish to send Christmas presents to our students, but we believe that the time has come in the development of our work, when a good treat at Christmas time, both to the day school and the Sunday School is entirely sufficient. If you wish to contribute to this treat we would be glad to have you do so. Gifts to the school, that can be enjoyed by all, to be given out as needed is a much more satisfactory plan, and there are many needs of this kind. Wash cloths, soap, towels, handkerchiefs for boys and girls, stockings for boys and girls no. 8-10, socks no. 10-11, combs, pins, safety pins, work gloves, garter ribbons, tape, sewing thread, tooth brush, tooth paste, medicine such as salves, liniments, laxatives, disinfectants, adhesive tape &c., canned fruit, pickles, dried fruit, quilts and comforts for single and double beds, dark outing flannel blankets for single and double beds. Clean second hand clothing of all kinds especially for children for our cooperative store the proceeds of which go into our scholarship maintenance fund, which helps boys to work their way through school.

How To Ship Freight.

We find our road to Slade gets in bad condition when there is even a little rain, so it is likely we will not be able to haul much freight over it in winter.

The Mountain Central Railroad runs now whenever there is enough freight to make a load. Freight or express can, therefore be sent for us to Campton Junction and though it may be delayed, it is likely to reach us sometime.

We still prefer shipment by parcel post when not too large; direct to Pine Ridge, Wolfe County, Ky.

E. G. Lowdermilk, Supt.

Harris Chapel, Vance Ct. There has not been a report from this church in some time; but we are still moving along, not so fast perhaps as some of the churches.

Rev. M. P. Chambliss, our pastor last year, and again next, is also a student at Western Maryland College. That is a long way to come to preach, but he comes occasionally and preaches for us, and seems very much in earnest. We are looking forward to the time, when he will be through school and can stay with us all the time.

We had a glorious revival last July, Mr. Hethcock was Mr. Chambliss' help; he did fine preaching. I think there were eleven joined the church.

We have a very good school, not so good as it could be and should be. We will continue the Sunday school through the winter, and we are planning to have a Christmas tree.

THE POWER OF THE BLOOD.

Eph. 1:7; Rev. 1:6, 7, 14.

We have heard often of life being in the blood. Not long ago in Philadelphia a woman of 35 years suffered from anemia and upon the physician's advice was removed to a hospital. There it was determined that her life could be saved only by transfusion of blood. Her husband offered himself for the purpose. As she apparently was dying immediate action was taken. His arm was bared, he was etherized, his pulse artery severed and inserted into the large vein of his wife's left arm. Every beat of the man's heart sent a stream of warm blood into his wife's body. The effect was soon noticed, her strength returned and she fully recovered. Can one doubt her husband's love for her? Just so, can one doubt Christ's love, who gave His blood to redeem his enemies?—Expositor.

A CHALLENGE.

One of our good North Carolina laymen who can be relied upon to do what he says offers to refund the money if any pastor or laymen will send 40 cents to The Layman Co., 35 N. Dearborn St., Chicago, for literature on church finances, if the sender is not satisfied with what he gets for his 40 cents,

LITTLE TIM'S CHRISTMAS.

Tim was a newsboy.

He had no mother or father, the latter dying when he was a baby, while his mother died about a year before the opening of this story.

He was now 10 years old. All day he roamed the streets and sold papers. At night he stayed with an old lady, who rented two rooms of a house which was situated in a narrow and dark street. He paid her a part of his money, which he made selling papers, as rent for one of her rooms.

It was Christmas eve, and the old lady with whom Tim lived was going to move away. Her son had sent for her to come and live with him, and she was going to leave on Christmas eve.

Tim had no place to go, and he couldn't stay at this house any longer. Where should he go? What should he do? If he stayed out he would freeze, for it was snowing, and he might be covered by a great drift.

While he was wondering what to do, the wagon drove up to the door to move the old lady. Tim had gotten his little package of things ready, and was just telling the old lady good-by, when a carriage, which had two fine sorrels hitched to it, drove up to the door. A well-dressed man alighted and came to meet the old lady.

"Does a little newsboy live here?" he asked.

"Yes," said the old lady, pointing to Tim. "There he is."

Then he told them that he was Tim's uncle, and that about five years before he went West and invested in a mine, which had made him a rich man.

He had never heard from Tim's mother, who was his sister, while he was away. When he returned from the West, he learned that she had been dead about six months. He set to work to find her child, but did not have any success until a few days before he learned of Tim from an old man to whom Tim sold papers.

He took Tim to his home, which he bought on his return from the West. They arrived there late on Christmas eve. Tim went to bed early, and you may be sure Santa Claus did not forget him. On waking, he found candy, nuts, fruits, tops, marbles, blocks, a drum, a ball, a sled, and, what he liked best of all, a pair of skates. Tim went coasting and skating, and only came in the house once all day, and that was to eat his dinner.

At night before he was tucked away in his little bed, he said it was the happiest Christmas he had ever spent.—Selected.

A CHRISTMAS GIFT FOR PATRICIA'S MOTHER.

By Frances Margaret Fox.

Patricia surprised her mother the day before Christmas when she said, "How I wish we were poor folks instead of being rich!"

"That is a queer wish," Patricia's lovely mother answered.

She and her ten-year-old daughter were busy that afternoon tying blue and pink sashes on a bushel-basket full of dolls that were to be taken that very Christmas Eve to be put in Christmas stockings at the orphanage.

"I hope you do not mean that you would like to be an orphan!"

"No, mother dear," was the laughing answer. "I mean that I wish we were poor folks just for Christmas, so I could give my mother a real Christmas present! Oh, don't be worried," Patricia added as her mother looked more surprised than ever. "Of course all we children have presents for you. You ought to know that, because father told you right out what he took us shopping for last week, and you can't guess what I picked out for you: but a real Christmas present is different. If you were a poor mother and I were a poor little girl I would have to earn a Christmas gift for you somehow, the way poor little girls always do in books, and you would keep that Christmas present always, and it would be a loving kind of a gift, don't you see?"

"Yes, Patricia," mother answered slowly, "I do understand what you mean; but, my child, there is a gift I long for now, and only you can give it to me."

"Why, mother, what is it?"

As Patricia asked the question she tied a pink sash so carelessly one loop of the bow reached the curly hair of the doll she held and the other loop touched the wee black slipper.

"Didn't I show you how to tie the sashes?" mother inquired, pointing toward the doll.

"Yes, mother, and I will tie that sash over again. Please tell me what I can give you, mother?"

"You may if you will, give me a Christmas gift that I will appreciate, Patricia. I would like to have you promise to do well, whatever you do, as your mother has tried to teach you."

"Honestly, mother, would you call a promise a real Christmas present?" Patricia inquired as she untied the carelessly made bow and did a perfect one.

Patricia laughed merrily because she thought her mother was joking.

Just then an automobile stopped in front of the house and when Patricia ran to the window two little girls in the back seat motioned for her to come.

"Kathie and Edie are here early for me to go with them to make Christmas towels for the orphans at their Aunt Mabel's. There will be fifty girls at their Aunt Mabel's party, and we are each to hem a towel. Won't it be fun to hem Christmas towels for orphans?"

A few minutes later Patricia danced down the front steps swinging a blue satin work-bag and calling to her mother, "I promise you, mother, that I will take fine pretty stitches, carefully, just as you have taught me! I won't hurry not even for Santa Claus. I am starting your Christmas present."

"It is a beautiful Christmas present," Patricia's lovely mother said so earnestly Patricia knew her words were not a joke.

The little girls had a delightful time at Aunt Mabel's Christmas party that day. They played games for an hour and almost forgot that they had been invited to sew for the orphans until Aunt Mabel asked them to get their work-baskets and be seated. Then she asked them to thread their needles and put on their thimbles while she passed the towels.

"Now do your best, girls," Aunt Mabel said to them, "because your stitches will be your special Christmas gifts to the little orphans. Now if you are ready, we will listen while we sew, to Christmas music from New York, over my new radio."

Patricia suddenly felt solemn as she heard the unseen choir begin singing "O Little Town of Bethlehem." Her first stitch was perfect. "Christmas stitches," she thought to herself, and made another perfect stitch. Instead of thinking about the orphans as the music of the far-away choir filled the room, Patricia thought of her mother. She made another perfect stitch, slowly, and another.

Patricia looked at her row of pretty stitches and was glad. "I am keeping promise," she thought, just as the choir began singing joyfully, "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing!"

When the concert was over, half the towels were finished and Patricia was the only one who had not yet hemmed one end. Then the fun began. Those who had finished their towels and had written their names with lead-pencils in the corners as they were asked to do, began teasing the others,—the "slow-pokes."

"Guess Patricia has been dreaming," some one ventured at last.

"She is as slow as molasses," said another.

"Your orphan will grow up before you get your towel done," a third little girl suggested. It seemed as if every one of the fifty had something to say.

Patricia's cheeks grew redder and redder because she didn't enjoy being the last one to finish her work and so keep the others waiting.

"I am making this towel for my mother," she explained as she slowly and carefully made another perfect stitch and another and another.

"Why, no," her friend Kathie protested. "Aunt Mabel bought those towels for the orphans!"

"Oh, I know that," Patricia answered patiently. "I mean I promised mother that I will do well whatever I try to do,—that is all. Do not wait for me, go on with your games. I am happy."

Patricia was happy. She played that every little stitch was saying, "Merry Christmas" to Patricia's mother. I will try to be as straight and perfect as a Christmas angel."

At last Patricia finished her towel and wrote her name in the corner. Then the children were invited to the big dining-room for ice-cream and cake. Later, when they were gathered in the living-room again they found six sewing teachers from the public schools talking and laughing with Aunt Mabel.

"You didn't know, girls," explained Aunt Mabel, as she turned toward her guests, "that your work was to be judged. These friends of mine who teach little girls how to sew, came to tell me which towel is most perfectly hemmed. One of our Christmas towels looks as if the flower fairies made the stitches. The little girl who did the work is to receive a prize. Her name is Patricia. Come, Patricia, if you please, and accept your prize; it is the most perfect work-box I could buy in all New York, fitted with gold thimble, young lady size, and scissors and tape-line and everything needed for sewing. Merry Christmas, Patricia," Aunt Mabel finished as she handed the exquisite work-box to the surprised little girl, and "Merry Christmas, Merry Christmas!" echoed all the children.

As for Patricia, she believed herself to be the happiest child in her home city when the stars shone out that Christmas Eve, and she gave her mother the Christmas gift she earned because she kept her promise.

"We don't have to be poor after all!" Patricia said as she danced for joy.

"No mother would be poor if she didn't have a cent in the world, if she had a little daughter like you," answered Patricia's mother, softly.

"And will you keep the work-box all your life the way poor mothers of poor little girls do in books?" Patricia inquired with shining eyes.

"I will," answered her mother. "I shall be proud to show it to my grandchildren and tell them the whole Christmas story!"

"And tell them," added Patricia as she ran away to call her brothers and sisters, "tell them that this was a Merry, Merry Christmas at our house."—Selected.

A CHRISTMAS GUEST.

Jennie M. Bingham, in The Christian.

The slow-moving car wheels turned a few times with the greatest reluctance, groaned and stopped. The engine, throwing out great jerks of noise and steam, stuck its nose in the snow bank and shuddered. The engineer, fireman and conductor met in the caboose for a brief conference. The conductor went back to tell the impatient people in the crowded coach. At that moment he was not popular.

"The junction's only six miles," said a prosperous-looking man, "and there they have a snow plow."

"You can take your choice," said the conductor severely, "of staying here and freezing to death, or walking a few rods to the village—Greenwood—hotel there. Tomorrow if it stops snowing and they can get the snow plow through from the junction, we'll get somewhere."

A man in the back of the car swore softly, and some women burst forth into hysterical exclamation. They had been to the city to buy presents, and a group of people were going home for the holiday.

It was Christmas Eve.

The trainman trampled a path to the station and to the little hotel just beyond. Greenwood was absolutely white, save for the gray sky which bent over it and from which was falling an incessant storm of snowflakes.

It was a sullen procession that stamped its way into the village inn. The only happy man was the very excited hotel keeper, who assured everybody of accommodations and who called loudly for the cook, the chambermaid and the sort of porter to wait on his guests.

The last man to enter was a big round-faced fellow in a fur overcoat.

He was a traveling man—everyone knew that—from his well-worn cowhide sample case to his generous air of owning the universe. He hung back when everybody was clamoring for a room.

"Guess I won't show any bristles, seeing it's Christmas Eve," he said. And when everything had been taken, and some rooms in private houses, and the benches in the office, he asked cheerfully.

"Got any hay in the mow, George?" The host turned to greet a young man just entering, who shook the snow from his long coat and looked about pleasantly. Soon he extended his hand to the commercial man.

"I have a spare bed," he said, "in a room just big enough to turn around in, and you're welcome to it."

"Good enough. I'm with you, if the bed can stand the snore of a full-grown man."

He picked up his bag and followed his guide out into the snow. As they walked along his host remarked, "It's a very humble parsonage home, but my wife welcomes—"

The big man stopped and actually stammered, "You don't look the part Governor—I mean, Reverend—Downing. See here, I can sleep on the dining-room table down at the tavern."

"Nothing of the sort," declared the young man, taking hold of the big arm; "my wife would never forgive me—on Christmas Eve. We've got some pork and beans for supper. Maybe you're a New Englander?"

"You bet I am—from the ground up. Why. Plymouth Rock should have been set up in our front yard."

The Parsonage Guest.

And just here they turned in at a small white house, looking bleak against the gray sky. A little three-year-old girl came running to greet her father, and the minister's wife, clad in a big blue-check apron, came in answer to a call for "Betsey." She was dishing pork and beans and cutting molasses cake, and she had a shy manner which the guest thought rather fetching.

"I'm Wellington," he explained, "traveling for Hyde, Lowe & Co., of Chicago, drug specialties. Been at it five years."

It was easy to see that the minister was very much in love with his wife. He complimented her on the pork and beans, and her new dress (which the guest thought almost ugly), and on her red-raised baby of a year old; indeed, he left nothing for the guest to say.

She blushed and protested, "Now Winthrop, please" and then he would tell how pretty she looked the first time he ever saw her. He had to go out "to catch an official member" as soon as he had cleared the table and wiped the dishes.

He had been seated by the fire in the sitting room and was trying to make friends with the little people, who seemed afraid of his size and loud voice. But presently their mother undressed them and put on little bath robes, rather faded and dingy, to be sure, but soft and warm, and sat down in the rocker with her baby in her arms. There was a stool for the little girl, but Mr. Wellington saw his advantage and was quick to follow it up.

"Come here, little maid-o'-the-mist and let me rock you (that's the name of my favorite toilet soap)."

She looked him over carefully, and, encouraged by a smile from her mother, was lifted up in his lap.

"Sing, muvver," she said.

"Oh, not tonight," protested mother. The baby gurgled out some roaring sounds.

"There!" said the guest, "the little 'un is calling for the soloist, too. Don't stop on my account."

"How wonderful that you can understand the baby," laughed the mother, happily. "His father says he can't understand a word he says. It must be you have a baby."

He was rocking the little girl. "Cuddle up, little maid-o'-the-mist, and mother'll sing."

And she did. It was a lullaby in a sort of minor tune:

A Babe lies in the cradle,

A little Babe so dear,

With noble light He shineth,

As shines a mirror clear,

This little Babe so dear.

Whoso would rock the cradle

Where lies the gentle Child,

A lowly heart must lead him,

By passion undefiled,

As Mary pure and mild.

O Jesus, Babe beloved!

O Jesus, Babe divine.

How mighty is Thy wondrous love!

Fill thou this heart of mine

With that great love of Thine!

When she had finished, the baby was asleep and was forthwith tucked up in his crib. It was the little maid's bedtime, too.

"Not quite yet," pleaded the guest. "This is Christmas Eve." He liked the feeling of the little child in his arms, and she liked it, too.

A Christmas Story.

"Tell a story, muvver," she said, and the big man, looking wonderfully benignant in the firelight, aided and abetted, "Of course, a story; who said a story? All of us."

She had started a protest, but instead she began, "Years ago, away across the sea, were some shepherds taking care of their sheep by night—"

"And lambs, too," interjected a sleepy voice.

"Oh, yes, the lambs, too, and all at once they heard beautiful music away up in the sky—the beautifullest music ever was, and there were angels singing—"

"Wiv fleecy wings?" asked the sleepy voice.

"Yes, and they sang about a little Baby in a manger who had just been born, and who would love everyone and make them happy. And the shepherds started out to find the baby—Jesus.”

“And did the little lambs go, too?”

“You just bet they did,” cried the big man, very much interested; “’twas their chance. Maybe the biggest, best shepherds took one under each arm—who knows now?—and they took all their children, too—Harry and Walter and Betsy, and—what’s your name? Oh, yes, Helen—well, Helen got right in on the ground floor—she had a reserved seat, as you might say. She was the nice little girl of the best shepherd.”

His enthusiasm was carrying him away. He turned apologetically to the story-teller: “Don’t know as it says all that in the Bible,” he muttered; “not unless it’s a new edition.”

She was smiling, and she answered softly, “We know this—He gave the children the best place.”

Helen was asleep and was carried to the small bed next the baby’s crib. Then the minister’s wife brought out the two stockings—the tiny one for baby and the larger one for Helen.

“Of course the baby won’t know what it means, but Helen would be broken-hearted if baby was left out. Winthrop made a rattle-boy for baby out of a baking-powder can, and a wagon for Helen out of a starch box. And I made a rag doll and dressed it up fine. I’ll show you.” She was very proud of their handicraft. He admired it all.

“When you get tired of running a gospel shop, you can make automobile bodies and artificial ladies in store windows,” he said cheerfully.

She brought out two bright picture books. “My father and mother sent these. They have never seen the children. I went home with my first baby five years ago, and I was so glad I did, because he didn’t live, and father and mother took such comfort with him.”

“Ought to go every year.”

“I’ve planned to go twice since, but just couldn’t. Father is a superannuated preacher (so they call them, and he and mother are the dearest people in the world. I’m their only living child.” Her voice trembled a little. “Of course I’ve sent the children’s pictures, and I treasure up every word they say to write to them, but father is growing blind and mother has rheumatism dreadfully, but she makes gingerbread boys, just as she used to for me, and sends them ’way out here to the kiddies. But here I am talking about myself all the time. Tell me about your family.”

Another Story.

He did not respond at first, and she hastened to say, “Oh, forgive me. Maybe it’s too sad. I know you love children. Helen never goes to strangers. Please don’t tell anything.”

“Guess I’m going to want to after a minute,” he answered in a thick voice. “No, ma’am. I’m single at thirty-two and likely to stay so, and as for children, they are more or less a nuisance. I see ’em on trains. When you see ’em at home it’s different, but I don’t see ’em there. Didn’t have much bringing up myself, and my sister married a good-for-nothing, and I had to help her with the young ’uns. But one day I saw in the hotel at headquarters a peach of a girl. She had charge of the linen, and she wasn’t painted, stuccoed, giggling, what’ll-you-offer kind. She walked around as if she was saying her prayers, so calm, and not seeing you—rather sad-looking, too. Oh, she was deep. She got me and then, madam, I found she had a child hidden away. She was paying for it and wasn’t going to say a word, and just spring that brat on me after the minister had latched us up. Now, I can’t stand lying. It makes me mad clear through. When I gave judgment, she just said she loved the child and she should never give it up—and, ma’am, we went different ways, and I don’t put up at that tavern, and I’ve never seen her. I’m a little quick ma’am, and I told her where to go.”

The minister’s wife did not answer. The flame leaped up and her face showed plainly in the firelight. Her cheeks were wet.

“Poor child,” she said gently, “that’s the way mother’s love—real mothers, and she was a real mother.”

“She’s a lying mother!” he said sharply.

“I know—that was very wrong. She should have trusted your generous heart and told you all, but if ever there could be excuse for lying, it would be in such a case. She never lied about anything else? No, of course not. And did she tell you about the child?”

“Oh, yes. It had red hair,” and then he stopped, embarrassed, “and it was a year old, and it had a tooth or two—maybe a whole set—I don’t remember.”

“Just like my dear baby.”

“Yes, ma’am, I thought of her all the time you was a-holding it. I kept thinkin’ and thinkin’ o’ her. She’s sort of your kind, too—not a bit like me. I sent her some money afterwards, but she sent it back.”

“Of course. Poor little mother, and poor kiddie boy. And such a father as you could be to him.”

“I guess you don’t know me, ma’am, and you wouldn’t expect me to take that baby.”

She looked up at him with a happy laugh and raised her finger warningly. “You are wishing for him this minute, and for the mother who gave up everything for the child she loved. And you are going to find her and tell her so.”

He gave a most ungracious grunt, and just then the minister came home, and it was bed time, and the next morning was too lovely for anything. Betsy gave her husband a book which he had been wanting for months and he gave her a gold pin (frightful extravagance!), and the little people were very happy and the minister included the guest in his prayer, and the guest said, “Amen!” right out loud.

He found he couldn’t pay any board bill, but in about ten days thereafter Betsy had a letter from him:

Dear Mrs. Downing: The inclosed check is to take you to see the old folks. Don’t delay very long, because the angels are just waiting around for such people as that superannuated minister and his wife, wanting to hustle ’em into heaven, where they’ll feel most awfully at home, I’m thinking. Take Helen and the red-haired baby. I’ve got a red-haired baby myself and I can understand every blamed thing it says; it talks Choctaw. I am to be married to a very nice woman; just your style. Next year we are going to have a Christmas for our kiddie, just like yours. Thanking you for past business and soliciting your patronage for the future, I am respectfully.

P. S.—Please tell me where in the Bible that story was that you told. I don’t know whether to look in Abraham, Isaac or Jacob. Also kiss the young ’uns for me, especially the red-haired one.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Glen Raven Church.—We are glad to have Mr. Williams and family returned to us for another year.

The church has been growing in number of members, and we think spiritually. We have some faithful workers in different lines of church work. There is a men’s prayer meeting held at the church every Sunday morning at 8:30. The Ladies’ Aid Society has been doing some faithful work. There is one organized Christian Endeavor Society; and the mid-week prayer meeting is held at the church every week, led by some layman most of the time. The Sunday school is alive and growing. We have a faithful superintendent, if he is not there on time Sunday morning, we think something unusual has happened. The Baraca class out grew the old room, so the class built a new one which it is now occupying. After some delay the pastor and family are enjoying electric lights in the parsonage. Reporter.

Pleasant Grove.—Our work for the new conference year is starting off fine at this point. We held our first quarterly conference soon after the close of the annual conference. We had a good harmonious conference. Pastor’s salary was raised to $1600 and ordered paid monthly. They also added the annual conference budget to salary and ordered that it be paid to pastor monthly. This is a first step forward and one that every church ought to take. This relieves the pastor of all financial anxiety and worry, and enables him to do better work. Then, too, monthly payment of budget means that conference claims can be handled with embarrassment to no one. These people are to be commended for taking this forward step.

Brother Arville Cecil, one of our best members, has been sick for several weeks. He was suffering from high blood pressure before conference, and is still shut in. Dr. York, his attending physician, thinks he will be out soon. We miss him and his good work in our Sunday school and church work. They are faithful. Mrs. G. L. Hilton, another very faithful member and teacher in the Sunday school, was kept from church Sunday on account of some trouble with her eye. We hope she will not have to be out long. Miss Vashti Albertson has returned from the hospital where she underwent an operation for appendicitis. Glad to see her at church Sunday.

Mrs. O. W. Cecil, 112 Newton street High Point, was baptized and received into the church Sunday. We welcome Mrs. Cecil to our church, and feel that in her we will have a faithful member. We have other applicants who will be received later.

Superintendent Teague is very much elated over the large attendance at Sunday school last Sunday. The attendance was the largest in the history of the school.

The young people's C. E. Societies are taking on new life. Last meeting was largely attended.

We wish to thank the families of Bros. I. A. Teague and B. E. Payne for substantial gifts for the table. These gifts were in quantities sufficient to keep the table supplied with vegetables for several days. We also thank Bro. Hubert Payne for 15 gals oil for the range. Bro. Hubert is son of B. E. Payne, of Pleasant Grove, and lives in High Point. He is in the employ of the Southern oil Co. of this city and has a beautiful home on English street. He professed faith in Christ at our last special meeting at the Grove. He has a good christian wife and one small son to make his home pleasant and happy. With Jesus as their guide and helper, they have a bright future. A little more than a year ago they were called upon to give up their youngest child but this, we hope, will only draw them closer to him.

Our young folks are preparing a nice Christmas program to be rendered on the night of December 24th.

G. L. Reynolds, Pastor.

Toluca Charge.—The pastor for the Toluca charge, J. M. Morgan, presented a wonderful sermon at Hebron Church December 6th.

The people of this community was glad to know that God had directed Brother Morgan back to the Toluca charge. He has done great work in this community in the past but expects to accomplish more in the near future.

With the aid of Brother Morgan the people of this community expects to erect a Tabernacle near Toluca where annual meetings will be held.

As the Fallston charge has been divided, will also be erected some where near Toluca. Plans for a parsonage are being discussed. It

Bess Chapel and Budgets.—As soon after conference as possible the first quarterly conference was held. The every-member canvass and the duplex envelopes were recommended and adopted. The pastor went with the stewards on the every member canvass,—explained the budgets and in most instances secured a separate pledge for the budgets. The loose change at the regular offerings, with few exceptions, was given to the budgets. The special services, Christmas, Easter, Children's Day, and Rally day were observed and special offerings taken for the budgets. The Christian Endeavor Society promised to try to raise $50.00 on the budgets. They gave a play at the consolidated school building, and cleared more than $50. Of this amount $40. was given to the budgets and $10. to the endowment of High Point College. A Woman's Home Missionary Society was organized and secured some funds for the budget. Tithing literature was introduced and given out once a month at the regular services. By the above method we secured all the annual conference budget, and right much on the General Conference Budget on a charge that previously paid practically nothing on either budget. A similar plan is being followed this year, with the addition of the Woman's Home Missionary Society's renting three acres of land to grow cotton for missions. System, information, and adaptation of plans to local church will aid greatly in raising the budgets.

E. A. Bingham.

Bess Chapel.—The work for the new year has started off nicely. The Woman's Home Missionary Society held a special service on Thanksgiving Day. Every one seemed to enjoy the service fine. The Sunday school is making special preparation for the Christmas service. We are also thinking of having a Christmas tree.

The pastor and family were given a surprise pounding on Thanksgiving morning. We will only mention a few articles received: turkey, cord of good wood, pumpkins, irish and sweet potatoes, sugar, corn, cereals, canned goods of different kinds and fresh meat. They are still bringing fresh meat. It was a glad surprise, and made us real happy on Thanksgiving Day. We appreciate the gifts and the givers, and pray God's blessings upon them.

E. A. Bingham.

Graham.—We have been busy here at Graham since conference. We are delighted to have our pastor, Brother Williams, with us again. He has been giving us some thoughtful and needed sermons. Tonight he preached on "The Fear of Man," using as his text. Prov. 29.25, "Fear of man bringeth forth a snare, but whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be saved."

We were glad to have Rev. C. B. Way with us at the morning service. He preached a splendid sermon from St. John 13:15. "For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you."

At the night service the Men's Quartette, Bros. P. B. and C. E. Core, Shatterly and Steele sang an impressive song, "My Precious Saviour."

We were glad to have with us last Sunday a Men's Quartette from Henderson, Bros. C. M. Core, C. E. Core, Hight and Holmes, who gave us special music at both services.

The first quarterly conference was held at the church Saturday evening, November 28th, at 7:00 o'clock, with a good attendance.

The Ladies' Aid and Mrs. Williams' Sunday school class gave a Brunswick Stew and barbecue dinner on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week. About twenty-five dollars was realized.

The Christmas program is being prepared under the direction of Mrs. Arthur Williams. It is to be given on Wednesday night before Christmas. All church members and Sunday school members are urged to come out and help make this service a success.

E. C. R., Reporter.

Greenville Ct.—To the officials: Take due notice hereof and govern yourselves accordingly. Be sure that you attend first quarterly conference—to convene at Mathews Chapel on Saturday before 3rd Sunday, 19th day of December, 1925. Bring good reports. Let's start the year with a record conference.

Pastor will preach at 11 o'clock; lunch for members of quarterly conference. Afterlunch, transaction of the business of charge.

Don't fail me. Rev. H. L. Powell, Pastor.

Mt. Pleasant Ct., Mt. Pleasant Church.—On Thanksgiving night 50 people of Mt. Pleasant church visited the parsonage, all bringing something good to eat. A real pounding. We hereby express our sincere thanks to them for their kindness. May the good Lord bless them. We would be glad to give each name but it would require too much space in the paper. Several of the brethren and sisters remembered us with good gifts before and after the special pounding. One brought us a fine turkey for Thanksgiving. We hope to show our appreciation of all this kindness.

G. F. and Mary Millaway.

Ashboro.—Just a few lines to say that next Sunday will be known as Young People's Day at our church and the pastor will preach Sunday morning on The Call to Service. We are hoping to have a goodly number of young people present.

Next Sunday afternoon we are to conduct our every-member canvass for the new year. And this time we are trying a new plan. The Stewards will be at the church Sunday afternoon from 2—4 o'clock and the people are asked to come and make their pledge.

Two new members, Mrs. Pritchard and Mrs. Hal Hammer Walker, were received last Sunday, and we are hoping to have several more to be received next Sunday.

J. E. Pritchard.

Effland, Orange Charge.—Regular preaching service was held Sunday night at 7 o'clock. Brother Williams preached a good sermon. "Whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so unto them," being his subject. The collection went to the Near East Relief.

Plans are underway for a pageant for Christmas. The Woman's Missionary Society is directing the pageant.

Our Sunday school observed Golden Rule Sunday. A special collection was taken for the Near East which amounted to $11.20.

Mrs. E. S. Taylor, Reporter.

Spencer.—Our new work is starting off fine. We are looking to the Lord for great things this year. We are undertaking big things. But we have a big God to look to for big things.

We have received a number of kind letters in the past few months with donations in them. We sincerely thank every one of these dear friends, and pray God's richest blessing on every one of them. Or it is so helpful to have real friends to help in time of need. You all know we have had three years of trial. I was under a dark cloud for one whole year. And my poor wife has been in the valley and shadow of death for two whole years and 30 days. And is no better. And never will be any better. I do not know how much longer she has got to wait in the valley before she crosses over. I do not know how many more long nights we will have to watch by her bedside, and keep the fires burning before she goes home.

We thank our own dear daughter for leaving her home and coming to her mother's bedside to wait on her dear old mother until the end comes, let that be soon or late. No one else can take her place with her mother. I am giving her $20.00 per week to stay right with her mother so I can go out and preach a little more before I go home. I told my daughter I thought I could make enough some way to pay her and keep us all eating. I love to work until the end comes. I thank God for friends.

I did enjoy the Conference so much. It was a good big conference. May our Father bless all the brethren. Pray for us.

Your brother and truest friend.

D. A. Braswell.

Shiloh, North Davidson Circuit.—Everything is running smoothly at Shiloh. Our Sunday school is lively and well attended. We are looking forward to Christmas, when we expect to honor the Christ Child in a service of prayer, verse and song.

We are proud of our Christian Endeavor Society. The members are a bunch of wide awake young people. They had charge of the evening service Sunday evening at 7.30 and rendered such a good programme that pastor and people are glad to give them the praise they deserve. There was a good crowd present, considering some were kept away by the death of Grandma Evans. The offering was fifteen dollars. We are expecting great things from them in the future.

John, Richard, Floyd and Carl, all sons of our class leader, Mr. Jeff Berrier, are bearing the expense of painting the church both inside and outside. We rejoice in the fact that, though their home is in Florida, they still remember the church back home where sleeps their beloved mother. We are thankful that our home boys hold fast their love for their home church, and that the roar and din of the city does not smother its call. Possibly that is one secret of their success.

We are glad that Mrs. Troxler is able to be with us in our different church services again. We hope she may soon be able to take an active part once more.

The Wednesday evening prayer meetings are pretty well attended, and they are an inspiration to all who go. It carries one back to the days of Wesley, when God's Spirit burned in men's hearts, and lost men and women learned that religion was worth while. If you feel your spirits drooping, just visit our prayer meeting on Wednesday evening as on the first Sunday morning at 11 o'clock and hear the testimonies of fellow Christians. It is uplifting. Mrs. Wiley Shoaf, Rep.

Mt. Zion.—We do not report as often as we did awhile nevertheless things continue to happen and the Sunday school is still running.

Our average keeps up well considering the fact that there is at present an epidemic of matrimony raging in the midst of our young people.

To start with back early in the spring Miss Lertna Mikles married and moved to Reidsville, N. C. Recently Mr. Roy Stone and Miss Sula Westmoreland married and moved to Winston-Salem, N. C. This wedding was followed by another. Mr. Charlie R. Mikles and Miss Addie Stone married and departed to "Raney Gap" on the top of the Blue Ridge Mountain. Mr. Mikles is principal of the public school at that place.

These young people were all very enthusiastic Sunday school and church workers, so when we lose four or six of our best workers at one clip it hurts.

We miss these dear people in many ways, but we hope and pray them God-speed, and may their interest in Sunday school and church never become less, but may they realize more fully than ever the great importance of their "staying in" and doing more than they have ever done for the Master's cause.

We are glad indeed to have Rev. A. L. Hunter for pastor again, all interested in the advancement of Christian duties on this charge I feel sure are exceedingly glad Bro. Hunter is to serve us as pastor for the coming year.

Last third Sunday at 11 o'clock Rev. Raleigh Hunter preached for us using the subject, "The Glory of God." Those of you who have heard Bro. Raleigh preach know without my telling you that he was fine. For those who have never had the privilege of hearing him I will say that the sermon was very plainly and beautifully delivered and everyone present enjoyed it to the utmost.

We have had two burials at Mt. Zion recently; Mr. Egbert S. Culler, who was a member at Mt. Zion. Mrs. Joe McDowell, a member of the M. E. South church at Siloam, N. C.

Last Sunday night at 7 o'clock we had prayer meeting at Mt. Zion conducted by Mr. W. D. Rierson; a goodly crowd was present and good interest shown.

We will have a Christmas entertainment this year.

May this be the very best year our conference has ever known and may there be a great gathering of souls as a beautiful harvest this year. May God's blessings ever be with us. C. W. Allen, Reporter.

First quarterly conference will convene on Saturday before third Sunday in December at 10 o'clock P. M. with Pinnacle church.

Let every official at least be present at this conference because it is very important that we start the new year right.

C. W. Allen, Sec. Qt. Conf.

Spring Valley, Vance Circuit.—This is our first report on the new conference year, but we have not been asleep. We have been at work. We are indeed glad to have Brother Chambers come back to serve us this year, and we intend to cooperate with him in every way we can to make this the most successful year we have ever had.

Our Sunday school is doing nicely. This morning was a beautiful morning and we had a goodly number present for services.

We are continuing with our mid-week prayer services each week, and we hope to gain many souls for the Master in these meetings this year.

The H & T Young People's League had an oyster supper on November 21st, and the clear proceeds amounted to $37.56. This will be used to help on our additional Sunday school rooms, which we hope to get started on in the near future.

On last Sunday night we held a Thanksgiving service at the church. The Woman's Home Missionary Society opened their Thanksgiving Boxes. The amount raised was $11.64. We wish it could have been more.

We are making plans for a Christmas entertainment now.

Pray for our success at Spring Valley. Reporter.

Tabernacle Charge.—We took up the work on this charge the first Sunday after conference. We have made one round on the charge and have preached at all of the churches. The congregations have been good and the attention they have given to the word has been inspiring. The people are kind to us and speak well of the former pastors. We think this a good indication. When people speak well of former pastors it makes us feel like they will speak well of us when we pass on. And when they speak unkindly of former pastors we are fearful they will speak that way about us when we pass on.

We held our first quarterly conference at Tabernacle Saturday, the 5th. The attendance was not as good as we had hoped for but those present seemed very much interested in the work. All the business was transacted in a spirit of love. Some matters were discussed, and some suggestions were made that give promise of a good year. May we all work and pray for a successful year on all of our charges. Edw. Suits.

PRESIDENTIAL MORTALITY.

Three defeated candidates for President of the United States appeared in the Supreme Court room simultaneously recently. This moved an eastern Weekly to a census which shows that there are but five living men who have been defeated nominees of major political parties for the White House—and only one living ex-President. The relative longevity of those who "run" and "lose" compared with those who "win" and "serve"—a ratio of five to one—might be an exhibit to prove the devastating wear and tear of the Presidential burden on human resistance. On the comparative oblivion that has swallowed most of these ex-candidates, since the incandescent hour when they stood momentarily in the sun, might invite a thesis on the mutability of fame. You might try and name this quintet yourself—before reading farther. One or two will occur to you readily enough. But a "perfect score" will be denied most readers. Our one living ex-President, of course, is Chief Justice Taft of the Supreme Court. Our five living ex-would-be-Presidents also includes Justice Taft—and ex-Secretary of State Hughes—and ex-Ambassador John W. Davis—and ex-Governor Jimmy Cox—and ex-Judge Alton B. Parker.

THE NORTH WIND LOVES MOUNTAINS.

The South wind loves gardens
Softly there to blow
Up and down the leafy ways
Where daffodils grow;
And roses pink and white
Bloom for his delight,
The South wind loves a garden
With summer blossoms bright.

The West wind loves valleys—
Sheltered and still,
At the hour of sunset
He tiptoes down the hill,
When stars light the sky
He croons a lullaby—
The West wind loves a valley
Where gray shadows lie.

The East wind loves islands,
Set on tropic seas,
Gleaming, white shored
Fringed with palm trees.
Where jungle ferns grow,
He wanders to and fro,
The East wind loves an island
Where spicy odors blow.

The North wind loves mountains
Bleak and bare and white,
He piles the snow on green hills
And tucks them out of sight.
He swoops triumphant, down
Or valley, field, and town,
He locks the brook in chains of ice
As on his way he goes,
The North wind loves the mountains
For he's monarch of the snows.

WHAT DID HE SAY?

A Cockney pupil I had once;
Though strange his speech, he was no dunce
"Name the vowels in order," said I.
He began with the product of the fields—
when it's dry;
And then gave a pronoun, his knowledge to show
Of grammar, I thought. Then he mentioned "not now."
Then spoke of an implement gardeners employ;
And lastly, a tint. What a comical boy!

HABIT, AS SEEN BY THE POET AND BY THE SCIENTIST.

The poet says:
Habit at first is but a silken thread,
Fine as the light-winged gossamers that sway
In the warm sunbeams of a summer's day;
A shallow streamlet, rippling o'er its bed.
A yet unhardened tann upon the spray;
A lion's whelp that has not scented prey;
A little smiling child obedient led.
Beware! that thread may bind thee as a chain
That streamlet rather to a fatal sea;
That sapling spread into a gnarled tree;
That thorn, grown hard, may wound and give thee pain;
That playful whelp his murderousfangs reveal;

That child, a giant, crush thee 'neath his heel.
Dr. Frederick C. Spurr, a scientist says:
Habit has a physical basis. The continual repetition of certain actions sets up a movement in the grey matter of the brain by which a kind of pathway is cut, as a road is made on earth by the perpetual passing of traffic, or the continual trampling of feet over it. Once the road is made travelers naturally tread it. And once the physico-mental road is made in the brain newcomers always take it as the easiest way. So the nervous system is gradually changed by repeated action and becomes either our friend or our enemy. Man finds himself bound by it—its victim. When the nervous system becomes our tyrant, we may well cry out, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death,"

Daphne: "I want to give Harold a surprise for his birthday—can you suggest something?"

Corah: "Tell him your age, darling."

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Evans.

Sarah Elizabeth Evans was born July 31, 1860, and died November 28, 1925. In the year 1881 she was married to Albert Hill Evans, who preceded her in death about fifteen years ago. To the union were born seven children, Little Odell died in infancy. Their first born son, Albert Hill Evans, Jr., of sainted memory, died four years ago. Those who survive are Harvey Evans of Baltimore, Will Evans of High Point, John Evans of Lexington, and Jess Evans and Mrs. D. L. Koontz of near Lexington. One brother and 25 grand children also survive.

She was converted and joined the church in her childhood, and remained faithful to the day of her death. On November 30 she was laid to rest by the side of her husband in the Still Church cemetery under a mound of beautiful flowers, after a funeral service in the church conducted by her pastor, Rev. R. S. Troxler, and assisted by her former pastor, Dr. C. L. Whitaker. The songs were both appropriate and beautiful. By request, Dr. Whitaker, whose songs she enjoyed so much while lying flat on her back with a broken hip, sang that beautiful song, "Shall the Circle be Unbroken." He also paid a beautiful tribute to Grandma Evans, whom he knew and loved so well while her pastor. He said that to him hers was a most beautiful face because it radiated the beauty of her soul.

Grandma had been almost an invalid for two years as the result of a fall which broke her hip. But so patient and cheerful was she that her pastor found it a joy and an inspiration to sit with her and sing the songs she so much loved. Hers was an unassuming life, and yet it has been to us a joy that shall always be to us a sweet remembrance. Her chief concern was her children, and for them she never ceased to pray. When she received a letter from one of her boys not very long ago telling her that he had given God his life, she said she felt like throwing her stick away and walking alone, she was so happy.

Grandma was sick only about 24 hours and her death was as unassuming as her life. So quietly did she slip away that those watching by her side knew not when she took her departure. Who would not rejoice to slip away and be with Jesus? Let us try to follow her to that Good Land. Mrs. Wiley L. Shoaf.

Mrs. Etta Alfred Ferguson.

Mrs. Etta Ferguson, November 22, 1888,—November 29, 1925. Age 37 years, 7 days. Succumbed to pneumonia which came as a complication to a long siege of poor health.

She was converted in early life and joined the Methodist Protestant Church of Gibsonville. She was one of those rare Christian spirits that was but little seen but much beloved by those fortunate enough to know her. She was devout as a Christian and devoted to the church she loved, upon whose services she was a faithful attendant as long as she was physically able.

She was buried from the church of her membership Monday, 3 P. M., November 30, —Be sure you're right, then go ahead.

1925, in the presence of an overflowing congregation, whose presence and floral offerings were a token of the esteem with which she was held by the community. Rev. G. H. Hendry, her pastor, officiated.

She leaves her aged parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Allred, Willie Ferguson to whom she was married December 11, 1910, two children, —Arthur, 12, and Leola, 14; two living sisters and one brother to mourn her going. One sister preceded her to the heavenly land.

To those who sorrow and lament at her going as they tread in the shadows may we not remember that the morning, all light, all joy draws on apace. Till then may God bind your aching hearts and comfort you with the hope of full immortality.

G. H. Hendry, Pastor.

Pender.

John S. Pender, born February 18, 1858, died December 6, 1925. Funeral services conducted from Chestnut Ridge Church, December 7th.

The following ministers assisted the pastor in the services. J. D. Williams, T. A. Williams. D. R. Williams, T. M. Johnson, and M. Ivey Crutchfield.

Telegram was read from R. C. Stubbins expressing regret that he could not be present and calling attention to the Christian character of Brother Pender.

Each minister present spoke of the influence for good which the deceased has left upon his church and community.

The large crowd present on this occasion, showed the esteem in which he was held.

In the passing of Brother Pender the community has lost one of its best citizens; Chestnut Ridge church one of its most loyal members; the brothers a brother indeed; the wife and child a devoted husband and father.

After services at the church the remains were laid to rest in Chestnut Ridge cemetery, he himself having designated the spot.

May God comfort the bereaved ones, especially his loving companion.

Our loss is his eternal gain.

B. M. Williams.

—Chestnut Ridge Church will not seem the same now that Brother John Pender has gone.

AGAIN I SAY, DON'T FORGET TO PRAY.

God is doing wonderful things for us where of we are glad. In the midst of it all let us remember to pray most earnestly for His further blessings upon the High Point College.

Pray that He may lead all of us who can give a dollar or more to send it in at once. And pray that He will lead those to give largely who can give largely.

Our needs are great. His people have the money, and He can and will lead them to give the money to this great cause if we ask believing.

"Thou art coming to a King,
Large petitions with thee bring;
For His grace and power are such None can ever ask too much."

HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

Catalogue and application blank will be forwarded upon application. Those desiring further information should address The President, High Point College, High Point, N. C.

CHRISTMAS.

There's Christmas music in the air
And joy and laughter, too,
And Christmas spirit everywhere,
So how can one be blue?

With every one so happy,
And crowds of girls and boys
Exchanging Christmas greetings,
And wishing Christmas joys.

Was ever such a time as this,
With peace and love on earth
So sure to make our days seem bright
And fill our hearts with mirth!

A CHRISTMAS POEM.

Come, my heart, canst thou not hear it,
Mid the tumult of thy days?
Catch the old sweet song of angels,
Join thy voice to swell their praise!
Hast thou never shared the blessings,
Never known kind heaven's gift?
Bethlehem thy Saviour cradled!
Heart of mine, a song uplift.
First to hear were drowsing shepherds,
Sore afraid that winter's night;
Soon their Bethlehem's low manger
Changed the song to wondrous sight!
Ever since all they who hear it
Find a Saviour where they dwell,
Sing it, heart! Who knows what toilers
Thou the Christward way shalt tell?
Long ago the angels vanished,
Oh, their song is sounding still!
Millions now with hope are singing,
"Peace on earth, to men good will."

—Anon.

IN HIS KEEPING.

He has kept us and shielded us from ten thousand ills when we did not know it; in the midst of our security, we should have perished every hour but that He sheltered us from "the terror by night and from the arrow that flieth by day,"—from the powers of evil that walk in darkness,—from snares of our own evil will. He has kept us even against ourselves, and saved us from our own undoing. Let us read the traces of His hand in all our ways, in all the events, the chances, the changes of this troubled state. It is He that folds and feeds us, that makes us to go in and out,—to be faint or to find pasture,—to lie down by the still waters, or to walk by the way that is parched and desert.—Selected.

THE VOICE OF THE CHRIST CHILD.

The earth has grown old with its burden of care,
But at Christmas is always young.
The heart of the jewel burns beautiful and fair,
And its soul full of music breaks forth on the air
When the song of the angels is sung.
It is coming, old earth, it is coming tonight
On the sad and lowly, the wretched sod,
The feet of the Christ-child fall gentle and white
And the voice of the Christ-child tells on with delight
That mankind are the children of God.
On the sad and lowly, the wretched and poor,
The voice of the Christ-child shall fall,
And to every blind wanderer open the door
Of a hope that he dared not to dream of before
With a sunshine of welcome for all.
The feet of the humblest may walk in the fields

Where the feet of the Holiest have trod,
This, this is the marvel to mortals revealed
When the silvery trumpets of Christmas have pealed,
That mankind are the children of God

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Will every pastor, whose Sunday school's children's Day offering has not been sent in, please see to it that it is sent at once to the annual conference treasurer.

We also appeal that as much of your church's budget as possible be sent immediately to him, as a most urgent call has come to the Union Board for funds, and we must look to the pastors for immediate help. We cannot carry on the work without money from the churches.

Very sincerely yours,
Fred. C. Klein, Exec. Secy.

A detailed infallibility of the Bible from beginning to end has never been proved. It can never be proved or made probable. The Bible is indeed a glorious book. It marches on to the loftiest heights to which human vision has ever ascended. Even in its opening chapters, as has been noticed, it contains riches of high value. Taken in its trend and outcome, it affords most safe and salutary guidance.
—Dr. Henry C. Sheldon.

Faith needs no infallibilities; and when it leans upon them it becomes something less than itself. No infallibility, no theory of inspiration, whether fundamentalist or moderate, can supply the place of the immediate experience of divine reality. The redeemed know well enough that redemption is real, for it has changed their lives and set them in a new world. And they know that their Redeemer liveth, for He wrestles with them for their souls. The fact of redemption may be as real to them as ever it was to Paul or Augustine or Luther. Theologies and creeds and critical methods can have no other purpose than to set forth the glory of this great reality. They seek to explain it; and the believer can afford to smile when he is told that one day they may succeed in explaining it away.
—The Christian World, London.

THE WEALTH OF CHRISTMAS JOY.

The first Christmas was a most happy one. A very few on earth had a share in this joy. A happy mother gazed fondly upon her first-born, the long-promised Savior of mankind. A few shepherds "returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had seen and heard, as it was told unto them."

But the celebration of this glorious advent was mainly an angelic one. It is likely all the angels of heaven gathered about the Bethlehem manger to do homage to the new-born King. For we have the record of this mandate of the Most High, "and again, when he bringeth his firstbegotten into the world, he saith, and let all the angels of God worship him." Heb. 1:6. In obedience to this command all the angels must have come to earth to praise and glorify the Babe of Bethlehem. The shepherds saw a part of this concourse from the skies. "And suddenly there was with the angels a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, and good will toward men."

And let the believers of earth vie with the angels of heaven in awarding honor and might to our Savior and Lord. It is well to make others happy with messages and gifts of Christmas love. It is well to be thankful for the million and more blessings that have followed in the wake of the gift of God's only begotten Son. The supreme privilege of Christmas is to bring joy to the heart of Him whose birthday we celebrate. Let us pour the wealth of all our love upon the altar of His devoted heart. Let us render to Him the praise and glory due unto His name. And let us in complete selfforgetfulness rededicate all that we are and have to the extension of His Kingdom in the hearts and lives of those for whom He died.—The Word of Life.

"HE IS FAITHFUL THAT PROMISED."

By C. H. Spurgeon.

Every promise of Scripture is a writing of God, which may be pleaded before Him with this reasonable request: "Do as Thou hast said." The Creator will not cheat His creature who depends upon His truth; and, far more, the Heavenly Father will not break His Word to His own child. "Remember the word unto Thy servant, on which Thou hast caused me to hope," is most prevailing pleading. It is a double argument: It is Thy Word, wilt Thou not keep it? Why hast Thou spoken of it if Thou wilt not make it good? Thou hast caused me to hope in it; wilt Thou disappoint the hope which Thou hast Thyself begotten in me?—Selected.

That life is most holy in which there is not only petition and desire, but most of waiting upon God; that in which petition most often passes into thanksgiving.—F. W. Robinson.

DAY BY DAY.

"As every day's work required." (1 Chron. 16:37).

This was all that Asaph and his helpers were required to do in their ministry before the Lord. No worrying over the future. Why should we worry, for we know not what a day may bring forth? He who said, "Behold, I come quickly," may be here before the morrow. The weary watch will then be over and the saints enter into the rest and glory of their Lord. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." How much fainting and discouragement would it save us if we dwelt not upon the tasks of the future, nor tried to plan ways to get out of difficulties before we really get into them. Our Lord, the Creator of the earth, and who sitteth upon the "circle" thereof, never fainteth nor is weary. "He giveth power to the faint." Our duty is to live in the present day, ever praying, "Give us this day"—"casting all our cares upon Him." For He careth for us. Leave the past with Him who knoweth our frame and remembereth we are but dust. Today is all we have, and that is under the watchful eye of Him who letteth not a sparrow fall apart from Himself. It will save many heartaches, many tears, if we honestly confess failures of the past, bring them to God to be put under the blood of His Son who loved us and gave Himself for us, and then refuse to brood over failure and folly, looking up to Him in faith and hope for the future. It will also save many a discouragement and disappointment if we refuse to plan ahead, to borrow trouble about the future. Our place is to trust in God day by day for wisdom and ever needed grace. Day by day His manna fell, and day by day it had to be gathered. Be sure of fellowship with God, of quiet communion with Him each day for in our abiding in our risen Lord and His abiding in us, there is rest, wisdom, grace and power. Put your trust in the Lord and leave the future to Him who never leaves nor forsakes His own. "As thy days so shall thy strength be."—O. R. Palmer.

The Christmas tree, which has become an almost universal symbol, and is by most persons supposed to have originated in Germany, had its origin in Egypt at a period long before the Christian Era. The palm-tree is known to put forth a branch every month, and a spray of this tree, with twelve shoots on it, was used in Egypt at the time of the winter solstice, as a symbol of the year completed.

A DUTY, A WARNING, ETC.

All who have been reading the Herald know that Dr. Dixon begs and insists that all the people pray for High Point College. Certainly it is our duty to pray for it and we should not have to be told.

But Dr. Dixon is a wise man and he is setting a trap for you. I know what I am talking about, and I warn you not to pray for High Point College unless you want to put some money in it.

Now I will tell you how that trap works. It is reversible and will catch you in two ways. First, if you pray for the college your hand will be in your pocket before you know it and you will be paying for it. Second, if you pay for it, you will soon feel that you have a share in it and you will be praying for it. Result—a good feeling way down in your heart because you have done your duty and stood by your church in its hour of need.

And the good feeling just grows and grows and in the end you will find yourself loving your college, your church, and your denomination so well that you will want to do your share and then more in everything it undertakes.

The college belongs to our church and our church belongs to our God, and we can't very well make a mistake by going into it for all we are worth.

And I will just whisper this for the benefit of those who are afraid to trust the Lord with their money, I believe it pays financially. I have never wanted for a dollar since I invested the first one in High Point College. I have never been able to be a big giver but I have tried to answer every call that has been made.

Sometime ago a lady asked me if I had not pledged too much considering how hard I had to work for my money, but I told her that I could not see that I had, for I considered our church and all that was connected with it the most worthwhile things we had.

However, the great trouble is getting our people to see that it is their duty as Methodist Protestants to support the college. And I fear that some of our pastors don't feel that it is their duty to press the subject.

I know one preacher who objected to an offering being taken in his church for the college—said his people were just run to death for money. Well, I took the trouble to look up what that church had been doing, for there was nothing in sight that showed it had hurt itself. I found that it had done as much as lots of other churches, but if I ever hear of its death I will know it was not caused by overwork.

Many of our churches are suffering today from oversymjathetic pastors and two little giving.

Our people need pushing for their own good and the pastor is the one to do it.

When that speaker at the Washington Foreign Mission Convention said the pastor was the key to the missionary problem, he might also have added that he was the key to every problem of the church, and if he does not unlock the door and take the lead the church will never do anything. I know it is a little hard to shoulder the responsibility, but who else is to do it?

Not half of our people read the church paper and if the pastor doesn't agitate these things how are the people to know there is a struggle going on for the college or anything else?

One of our preachers at the District Convention said, I "rapped" on them in my little speech, but also had the goodness to say they needed it. And I can almost hear myself right now being accused of the same thing again.

Well, if I do rap on you it is not because I didn't think we have fine preachers, and I think a lot of them.

It is a little off my subject (if I have one) but I believe I will tell you how long I have been loving preachers.

When I was about seven years old there was a revival going on in the Baptist church at Chapel Hill, and two great big preachers who were engaged in the services passed my home going to and from church. I thought they were the most wonderful men I had ever seen, and like Zacchaeus of old, being low of stature, I climbed the fence in order to get a better view of them.

I attracted their attention all right, but instead of commading me to 'come down' they stopped, patted me on the head and asked me to come to church that night. I went too.

That is my first remembrance of church or preachers and I have been loving both ever since.

And if I do scold a little sometimes, it is because it hurts me to see the interests and institutions of our church just dragging along and the people so indifferent, and oft times it is because they are not taught and urged to be otherwise. Some preachers don't think it is their duty to do a thing but preach the Gospel and then they take care to shy around the part that teaches giving. Most of us know more gospel now than we live up to, and I sometimes think it would do no more good if our pastors would rap on us good and hard and tell us plainly what we ought to do.

There will always be some who don't want to hear it, but I have yet to hear of a congregation that does not like its pastor because he insists on his people doing the work that our conference has mapped out.

The working church is the giving church, and if we ever amount to much we have got to do more than pay pastor's salary.

If our people would pay the budget, Mr. Minnis, our missionary, would not have to use the shade of a tree for a school room when only $100 would build a house.

But don't any of you pray for missions if you don't want to help build churches and school houses. And don't pray for the college unless you are willing to put your dollars in it, for I fear it would be time wasted.

However, if you are the least bit thankful that you and your children live in a land of religion and education, pray and pay, and pray for everything that our good old church stands for and support it in every way.

Mrs. J. J. Crawford.

PROUD OF HIS MOTHER.

The mother of John Quincy Adams said in a letter, written when he was only twelve years old:

"I would rather see you laid in your grave than see you grow a profane and graceless boy."

Not long before the death of Mr. Adams, a gentleman said to him: "I have found out who made you."

"What do you mean?" asked Mr. Adams. The gentleman replied: "I have been reading the published letters of your mother."

"If," this gentleman relates, "I had spoken that dear name to some little boy who had been for weeks away from his mother, his eyes could not have flashed more brightly than did the eyes of that venerable old man when I pronounced the name of his mother. He stood up in his peculiar manner and said: 'Yes, sir, all that is good in me I owe to my mother.'"—From the Day Spring.

RAISING THE CONFERENCE BUDGETS.

One of the encouraging signs of progress at Asheville during recent years has been the increased response in giving to the Annual and General Conference Budget. For the past two or three years the Asheville church has been on the Honor Roll. Year before last, during Brother Gerringer's pastorate, the General Conference Budget was over-paid, as it was last year. I do not know what methods he used to accomplish that, except that a special effort was made for Educational Day, when the offering amounted to $100. I suppose each man has a different way of getting the result, and the result is the most important part of it after all. I have found the following plans helpful toward reaching the goal last year:

1. Make the folks intelligent. I did not preach a sermon on the Benevolences last year. Instead, I prepared a chart which was placed in a prominent place in the church. This I divided in half, one side for the Annual Conference Budget, the other for the General Conference Budget. Under each I placed the items of the Budget, giving the percentage for each item, and the amount to be given to each in dollars and cents. This was also sent to each member on a small card, except that in this case only the totals were given. This year a letter containing this itemized Budget Statement has been sent to all the members. The folks will know how every dollar they have given to the Budgets is divided, and what they are giving to.

2. Adopt a slogan. We found during the Great War that slogans are effective. Indeed many a political campaign has been won with nothing more. "The Full Dinner Pail," for instance. The slogan we adopted for our Budgets is: "Every et of every $ for every Interest." We didn't quite make it, not all the items were raised in full. But we came nearer than the church ever had before.

3. Emphasize the special days. Easter, Children's Day and Rally Day were all observed with good results. Indeed, the bulk of our Budgets was raised on these occasions. We expect to put even more emphasis here this year, beginning with Christmas service.

4. Give a reward. On two of these special days the pastor offered the scholars in the Sunday school a chance to get a Bible or a Testament as a prize for bringing in the largest offering. These I made as my contribution to the offering. I feel confident the offerings were much larger than they would have been without this incentive.

5. Use pageants or other missionary plays. This of course is helpful in getting the Missionary Societies' Budgets raised. We gave a couple last year, and hope to give more of them this year. They are not only a help in raising the finances, but they are instructive as well. Most of them are so simple that any church can put them on.

And all this comes back to the beginning: If the folks are instructed in the activities, of the church, and it doesn't matter how the instruction is given, the money will follow. Mind and heart and purse are closely related. We are going to have to reach the first two before we reach the last one. It will take some work, but it can be done. C. W. Bates.

WORTHY AMBITION.

By Rev. H. H. Smith.

A worthy ambition has often blessed the world, but an unworthy ambition has often cursed it. Did not our Master encourage worthy ambition when He said on one occasion: "Whosoever would become great among you shall be your minister?" The Master taught that there is a true greatness which we should strive to attain, and the way to become truly great is to live a life of unselfish service of others. We cannot have too much ambition for this kind of greatness.

Frances Willard's life well illustrates what it means to be ambitious in the best sense of the word. Relating some experiences of her early life, she said:

"Very few things waken my contempt, but this couplet in the hymn book did.

"Make me little and unknown, Loved and prized by God alone."

Its supreme absurdity angered rather than amused me, for who could be 'loved and prized' by the Great Spirit and yet despised by the lesser spirits made in His image? Who could deliberately desire to be 'little and unknown,' of small value and narrow circle in a world hungry for help and strength and uplift, yet beloved and prized by God? No! I wanted to be now and in all worlds my very utmost. I fully purposed to be one whom the multitudes would love, lean on, and bless. Lying on the prairie grass, and lifting my hands toward the sky, I used to say in my inmost spirit, 'What is it I am to be, O God?' I did not wish to climb by the overthrow of others, and I laid no schemes to undermine them, but I meant that the evolution of my own powers should do for me all that it would. I felt that a woman owed it to all other women to live as bravely, as helpfully, and as grandly as she could, and to let the world know it."

The test came a little later when, on the same day, she received two letters; one an offer of the presidency of a girl's school with a large salary, the other an urgent request to take the presidency of the Chicago branch of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, with the promise of only a very meager support. She did not hesitate, but immediately accepted the position of presidency of the W. C. T. U. She endured real hardships in this work and often walked miles because she did not have the requisite nickel for carfare.

Her brother protested against her action in accepting this position which did not promise her a support and said to her:

"Your faith method is simply a challenge to the Almighty. You have put a chip on your shoulder and dared Omnipotence to knock it over."

But how well was her faith justified! Eternity alone will reveal the great good she did. She lived to see the Woman's Christian T. U. grow from a small beginning to an organization numbering more than 300,000 in the United States, and with local unions established in 10,000 towns. Her native state has placed her statue in the Hall of Fame at our national Capitol Building, and in the eyes of her fellow-countrymen she is regarded as worthy to be numbered among our country's truly great.

CONFIDENCE AND QUIETNESS.

George McPherson Hunter.

The confident is always quiet. Knowing and believing in Christ our Lord gives a deep certainty to life, which is followed by serenity of spirit.

The writer of the book of Ecclesiastes in the Bible somehow got hold of the best things and the best places under the sun, yet he confessed loudly that he found all that he had gained hard and oppressing; the things coveted, arid and wearisome. With all his gains and fretting he found no island of quiet whereon to rest the soles of his feet.

This generation is marked by a passion for knowing and doing. The youth of America are crowding into colleges, and parenthetically that is something for which we thank God and take courage. But knowledge, school work wisdom, scholarship, all that goes by the name of education, may end in weariness and satiety. Newspaper men see and hear almost everything that is going on in the world and there is often a touch of cynicism about their attitude to life. Scholars and students know history and science, but they are nearly all afflicted with paralyzing hesitations.

Knowledge may bring power, but it cannot bring rest. What shall it profit anyone if they acquire all the learning in the Encyclopedia Britannica yet believe nothing? Jesus did not say, "Go ye into all the world and acquire great learning, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." But He did say: "Come unto me and I will give you rest."

The Protestant Christian Church is obsessed with a passion for doing things. It would seem as if the voice of the prophet is dying out and the executive and the program-monger has arisen. Our Presbyterian garment has been somewhat torn by sectional strife over theology—chasing theological winds is an old Presbyterian pursuit. One party cries, "Believe! Believe!"—the other cries, "Organize! Organize!"

A publisher complained recently in private that books on the technical side of the church's and minister's life were in large demand, while virile books on scriptural exposition, the spiritual life and theology barely paid for the marketing.

"I am so much immersed in work," was the complaint of a pastor, "so forced without due reflexion to hurry on to the next job that is waiting to be done, that I often find it difficult to see the wood for the trees." That is undoubtedly the position into which not a few of the best pastors in the country are being forced, and it leads towards incomplete service or a breakdown.

The sublime question in the Catechism, "What is man's chief end?" and its answer has helped to shape the destiny of the Presbyterian Church. "Man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy Him forever." Anyone looking at the church, reading its literature and attending its conferences would think: "Man's chief end is to be on a committee, and keep eternally busy." One is tempted to ask, Is life all summed up in action? Has reflection no place? Is meditation a lost art?

Finally, it is only in quietness and confidence that we find and are able to hear the whisperings of messengers of God that "hover around us like Heavenly incense."

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." Secrets are never shouted to those in a hurry, but to those who stand still and are silent before Him. "For thus saith the Lord Jehovah, the Holy One of Israel, in returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and confidence shall be your strength."—Ex.

Why Not Circuit.—I came to this circuit in time to fill my regular appointments the Sunday following conference. I finished my first round on the work yesterday. I have been kindly received at all the churches, and in all the homes that I have visited. For their congenial spirit the pastor feels most grateful. Hope to give them my best service. This is a big circuit and there is much to be done.

Our first quarterly conference was held Saturday December 12, 1925, at Fairgrove Church. All the churches were represented. The business of the conference was carried on in a most pleasing manner. The pastor made three recommendations which were unanimously adopted. Our aim is our budgets paid in full, and we are going to work to that end. Come on, Why Not, and let's put it over.

D. I. Garner, Pastor.

THE TRUE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS.

Of all the year's festival days, Christmas is peculiarly the festival of love. Easter commemorates the resurrection of Jesus. It is our festival of life, divine and immortal; for the power that raised Christ from the dead has passed into the lives of the millions. It comes with peculiar appropriateness at the season of the year when nature is awakening to spring and everywhere are warm winds, sunshine, growth and beauty.

Thanksgiving is our festival of Divine Providence celebrating the loving care of God over all that He has made. It comes at the time when in agricultural communities the earth's fruitage has been garnered and the year's work draws to a close. It is a good time in all pursuits to close the book with God and to bring to Him the only possible return for His beneficence, the gratitude and appreciation of our hearts.

But Christmas is the climax of the Christian year. It is our festival of love, and as such is it not beautifully fitting that the day should be celebrated by the bestowment of gifts? It is as natural for love to give, as for birds to sing and for flowers to grow.

The spirit of Christmas is the spirit of giving. This takes hold upon all classes of people, carrying into every soul the sweetness and purity of love's ministry. It lavishes gifts in homes of wealth and it finds a way in the direst poverty.

Christmas was the day when God gave His richest gift to men—Jesus the Christ. That marvelous gift of the ages has proved the inspiration of the day and given birth to the spirit of giving among men. And for that reason let us give remembrances to just as many people as we can afford to give, to those of our own homes, to our friends and to the poor. It doesn't need to be much, so that it is a token of friendship. Remember particularly the lives that are cast into hard cases. Lift a mortgage, pay a debt, send a check to the brave woman who is fighting for her children. Bring the young man or young woman who is away from home to your own fireside. Send a Christmas dinner where you are sure there would be a scanty one if you did not send it.

The spirit of Christmas is love expressing itself in service. The love of God found its expression in the gift of a Savior to the world. The love of Christ found its expression in the gift of a life of pure and unselfish service to mankind. He gave Himself to the closest association with men so that every man might take heart in the struggle and have reasonable hope of being able to live likewise.

This gift of service is the best gift which can be given to the world. And this gift is within the reach of everybody. There is no excuse for those who do not make it. None are too busy to be friendly and non-ferocious to stoop to little kindnesses. I once thought there were naturals that could not be cordial, but I know now that it was a mistake. The most inexorable duty men ever have is to love and render services of love. It was one of the last teachings of Jesus that we will be judged at last by our attitude in practical service to the sick and the oppressed, the stranger and to those who lack the plainest necessities of food and clothing.

But this spirit of Christmas which is to find its expression in the gift of loving service is not the spirit of mere benevolence, kindness that is not inspired by comradeship is not beautiful at all. It may be pity from a proud heart, but that is not friendship, and it is not the deep brotherly love of Christmas. Men need friends more than they need pity. We are inseparably bound together as men of one race and men of all races. The world needs the sympathy and recognition of the rich to the poor, and the poor to the rich, and for this reason the life which is true friendship in unselfish and universal helpfulness is the life which has most nearly caught the spirit of Christ and of Christmas. Let us give, then, and accept them that are in need of loving service. Thus will the spirit of Christmas be cherished and made the world brighter and better.—Exchange.

CHRISTMAS DAY.

The two supreme events in human history, which beyond the comprehension of the finite mind and human world, man can only stand in awe and admiration, are that the Creator, stepping Himself in mortality, came down to earth, as heralded by the shepherds of Bethlehem, in the highest, and on earth, as heralded by the shepherds of good will—and the other, that entirely incomprehensible sacrifice when on the cross of Calvary the same Creator shed His blood for the redemption of mankind.

These two events all the world, in the past or future, bows in reverence.

It is better that I write every book that is printed, dated A. D., "In the year of our Lord," than that I realize the reality of the birth in Bethlehem.

The greatest paintings of all the world have been painted by men who had caught the inspiration of the living message voiced in Bethlehem and through the succeeding years to the end upon the cross.

The greatest poems in all the world have had their inspiration in the same source.

Around the central figure of the Babe in Bethlehem and the Redeemer upon the Cross of Calvary, history converged, and from it diverges: "His Story."

It is well, therefore, that at this Christmas season the human heart should take on a deeper sense of reverence, a deeper sense not of liberty and meriment, but of joy; a deeper sense of man's responsibility to God and to his fellow man: a tenderer love for little children; a kindlier spirit for the sick and the suffering, with an outpouring of the heart and the purse in seeking to bring comfort and cheer and joy and happiness to those about us.

It is meet, therefore, that standing with head uncovered and hearts attuned to the Infinite, we should catch the music of the heavenly chorus, and give glory to God in the Highest for the mercies with which He has so abundantly crowned our lives and the life of our nation, and yield unto Him who died upon the Cross the homage of contrite hearts full of gratitude and love, that as we face the problems of this life and the certainty that sooner or later we shall be summoned to give an account of the deeds done in the body, we can have the assurance of a life everlasting of which death is but the portal that leads us into a broader and grander and more glorious life than it is possible for the heart or the mind of finite man to conceive.—The Manufacturers Record.

Asheboro.—For some reason my Herald of last week did not come, however, those whose paper did come say that my letter last week said that Mrs. Hal Hammer Walker united with our church on the previous Sunday. Now the facts are that Hal Hammer Walker, a little boy of eight years, united with the church and not his mother. She has been a member some years. I will not charge the mistake to anybody—just let it go.

The past Sunday was one of the best yet. There were two hundred in Sunday school and a house full of people at church service. Five more people joined the church as follows: Mr. H. W. Ferree from Mt. Zion on West Thomasville charge, Mrs. Ferree from the M. E. Church at Farmer, Miss Vyvalee Nelson from Bethany on Randolph Charge and Miss Grace Boling and John Redding on profession of faith.

Tonight we had one of the best Workers' Conferences we have yet seen. The Sunday school Superintendent, Brother W. L. Ward, and his teachers came together and for more than an hour discussed the needs of the Sunday school and the various classes in the most business like way. It certainly was refreshing to see the work done so well.

Next Sunday morning we will have the Christmas sermon and music and Sunday evening at seven o'clock we will have the entertainment by the Sunday school.

Some of the laymen are making an effort to handle two of the notes for the college.

J. E. Pritchard.

Welch Memorial.—The revival is still going on. It is one of the greatest revivals that we have ever witnessed. It got started and cannot stop, or it has not stopped as yet. We were expecting to close last Sunday night, but had too much interest to do so, it had been in progress for two weeks. Sunday morning we opened the doors of the church to receive new members, and forty-seven responded; thirty-six were baptised, while the other eleven came in from other churches, some from the Baptist, Lutheran, and M. E. There are many others who were not present Sunday morning, who will come in later; several have already told me they were coming the next time I opened the doors of the church. We were expecting to close Sunday night, but there were twenty-five professions, so we announced service for Monday night, and there were thirty-three professions, so we announced service for Tuesday night. The number who professed

Monday night brought the total up to about two hundred and fifty. Many of those who professed were already church members, they promised to go back to their church and go to work for their Master. Some went to other churches to join. We are proud of the number which came to our church, most of them are heads of families.

Sunday was a red letter day for our church in every way, we had the largest attendance at Sunday school that had ever been in the history of the church, and the regular congregations were large. The house were filled to over flowing at each service, there being many turned away for the want of room. The whole church has taken on new life, it is just wonderful to see the results of this meeting. I was proud of my church before, they were so kind and appreciative; they began to pound me right after conference and are keeping it up. We have had so many different ones to come in with some fresh meats that we have not had to buy but a very little for the past two weeks. We do appreciate their kindness and thoughtfulness of us. One of the good members said in testimony Sunday morning, that they did appreciate the pastor, said they would not exchange him for any other in the conference. I am sure that I would not exchange churches with any other pastor in the conference. There are many churches that are stronger than Welch Memorial, but there are not any which are more loyal to their pastor, that is I have found none that stands more loyal to their pastor than this one has for the time that I have been serving them.

Brethren and friends, pray for me that I may be worthy of the kindness shown me, and that I may be the best pastor possible, and lead them on to victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. T. E. Pierce, Pastor.

Reidsville.—Our Sunday school is progressing very nicely under the leadership of Prof. J. H. Allen. We had a goodly number present yesterday and three new scholars.

Our pastor, Dr. Williams, preached two good sermons. At the morning service he told of the great need for ministers of the gospel. At the evening service he spoke on "A Blessing or a curse." He told how we could make our lives a blessing by obeying God's commandments and how by not obeying them we make our lives a curse.

The C. E. Society held its regular business and social meeting at the home of Mr. H. S. Dixon last Tuesday evening. Much business was transacted at this time that was of interest to the society and new officers were elected as follows:

President, Mrs. G. M. Reed; Vice President, Miss Effie McCollum; Secretary, Mrs. H. S. Dixon and Treasurer Miss Lola McCollum. After the business was dispensed with, a social hour was enjoyed during which fruit was served.

Our Sunday school is planning to have a Christmas program, and a committee is busy at present preparing it.

This is probably the last report we will have before the holidays. We are glad to see each and every one of our people enjoying a merry Christmas.

Mrs. H. S. Dixon, Reporter.

Macedonia. Father Cline—We are glad to have Father Cline, who has been to us for months, and who has been disappointed had he not been so well as he is now. He is now working for his return to his work.

There was no service at Macedonia Sunday. Brother Cline was called to attend a funeral at this place. The Sunday school will be at 1 P. M. the first Sunday and preaching at 2 P. M.

Our special effort wife, Mrs. M. D. Hoyle, is still on the sick list. Let us all pray that the doctors will remember her in their prayers.

Since our last report death has visited Macedonia, coming and removing Brother Ambrose Cline. He was born April 1862, departed this life November 2, 1925. He was married to Miss Clara Hoyle and to this union three children were born: namely, Albertus, Hoyle, and Nola. The wife and all three survive him, also seven grandchildren. He was a member and ex-officio of the church. The funeral services were conducted by Brother Morgan and the remains were laid to rest in the family burial ground in the Chapman grave yard.

May God's richest blessing rest upon the grief stricken widow and children.

We were very glad to have Mr. Hynes from Oak Grove worship with us Sunday. Mr. Hynes is a splendid bass singer and a delight in singing. We heartily welcome him to Mr. Hynes.

Our Sunday school is not large but the interest seems good.

I will close by wishing all the Happy and Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. Pearl Barnes, Reporter.

High Point.—The first quarterly conference will convene on Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock, and it is earnestly hoped that a full attendance of members will be present to begin the work of the new conference with vim and enthusiasm.

The choir will render a Christmas concert and a program of Christmas carols on Sunday at the evening service. A large tract is promised all these services.

The Ladies' Aid Society will hold a social meeting on Monday afternoon at the church with the following listed as members: T. Penny, H. T. Oakes, H. T. Howard, and F. L. Johnson. The Society will be held at 2 o'clock.

The Brotherhood of Mock Church will hold a meeting on Thursday evening and during the service of Mrs. D. A. Moore. The Brotherhood Society will serve a large meal and the evening is assured, and a large number of church should join.

On Sunday morning the new conference will be very timely and powerful sermon on the Ministry as a "profession." This day was found throughout the denomination as "for the Ministry Sunday." There will be great rejoicing in the congregation, and all the men of the First Church should be called of God to enter the ministry, and devote his life to the rebuilding of the Kingdom. Brother says it is not a life of ease, but a life of rich rewards of responsibility and service.

Who of the vows must expect suffering, but what unspeakable joy in the rendering of the service in His holy name.

Brother has launched a campaign of prayer, the attendance of young men at Sunday school. Practically the whole time Sunday morning was taken up in discussing of the importance of getting young converts into regular attendance upon church and Sunday school service. Mr. L. R. Johnson is the able and efficient teacher of this class, and it was announced that it will meet in another room in future, having outgrown their present quarters. Nearly every member has promised to invite some young man to the church on Sunday morning.

At the eleven o'clock service last Sunday Brother Mrs. Leo Seywell, a student at High Point, sang a beautiful solo, "Oh, How I Want to Be Wary" with organ accompaniment by Mrs. McIntire.

Mr. J. Richard Reitzel has been elected Secretary of the Merchants' Association of High Point and has entered upon his duties.

We were delighted to receive two additions to membership last Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Peters.

At Kernersville Charge.—Our work for this year has started off nicely.

Our new pastor, Brother F. R. Love, filled his second appointment at Ai yesterday morning at the eleven o'clock hour, with a right good congregation. All gave him their most cordial attention while he preached a most wonderful sermon. He made the lesson so plain that even a child could understand that it is a wonderful thing to live the life of a Christian.

So with our new pastor and the help of God we are trusting this will be our most successful year.

The young people of Ai have organized a young people's Christian Endeavor Society, and are starting off nicely. They carried their meeting to the home of Mr. John Watson near Kernersville on Saturday night, December 5. The meeting was held in the home for Mr. Watson's oldest son who is now an invalid. We trust that with the help of God he will be restored to health.

The Sunday school at Ai is doing fine. We are glad to have Brother B. M. Whitt for our Superintendent. For we are sure with the help and cooperation of others Brother Whitt will do a great work on.

Brother J. R. Peo and brother took dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Peo.

Others Gifts:

Miss Blanche Mooney, Oak Ridge, domestic; A Burlington Friend, a pair of slippers; Junior Missionary Society, Concord, Saxapahaw, a quilt as a thank offering; Woman's F. M. Society, Concord, Saxapahaw, a quilt as a thank offering; A friend, apples.

The Bazaar was a success. The children's fancy work sold real well and the people seemed pleased with the work.

About one hundred people took supper with us. The Ladies' Aid Society of First church, High Point, furnished us nice cakes. Mrs. Brown's and Mrs. Hughes' class made us candy. The Ladies' Aid Society of Randleman, sent us a nice lot of Home made candy. All this cooperation is much appreciated. The offerings are coming in and we are going on. Thank you. Help us to keep doing so.

CONCORD AND THE COLLEGE.

It is natural for us to point with pride to the fine support Concord Church has given the High Point College. This church has done more, we believe, for the cause than any other one such church in the North Carolina Conference. Of course you must consider the membership both in number and financial strength. We have no rich men whatever. No pretension is made by any one to even rank with the wealthy men of Concord. But the gladness with which our people there contribute brings us to the firm conclusion that people give, not in accordance with their strength of pocket but with their strength of prayer. You need not expect people anywhere to give in proportion to their financial ability, but in proportion to their willingness. This is demonstrated conclusively at Concord.

There is a man in the M. P. Church of Concord who only a few years past was on the smallest wage earner's list. By prudence and prayer, hard work and foresight he has come to hold considerable influence and prospects. This man has already given fifteen hundred dollars or more to our college. He is not rich but he gladly gives of his prosperity to the cause he loves. As a matter of fact when a person sets aside one-tenth for the Lord's work he will both prosper and create for himself a record to attract the attention of the entire conference. A number of Concord people are doing that very thing.

Another man we have in mind is there working hard but by giving the Cause its due share has sent about eight hundred dollars to the college. This represents the spirit of the people there. Just the other day a person who, I suppose never even saw the Concord church, said, "they are the best people in the Conference to pay."

Please remember, too, that they are always coming up with all local and conference budgets. Most of the members are on an average wage earning basis. But it is remarkable what people can do when love and pride in the work leads the way.

Asheboro, Burlington, High Point, Henderson and other strong churches we know;—Why not come on in this time of need and show some of the spirit exemplified in Concord liberality. Why! When President Andrews called for a special offering some months ago for the college needs, the Concord people got busy as if to say we can't afford to let our college suffer, and sent in over one hundred and forty five dollars—the largest by forty dollars of any such answer to that call.

We are expecting strong churches to read this and make an effort to run ahead of Concord (if you can) and point the way to bigger liberality in accordance with your strength.

P. E. Lindley,

P. H. Scarboro.

A WORD OF THANKS.

I wish to take this method of thanking each one that so kindly contributed to the offering that was taken for me at the annual conference in High Point.

Brethren, you will never know how much we appreciate your kindness and your interest in us, and we thank you, both for your offering and your prayers. You have our sincere and heart-felt thanks for both.

We know that God answers prayer, and I am sure that I am better than when I first returned to North Carolina, and that is due partly to prayer. Words fail me just here in expressing to you my appreciation but my heart goes out to God in thanksgiving for the kindness that He has permitted you to show us in this trying and dark hour.

May God in His wisdom very richly and abundantly bless you each and every one in my prayer.

Brethren, please continue to pray that if it be God's will I may be restored to health and be able to do still more work for the Master in His Kingdom.

Again may I say thank you each and every one, and God bless you.

Very sincerely,

E. G. Cowan.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas it has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from labor to reward our friend and brother, F. S. Cheek.

Therefore be it resolved.—

1st.—That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who is too wise to err and too good to be unkind.

2nd.—That our Baraca class has lost a faithful friend and our church a valuable member.

3rd.—That the home has lost a wise council; the wife a faithful husband; the daughter a loving father; and the community a good neighbor.

4th.—That a copy of these resolutions be spread on our minutes. That a copy be sent to the family. That a copy be sent to our city paper and also a copy be sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald for publication.

Another Pounding.

On the 20th of November we arrived at the parsonage of English St. Church.

On Wednesday night following the good people of English St. Church made us feel good, by giving us a good pounding. It is good to be pounded with good things to eat, by good people.

"Behind every gift is the giver," and a motive that prompts the gift.

The gifts of the pounding party were all good and useful, just such things as any preacher and his family needs.

For this reason we appreciate them very highly. But the spirit of kindness and generosity that these gifts represent we appreciate still more.

Life without friends and love is a barren waste. We sincerely thank you, good friends.

We hope to show our appreciation of all this kindness by rendering better service.

Rev. W. M. Pike.

—Death removed a valuable man in the taking of Bro. Madison Brown, of Julian. Especially will Shiloh Church miss him. He had been the Sunday school superintendent for years.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Saturday and Sunday, December 12th and 13th, were spent most pleasantly with Rev. J. B. Trogdon and his people on Flat Rock Circuit. The familiar scenes of my childhood days, and the privilege of meeting and preaching to many life-long friends make it doubly pleasant to visit Flat Rock.

I went to be with Brother Trogdon and the folks in their first quarterly conference, and preached three times while on the work. On Sunday morning, wife spoke at Bethany while I was preaching at Gideon's Grove. We both spoke to most earnest listeners in all the services.

The quarterly conference was one of the very best. Not a voice was raised which was calculated to pull back on any forward move. Improvements were proposed at the porsonage and voted through immediately. No one even objected. Pastor's salary really paid in advance. Pause and think! Pastor's salary paid in advance. Good! They are also collecting the budgets along with pastor's salary, and will be sending in payments on these soon.

Pastors And Friends, Please Note.

Very little has been sent in on the budgets to date. The Treasurer, Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C., has some pressing claims that should be paid at once. He cannot pay without funds, so I am hereby asking all pastors and all church treasurers to collect and send in payments on the annual conference budget at once, please. In the closing moments of conference many promised to begin on the budgets early in the year. One and a half months have passed, and our treasurer has received very little yet. Please attend to this at once, and thus help over the emergency of the first weeks of the conference year.

This is the very best time of the year to make church collections. Let us redeem the time.

The Conference Journal.

I have before me a copy of the 1925 conference Journal. Our Secretary, Rev. C. W. Bates, is to be commended on his work, and also on getting the printer to give us such a good job of work. I have been interested in studying the Statistical Secretary's report. From this report I cull these facts. In the value of all church property we have reached a total valuation of $3,102,249, an increase over the previous year of $857,554. We also paid $2,602 more on the General Conference Budget than the year before. And we made an increase in payments on the Annual Conference Budget of $249. Our increase in the number of church members for the year was 2,009. And our increase in Sunday school enrollment was 1,877. This is all very encouraging, especially when we remember that this favorable gain was made in spite of the fact that crop conditions, and cotton mill conditions were the poorest they have been in years.

There were some decreases, however, that are not very heartening. We note that our pastors were paid $2,093 less than the year before. A glance down the list will show you that just 18 charges failed to pay pastor's salary in full; and almost invariably they were the charges which promised the smallest salaries. Let every charge set out early in this year determined to pay all claims in full. It can be done.

We note that the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society gained 163 members, but their income was decreased by $1,949. And that the Woman's Home Missionary Society gained 150 members, but their income was decreased by $468. Let all pastors and friends "help those good women" in their Missionary efforts. There is no reasonable reason why there should not be a Foreign Missionary Society and a Home Missionary Society in every church where there are as many as a half dozen women can band together under a promise to pay 10cts. per month for missionary service.

Get a copy of the Journal and study it, and it will lead you to wish to do better for the Lord this year.

Let Us Continue To Pray.

Continue to pray for the College. There are great things in store for us if we will just pray, and work and pay. If you can pay then pay quickly. If there is anything you can do, do it speedily. Every Christian can pray, so pray that God will still do greater things for us, and through us.

Yours in His service,

A. G. Dixon.

The Plan Is Working.

Since my last report Rev. G. F. Millaway has brought in $550 cash, collected from subscribers, and $450.00, proceeds of a note. Of course when subscriptions can be collected in full, it is so much the better, but let us bear in mind also that we are hoping by this plan to secure more money than is available from subscriptions, as well as to secure advances on subscriptions which cannot be collected at this time.

Yesterday our good friend, Rev. S. W. Taylor, brought in a check for $4,000, having handled notes for that amount, and he thinks it probable that he can add another $1,000.00 to this shortly.

The fine example already set ought to encourage other points to respond to the call. It was Brother Taylor who made the motion that the Treasurer be given every assurance that the best efforts of those present at the meeting in High Point would be put forth to secure $45,000.00 due one of the banks by January 1. This, it will be borne in mind, is for the note indorsed by fifty ministers and laymen, who will be relieved of their responsibility when the note is paid. Brother Taylor has certainly done his part, raising nearly one eleventh of the entire amount. May we not have action on the part of a number of others in time for report next week?

Work on the pamphlet which the High Point meeting requested the Treasurer to prepare is under way, and this will be ready for distribution within a short while.

It has been hoped by some that a large gift could be secured from some source, or sources, but it has been definitely ascertained that this is impossible at present. It is, therefore, "up to us" to provide the needed money. Methodist Protestants of North Carolina, we can do this thing. It is really too early for us to ask or expect someone else to do it for us. Astonishment has been expressed by many at the magnitude of our undertaking and the degree of success with which we have met heretofore. We have determined that we will not fail, but let us not hesitate too long. Let us be worthy of the confidence which has been shown in us.

With thanks to all who have sent encouraging words, and encouraging checks, I am

Sincerely yours,

J. Norman Wills, Treas. of Building Fund.

Did I say "the plan is working?" Rather, some are working the plan, and have proved that it can be done.

To The Leader.

Decorate with ever greens and place placards suggesting a new chance with the new year, such as "Beginning again." "New Year, New Opportunities" "Another year, another opportunity."

Let the leader then speak of each New Year coming as a new opportunity to do the things we had wished to do but did not get done last year. Each day is God's new chance for us. Let yesterday and its failures go. No one can change it. The best God can do with it is to just forget it, for he says "I even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own name's sake, and will not remember thy sins." That is the best God can do for us in regard to past mistakes. So let's ask Him to do just that with the past year and then ask for His guidance to make the best of the new opportunities of the New Year. God has a plan for each life. Find out what that plan is and go at developing it and making it a reality. It is better plan for a better life than you can possibly make for your self, no matter what that life plan is.

Pressing On To Material Achievements.

When God placed man in the garden He told him "to have dominion." And this is still man's privilege. To subdue and have dominion over all material things, always remembering that "He that ruleth his own spirit is better than he that taketh a city." Material things are to be subdued and not to be allowed to rule or become the thing sought after. Material wealth may be the greatest blessing or the greatest curse, according as it is ruled or allowed to rule.

A little boy whose wagon was caught on the curb called for his father to help him out. The father refused and gave as his excuse that if he helped him with difficulties he could ever come himself the boy would come to depend on help and not be an overcomer of difficulties.

"The pupil that labors to solve his problems unaided gains a victory and makes progress which enables him to make still better progress later. Press on that you may be better able to press on yet further."

Pressing On To Spiritual Greatness.

Fellowship with Christ, a consciousness of His rights in lives and of His presence day by day, to be a partaker of His power, a doer of His work is the great achievement of the Christian.

No matter how far we have advanced in the spiritual life we must still press on, for there are heights we have not scaled, work we have not done, joys we have not reached.

Press on to better work in the society. No group does its best. We can do better tomorrow than we have done today. Plan well, pray much, and labor hard.

Press on through difficulties. Do not grow discouraged. No matter what happens, you win if you persevere.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—DEC. 20.

Pauls' Summary of His Life.

Lesson Text: 2 Tim. 3:10, 11, 4:6-18.

Golden Text: 2 Tim. 4:7.

The Central Truth: The faithful life is always crowned with a triumphant death.

Scriptural Points.

1. The Second Epistle to Timothy has been called the swan's song of the great apostle. In it he takes a backward view and recites in brief the struggles and triumphs of his marvellous career. In it he also takes a forward view and in glowing rapture pictures the glories of immortality.

2. He mentions seven phases of his ministerial life. As to doctrine he had been faithful to declare the whole counsel of God and preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. His manner of life, or conduct had been above reproach; he had lived the religion that he professed. His purpose had been to glorify the name of His Lord. He had been loyal and steadfast in defending the faith once for all delivered to the saints. His long suffering, or endurance, had marked him a hero of the cross of the first class. His charity, love, and forgiveness had abounded in the face of the sorest assaults upon his life and character. And his patience in the midst of it all was the crown jewel of his resplendent character.

3. As to persecutions and afflictions we have a more circumstantial account in 2. Cor. 11:23-28: "In labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a day and a night have I been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of water, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Beside these things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches."

4. The apostle was possessed of a strong presentiment that the hour of his departure was near. It might have been the day for his execution had been set.

5. "I have fought a good fight." He was the scarred veteran of many a battle field for the right.

6. "I have finished my course." His ministry to the Gentile world has touched almost the entire population of the known world.

7. "I have kept the faith." He had been put in trust with the gospel. He had been faithful to that trust.

8. With a forward, upward look he beheld a crown of righteousness, resplendent with glittering stars, that awaited his coming.

9. A list of true and false friends is given. Luke, the beloved physician and companion in travel, was the only one with him at the time of writing. He says a good word for John Mark, whom he criticised more severely at one time.

10. Alexander the coppersmith was a powerful opponent of the apostle. At Paul's first reply in controversy with this man, he stood alone. All openly or silently sided with the coppersmith. Paul graciously invokes forgiveness for this cowardly apostasy.

11. "Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me." And this was most comforting and reassuring. To be alone with God was more than the plaudits of all the world besides. And through the Lord Paul won out in this contention.

11. Paul's faith never wavered. His confidence in God's overruling and sustaining providence was unquestioned. He knew whom he had believed.

Practical Points.

1. Faithfulness in conduct and service is the most praiseworthy trait of the Christian life. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Rev. 2:10.

2. They that fight the battles of the Lord shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and as the stars forever and ever. "Fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life." 1 Tim. 6:12.

3. To love the present world is to deny the Lord of glory. "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." Col. 3:2.

4. Wordlimindedness is a poisonous gas that stifles the life of the church: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." 1 John 2:15.

5. A holy life is better than a thousand good professions. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this. To visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." John 1:27.

IN MEMORIAM.

On September 27, 1858, Mary Edgeworth Kime, daughter of Wm. Miles and Rebecca Kime, was born. She inherited by birth the sterling qualities that were characteristic of her ancestry. On December 16, 1875, the subject of this sketch was married to W. A. Amick. If she had lived until the 16th they would have been married fifty years. To this union were born four sons, C. L., G. A., W. C., and H. F.; three daughters, Mrs. W. H. Neese, Miss Sarah Amick and Mrs. Tom Brown.

All are living and live in N Carolina except W. C., whose home is in Florida.

There are fourteen living grand-children and two dead, one living great-grandchild and two dead.

The brothers and sisters of the deceased are as follows: H. G. Kime of Burlington, R. W. Kime, of Salem, Va., Mrs. J. Rom. Smith of Liberty, Mrs. D. B. Castor of Concord. Miss Sarah Kime of Raleigh, W. A. Kime of Liberty and Mrs. G. H. L. Lingle of Mooresville.

Besides these she leaves a host of other relatives and friends.

In early childhood she united with Richland Lutheran Church. The training received here, in connection with the intensive training at home, effected a stable foundation for that larger life which she so nobly lived.

After her marriage she united with her husband at Mt. Pleasant Methodist Protestant Church, and with him remained a vital member until her Heavenly Father called her home. She was kind, unselfish, far-seeing, hopeful, gentle and generous. She was especially kind and loving as a wife and mother. For many years physical infirmity strove to obtain the mastery, but an indomitable will deferred the day, until her head had whitened with the frosts of sixty-seven winters. All through her life she remained steadfast and true to the objects nearest her heart, namely: her home, her church, and her God. She was so interested in the mission societies of the church, being a charter member of the Home Society.

Near the end of her career she desired that the book of Acts be read. It was read to her by Floyd and she expressed her gratitude. Two days prior to her passing she declared herself ready to go, and expressed herself as being gratified at the prospect of having her desires so nearly fulfilled.

The stricken husband, the broken hearted children, and the sorrowing brothers and sisters are exhorted to praise God for such a life, culminating in such an heroic passing, and look to our Heavenly Father for the guidance of your souls to that destiny that has no limitations, and to that circle of companionships that never ends.

Card Of Thanks.

We wish to express our deepest gratitude and appreciation for the many kindnesses shown us by word and deeds, and the many floral offerings, during the sickness and death of our wife and mother,

W. A. Amick and family.

On November 28 the home of Brother Jesse L. Evans was made sad by the death of his mother, Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Evans. She was born July 28, 1860. In 1881 she was happily married to Albert Hill Evans; to this union were born seven children, six boys and one girl.

She joined the Methodist Protestant Church at Shiloh in early life, and lived a devoted Christian life unto death.

The first of her dear ones to be taken from her by death was Robert Otis who died in infancy. In 1910 death claimed her husband, Albert Hill Evans, leaving to her only her six children to rejoice with her in health and happiness, and to comfort her in sickness and in sorrow. And about four years ago death entered this happy home again, claiming as its victim the valiant soldier of the cross, the late Albert Hill Evans, Jr.

She is survived by four sons and one daughter, William V. Evans of High Point, Harvey L. Evans of Baltimore, Jesse L., John B., and Mrs. D. L. Koontz of Lexington and one brother and twenty-five grandchildren.

I think it can be truly said of her: "her works do follow her," for all who knew Brother Albert Hill Evans, Jr., knew him as one of their best workers in the Methodist Protestant Church. The early training in the home helped to make him what he was and I am sure it was a happy meeting the other night when mother, sons, and father met around God's great white throne to part no more.

We all bow in humble submission and say, Lord, thy will be done. Brothers, sisters, grandchildren, relatives and friends have our deepest sympathies, and remember that our loss is her gain.

The funeral service was conducted by the pastor assisted by Rev. C. L. Whitaker of High Point College, and Rev. Mr. Crutchfield, pastor of South Davidson charge, and the body was laid to rest in Shiloh cemetery to await the resurrection morn.

AUNT CLARA'S MERRY CHRISTMAS. (By Jap Miller.)

In war times it was a New Claudia with a population of one thousand. Now it has a different name with a population of two thousand. A beautiful town with plenty of room it is. A home in New Claudia meant one-half to five acre lots, a town of flowers, shade and fruit trees, a home for birds. The little church was well attended, because our people feared and loved the Lord with the exception of Jake Hall. Money was Jake's lord and master. The first Sunday in December, in 1862, at the Sunday school we met Aunt Clara. Her class of little girls called her dear aunt but aunt was only nineteen, and a fine young lady who loved the Lord.

Today there was a sadness over all, no laughing. This morning Aunt Clara was to be a bride at the morning service. Charley wore a smile and would say to all, "I will be back soon, we will lick the rebs and then Clara and I will settle down and help to make New Claudia a better town if it can be done, for you know it's a fine one now. The Lord will carry me through. Do you promise? I do until death do part us," and it was that way on December 25, 1863. Charley was doing picket duty when an enemy bullet snuffed out that fine young life. They called it the civil war—oh, my brother, when will this old world learn to call murder by its right name? Did our people mourn the loss of Charley? Yes, they were heartbroken. Aunt Clara went to her Lord and Master and He carried her through the dark hours.

She continued to teach her class to the end, they grew older together and as one dropped out some one would take his place. Aunt Clara was teacher in our public schools until 1873 when her father died. A year later her mother followed the father and Aunt Clara was left alone.

The Doctors Knew.

She sold the big home and built a small house next to the church she loved so well. Two years after she was stricken and for three months there was little hope. Then the doctors said she would recover in part but that she never would walk again, and it was that way.

She was a fine worker with the needle and did much sewing and knitting, read books, studied the Scripture and her life was busy. Young girls with their heart troubles found peace at the home of Aunt Clara. Soon young men and old went to her when life's problems were to be settled. Nothing could be done without the help of the Lord, she said, so she guided them out of crooked paths and into the straight and narrow way.

When the weather was bad, her class would go to her home, and as the years rolled by from near and far they came to dear Aunt Clara for advice and help. In 1876 we left New Claudia and went far away. Now it is 1916 and we are back at our old town. Christmas is near and there is to be a great Christmas dinner at the church Christmas eve. They call it "Aunt Clara's Merry Christmas."

There is to be a home-coming for Aunt Clara's boys and girls. Her big family is coming home and there will be more than fifty present. More than 100 had died and could be there only in spirit.

Boxes and packages had been coming for a week, full of cheerful greetings for Christmas.

The 5:30 train came in Christmas eve. Who is that big, well-dressed man? He is a banker from the big city on the lake, several times a millionaire.

Forty years ago a young man on a dark night called at Aunt Clara's and remained for two days, then went away, Aunt Clara standing good for him. The young man and the big banker look to be one and the same except that the banker is forty years older.

There is a beautiful lady—a settlement worker in New York. They say she and her helpers have saved thousands of young girls—but why came she to Aunt Clara's Merry Christmas? Oh well, why not? Aunt Clara saved a girl one time from the fire that kills the soul—why not come? The Merry Christmas is here and every one has the Christmas spirit, every one loves every one and Christ loves them all.

Comes Jake Hall.

My! My! What a fine tree loaded down with gifts. Oh! what a happy crowd it was. Aunt Clara was there in her wheel chair. The preacher is praying. "Bless and keep our dear Aunt Clara and grant, Oh Lord, she may guide us many years yet." Now, all is over, the town is in darkness.

Next morning a neighbor boy and girl go over to Aunt Clara's. "A Merry Christmas, Aunt Clara." She smiles and looks right at them but does not speak. They are frightened and run to their mother. The mother goes over and waves her hand, "a Merry Christmas, Aunt Clara." There was the dear old face and it wore a smile.

Aunt Clara's Merry Christmas started on earth but ended in heaven. They say Aunt Clara's boys and girls met her there to bid her welcome. This Christmas morning was Aunt Clara's seventy-third birthday. She was a Christmas gift to our old wicked world and she also is a Christmas gift to heaven.

Two days later in the church the funeral was held. They sang "Rock of Ages" and "The Sweet By and By," aunt's favorites. The preacher is saying "I am the resurrection and, He that believeth will never die." The text is "Who is Our Neighbor?"

"Why, Aunt Clara, for she with the spirit of her Christ rendered aid to the broken hearted" and then the preacher breaks down and is crying like a child.

Who is this coming forward? Old Jake Hall, the rich man, the miser, the gold lover, who cares nothing for the Lord or any one on earth. It's all the dollars with Jake Hall.

He says to the preacher "May I say a few words?" "Yes, yes, say on wicked man. "She got the Lord to have mercy on me and I should do for dear aunt what I should do for the Lord and for this town and she said that we needed a new and bigger church so I want you to get the plans ready right soon and I will pay all bills. It must be a nice one for our dear aunt wanted it that way. I now love you people and I love the Lord. A light passed before me, some say it was the Lord knocking at our door, we don't know."

Now they are all crying. Uncle Jacob the call him now. He bade them a merry farewell one year ago and with a smile on his face said "I am going to see Aunt Clara."

BIBLE RULES FOR GIVING.

What did the Lord Jesus say about giving? It is more blessed to give than to receive—Acts 20:35.

What kind of a giver does God love? God loves a cheerful giver—2 Cor. 9:7.

How have we received, and how should we give?

Freely ye have received, freely give—Matt. 10:8.

How much should we give? Every man shall give as he is able according to the blessing of the Lord thy God, which he hath given thee—Deut. 16:17.

How much did Jacob promise to give? Of all that Thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto Thee.—Gen. 28:22.

How are our gifts accepted?

If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not—2 Cor. 8:12.

How should we honor the Lord?

Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of thine increase—Prov. 3:9.

What is said of him that pities the poor? He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again—Prov. 19:17.

How often shall we give?

Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him—1 Cor. 1:62.

What promise is given to those who consider the poor?

Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—Psalm 41:1.

How should we treat those who ask for favors?

Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not away.—Matt. 5:42.

What is God's greatest gift to man?

God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life—John 3:16.

What should we say for this?

Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift—2 Cor. 9:15.—Selected.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.Watts.

On November 25 Mrs. Guy L. Watts, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Quick, of Pageland, passed away. Mrs. Watts had been sick for more than a year. She made a brave fight but the grim monster overcame her, but she went down declaring that she was still conqueror through the Lord Jesus Christ. She died trusting the Lord. Mrs. Watts was loved by all who knew her and will be greatly missed by her host of friends. She leaves to mourn their loss her husband and one little child, 14 months old, her father and mother, Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Quick, three sisters and one brother. She was laid to rest in Rose Hill cemetery. The writer was assisted by the pastors of the M. E., the Presbyterian and the Baptist Churches in conducting the funeral services.

C. E. Phillips.Elliott.

December 3, 1925, Mrs. Jane Alice Elliott passed away in the home of her daughter at Handy, N. C., aged 76 years. She was the widow of the late Patterson Elliott. And to this union were born one son, Mr. James P. Elliott, of Handy, and three daughters, Mrs. W. A. Frank of Handy, Mrs. Pres. Varner, of Chandler's Grove, Mrs. T. R. Keith of Atlanta Ga. There are eight grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Sister Elliott was converted at the age of eleven years, and lived a faithful and devoted christian all her life. Was a member at Lanes Chapel M. E. Church. Her sweet jovial disposition made her a favorite among all, old and young. All who knew her loved her. The writer has known her only a short time, but visited her during her last sickness. And while she was afflicted and very feeble much of the time during the last year, she manifested a sweet spirit all the while.

She told the writer a few days before she died that she had been making preparation for this journey for a long time and that the way was clear, and she was ready to cross over and be at rest.

It was an inspiration for any pastor to know her and be in her presence and we have no doubt that she has joined her loved ones on the other shore.

Funeral was held at Lineberry M. P. Church, by the pastor, on December 4th at 11 A. M., and her body was laid to rest in the church cemetery.

The mound that marks her resting place was covered with beautiful flowers, which is evidence of the high esteem in which she was held, by her relatives and friends. All the bereaved family have the love and sympathy of the entire church and community.

C. E. Ridge.Hauser.

Mary Murphy Hauser, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Murphy and wife of Mr. Robert N. Hauser, was born April 27, 1893, and triumphantly passed from earth's toils to her reward in heaven, November 25, 1925.

It was my good fortune to know the deceased since she was nine years old, to receive her into the church and to officiate at her marriage and to be her pastor for ten years. It can be truly said that a good woman has gone from us. It is not strange that Mary left that last message of assurance that she was going home to rest with her Lord, for she gave Him her heart early in life and consecrated her powers to the service of God.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved and may the memory of the consecrated christian life of this wife and mother remain with them until they shall be called home to meet her where parting will be no more.

"Sister, thou wast mild and lovely,

Gentle as the summer breeze,

Pleasant as the air of evening,

When it floats among the trees."

J. D. Williams.Carter.

Brother S. C. Carter, familiarly known to a host of friends as "Uncle Chris," died Tuesday, November 10, 1925. If he had lived until January 17th, he would have been sixty-nine years of age.

I have used the word "died." Certainly for him it is an unfortunate and meaningless word. It is better to say that on that day he entered into the more abundant life. He wanted to die in order that he might live.

We often use the words "he was a good man," without realizing the full content of the words. It can sincerely be said that Brother Carter was a good man, and no qualifications need be put upon the words. He often said he was "trying to live to the glory of God." And as one who knew him over a period of years, I can testify that he did that thing, and did it largely.

Brother Carter was never known to speak evil of any one. He was especially considerate of the character of his pastors, and would permit no one to say aught against them. He was loyal to an unusual degree to his church, to his pastors, to the denomination. One of the things that distressed him most during his long illness was the fact that he could not attend services or contribute as he had formerly to the support of the church.

Brother Carter leaves a widow by a second marriage, and a number of children by both marriages, all of them devoted to him in life and holding him in precious memory.

The church and the family are poorer by his going; but heaven certainly is richer with the presence of another man "who walked with God and was not because God took him."

Brother Carter's body was laid away in the family grave yard overlooking the little town of Democrat where he had lived for many years, the services being conducted by Rev. J. S. Williams.

C.W. Bates.Mrs. L. M. Bassett.

Mrs. L. M. Bassett, for many years a member of the Asheville Methodist Protestant Church, died on Monday morning, November 23, 1925, leaving a number of children to mourn the loss of a good mother. Her husband preceded her in death eight years ago this coming April.

Mrs. Bassett did not have an opportunity to come to church often, but none ever doubted her interest and loyalty to it. And she trained her children in the same good way. The former pastors of the church here at Asheville, as well as the present pastor, can bear abundant testimony under what great difficulties these both mother and daughters have been true to our cause here.

Mrs. Bassett was sick less than a week, but her frail body could not withstand the attack of the severe case of pneumonia. But she was ready to go when the summons came and bore testimony to her peace with God.

In the absence of the pastor Rev. J. S. Williams conducted the funeral. He has my thanks for the kindness.

C. W. Bates, Pastor.Death of a Baby.

On Saturday evening, December 5, death came into the home of Mrs. and Mrs. Worth Bulla, Asheville, N. C., and took their darling baby, Everette Worth, aged ten months.

The funeral service was conducted at Charlotte M. P. Church, Sunday afternoon by Rev. C. H. Hill. A large congregation of relatives and friends gathered to extend their sympathy to the grieved parents.

Although Everette was quite young, he was always present at Sunday school with his parents and was one of our precious jewels. He will be greatly missed. We loved him so much. May the Heavenly Father comfort and bless the bereaved family, we commend them to the sympathetic Christ who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the Kingdom of heaven."

Lillie M. Henley.THINGS TO FORGET.

It is a good thing to "write injuries in the dust, but kindness in marble." These are the places of inscription which they deserve. Injuries make wounds, it is true, but they are outlived or grow over; while kindnesses live on and on, and become producers as well as products. To write injuries in enduring form and kindness in that which perishes is a reversal of that which both wisdom and experience teach.

Beyond this softly closing door

I shut the world away,
The din of sounding street, the cry
And clamor of the day.

As one within a cloister hears

The vesper bells repeat

The old refrain of love and peace,

So here the dusk is sweet.

No dials record the speeding hours,

No time or change is here,

No seasons wane, no blossoms blow,

Eternity is near.

Here is the peace that long ago

Lay hushed and tenderly

Upon the soul of Him who knelt

In dim Gethsemane.

—Arthur Wallace Peach, in The Churchman.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Pageland Circuit.—The first quarterly conference will meet at Rose Hill Church in Pageland on Saturday before third Sunday, of this month at 3 o'clock. All members are asked to be present as we have some important business to transact. C. E. Phillips.

Saxapahaw Charge.—Thank Offering services have recently been held at Orange Chapel, Salem, and Concord. The service at Concord was in the form of a missionary play. It was very interesting and instructive. Three of the churches on this charge are planning Christmas entertainments. From time immemorial Orange Chapel has been suspending Sunday school during the winter months. This custom will be broken this year. The Sunday school will run on through the winter.

The people of this charge have given the pastor a hearty welcome as he begins his fourth year on the work. There seems to be the spirit of cooperation at each church. It is the desire of the pastor to make this the best year of the four.

Mrs. Cecil Ferguson, wife of the superintendent of Concord Sunday school, recently joined Concord Church, coming to us from the Baptist Church. We welcome this good woman into our fellowship.

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Guthrie, who has been near death's door, is improving slowly.

Two Poundings.

On the third Sunday in November the good people of Orange Chapel Church loaded the pastor's Ford with almost everything needed for the pantry, consisting of Irish and sweet potatoes, coffee, honey, sugar, canned apples and strawberries, jelly, sweet pear pickles, pears, sausage, canned plums, two chickens, and handkerchiefs. Then the first Sunday in December the good people of Concord agreeably surprised their pastor when they gave him two Ford loads of provisions; flour, sweet and Irish potatoes, sugar, canned peaches, kraut, canned snap beans, coffee, brown sugar, peach pickles, jelly, canned tomatoes, canned blackberries, meat, one pumpkin, and one ham. Some of the names were not given, so we will not give any names. We are grateful to each one. May the blessings of God rest upon each one and help me to give them the very best service I am able to render.

H. L. Isley.

Annual Banquet Of M. P. Baracca Class And Election Of Officers.

Burlington M. P. Baracca class enjoyed its annual banquet in the church but Thursday night at 7:30. The ladies of the church served the supper and they had a fine supper. The Social Committee has this in charge each year. The class has on roll about 200; last Sunday there were 101 members present at the banquet and business meeting that followed. 84 members were present. The class is divided in two sections A and B. Mr. Dave DeMoss is captain of section A and Mr. James Thacker is captain of Section B. The following officers were elected for coming year: Mr. W. V. Coble was re-elected president; 1st vice president, Mr. Henry Graves; 2nd vice president, Mr. Andrews Thomas. Mr. Layton Anthony was the elected secretary with Mr. S. C. Jones 1st assistant and Mr. M. J. Staddler 2nd assistant secretary; Mr. L. R. Pickard was re-elected treasurer. Press reporter, J. E. Workman, assistant press reporter, Mr. Lener Jones. Mr. George C. Smith was re-elected Teacher and Mr. J. G. Rogers 1st assistant teacher and Mr. H. L. Graves 2nd assistant teacher. The membership Committee, Social Committee, Financial Committee and Hospital and Visitation Committee to be named later. The pastor, Rev. S. W. Taylor, was present and gave the class a check for winning the prize he offered to the class that secured the most subscriptions for the church paper, the M. P. Herald. The class thanked him for the prize and returned it to him. Then he gave the prize money on the 210 new Sunday school song books the class decided to buy for the Sunday school in the near future. The class voted as being opposed to any change in the Volstead Act that would allow the people to have wines and beer and they wanted the ones that were in the city trying to get signers to a petition to get the law makers to give them wine and beer to know that as for the class, they were not wanted in Burlington now or in the future. The class enjoyed the special music rendered by Mr. Crutchfield and Mr. Chas. Moore, Mr. Dawkins, Mr. Casper Riddle, and Mr. Owen McPherson. J. G. Workman, Rep.

Concord, Saxapahaw Charge.—The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Concord M. P. Church gave a Thank offering service on Saturday night, December 5. A large crowd was present. A very interesting program was rendered and enjoyed by all. It consisted of a short play, recitations by the Jr. Society, a short talk by the pastor, Rev. H. L. Isley, and music. The collection amounted to $12. The pastor preached on Sunday as it was his regular appointment. A very large crowd attended the service.

There will be preaching at Concord church third Sunday at 2:30 P. M.

A Christmas tree and exercise will be given Christmas eve, 7:30 P. M. Everyone cordially invited.

The Christmas holidays are fast approaching and we extend our wishes to the Herald and its readers for a very Merry Christmas. Reporter.

Chapel Hill, Davidson Ct.—We were very much pleased to have our same preacher come for another year. Glad to have him and family in our homes. We welcome them any time. He preached for us the third Sunday, giving us a good sermon. We have not got organized for Sunday school yet. It has been raining most every Sunday. But we will try again next Sunday. And it has rained our our prayer meeting the last two times. Next Sunday night is the time again. They met last Saturday evening to make plans for the arbor and are to go to work on it some time soon; hope they will have better accommodation in the future at the camp meeting. Friends, let us do our best for the Lord. Time is swiftly passing on and death is on our trail; let us be at our Father's business. Lizzie Cranford

Charlotte.—The work for the new year started off nicely and we are indeed grateful to have Rev. and Mrs. Surratt with us for other year.

The first quarterly conference was held Thursday evening, December 10th. The reports were very encouraging and we are hoping to make this year one of the best in history of our church.

A new secretary was elected, Mr. J. Hamkins. Plans were made for the year, and the goal was read and approved.

We are glad to report that our church voted to carry a note of $1000 toward the college fund. Miss Enolia Presnell was elected treasurer of this fund with the pastor as assistant.

Mrs. Ridge, the wife of Rev. Atlas Ridge of Friendship charge, who is at present at the Charlotte Sanatorium for treatment, improving and expects to return home soon.

The Ladies' Aid Society held its regular monthly meeting the first Monday. Several plans were suggested as to how to raise money for the coming year. At present a private sale is being conducted.

We are very glad to have Miss Nan Lowe, milk of Asheboro worship with us during her stay in the city. We are all glad to welcome Mrs. J. B. Spauld, former member of Grace Church, into our membership.

Mrs. B. W. Little

Siler City Church.—The writer was surprised to find such a big little church in Siler City. Since conference there have been four sermons preached to appreciative congregations. The people have opened their hearts to the Lord and have shown a great desire to work for the Master. The Sunday school is doing nicely. The Christian Endeavor Society is much alive and good programs are given each Sunday evening. We regret very much that Mr. Wade Siler, one of our members, has been very ill. We trust that he will soon be restored to health and strength again.

We will have much more to report from Siler City next week. F. L. Gibbs, Pastor.

Liberty Church, Siler City Charge.—This is the first opportunity the writer has had to report regarding the work at Liberty since he signed there by the recent annual conference. We now have everything organized and are in better shape to let the outside world know what we are doing.

The writer has preached to large congregations that seemed hungry for the gospel. It is always an encouraging and hopeful sign to see the work of the Kingdom when people attend the services of the church. During my first trip to Liberty I was much impressed by the kind-hearted men, women, and young people that I found who were ready to co-operate in every way possible.

Sunday, December 13, was a great day preaching services; the Sunday school, and Christian Endeavor.

The Sunday school, under the direction of the new superintendent, was largely attended. The morning and evening preaching services and the church filled to its capacity. At these services Miss Georgia Boone, of Burlington, N. C., sang beautiful solos which were very uplifting and added much to the good singing of the choir which was decidedly improved.

The Christian Endeavorers discussed the topic "Giving." The program was one of the best ever witnessed by the writer. Every one in the program was well prepared. A piano and a vocal duet added much to the well prepared program. There were at least fifty present for the meeting. F. L. Gibbs, Pastor.

Pleasant Grove.—The Ladies' Aid Society held their monthly meeting with Mrs. I. A. Gue. Almost all the members were present. The president, Mrs. A. C. Cecil, was absent on account of the sickness of her husband. We wish him a speedy recovery.

Brother Reynolds gave us two good and edifying sermons Sunday. At the morning service his subject was "The crucifixion of Christ." Since sin caused this most cruel death we need to stay near the cross in order to see sin as it really is. When we drift from the cross sin seems small and there is no ill sin. At the night service he preached on "Present Tense Religion," using as his text 1 Peter 3:36. In order to get the blessings in the future for us we must have a present tense religion and believe the bible a present book. We are sorry Mrs. Reynolds was not able to be at church Sunday. We hope she will be with us again soon.

Our pastor's daughter, Mrs. Pearl Honey, is helping to prepare the Christmas entertainment. She is also the president of the C. E. Society. We certainly appreciate her help.

Davidson Ct.—Our first quarterly meeting was held at Lineberry Church Saturday, December 12th, at 2 P. M. All of the business that was before the conference was transacted in the spirit of love and co-operation.

The conference passed a resolution to continue the work on parsonage and paint it. When this is done Davidson Ct. will have the six room Bungalow style building, and it will be a credit to the good people of this place.

Another item of interest was the election of a board of six stewards, (one for each church) to make the every member canvass the budgets. We named them "Missionary Stewards." They are being furnished with a list of names of the respective churches, and some of them are already at work. They have the opportunity to do a great work for the church. And I believe they are going to work at their task.

We had a call meeting of the members of Lineberry Church last Wednesday night to discuss the question of whether we would build an addition to the present building or build a new church.

The vote was unanimous for a new church. The church trustees have bought a little bunch of timber close by and this is to be worked by free labor and the profit to go to church building fund. It was encouraging to hear our strongest men financially stand up and pledge their hearty support. And I predict that in the near future there will be erected a beautiful brick church at Lineberry.

Pleasant Grove is to have a Christmas tree and exercise on Thursday night, the 24th.

Last Saturday eve while the writer was holding the quarterly meeting a number of the good women of Lineberry church met at the parsonage and pounded the preacher's wife. Some who came to the quarterly conference also brought useful gifts.

The pastor and family greatly appreciate every article brought and more especially do we appreciate the spirit of love that prompted the gift. I pray that our Heavenly Father will bless them all and help me in return to render my very best service as a pastor.

We are now approaching the holiday season and here's wishing the Editor, and all the readers of the Herald a Merry Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

Faithfully yours, C. E. Ridge, Pastor.

Fallston.—The little son of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Wright passed away December 12, aged one year, eight months and five days. He has never been a strong child but a very sweet child. He was sick fourteen weeks. Weep not, dear parents, as those that have no hope. While Elton can't come to you it is possible for you to go to him. He is in the sunlight of God's flower garden, beckoning for you to come.

We have lost four members in our church the past year by death. Mrs. Samantha Grigg, Mrs. Catherine Bingham, Mr. John Hartman and Mr. Marvin Walker.

A large number have joined our church this year, while others have been dropped and some have removed to other churches. The harvest truly is great but the laborers are few.

We have prayer meeting every Wednesday night. Christian Endeavor Society has also been organized, which will meet once a month. Miss Anna Mae Lackey was elected president.

The first quarterly meeting will meet next Saturday.

The average attendance in our Sunday school the last year was 166. Our collection amounted to $120.00 We paid $87.21 for literature, and the fourth Sunday offerings goes to our Children's Home.

Reporter.

Flat Rock Circuit.—Our first quarterly conference met last Saturday at Flat Rock Church, December 12. Dr. Dixon preached for us at 11 o'clock. The business meeting at 1:30. It was a good day for all who were present. The reports were all very encouraging and a sweet spirit prevailed through the meeting.

Brother Dixon preached at Gideon's Grove at 11 A. M. Sunday and at Flat Rock 3 P. M.

I heard many nice things said about his sermon at Gideon and I heard him myself at Flat Rock. He brought us three great messages. Sister Dixon preached for me at Bethany Sunday at 11 A. M. She brought a great message of love from John 3:16. Everybody enjoyed the message. I feel their visit to this work will be long remembered. Come again.

The prospect is very encouraging for a good year. Brethren, pray for us that we may do the Lord's will. Then we know He will make our way prosperous.

May God bless our entire Zion.

Joel B. Trogon, Pastor.

Shiloh, Randolph Circuit.—We are delighted to have Mr. A. O. Lindley back with us this year. He brought us a good message on Sunday, December 13, at 11 o'clock.

December 6, Mr. McCulloch of Greensboro, preached. His subject was, "A Call to the ministry." It was enjoyed by every one. He is to bring us another message first Sunday.

Our Sunday school is moving along fine, the interest is good. We are going to have a Christmas tree and program, Thursday night, December 24, at 7 o'clock. Everybody is invited.

Mr. Grady Hemphill was elected steward to collect $21.43 to help support the college.

Monday morning the sad news came to us, that our beloved superintendent, Mr. M. Brown, left his earthly home to receive his reward in heaven.

Best wishes to the Herald and readers.

Reporter.

Bethesda, Halifax Ct.—We had a pretty good congregation out yesterday, and Mr. Spencer gave us a good talk on the appointed subject—the need for more men in the ministry—emphasizing also the need for leaders in other branches of church work. We are glad to have him teach a class in Sunday school for us, as he does when he is here second Sundays. Our Sunday school is small, and does not seem to be making much progress. We greatly miss those who have moved away.

Mr. Spencer's "puzzle question" which he intimates he could not answer, was merely an inquiry, in rhyme, as to what process he, the "old" preacher, went through in order to become the "new." He speaks as though there were dark doings "the people will never know." We hope the process was not very painful, and are glad that, in this case, the old is the new, so that we have him and his family with us for another year.

Mrs. Horace Mitchell left, a short time ago, to join her husband in Florida.

Miss Harriet Wills of Greensboro, and Mrs. W. J. Boyd, from near Manson, were recent visitors here in their old home neighborhood.

Rev. and Mrs. Bethea lately spent a few days in this section.

Reporter.

Flat Rock, Vance.—We are beginning the new conference year in fine spirit. We are very glad to have Rev. Mr. Chambliss on our field for another year.

The election of Church officers was held on his first appointment at Flat Rock as follows: Trustees—A. E. White, J. W. Reavis, J. T. Hester, S. H. and H. J. Satterwhites; Stewards—B. W. Jones, S. W. Reavis, F. G. Hester and C. A. Wortham; Mr. Reavis Secy. and Treas. of Board of Stewards; Sunday school Superintendent, N. J. Parrot; Asst. Supt., F. G. Hester; Secy. and Treas. of Sunday school, B. W. Jones.

Rev. Mr. Chambliss held his first quarterly conference on December 5th. That evening he met with our stewards in a business meeting to plan the year's work. We feel proud of our board of stewards and expect to see the finances of our church go forward. They are now about complete with the every member canvass and will report results next Sunday. They want to raise one half of year's finances during first three months. Friends, let's help them.

Mr. Chambliss gave us a splendid sermon on his first appointment. We wish it possible for him to be here once a month.

We had sixty-nine in Sunday school last Sunday morning and nearly as many at the evening prayer meeting. Seems our prayer meetings are taking on new life.

The money is in hand for a Christmas tree and treat that will be given on evening of December 25. Old Santa Claus expects to be there and meet all the children.

The W. H. M. S. is coming on nicely. They held a public Thank Offering service on Thanksgiving evening. Offering nearly $10.00.

The J. Clyde Auman Mission Band still hold their meetings, but have lost some of interest as the leader has been hindered from meeting with them.

We will not have Christmas program and offering as we expected, but hope to take an offering on December 27th which will be forwarded to conference Treas.

A shadow of sadness was cast over our Sunday school last Sunday when it was known that Mrs. Amick, mother of our much loved Mrs. Neese, had passed on to her reward. Much sympathy was expressed for Mrs. Neese.

Wishing editor and readers of Herald a Merry Christmas. M. V. W.

Fountain Place.—We are glad to have Bro. Hendry back with us for another year, and we are hoping for great things this year.

Bro. Hendry is giving us a course in Bible study at 7:30 each Thursday evening, which is very interesting and instructive.

We have a live Sunday school, though small. We have 90 on roll, with 72 present last Sunday, with a belated Thanksgiving offering of $36.08, which was sent to our Children's Home at High Point.

Our Sunday school will render a Christmas pageant on Wednesday eve, December 23, at 7:30.

T. A. A., Reporter.

Graham.—We are glad to be returned to Graham, for another year, and we are hoping to do more in a financial way this year.

We thank the Ladies' Aid for their making the parsonage more comfortable and attractive.

On the evening of December 3rd about fifty of our members came to the parsonage in a body bringing us lots of nice things to eat, and some to wear, and we received a nice load of coal from one member. And we have had notice served on us not to purchase a turkey for Christmas, and we think we know what that means.

May God bless these good people for their good deeds and kindness.

We thank you one and all. Wishing you a Merry Christmas. D. R. Williams.

The Postal Card, W. F. Kennett, Editor.

To Rev. Joel B. Trogon.

Dear Brother Trogon:—

You are pastor of one of the best charges in the N. C. Conference and dear old Bethel is one of our best rural Churches. I noticed that for your first service at Bethel this year you received $61.00, I think that is the correct amount, any way you asked if any pastor received more for his first sermon "let him speak out in meeting," or something to that effect. Well, last Sunday was our first service at Mt. Carmel, one of the three churches composing Granville Circuit, and after preaching his first sermon the pastor received $141.05 on salary. Come again, Brother Trogon. It is well to provoke one another to good works. This was an advanced step at Mt. Carmel. Brother W. P. Garrett, the treasurer, had prepared subscription cards and they were placed in the hands of all members present with the result that the $141.05 was paid. In filling out the cards the children of the church were not overlooked and we noticed some of them handing in their cards.

Our first quarterly conference, December 5th, was not a good day for a quarterly conference. The roads were not good and about 10:30 rain began to fall and the conference tell off in attendance. However, we had a fairly good attendance and the work for the new conference year was launched. About $75.00 was contributed on the circuit for the Children's Home as Thanksgiving offering.

The Herald.

The M. P. Herald has been unusually rich since the annual conference and we are getting new subscribers and also renewals. All our people, old and young, big and little, should read the Herald, and of course, The Postal Card.

From Albemarle to Thomasville.

We made the trip in two and half hours, driving through a constant downpour of rain all the way, but this is not the object of this letter.

To begin with, about a week before conference, Brother Jap Hatley called me into his office and gave me a check and told me to go get a new suit of clothes, and with that check were the names of those giving the $35.00 for that purpose. By the assistance of a friend, I not only got a suit, but a discount on the suit, a good belt, a tie, and had enough of that money left to pay for all my meals at conference. These folks did more than they thought they were doing. And some times I believe the good we do unconsciously goes farther than that good we try to know that we do.

Then after we went home from conference, and the good folks learned we were leaving many of them came and expressed their love in words, acts, and other ways. The ladies of the church community were very kind to Mrs. Trollinger. Mrs. F. L. Trexler gave her articles of clothing, Mrs. C. L. Hatley a table runner, Mrs. R. D. Biles gave her a set of pillow cases. Then the morning we left, Mrs. John U. Whitlock, Mrs. C. Lester Melton, Mrs. S. R. Hutchins and Miss Ollie Whitlock brought us a dozen jars of canned fruits, preserves and jellies.

We left behind us in Albemarle some of the very best people in the world. Their names are written upon our hearts, and will always remain there. And we believe that we have left some of our best friends there. This is one of the tragedies of the pastor's life. We must get up, go, and leave friends and in some instances never see them in this world again. It is true that new ones are made, but the old ones must remain. May God bless the dear people of the Albemarle church, and may he guide them in the selection of a pastor, and may he lead them as no other man has yet led them, to a greater success which they deserve. We will watch the progress of this church and are expecting it to do much in Kingdom service.

We arrived in Thomasville, and managed to get enough of the furniture arranged so that we could have a place to sleep that Thursday night. On the first Sunday we served as pastor there were 188 in Sunday school, and as many or more stayed for preaching. Last Sunday there were 224. A new roll has been made, with a goal of 400 by Christmas, and if the increase is made each week as it was last week, we will have more than 400.

Last Wednesday night the storm broke. The preacher was assaulted, and left mortally wounded by the side of the kitchen table. It was on this wise. We came home from prayer meeting, and doffed coat and collar, and would have been ready for the Land of Beautiful Dreams soon, when the door very unceremoniously opened, and the street was emptied into the front hall. I thought the crowd would never get in the room. The kitchen was filled and some stood in the dining room and hall, and for one time in my life I had nothing to say. When the smoke of battle had cleared away, and the besiegers had retreated we found a small grocery store had been left with us. Leading the list was 37 pounds of sugar, flour, salt, lard, sausage, apples, evaporated peaches, prunes, 14 jars of home canned fruits, pickles, jellies, and preserves, canned kraut, canned cherries, canned peaches and pineapple, citron, pumpkin for Thanksgiving pies, post toasties, corn flakes, oat meal, puffed wheat, seeded raisins, molasses, coffee, pork and beans, butter, chip beef, macaroni, grape nuts, and liver pudding. And that was not all, Brother Walter Loftin had sent us a load of wood, and Brother D. R. Connell asked me what my moving bill was, and paid that for me.

The work is starting off nicely, and it seems that the people "have a mind to work." Time and space will not permit me to say more, but the church reporter, Mrs. A. H. Ragan, will have a report that will doubtless give the reader an idea of the organization here. Before closing I want to say that I have never seen a church so thoroughly organized as this one was when I came, it speaks well for them, and also for the former pastor, Brother Reynolds. They love Brother Reynolds, and speak well of him, and he will be loved by this people. J. L. Trollinger.

Spencer Charge.—Yesterday was a good day for us in Charlotte. We held two services, received seven new members into the church. Others promised to unite with church soon. The congregation was more than double what it had been. We got two new subscribers to the M. P. Herald. Sold 25 new song books. We have a number of children to baptize at our next appointment. We will hold our first quarterly conference here in Concord at my house, December 11 at 2 P. M. We are expecting a good quarterly conference. We are hoping and praying to get in better quarters soon. Then our work will grow faster. As soon as we can get a lot we are planning to build a Tabernacle on the lot and worship in that until we can build a church. Brethren, pray for us.

Yours in the work, D. A. Braswell.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Best For Jesus.

Text: "And when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold and frankincense and myrrh." Matt. 2:11.

The wise men brought to Jesus the very best that their country afforded. They were wise in so doing. For the New King of all the earth, just arrived from the glory world, was entitled to the best that human hearts and hands could bestow. The wise men's example demands worldwide imitation. The entire race are subjects of this King of kings and Lord of lords. As the almighty and beneficent Sovereign of souls and destinies He calls for the best that is in us and outside of us for the extension of His Kingdom and the glory of His name. Let us therefore bring Him on this another anniversary of His birth, in unstinted measure, the gold of character, the frankincense of love, and the myrrh of service.

Let us bring to Him

The Gold Of Character.

"To be, or not to be, that is the question," and the supreme question of life. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Character is that quality of the soul that foreshadows and seals destiny. It is the only coin of earth that has circulation in the other worlds.

Good character, like the gold of earth, is God-given. We build, or form, character out of the material and with the disposition and strength that God has given. Man becomes good, not by resolution or reformation, but by the power of divine grace. Character is on achievement of redemption. Sin is taken away by the blood of Jesus. Soul purity is imparted by the Holy Spirit. Righteousness of heart and life come through faith in Jesus Christ. "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Character is the supreme achievement. Jesus said to the seventy: "Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the devils are subject unto you; but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven." Nothing can please the Lord of glory more than to be good, right, and holy in heart and conduct. Without the faith that produces a holy character it is impossible to please God.

And let us also bring to Jesus

The Frankincense Of Love

The Almighty is jealous of the supreme love that is due Him. The first of all His Commandments, or son or daughter, more than he does Him, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." Real and acceptable discipleship to Jesus brings about this supreme love to him. He has declared that if anyone loves father or mother, or son or daughter, more than he does Him, he is not worthy to be His disciple. Jesus demands the best from our hearts because He has given us the best out of His own heart and life. His supreme sacrifice on the cross is the greatest and mightiest love-offering of all time and all eternity.

His is a most winning love. "We love him because he first loved us." His is a compelling love. "The love of Christ constraineth us." It is by the power of the love of God shed abroad in our hearts that we are inclined and enabled to love Jesus with all our hearts and our neighbors as ourselves.

In the last place let us bring to Jesus

The Myrrh Of Service.

Character and love are weak, insufficient, and unavailing if they do not express themselves in uplifting service. Character demands a life worthy of the high, christian calling. Love longs to dispense loving deeds and sacrifices.

All service is accepted as rendered to "him that loved us and gave himself for us." He has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Jesus just hungers and thirsts for service in His name and for His glory. He has said, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." And it is also His meat and drink for His followers to do His will and finish the work that He has given us to do. Our work of faith and labor of love is most pleasing to Him.

Let us not be satisfied with anything less than the best for Jesus. Let us not say, "This, or that, is good enough." Some one has said, "The good is the greatest enemy of the best." Our blessed and most adorable Christ is entitled to the very best that we can give. Let us render to Him the purest heart, the holiest life, the most ardent love, and the most self-sacrificing service. And let us make this Christmas the happiest birthday that Jesus has ever had.—Word of Life.

A SELECTED NOTE.

A young man called upon his pastor to say he had made a mistake in joining the church and to ask if he would not better leave it.

"What makes you think that you have made a mistake?" asked the pastor.

"Because," the young fellow answered slowly, "I can't feel it any more. I know, of course, that religion isn't simply emotion. But it shouldn't bore me. There's something very wrong when that is so. I—I can't tell you how I have fought it. Of all the men in the world, I feel that doctors ought to believe. And yet, I can't believe."

"When you united with the church you were in Mr. Houghton's class, I remember. Did he make you study?"

"He certainly did!" the young fellow responded, laughing in spite of his troubles. "You had to study if you were going to hold up your head in that class."

"And when he died, you kept on your Bible reading for a time, but it grew more and more perfunctory, and then you began to forget it altogether; and when you did take it up, you were bored. Is that it?"

"That is about it, sir."

"You are studying medicine. When you have your degree will you never look at your books again?"

The young fellow's face flamed. "I don't know what you mean, sir. A good doctor never stops studying. He has to keep up with every experiment, every discovery."

"And yet you expect, as a Christian, to take in enough Christianity in a year to last the rest of your life!"

"But it hasn't lasted; that's exactly the point."

"Certainly. That is the point with thousands of Christians in the church today—lack of food. Have you studied your Bible to see what it has to say to doctors? Have you studied it to learn about human nature and the way to treat it? You keep up with the latest medical discoveries—have you laid out for yourself a course in the great discoveries of men whose work it is to interpret the Word of God? Have you studied the nervous system? Have you ever put it all to practical tests, as you experiment in your laboratory? In other words, have you given God half a chance?"

The young man's face had cleared. He held out his hand.

"Thank you, sir" he said.—Youth's Companion.

PREACHER'S BIRTHDAY ON SUNDAY.

The pastor of Calvary Church, Greensboro, is a year older than he was last Saturday. Before last Sunday he could say that he was only — years old, but now he has to acknowledge that he is — years old, or one year older than he was last Saturday. He acknowledges with sincere appreciation the gift of a nice brief case given by Mrs. J. H. Coble, and a ten dollar check by J. F. Williams and family.

While gifts are being acknowledged he wants to also acknowledged two cash donations since conference, one from Brother T. K. Causey and the other from Mrs. Mary C. McCulloch.

And still there are gifts to be acknowledged. The pastor does not want to fail to show his appreciation of any. During conference and since Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Parish have given us two nice lots of fresh meats. Mrs. Parish also gave the lady of the house a good new home-made quilt. The preacher folks have been enjoying some of Brother E. F. Alfred's fine turnips.

But this article started out with a statement about a preacher's birthday. Yes, it was on Sunday but he did not celebrate.

Lexington, State St. Church.—Silence on the part of this reporter for the past few weeks does not by any means signify that there has been nothing to report. All the work is moving along encouragingly. Sunday school continues to grow, and the C. E. Society grows larger and better all the time. The children and some of the young ladies of the Sunday school are practicing twice or three times a week for the Christmas program which will be given next Sunday night, beginning at 7:30 o'clock.

On the first Thursday in December the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met with Mrs. J. W. Lindsay. The meeting was interesting and helpful. Mrs. F. J. Cox, president, led the devotional exercises. The 2nd and 3rd chapters of the book we are studying were reported on by Mrs. J. F. Burkhart. This course of study, "Prayer and Missions," is proving quite a benefit to our Society in many ways.

Mrs. Curtis Koonts will report on the 4th chapter at the next meeting which will be held with Mrs. F. J. Cox on the first Thursday in January 3:30 P. M.

Our pastor at the eleven o'clock service Sunday brought before us in a very forceful and eloquent way the need of more ministers and leaders in all the branches of the work.

Mr. and Mrs. Bethea's report of the supper and bazaar at the Children's Home last Friday is quite a glowing one. They were well pleased with the progress the children are making under the efficient leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Lowdermilk and their helpers.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

Catalogue and application blank will be forwarded upon application. Those desiring further information should address The President, High Point College, High Point, N. C.

Toluca Charge, Laurel Hill.—Brother J. M. Morgan preached to a large congregation at our church last Sunday, December 13. He delivered a wonderful message. We are all glad that God sent Brother Morgan back to us from conference, for we feel we could not do without him.

Our Sunday school average is off a little, because some of the scholars moved away, but we hope to get some back in their places that will be just as good workers.

As the Fallston Charge has been divided we are hoping that the new parsonage will be erected near Toluca.

Love, Joy, Why Not Circuit.—The church was filled to its seating capacity last Sunday to welcome our new pastor, Rev. D. I. Garner, who preached for us an excellent sermon. The people seemed highly pleased with the way he is starting the work off for the new year. We have planned to take an offering every 2nd Sunday on the budget. The collection last Sunday amounted to about $40.

Our Sunday school is still improving under our efficient Superintendent, Mr. Frank Hul-in. May we all resolve as the new year starts off to be more punctual, more prayerful and more attentive to our church than ever before and to discharge our duties faithfully.

We are hoping for this to be the greatest year yet at Love Joy Church. Our church needs recovering very much and our committee has decided on metal shingles which will make a very good and lasting roof.

We were glad to have Rev. J. W. Hulin, our former pastor, with us the 5th Sunday in November who preached us a good short sermon. He has a warm spot in many hearts who were delighted to have him visit us and preach for us again.

Prayer meeting next Sunday led by A. W. Hulin.

New Hope Church, Vance Ct.—Owing to the fact that our reporter is off at school our reports have not been sent in promptly. But I am thankful to say our church is still alive and doing a splendid work.

We were indeed glad to have our pastor, M. P. Chambliss, back with us for another year. He filed his appointment at New Hope the first Sunday in December and gave us a good sermon.

Just before the service officers were elected for the coming year, and a Thanksgiving collection was taken for the Children's Home.

Our Sunday school, which has been running continuously for the past thirty-five years, is still doing a great work. The attendance has been very good this fall, considering the weather, and we trust it may continue good all the winter.

We are hoping and praying that this may be our best year at New Hope for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

BI WISE'S ADVANCE STEP.

The Associated Press sends out from New York the following report of an address by Rabbi S. Wise, Jewish rabbi in New York. That Mr. Wise has taken a great step in his thought of Jesus. He now acts as a real man and a Jew and an old teacher of morality. Let Mr. Wise take another forward step and recognize the Son of God and he will be a truly converted Jew, a Christian. Here is the report of the Associated Press:

New York, Dec. 21.—(AP.)—Accepting Jesus as the Messiah, "not as a myth, but as a man," said Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, of the Free Synagogue, believes that the doctrines of the Jews are basically those taught by the Christians.

"It is not impractical and unrealistic the Jews feel it is, Dr. Wise told the audience in Carnegie hall yesterday, if the Christians have failed to live by the teachings. The doctrines preached by the Jews form a code of ethics unparalleled in the history of morality."

"It was," said Rabbi Wise. "I accept the notion I had been led to believe in my life—a notion that Jesus was a myth and never existed. I tell you, I repeat these words to every Jew in the world if need be: 'Jesus was not a myth, but a man.'"

"That Jesus, as a Jew, taught a doctrine that was essentially Jewish in spirit. It is continued."

"The Christendom has renounced Jesus, shall we continue to deny him? We, his brother Jews, are free to accept his teachings anew."

"We not say that this Jew is soulless and that the soul of his teaching is nothing but Jewish? The teaching of the Jew is a phase of the spirit of the Jew godward."

REV. D. A. BRASWELL HOME BURNED.

The home of Rev. D. A. Braswell was almost completely destroyed by fire shortly before 1 o'clock this afternoon. Nothing was saved, it was said, all the personal effects and furniture being consumed by the flames.

How the fire started was not known. According to members of the family, when it was first noticed, the entire top of the house was a mass of flames and there was not sufficient time to rescue anything.

Mr. Braswell's wife, who is an invalid, was carried out of her home to the home of a neighbor immediately after the fire was discovered.

In addition to Rev. and Mrs. Braswell, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Jenkins and children resided in the house. They were unable to save any of their effects.—Journal paper.

This is a real calamity to Brother Braswell. Think of it! His wife a helpless invalid and his home gone, his furniture and belongings gone. Brother Braswell told his loss for some time ago. He was absent from his Sunday appointment. He writes that the property loss is $5,000, with only $2,000 insurance to balance it. If Brother Braswell ever needed help he needs it now.—Editor.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

The coming year may not bring to you and me any of the treasures of earth. It may be a difficult year financially, and pain and sorrow may enter our lives and our homes. We may be misunderstood and criticised, and even persecuted. Our friends and neighbors may find it in order to pity us for our poor plight. But if we walk with God through the new year, if Christ is so gracious and kind as to make His home in our hearts, if our lives are freighted with cargoes of heavenly treasure, and if at the end of the year we receive the divine approval, we shall be rich indeed and in truth, and the year will be a year of high achievement and supreme success.—Editor.

Shall be my portion down life's troubled way;
I only ask that there be given me
The needful strength for work from day to day.
Just strength, that with the morning's fresh, sweet dawn
I may arise, and fully rested be,
Renewed my mind and body so that I
May do the waiting work cheerily;
The strength to meet the fretting little cares
And trials, so prone to vex, with sunny smile,
And grace to say the gentle, kindly word
To those I love and patient be the while;
The grace to let the hasty, angry tone go by Unheeded, and to ever be
So strong that in confusion and distress
I may be helpful, yet so quietly.

beginning to unlearn much that we sacredly believed during four dreadful years.

Further, in considering the appeal that war makes to men, we must recognize the changes come on purpose during the war itself and after the war. It was not a holy cause and end a selfish grab. Some of us still remember the magnificent gesture of McKinley as he sent out soldiers against the naked brown men in our Eastern archipelago. "The Constitution," said he, "honors the flag." And the policy of benevolent assimilation was begun. But after the war of subjugation it was found that the Constitution interfered with the tariff, and a majority of the Supreme Court decided that the Constitution does not follow the flag.

If the church is to continue to vote support and justification of wars because they come as an angel of light, a defense of holy faith, or a crusade against the devil, then the church will continue to merit the charge that it is against war and for wars. For they all come that way. May we for a moment assume that the church will content itself in this rather ambiguous position, forced by its avowed fealty to Christ to denounce war and forced by other considerations to support war? At least it should avoid the sneers of the militarist. It ought to recognize and frankly admit that it is going to let into the world war whatever it is and whenever it comes. Therefore the church ought not to oppose all preparation for war when the opportunity seems necessary.

But, as a matter of fact, the church has been just as vigorous in its opposition to preparedness as to war itself. It is possible to suppose that the church will finally be recognized by becoming an advocate of military might. I do not believe it. Yet it comes that I am not ready yet to advocate the Quaker attitude of non-resistance, though I am moving in that direction. The old phrases, the old beliefs, the old habits, are still with me. However, I am convinced that the present position of the church is untenable and inadvisable. It is a position of compromise, of timorous ing, of compromise. What can we do? While we are waiting for the teachings of Jesus on the whole subject of the use of force for the spread of the kingdom, we can make one definite move.

Let us begin at once to say that while we may not be clear as to the limits of Christ's teaching, or altogether in agreement with it, we are clear that war is against the program and that, therefore, the church will have no part or lot in it. Let us assume that we will not use the church's influence for the proclamation of the non-resistance, for the purpose of arousing the nation to a more dedicated themselves to the cause of peace. Let the sons of God in business that are not death merely, death of friend and foe but many of them who are in the ruin of what was once a world of spirit. I suppose that the church will be the sophistry of the public opinion. We sadly know that we have not this human nature of ours, not yet so long tried from the beast, and teach it to hate and kill, without branding deep the marks of hatred and brutality. Again let us say that not only will the church refrain from inciting to war and from encouraging men to enlist for service, but also it will keep its freedom to oppose a war, not by silence merely, but actively.

These three decisions we may make even in the poor light we have and with the lack of clearly defined guidance:

1. Let us earnestly set about finding out what the teaching of Jesus really implies for our personal and ecclesiastical conduct in the world we live in.

2. Let us divorce the church from the whole business and system of international war.

3. Let us protect the church's freedom to act not by silence merely, but positively in view of the circumstances in any given case.

Surely the church has come to the parting of the ways. How can it longer claim to be the church of Christ and treat with indifference a fundamental attitude of Christ, implicit in all His life and explicit in all His words? Is the church is to save its own soul, let the church, if it gain the whole world, lose its own soul?—Zion's Herald.

THREE KINDS OF THINKING—AND ONE MORE.

By Luther E. Long.

No doubt there are many kinds of thinking. But there are three sorts with which everybody is familiar—and a fourth to which all of us should aspire.

Dr. James Harvey Robinson has played a higher under great obligation by the publication of his most interesting and daring book, "The Mind in the Making." This is not a difficult book to read. One can go through it pages quite rapidly; but with repeated careful readings, and reflection.

I am allowed the author to tell the reader that this book is one of these four sorts of thinking and I shall be more than gratified if it leads our readers to secure the book, and study its contents.

The first is Reverie. Dr. Robinson says, "I do not appear to ourselves to be thinking at the time during our waking hours, and as we are aware that we go on thinking, we are perhaps even more foolishly than a clock. When interrupted by some practical job, we are engaged in what is now known as reverie. This is our spontaneous and favorite way of thinking. We allow our ideas to take their own course and this course is determined by our hopes and fears, our spontaneous desires, their fulfillment or frustration, our likes and dislikes, our loves and hates and resentments. There is nothing else anything like so interesting to ourselves as

The second sort is practical thinking. "The mind," as any one can see for himself, is constantly broken and interrupted by the necessity of making practical decisions. Shall we write a letter or no? Shall we take the subway or a bus? Shall we buy U. S. Rubber or a Liberty Bond? Decisions are easily distinguishable from the free flow of the reverie. Sometimes they demand a good deal of careful pondering and the recollection of pertinent facts; often, however, they are made impulsively. They are a more difficult and laborious thing than the reverie, and we resent having to make up our mind when we are tired, or absorbed in a congenial reverie. Weighing a decision, it should be noted, does not necessarily add anything to our knowledge, although we may, of course, seek further information before making it.

"A third kind of thinking is stimulated when anyone questions our belief and opinions. We sometimes find ourselves changing our minds without any resistance or heavy emotion, but if we are told that we are wrong we resent the imputation and harden our hearts. We are incredibly heedless in the formation of our beliefs, but find ourselves filled with an illicit passion for them when anyone proposes to rob us of their companionship. It is obviously not the ideas themselves that are dear to us, but our self-esteem, which is threatened. We are by nature stubbornly pledged to defend our own from attack, whether it be our person, our family, our property, or our opinion. A United States Senator once remarked to a friend of mine that God Almighty could not make him change his mind on our Latin-American policy. We may surrender, but rarely confess ourselves vanquished. In the intellectual world at least peace is without victory.

"Few of us take the pains to study the origin of our cherished convictions; indeed, we have a natural repugnance to so doing. We like to continue to believe what we have been accustomed to accept as true, and the resentment aroused when doubt is cast upon any of our assumptions leads us to seek every manner of excuse for clinging to them. The result is that most of our so-called reasoning consists in finding arguments for going on believing as we already do."

The fourth kind of thought is the most important and is what Dr. Robinson calls creative thinking. He says, "It has not the usual qualities of the reverie, for it does not hover about our personal complacencies and humiliations. It is not made up of the homely decisions forced upon us by every-day needs, when we review our little stock of existing information, consult our conventional preferences and obligations, and make a choice of action. It is not the defense of our own cherished beliefs and prejudices just because they are our own—mere plausible excuses for remaining of the same mind. On the contrary, it is that peculiar species of thought which leads us to change our mind.

"It is this kind of thought that has raised man from his pristine, subsavage ignorance and squalor to the degree of knowledge and comfort which he now possesses. On his capacity to continue and greatly extend this kind of thinking depends his chance of groping his way out of the plight in which the most highly civilized peoples of the world now find themselves. In the past this type of thinking has been called Reason. But so many misapprehensions have grown up around the word that some of us have become very suspicious of it. I suggest, therefore, that we substitute a recent name and speak of 'creative thought' rather than of Reason. For this kind of meditation begets knowledge, and knowledge is really creative inasmuch as it makes things look different from what they seemed before and may indeed work for their reconstruction.

"In certain moods some of us realize that we are observing things or making reflections with a seeming disregard of our personal preoccupations. We are not preening or defending ourselves; we are not faced by the necessity of any practical decision, nor are we apologizing for believing this or that. We are just wondering and looking and mayhap seeing what we never perceived before."

Such is creative thinking, the sort of thinking that gets us somewhere.

OPPORTUNITY.

With doubt and dismay you are smitten
You think there's no chance for you, son?
Why, the best books haven't been written
The best race hasn't been run,
The best score hasn't been made yet,
The best song hasn't been sung.
The best tune hasn't been played yet,
Cheer up, for the world is young!
No chance? Why the world is just eager
For things that you ought to create
Its store of true wealth is still meagre
Its needs are incessant and great,
It yearns for more power and beauty
More laughter and love and romance,
More loyalty, labor and duty,
No chance—why there's nothing but chance!
Don't worry and fret, faint hearted,
The chances have just begun,
For the Best jobs haven't been started,
The Best work hasn't been done.
Berton Braley.

INTELLECTUAL REVOLUTION.

We are in the midst of the greatest intellectual revolution that has ever overtaken mankind. Our whole conception of mind is undergoing a great change. We are beginning to understand its nature, and as we find out more, intelligence may be raised to a recognized dignity and effectiveness which it has never enjoyed before. An encouraging beginning has been made in the case of the natural sciences, and a similar success may await the studies which have to do with the critical estimate of man's complicated nature, his fundamental impulses and resources, the needless and fatal repressions which these have suffered through the ignorance of the past, and the discovery of untried ways of enriching our existence and improving our relations with our fellow men.—James Harvey Robinson.

SUNSET.

By HOMER KALLIARDES.

Sunset, we welcome thee with all thy bar glow;
And in thy radiance soft, we only ask to know
If this is Benlah Land where shadows never lurk,
Where one can rest content from the ills of irksome work?
Youth springs to all the tasks of life with unfeigned zest;
Nor counts his task complete unless one do his best:
What tho' the load be heavy, or the bill be steep;
He knows at nightfall, his will be the boon of sleep.
In middle life with brawn and brain developed strong,
We heed but little, tho' the way be steep and long:
Our chiefest aim is to attain the summit hold;
And win our cherished laurels ere they call us old.
The gods of old Olympus never counted years;
But reckoned only deeds worth while, and smiled at fears!
The spirit of a god, said they, is ever young.
So long as he the bow-string of his heart keeps strung.
'Tis folly then, to choose the least resistance path
And seek to cunningly avoid the tempest's wrath.
As tho' we were but weaklings and not fit for strife—
Too limp and languid for the testing times of life.
But now that sunset time is come, we gladly rest,
In sweet content at eventide and know this best
That we should cease from all the jolts that fret and wear.
And lay our plans for something larger Over
There!

NEW IDEAS.

We can learn much from the past in regard to wrong ways of dealing with new ideas. As yet we have only old-fashioned and highly expensive modes of meeting the inevitable changes which are bound to take place. Repression has now and then enjoyed some temporary success, it is true, but in the end it has failed lamentably and produced only suffering and confusion. Much will depend on whether our purpose is to keep things as they are or to bring about readjustments. We are to correct abuses and injustices in the present order. Do we believe, in other words, that truth is finally established and that we have only to defend it, or that it is still in the making? Do we believe in what is commonly called progress, or do we believe that as believing only to the past? The way, on the whole, arrived, or the way, or the way, or perhaps just starting.—James Harvey Robinson.

THE NEW YEAR'S LETTER.

My Dear Girls and Boys.—It has been 365 days since I last wrote you a New Year's letter. It does not seem nearly that long, and yet we are all a year older, and, I hope, a year better.

Many a gray hair has been added to my locks, for I have been ill the most of that time; but you, who are in the morning of life, I trust are only more lovely and more lovable.

I heard our minister preach, yesterday, on, "The High Places." You will find his text in the nineteenth verse of the third chapter of Habakkuk:

"Jehovah, the Lord, is my strength;
And he maketh my feet like hinds' feet,
And will make me to walk upon my high places."

And, as I listened to him, I hoped that each one of you were striving day by day to gain that eminence that comes from duty done, and that for you there is not one single regret as you review the year that has gone. Confronted as I am, I can not have regrets. They are too sad and too distressing. It struck me, as I listened yesterday, that the subject would be most appropriate for my New Year's message to you.

High places! Oh, I know how hard it is to gain them oftentimes; yet once in awhile, if we truly love the things that pertain to His kingdom, it is given to us to gain these high places for a little while; to gaze out over such an expanse of spiritual beauty that our souls swell with joy and exultation.

"Build thee more stately mansions, oh, my Soul,

As the swift seasons roll;
Leave thy low-vaulted past;
Let each new temple nobler than the last
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea."

That is what I am asking for you in this letter. We must get out into the expanse of His love, if we would receive its revivifying, refreshing powers. Too many hours we stay in the lowlands and grow dull and spiritless and inactive.

I think it is our bounden duty to make the most of life. I heard a young man say, only the other day: "My life is worth nothing to me." And I replied: "How can you say that? You have youth, ability, friends. You owe it not only to yourself, but to our Father in heaven, to make the most of every opportunity. If you have not other incentive, you owe it to Him to do your very best. As the poet says:

"Honor and shame from no conditions arise Act well your part, there are all the honor lies."

He has His niche for you. Try and find it, and enoble it with your best efforts."

In looking over my few treasures, the other evening, I came across a little silver wrist-chain; attached to it was a medallion with the name and the army rank of my adopted soldier son engraved upon it. He gave it to me when he came back from France. He wore it all through the World War, so that if he were killed in battle, he could be identified. I shall always keep it, and the other evening, as I looked at it, I thought of you, and I hoped that this New Year each one of you were wearing the insignia of the Christ-life, so that your identification may be established among the Lord's own. Be sure, more than anything else, that you are wearing it. You know what the Psalmist says:

"The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit;
a broken and a contrite heart O God, thou wilt not despise."

New Year's! I write this message with a heart that is full of love to each one of you, and hopes as well. Don't disappoint me.

I want you to occupy the high places that are reached only by patient climbing, the performing of the tasks that have been given you. Don't be discouraged if the labor is hard, if the days seem monotonous. Remember that every day God is working out for you the best and the noblest plan, and that each hour you are in His care. Resting on this assurance, you will go from "strength to strength."

If disappointment and trials come, trust Him still. A young business woman I know was disappointed about a certain trip she wanted to make. The automobile in which she was going in was disabled in an accident, and had to be taken to the shop; but on the day she was to have gone, she made an important deal and received on her commission $100, and she said to me, "You don't know how much I needed it."

God is at the helm. Trust Him, then, with the management of your affairs.

After the rush of Christmas is over, in the week between it and New Year's, there always comes to me a feeling of solemnity. I am about to receive another gift from my Father's hand—a bright, new year, unfurnished and unwarmed. Mine to beautify or to make unlovely—mine in which to do good deeds or deeds that are not good. Mine to enrich and ennoble or to dishonor and defame.

Mine and yours.

Oh, my young people, shall we not, then make this the best year of them all? Let us enter upon it with a high and holy resolve to live up to the best that is in us; to remember that we are solemnly obligated to live it well. "Noluisse oblige," remember.

Through His great mercy He has given us another leaf from life's page on which to write. Shall we not keep it, then, as pure and white as it is now?

New Year! A beginning of another period of life.

As I have told you before, I always appropriated New Year's as my own special holiday. When my parents were alive, that was the day they always came to my house. How much pride I always took in my New Year's dinner, that must not fall short of the Thanksgiving and Christmas ones. I have always, and do yet, make much of it.

Occasionally I give New Year's gifts; but always about me on that day is a feeling of solemnity. What will the little, bright new year bring me? Laughter and tears, clouds or sunshine?

My prayer that day is always more fervent than it is on other holidays. Some one once said this: "O Lord, prepare me for the things Thou has prepared for me."

And that is the way I feel. I may have my full quota of sorrow or of grief—I do not know. I only know God will guide me over the way, no matter how rough it may be, and occasionally He will lift me to the high places. I have always been so sorry for Moses, to think he was not permitted to enter the promised land. By one little act he cut himself off from that country flowing with milk and honey. And yet God was so good to him at the last; He took him up into the high places and bade him look over into the fertile valleys with their fruit and grain.

The High places! Oh that is what I am asking for you this New Year's Day. To climb to the heights, and glimpse there the magnitude of His love. I am asking that you keep the temple of your soul swept and garnished, that the view may be unobstructed. I am asking for you the necessary ambition that you make the most of your opportunities, and it is your duty to grow and develop and bloom in whatever part of the Master's vineyard you are placed.

Resolve this New Year's Day to live closer to Him than you yet have. To weed out the little sins and the little faults in your heart's gardens, so that the little flowers of kindly deeds may grow.

I wore such a pretty white waist the other day; but, in looking down at it I saw across the front of it a dark stain. I do not know how it came there; I only know it quite spoiled its beauty and its freshness. I was glad to take it off. And so do we, realizing this, permit sin to spoil the beauty of our characters.

The High Places! Oh, my dears, that is what I am asking of you in this letter. The worth-while things, the gentle and kindly deeds, the sweet spirit that shines out and makes the plainest face beautiful.

If regrets come, remember that none of us are perfect, and keep on trying. Study your Bibles, grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord. Ask Him to give it each day—the needed portion of His grace.

As some one has said: "A Christian is the world's Bible, and the things he does and says are its pages." Be very careful, then, to place no stumbling-block in any one's way.

New Year is a time to take stock and to review the past, and, as we enter the little kingdom of the new year, let us be much in prayer. The little kingdom is ours. Let us be very careful, then, not to soil its beautiful interior with acts that might destroy.

And now remember—the High Places! That is what I am asking for you in this New Year's letter.

Ever, always and forever, I am ONE WHO LOVES GIRLS and BOYS.

A PROTECTING CHRISTMAS TREE.

It did not cost the Martins anything for Christmas trees. They lived on the outskirts of a small town in the Berkshire Hills and a day or two before Christmas they simply went out into the hills and cut a tree. There were plenty to be found, though the Martins never cut the first one they came across. Indeed, the boys had a way of keeping their eyes open for fine trees many months in advance of Christmas, and usually they had a good tree located long before the 25th of December. Then just before Christmas they had marked, cut it down and carry it home on their shoulders.

This year Carl Martin had located a beautiful tree on one of his fall hunting trips. It grew quite a ways from the house—perhaps three miles. But it wasn't very large and Carl didn't mind the prospects of carrying it home in the least. He was an out-door boy, used to tramping for many miles over the rough, hilly country carrying a heavy pack. So two days before Christmas he cheerfully set out after dinner to get the tree.

"Going to take the hatchet, Carl?" asked his father. "If you don't need it I can use it on those fence posts this afternoon."

"I won't need it," answered Carl. "I have my heavy knife and it won't take me ten minutes to cut through that tree. I'll be glad not to have the hatchet to carry."

"All right." His father surveyed the sky. "Looks like snow. Doesn't it?"

"I'll get back before it falls, I guess," answered Carl. "Anyhow there isn't any danger. I know this country."

His father smiled and said nothing. He, too, had confidence in his boy's ability to take care of himself.

Carl set out at a good, swinging pace and in little more than an hour had reached the tree. He cut it down with his knife, being careful not to let the small trunk split. Before he had finished the job the snow, which came sooner than he expected, was falling quite thickly. As he sat resting for a moment after cutting down the tree he decided to take a short-cut home so that he might not have to wade through too much snow with his burden.

This short-cut was peculiar. It was along the bed of an abandoned trolley line and included a long trestle across a little valley. The trolley tracks had been laid several years before to connect some of the small hill towns with the larger cities. But then the company that had laid them had failed and no regular cars had ever run over the line. Finally the rails had been taken up but the wooden trestle remained. By following this trolley roadbed Carl could shorten his homeward journey by a full mile.

With his tree over his shoulder the boy tumbled forward through the snow, his head down and his hands holding his steps carefully. The snow was covered with two or three inches of snow, but by shuffling his feet he made sure of his footing on each one.

As he was thus plodding forward Carl was suddenly startled by a commotion in the snow ahead of him and a menacing growl. Instinctively he stepped backward, missed his footing and slipped between two ties. Fortunately the ties were close together and he did not drop through to the ground forty feet below. Instead he stuck, wedged fast, with his legs between the ties. And there, crouched in the snow a few feet in front of him, was a large Canadian lynx, glaring savagely.

When Carl thought about it afterwards he understood plainly enough how the encounter came about. The lynx was using the short-cut also and because of the dimming afternoon light and the thickly falling snow did not see him until they were within a few feet of each other. No doubt, too, the animal had been watching its steps more closely than the path ahead, just as he had been doing.

Now, however, Carl did not have any time to reason this out. As he fell he had retained his hold on the butt of the Christmas tree and had convulsively brought the tree forward in an effort to check his fall. So he faced the lynx with the tree in his hands as his only weapon. He had his knife in his pocket, but it was awkward to get at it and he dared not drop the tree to reach for it lest the creature seize that opportunity to spring.

Carl knew something about the lynx. He knew that the bob-tailed cat in front of him was a mighty dangerous antagonist, even though it was one of the smallest members of cat tribe. A grown man, well armed and free to move as he pleased, might well dread an encounter with a lynx in a tight place. But Carl knew also that a lynx will not attack a man unless cornered and so he did a natural thing that was, nevertheless, a mistake.

He shouted suddenly with all his might and shook the tree at the animal. If they had both been in an open space the cat would probably have run. But the lynx felt that it was cornered. It could not move to either side and though it could have retreated along the trestle it dared not turn to run along that narrow path.

So instead of running, the fierce animal, his huge yellow eyes gleaming and his fangs bared, launched himself straight at the boy. Carl, moving almost as swiftly, caught the creature full in the face with his Christmas tree. The lynx clung to the tree, biting and scratching, and struggling to reach the boy through the stiff branches.

The weight of the animal bore the tree down and it struck the ties. The lynx's hind legs slipped between two ties and in a scramble to save itself from falling, it abandoned the moment its onslaught against the boy. But just beyond the tip of the tree it crouched in the snow, glaring at Carl with a ferocity that showed it had no intention of giving up the fight.

Carl knew that he could not hope to hold the creature at bay for long. Another charge like the first and the lynx would probably reach him. The boy was sorely afraid but not ready to give up. He resolved to beat the animal off as long as he could.

Then into his head shot an idea. It might give him a chance! With a fresh courage he awaited the next rush.

It was not long delayed. Again the animal with a savage cry launched itself at the boy. Again Carl managed to interpose the tree so that the lynx was caught among the branches. And again the creature struggled to get at him.

But this time Carl did not let the tree fall to the ties. Putting every ounce of strength he had into the effort, he swung the tree around and cast it from him. Over the side of the trestle it went, carrying the lynx into the depth below. At the same instant the boy placed his hands on the tie in front of him and with a mighty heave drew himself up to his feet. He felt for his knife in case the animal should return to the fight.

But there was no more fight left in the lynx. Dimly through the snow Carl saw it scurry down the ravine. And it looked to him as though the creature were hurt by the fall.

Then Carl showed again the stuff that was in him. Instead of hurrying home he waited a few minutes and then went down into the ravine and recovered the tree. And when he had taken it home, broken and mangled as it was, and had told his story, his father said:

"Do we want the tree? My boy, we would not have any other tree in the house! It's the finest Christmas tree we ever had. And it's going to be the merriest Christmas!"

Notice.

Our first quarterly conference will be in Littleton Church on New Year's day. Preaching 11 A. M. Then lunch and quarterly conference will be held after lunch. Rev. R. C. Stubbins will be with us to preach and hold conference for us. Everybody is invited to come. Come and bring some one with you, and a small lunch.

Lashley—Edwards.

On Saturday afternoon, December 19, the writer united in marriage Mr. Kennie Edwards and Miss Berta Lashley, both of the Orange Chapel community and both members of Orange Chapel Methodist Protestant Church.

Mrs. Edwards, who is a daughter of Mr. Sam Lashley, is a young lady possessing many sterling qualities.

Mr. Edwards is the son of Mr. C. D. Edwards, one of the prominent farmers of the Orange Chapel community. We wish them much happiness as they journey through life together.

H. L. Isley.

Mrs. George Amick was buried at Mt Pleasant yesterday.

bearing the words: "For Miss Martha White, if I may ask that without being obtrusive." "er, with the corn-florents of those whom she had made happy on Thanksgiving. Look at my mouth, forehead, heart."

Martha was nearly over this little "business" but she proceeded to investigate the meaning of the card's last sentence. The inside of the little phases, and the "I consider it important" turkey proved to be neatly lined with white paper and contained a diamond watch, inside which reposed a beautiful watch, suitable in the are rich to put into responsible places scribed. Of course Martha was happy. She had who have not had a long familiarity had been longing for a watch for some time, with its intricacies. And we are still more and this one was a beauty.

"Why, mamma," she explained, "we'll have a second Thanksgiving day now, won't we? That wind and snow brought me good fortune, though I didn't think it was very nice then." —Farm Life.

SHE SPOKE TO HIM.

They all came lurchingly into the corner diner store. There were four of the girls—little Betty, red-checked Molly, stately Vera, plump Polly and quiet, brown-eyed Daisy. They were merrily talking as they sat about the little tables, when old George passed.

He was carrying an armload of boxes. Old George was the colored man about town doing faithfully the small jobs that came to him.

He knew every one of those girls—had known them since they were little children—but as he passed where they were sitting, he stumbled, shuffling old figure with his armload of boxes, no one spoke to him—that is no one but Daisy.

"How do you do, George?" she said in her sweet, clear young voice. "I hope your rheumatism is better."

George bowed and smiled. "Yes'm, Miss Daisy, yes'm," he replied; "it's much better, thank you, Miss Daisy." He shuffled on with his load, a smile on his old, black face.

Fern looked across at Daisy. "What in the world did you want to speak to that old negro for?" she asked impatiently.

Daisy flushed. "I always speak to old George," she answered quietly. "He's old and sick, and I wouldn't hurt his feelings for the world. I've known him all my life."

And no one said anything more.

Old George's employer looked up as he came out carrying his load. "Well, George," he said, "you seem to be in good spirits. Got some new jobs, or found some money?"

George shook his head. "Jobs and money is mighty good," he replied, "but dey ain't everything. I know something that has 'em beat—kind words." He smiled again. "Miss Daisy, she done just spoke to me," he said proudly. —Exchange.

THE WHITE NEW YEAR AT THE FARM HOUSE.

"May we not consider the matter settled, Miss Edgemore?"

"No, it is better to be slow in deciding. Then one is sure. I would like till the first of the year to decide. I am going home as you know. I will write from there."

"Is there any other plan in your mind?—"

"If I may ask that without being obtrusive." "er, with the corn-florents of those whom she had made happy on Thanksgiving. Look at my mouth, forehead, heart."

"Thank you, Mr. Maye. Well, you will hear me before the first, probably in season."

"I hope so! Well, Merry Christmas, Miss Edgemore, and a happy New Year!"

Loretta Edgemore smiled at the emphasized "and." She knew what it meant—the hope that she would see him. She had worked for fourteen years with the firm of Maye, Dale & Company, and now had been offered—a new and attractive position for the old house—a partnership in the concern, with full control of the department. They had been her bankers during the years of her careful, conscientious service, and now offered her this safe investment for her money, as well as a position well fitted to her continued taste and exceptional ability.

On the old Edgemore farm all was pleasant and bright. "Loretta" was coming home for two weeks. She did not visit home as often, these late years, as the love of father and mother craved, but, of course, how could it be expected? Years of business life in the city had brought around her many friends, interests and demands that did not touch the farm circle at all.

"Wife! You haven't forgotten how Loretta likes those mutton turn-overs, have you? And the raspberry taffies?"

"No, Joel, I have far often nothing—mutton never forget."

"Don't they? What's the matter, Lora? Not sorry the girl's coming home?" The farmer stretched out his labor-scarred hand and tenderly touched his wife's cheek.

She shook her head, the tears falling faster at the loving movement.

"I'm just thinking, Joel—maybe I'm getting selfish. They say old people do. But there won't be many more home-comings for the lass—we're getting well on in years. And—well—I'd like to see more of her. She's our only one."

"There, there, Lora! You're a bit blue. Tired, eh? Tell you what, when Loretta comes, I'll take you away for a day—our wedding day comes then—and we'll go off to the city ourselves. It's all right, Lora, only we must not get in the girl's way. She has her life to live, you know, when we are gone."

They had some long, quiet evenings by the big hearth fire and the dear old people listened with wide eyes and flushed cheeks to their girl's stories of the city.

Then, leaving her in charge for a couple of days, these lovers of almost half a century went jaunting to the town where they had known the sunny days of "courtship." Loretta was resplendent in a long, soft, warm cloak, and fine new bonnet that was stylish and yet kept the searching wind from aching ears and father laughed at the neuralgia-breeding east wind in his fur cap and overcoat with great fur collar. Who wouldn't be "mighty proud" of a girl like "Loretta!" So they celebrated their wedding day with tears and smiles, and then—each with a hidden burden—went back to the farm; for Loretta could be with them only a few days more, and—who could tell what might happen before another year should roll around?

Thus thought was busy until "the wedding-party" returned. Then there were tellings and tears and laughter again.

"Well, daughter, you'll be on your way to the city soon again. Will you be quite so busy this next year? You couldn't come any oftener, could you?" said Joel, looking wistfully at his "girl."

"I expect I shall be busier than ever, father. But I will write just as often—oftener if you are lonely."

"Lonely. Oh, daughter—!"

"Why, mother, dear, what is the matter?" for now sobs were shaking the mother's slight form.

She shook her head. "Don't mind—me," she said, brokenly. "But—I love you—Loretta—and—you're all we've got—and—my old heart—cots—hunnery-like. That's all. You've been dutiful and beautiful, child—but we're old and—you mustn't mind."

A veil dropped from Loretta's eyes. Had her father always been as white-haired, as bent, as tremulous, as he was tonight? Had mother aged thus in ten minutes? Why, ten years ago she was plump and rosy and brown-haired. How was it her eyes had been "hold-er" thus? As her mother got up and moved about the room, striving to regain her self-control Loretta noticed that the dear feet—once "light as a fairy's"—dragged a little.

Silence sat with the group before the dying fire. Then the good-nights were quietly said. But in that quiet house three hearts kept watch. In Loretta's room the lamp burned all night and under its glow lay open her Bible at the undersewed words: "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

When the day before New Year's came, it seemed to the daughter that her parents were sadder and feebler than they had been since her coming.

"Can you stay and watch out the Old Year with us, child?" they asked at breakfast.

"Yes, indeed. I do not need to be in the city till the night of the 2nd. Yes, we will have nuts and apples and stories before the fire. Then father will pray, and then, while the little New Year is pressing his rosy face against the panes, we will sing the old hymn. Come, let us anew

Our journey pursue.

We have done it ever since I can remember—we three!" Loretta spoke gaily, but her heart sank as she noted the look of sadness settle even more deeply on the faces of her beloved ones.

It was a beautiful winter night, that last night of the Old Year. They drew back the curtains and sat by the hearth, alternately enjoying this starlit scene of snow-crowned hills and the wonders that a picture-loving eye always finds "in the hollow down by the flare." But they did not talk much. Heart-voices had full sway.

When the "grandfather" clock in the corner pointed five minutes before midnight, they were on their knees, Joel poured out his heart to God—thanks and praise for the past, love and praise for the present, and trust and praise for the future; and, above all—"Keep the steps of our child, crown her life with thy loving kindness! We thank thee for her love. She has been the crown of our old age. Now, O Father, as she goes back to her work, bless her and make her a blessing. We are old—our days decline—we may not meet again—keep thou us, O Lord, according to thy tender mercy, we pray thee!"

They stood, embracing, by the leaping fire. Would another year bring them together?

"I have a New Year's present, dear ones," drawing them close to her. "Would you like a New Year's present?"

"You are our best gift, darling," murmured the mother, brokenly.

Loretta's laugh was salted with happy tears. "Well, that's just it. There is no place on earth like this dear home, and—I'm going to stay in it. Mother? Don't cry! Oh, father, did you want me so? Yes, I will be your girl again—till death parts us!"

The next morning when Joel had gone out to give New Year's "extra" to his faithful gray, Lora opened the little parlor door and looked in. Then she called her daughter in a low, wondering voice, full of queer little joy-quavers.

"Loretty! Do tell me! Am I crazy—with joy? The old house looks all new. The walls look fresh, the rooms look bigger, the carpets aren't so old fashioned. And the old parlor set, there, why, it looks downright handsome, and it hasn't done so for years. I was tired of it all. Am I crazy, Loretty?"

"No, my mother, no. If you'll just forgive your girl for not seeing her privilege sooner, everything will look brighter to her, too. And, oh, mother, mother, you are younger, you look more like my rosy little mother, this blessed New Year's day."

"Yes, child, joy has cleared our vision. It is—it is going to be a white New Year for us all.—Zion's Herald.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Asheboro.—The Asheboro M. P. Church is now falling into line for a real year's work. It seems the church has decided to follow the new pastor who is very ably taking the lead in the church work and is receiving the full co-operation of all departments of the Sunday school and church.

At the fourth quarterly conference it was decided to use a new system on the every member canvass. This system is that the stewards meet at the church with the pledge cards and the members come to the church and make their pledges instead of the old house to house canvass method. By this means a new light is thrown upon the "Giving" and it seems to us it is much better to bring our offering for the year to the altar with a willing heart than to have some one appointed to come to us and ask us for a certain amount for the year.

On Monday night the board of stewards met with the pastor at the parsonage and at this meeting decided to conduct the canvass on Sunday afternoon, December 13th, which was carried out at the church with great success, as the people responded wonderfully to this method. Mr. J. D. Ross is chairman of the new Board of Stewards with Mr. W. C. Hendrix as treasurer.

Yesterday was a full day for us. Out of 208 enrolled at Sunday school we had 200 present. It seems there is an increased interest in the Sunday school work in all departments. At the preaching hour we also had a full house. Five new members were added to the church at this time: Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Ferree, Miss Viva Lee Nelson, Miss Hazel Bewling, and Master John Redding. These, with the addition of Mrs. J. E. Pritchard and Master Hal Hammer Walker on November 29th make a total of seven new members for the first month of the new conference year.

After the reception of the members Mr. Pritchard brought a wonderful message on "The Call to Life Service," preaching especially to the young people as mapped out by the annual conference.

Sunday afternoon, besides the canvass held at the church, there was also a Township Sunday School Institute for the officers and teachers of the various churches of Asheboro Township. Two splendid addresses were heard on Sunday School work—one by Rev. B. E. Morris, pastor of the First Baptist Church, and the other by Rev. C. G. Smith, pastor of the Presbyterian Church. The theme stressed especially at this Institute was "How Can We Get and Hold the Teen Age Young People in the Sunday School."

The Christian Endeavor Society met at 6:15 with good attendance and an interesting program was enjoyed with Mr. Frank Redding as leader.

At the evening service Mr. Pritchard brought us another inspiring message on "The Marks of a Christian." He especially emphasized the characteristics that mark a Christian from one of the world.

Next Sunday the pastor will preach the annual Christmas sermon at the morning hour and the Sunday school will give their Christmas entertainment at the evening hour, which time an offering will be taken for various boards of the denomination.

Cid, South Davidson Circuit.—Rev. M. Crutchfield filled his appointment at Cid day. He delivered a message on the call to the ministry. I hope it will appeal to the people and may some answer the call some way. Brother Crutchfield was with us on the fourth Sunday in November, and gave us a good message. We were so glad to have Mr. and Mrs. Wade Kindley and child of West Lexington, to worship with us today. And highly appreciate Mr. Kindley's help as organist in the absence of our organist.

Also glad to have Miss Callie Miller, of Lenoir, to worship with us today.

It was almost decided to retain the same old officers and teachers of the church at the Sunday school. Our Sunday school is doing very well, but could be lots better. There has been some sickness around here. But there are always a faithful few that are working and expect to go through. The cottage prayer service is still going on with large attendance and good spiritual interest. It will continue on next Saturday night at Mr. Marcus Wright's. Mr. Isaac Black who is over 70 years old goes to about every one, and in no way but to walk. He takes his lantern and pulls out and sometimes he catches a ride.

We were so glad to have Rev. J. D. Rice visit us during conference, also Mrs. R. O. Short and bright children.

We were so sorry to hear through the Herald that Mrs. C. H. Hill was in the Hospital and praying for her recovery. I was so sorry to learn of the death of Mrs. Mary Childers of Denton. She was buried at Denton. She was a good and kind woman. She leaves a husband and many relatives and friends to mourn her departure. Mr. Willie Byerly died last week and was buried at Watters Grove. He was over 60 years old and a member of the church. Typhoid fever the cause of death. He told a friend that he was not afraid to die. We are glad to note that Mrs. H. A. Morris' health has improved so much. She was able to attend church today at Cid.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hoover, of Pine Grove, have moved to his farm here, known as the George Jones place. We welcome them as good people. We were so glad to see a good report from Rev. J. B. Trogon's work. May it be a help to others. So wishing the Herald and its many readers a happy Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

West Lexington, South Davidson Charge.—It is the pleasure of the writer and his wife to again be associated with the good people of West Lexington Methodist Protestant Church after leaving them a little more than one year ago. We are very glad to be back in Lexington and have cast our lot with the West Lexington people and their pastor work with them in the Sunday school and church work during the coming year.

Services last Sunday were well attended, both morning and night. The Sunday school attendance was 128, which was an increase as compared with the attendance of one year ago. Brother H. C. Koonts, our superintendent, is a busy superintendent, always thinking and planning for the betterment of the Sunday school. The approaching Christmas program to be rendered on Thursday night received much attention in the Sunday school on Sunday, and final plans for the program were announced.

Rev. M. Ivey Crutchfield, the pastor of South Davidson charge, is already becoming popular with West Lexington church as its pastor. While he has preached only a few sermons since entering upon the work, he is winning the love and respect of the people. We predict he will soon have a warm place in the hearts of all the people of the church. He is an excellent young man and shows promise of developing into one of our best preachers in no far distant future. This letter bespeaks for him the prayers, the sympathy and the co-operation of the South Davidson Charge for his success during the coming year.

The Lord's Supper was administered at the morning service last Sunday. Brother Crutchfield officiating in a very tender spirit. An unusually large number of the church members participated in the service. Preceding the communion service, Brother Crutchfield brought the congregation a very helpful message from the text, 1 Cor. 11:28, "For often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." It was a discourse on the Lord's supper and a very appropriate one.

The following persons were formally received into church membership at the morning service last Sunday: Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Erick, Miss Lena Hedrick, Mock Hedrick, Miss Arleen Hedrick, all coming from Carmel Church; Rev. C. B. Way and Mrs. B. Way from our Shelby Church. The reception of these seven new members is a beginning for the new pastor which is an average of about one per Sunday since adjournment of the Annual Conference. C. B. Way was elected reporter at this time.

The Conference Journals arrived last week and the pastor distributed a large number of them to members of the West Lexington church last Sunday.

The writer had the privilege of speaking to the congregation at the service last Sunday night, and it was a great pleasure to speak to such a responsive congregation of hearers. There seemed to be an inspiring spirit prevailing in the service which every preacher appreciates as a great help in the presentation of his sermon.

We have Sunday school every Sunday at 10 o'clock, and preaching services every third Sunday morning and every Sunday night under the present plan of appointments being followed by our pastor.

Philadelphia, Greenville Circuit.—We have now started in the new conference year, 1926, hoping to do more in the church work this year than we did last.

We are indeed pleased with our new pastor, H. L. Powell. He is doing a good work here and has been for the last two years.

Our Sunday school is still moving along, not so fast perhaps as it should. May God's blessings be upon us in all the church work during the new year. Let each one of us do our part toward making it the best year ever. With God's help we can do it.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers for a merry Christmas and a happy New year.

Pine Bluff, Midland Charge.—The first quarterly conference was held Saturday, December 19, at Love's Grove. All the churches were represented and the pastor, Rev. J. W. Hulin, was present. The general business of the church was transacted in a systematic way. The spirit of cooperation and brotherhood was dominant throughout the meeting. All the churches reported some definite and well laid plans for the ensuing year; especially was this true as to the financial phase of the work. Here before we have not paid out on the different claims of the church. We are not absolutely sure we will meet them all this year, but we have set that as our goal; to meet every cent of every claim. Therefore we intend to work and pray to that end.

Brother Hulin has now moved into the parsonage and seems to be at home, at his work. We are glad he is with us, because it seems from what we can observe, that he is making new acquaintances fast and is liked by all the people. His subject Sunday, December 20, was "The great ability of Jesus to save." In this line of thought, he pointed out how practical religion is. The subject was made applicable to every day life and common place things.

We pray God's richest blessing upon the whole North Carolina conference, and Brother Thmer Dixon as our efficient leader and guide.

Liberty Church.—We forgot to report last week that Liberty decided to handle a $1000.00 note for the college; and that eight subscriptions were secured for the Herald.

Siler City, Siler City Charge.—Yesterday proved a good day for our church at Siler City. The morning service was especially well attended with many visitors present. Regardless of the inclement weather the Sunday school was up to par. The evening attendance was good considering the weather. The pastor is impressed with the loyalty of the Siler City people. Two more subscriptions were secured for the church paper making a total of ten for our charge recently. The church voted to take a note of $500.00 to apply to the college. Siler City would like to do more but they are doing this at a sacrifice since there are so many other obligations on our hands at present.

The Christian Endeavorers gave an interesting program. The topic "Christmas a Time of Joy" was discussed. A duet added to the well planned program.

Preparation has been made for our Christmas Entertainment Wednesday evening.

Haw River Ct.—Our third year on this work is starting off well and the people are hopeful for a good year despite the fact of poor crops in this section. We have received on Budget since conference from Fair Grove $37; Friendship, $36; Midway, $32; Mizpah, $23; Brown Summit, $16. (cts. are omitted).

Midway has had a splendid Christmas service which resulted in a severe pounding for the pastor and wife.

Brother Phibbs, a friend to our church, gave us a nice felt mattress, Mrs. Ds. Shreve, a nice set of table ware, Brother Fred Jones, half bbl. Graham flour. The above are the largest gifts but we have been continuously pounded with chicken, birds and fresh meats. For every gift, we are profoundly grateful and hope to repay them in service. Pastor.

Albemarle.—It has been some time since we have had a report, due to the fact we have been very busy getting things in shape for another year.

Our new pastor, Rev. Mr. Kelly, and his family arrived in Albemarle, December 12th. Judging from the congregation Sunday morning and evening the people were delighted to have him and his good wife.

We are looking forward for this to be one of the greatest years in the history of our church. The stewards and members of the church have gone ahead and perfected their organization before the pastor arrived. Under the direction of the new board of stewards we will not have any trouble to finance the church this year. We have had some of the largest collections since Conference that has ever been raised in the history of the Albemarle Church. The first appeal the stewards made to the people they raised $170.00.

The Ladies' Aid Society as well as others have been willing to do more than their part. They have helped to furnish the parsonage, also had it painted.

At the regular monthly meeting, at the home of Mrs. M. Hatley, the work had been so successful the past year that all the officers were unanimously re-elected to serve another year.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

To what extent our pastors observed "Men for the Ministry Sunday" we have no way of knowing, but we are hoping it was not entirely overlooked. In fact we know it was not. Bulletins have been received in which we found special subjects used by the pastors with our object in mind. Two brethren have written in the names of young men who have indicated their intention of becoming ministers of Christ. These evidences alone are gratifying. If the "powers that be" are in accord with the idea we would like to make this an annual affair.

The following excerpts from a letter received from Dr. J. C. Berrien will be of interest to his friends:

"I am so happy this hour to be able to tell you that God has begun to answer the prayer of the church almost before we asked. The 18th was the day you asked our churches to pray the Lord of the Harvest to send forth laborers into His harvest, where the fields are white, the laborers few. How good God is to give me friends in my old age.

"I have had my eye on a young High School boy for some time. Today his uncle tells me he is thinking of the ministry, and his folks want to make a minister out of him, if the Holy Ghost does also. If, as in the case of Samuel, God is calling, I shall be extremely happy. Help me in your prayers to hold him for our Seminary.

"Oh, how startled and thrilled with joy I was as I opened the Recorder Saturday the 12th and saw my picture on the cover. It gave me an exquisite surprise and joy, after reading what dear Dr. Lyman Davis and you said; and my boys, J. C. Broomfield and E. J. Headley. Hallelujah, I am not forgotten. My chief joys in life are that my boys are doing what I cannot do.

"God bless you more and more.
J. C. Berrien."

The returns from Rally Day are gradually coming in and while not quite up to those of last year are doing well. The standing of the conferences at the end of November was as follows:

Ohio, $2,705.53; Maryland, $971.75; Pittsburgh, $724.67; West Virginia, $518.85; Kansas, $240.83; Eastern, $227.73; North Carolina, $196.26; Alabama, $125; Illinois, $84.75; Arkansas, $77.63; Texas, $75; Iowa-Missouri, $17.59; Colorado-Texas (Colored), $10; Indiana, $5.85; Georgia, $4.55; J. C. Berrien, $5.

That makes a total of $6,152.46 as compared with $6,907.25 received to this date last year. However, we do not accept that as an evidence the results will ultimately be less when all the reports are in. In the list West Virginia, Alabama, Arkansas, Texas, Iowa-Missouri, and Colorado-Texas (Colored) already show large increases which is very gratifying indeed.

The Budget Council is well pleased with the response of the Church to the Centennial Christmas Program. The last report received from Dr. E. A. Sexsmith, from whose office the program has been distributed, indicated that close to 450 orders had been received. Since the largest number ever recorded for the old Educational Day was but 400, this feature of the work of the Council evidently meets with the hearty approval of our people. Were it not for the intensive plans of some of our conferences the response would no doubt be even larger.

While these items are being written the young people attending our colleges and seminary are now hurrying home for the holidays. From almost every angle this has been one of the most successful terms in the history of our educational efforts. Increased attendance has meant increased enthusiasm. With faculties as strong or stronger than usual, improved organization and discipline, and some progress in equipment, these have created a spirit of greater satisfaction on the part of the students. But it is the same old story. More funds would speedily bring forth greater results for our young people and our church. At the present time the returns from the General Conference Budget are far below what they were a year ago and we are very anxious.

To December 1 of year ago the Board of Education had received from the undigested funds of the General Conference Budget $22,784.64. This year we have received but $11,152.21 or a decrease of $11,632.43 which with the decrease in the Rally Day receipts to date of $77.59 means we have been compelled to let along on $12,387.22 less than received at this time last year. There is a pronounced change in the next few months every department of our work will be seriously embarrassed and our schools compelled to face damaging deficits.

The following clipping from the St. Petersburg Times should be of interest.

"They call them 'freshwater colleges.' They're small places compared with some of our monster schools; their enrollment generally ranges from 200 to 1,000, their buildings and equipment often aren't as new or as spacious as one might wish, and their instructors (like most other college professors) are woefully underpaid.

"As like as not, the only way the best of the country ever heard of them is when one of them suddenly possesses a football team of unusual excellence and beats a Princeton, a Cornell, a Michigan, or a Notre Dame.

And we call them 'freshwater colleges' and let it go at that.

"But very, very often, when you look up a prominent man in 'Who's Who' you'll find that he was St. Mary's '04, or Beloit '01, or Swarthmore '88 or Charleston '06.

"Somehow, there's a tremendous percentage of these small colleges represented in 'Who's Who.'

"Some years ago we Americans, as a nation, conceived the idea that to be valuable a thing must be large and wealthy. So we set great store by our big universities, with their $10,000 students apiece, and ignore the rest. And that's where we make a great mistake.

"After all, what does a lad go to college for? Probably there are a dozen reasons; but the main purpose be to learn how to think, to train himself so that he is able to form his own conclusions, to search for the truth.

"The smaller colleges, as a general thing seem to offer a more favorable atmosphere for all this than the larger ones. This is true even though it usually has poorer professors than the large colleges.

"Distracting outside activities are apt to be fewer. Less fuss is made about the football team. There are fewer student-owned automobiles. Dances and parties occupy a smaller place on the calendar.

"The man from the small college probably won't be as snappy a dresser as the big University man. Perhaps he won't be as well up on the latest shows and the newest dances. Very likely he'll never make as good a board salesman.

"But, taking it by the large, he may know a little bit more about how to use his gray matter.

"And, consequently, he'll be a slightly more valuable citizen."

First Church, Spencer.—There has been no new man since conference. We are still at home of A. L. Moore, but hope to find a man soon. We organized our Sunday school December 1st. C. R. Jackson, Super. and J. L. Furr, Secy.-Treas. And we feel that the Sunday school will be a great help in building up our church here. Brother Jackson and his good wife have been faithful workers from the beginning. We have been helped and the Southern A. R. Co. would give us a lot as they have all other churches. Would be a great blessing to us as we have so few members. However, we hope we can get a lot and but where we can have more men. Our W. H. M. S. organized in July have worked and made over $130.00 to pay on our piano and sent books. We now have 20 members in our W. H. M. S. and have some faithful workers too. Rev. D. A. Braswell has preached for us twice since conference, and we are up and in advance on Spencer's part on pastor's salary and hope to collect budgets too. Pray for us and for the M. P.s in Spencer that have not come with us yet, that the Lord in some way may make them feel the need to work while it is day.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—DEC. 27.

Review.

Golden Text: "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. 5:1.

Lesson 1. teaches that the unknown God of the Greeks was the known God of the Jews, the living God. Creator of heaven and earth, and the giver of all material and spiritual blessings, that Jesus Christ died and rose again that repentance and remission of sins might be preached in His name, and that He will come again to judge the quick and the dead.

Lesson 2. teaches that Paul toiled with his hands to defray expenses, that, when the Jews at Corinth blasphemously rejected the gospel of salvation, Paul and his associates turned to the Gentiles, among whom he had large success, and that the Lord Jesus stood by him in a night vision and greatly encouraged this apostle to go forward in his soul-winning campaign.

Lesson 3. teaches that love is the greatest thing in the world, greatest gift of the the Spirit, greater than all knowledge, greater than all faith, greater than all giving, and that, while all other gifts and attainments will pass away, love will last forever.

Lesson 4. teaches that the gospel had taken a deep and strong hold upon the people of Ephesus, that the craftsmen that made silver shrines of Diana were losing trade, that they were greatly enraged at this loss of revenue, that they stirred up a great mob and outcry against Paul, and that the apostle's friends urged him not to seek to defend himself in the face of such unreasonable fury.

Lesson 5. teaches that the battle of life is a spiritual conflict with the powers of darkness, that the whole armor of God is indispensable to cope with the wiles of the devil, that the defensive armor—the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the shield of faith, and the helmet of salvation—will successfully ward off the most cunning attacks, and that the aggressive weapons of the sword of the Spirit and prayer will serve to demolish every stronghold of Satan.

Lesson 6. teaches that in his farewell address to the Ephesian elders Paul bore testimony to his faithfulness in preaching the gospel of salvation, that he was "pure from the blood of all men," that he urged these undershepherds "to feed the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood," and that they ought to exemplify in holy service the admonition of Jesus, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Lesson 7. teaches that Paul did the heroic stunt to face knowingly the opposition at Jerusalem, that he was set upon by a mob of angry Jews, that he was rescued by a squad of Roman soldiers, that the chief captain treated him as a notorious criminal, not knowing what the crime was, but that he gave him permission to make his defense to the people.

Lesson 8. teaches that Paul in his defense before Felix the Roman Governor forcibly and unequivocally denied the charges that

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

the Jews brought against him, that with extreme conscientiousness he had kept the faith of his masters, that he was treated with leniency by the governor, and that Felix trembled with guilt and fear upon hearing one of Paul's powerful messages, but put on the supreme duty of yielding himself to God.

Lesson 9. teaches that Paul related the story of his conversion before king Agrippa, that he was so intensely earnest that Festus accused him of being mad, that Agrippa was so deeply impressed that he was almost persuaded to become a Christian, and that he was so impressed with Paul's innocence that he declared that he might have been set at liberty if he had not appealed unto Caesar.

Lesson 10. teaches that a two weeks' storm broke upon Paul and his company on the voyage to Rome, that the hope of getting to some shore was so slim that the shipmen were about to take to the open sea, when Paul was prevented by the soldiers, that Paul gave assurance that every life would be saved and urged all to end the two weeks' fast, and that in fact all escaped safe to land.

Lesson 11. teaches that after three months stay upon the island of Melita a successful voyage was made to Rome, that he explained to the Jews that he appealed to Caesar, not to bring accusation against them, but to save his own life and preach the gospel at Rome, and that upon a set day he reasoned out of the Scriptures that Jesus was the promised Messiah and Savior of the world.

Lesson 12. teaches that Paul recapitulated his toils, trials, and triumphs, that he was ready to undergo martyrdom, that he had fought a good fight and kept the faith, that a crown of shining stars was awaiting him on the other shore, and that in all his service and tribulation the Lord had stood by him and given him the victory.

Sunday school yesterday than a year ago. The number was also larger. The young people are practicing the Christmas program and looking forward to Thursday night with much interest. We are expecting a splendid service and a large attendance.

Mr. A. R. Cecil doesn't improve as much as his many friends would like to see. He and his good wife are two of our best members and their absence from church last Sunday school does not happen without cause. Mr. I. W. Barton was absent Sunday school on account of sickness.

We wish to take this opportunity to thank Mr. D. E. Kennedy for three nice pumpkins. Also Mr. J. E. Veach and family for a nice lot of fresh meat. Sunday when we returned to our car after services, we found in it a nice box filled with fresh meat, enough to last pastor and family all through the holidays and then some to start us off in the new year. We certainly thank these good people for these expressions of kindness and love. Geo. L. Reynolds.

Our church at Fairmont, W. Va., has just added nearly twenty Sunday school rooms. In the reopening services former pastors are to be represented by a few words of reminiscence. The editor of the Herald has the honor to be one of these. He rejoices at the prosperity that has come to this church. The ordination of Rev. E. G. Cowan was celebrated last Sunday at the close of the morning service at Grace church, President Dixon in charge. Bro. Cowan was too ill to attend to this at the time of the Annual Conference.

VISION.

Herbert Taylor Stephens.

Intellect have fullest sway,
Nor let its light grow dim;
Yet, it shines such little way amid life's shadows grim!
When Senses pall, and Reason fails,—
When Mind cannot discern,—
When Faith, that hazards all, prevails,
And by the Heart we learn!
O Will, that puts its faith in deeds,
Doth often blaze the way;
And proves that only he succeeds
Who can both act and pray!
Who Mind, Heart, and Will combines,
Shall from low, earthly clod,—
Born by that sorrow that refines,—
Mount up on wings to God!

Carve your name high over shifting sand,
Where the steadfast rocks defy decay—
"All you can hold in your cold, dead hand
Is what you have given away."
Build your pyramid skyward; and stand,
Gazed at by millions, cultured they say—
"All you can hold in your cold, dead hand
Is what you have given away."
Count your wide conquests of sea and land,
Heap up the gold and hoard as you may—
"All you can hold in your cold, dead hand
Is what you have given away."
Culture and fame and gold—ah so grand—

"MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS!"

D. L. Moody.

One night in Chicago, many years ago, when I was on my way home I saw a man leaning against a lamp post. Stepping up to him and placing my hand on his shoulder, I said:

"Are you a Christian?"

The man flew into a rage, doubled up his fist and I thought he was going to pitch me into the gutter.

I said: "I'm very sorry if I offended you, but I thought I was asking a proper question."

"Mind your own business," he roared.

"That is my business," I answered.

About three months later on a bitter cold morning about daybreak, someone knocked at my door.

"Who's there?" I asked.

A stranger answered and I said: "What do you want?"

"I want to become a Christian," was the reply.

I opened the door, and to my astonishment there was the man against the lamppost.

He said: "I'm very sorry. I haven't had any peace since that night. Your words have haunted and troubled me. I couldn't sleep last night, and I thought I'd come and get you to pray for me."

That man accepted Christ, and the moment he had done so, asked:

"What can I do for Him?"

He taught in the Sunday school until the war broke out, when he enlisted, and was one of the first to be shot down, but not before he had given a ringing testimony for God.—Selected.

THE MARTYRS OF SCIENCE.

By Rev. Wm. P. McCorkle,
Burlington, N. C.

Prominent educators have had much to say of late about the alleged conflict between science and religion, and about the martyrs of science. We have all been reminded of the imprisonment of Roger Bacon, of the condemnation of Galileo and of the Copernican theory and of the accusation of atheism brought against Isaac Newton when he formulated the laws of gravitation. We have, however, been encouraged to believe that as Bacon, Copernicus, Galileo and Newton won out in the long run, so in our own day religion will prove itself "big enough and vital enough" to absorb whatever science may offer," since in the past "religion has absorbed every truth that science has promulgated." "Every truth." Yea, verily, and sometimes also falsehoods which an ill-informed science has promulgated as truths, and trouble came when science sought to correct its own errors; for the scientific doctors disagreed, and some of them were in positions of authority. Here, too, are questions worth pondering:

Ought science to consider itself too big and too vital to accept the basic truths of Christianity? Shall science demand that religion play the submissive role in a game like that which we used to play in our childhood, in which the leader's formula was, "Shut your eyes and open your mouth, and take whatever I give you?" Religion will, no doubt, assimilate all scientific truth; shall it, therefore, accept all manner of scientific guesses and hypotheses, as possessing the indubitable stamp of truth? Suppose men of science essay to reform and remodel the Christian religion, to scout as mere superstitions its historic doctrines as to miracles, divine revelation, divine inspiration, angels and evils and future retribution, and suppose also that they would dismiss as beliefs based on myths the Scriptural teachings as to humanity's fall in Eden, and the "apocalyptic hope" of humanity's final restoration to the image of God; shall Christianity bow to the authority of science and without question or struggle surrender its historic faith? In a word, shall men of science be elevated to a position of dictatorship over the whole realm of human thought and belief? Must we, as a matter of course, accept not only their facts, but also their reasoning? We detest an established church; shall we have an established cult of science?

But what are the facts as to the martyrs of science? Is it not significant that while religion has numbered its martyrs by hundreds of thousands and by millions, science can claim but few? No student of history can fail to note that when brought under fire the men of faith have shown a heroism far surpassing that of the men of science. We have all heard the charges rung on the names of Roger Bacon, Copernicus, Galileo and Isaac Newton. They were all the victims of ecclesiastical bigotry; and we are admonished that we must preserve "a sane spiritual outlook," and see to it that there shall be no more victims. But let us inquire what responsibility, if any, attaches to the church for the persecution of Bacon and Galileo, for the condemnation of the Copernican theory, and for the charge of atheism alleged to have been brought against Newton when he formulated the laws of gravitation.

Roger Bacon, we have been reminded, suffered imprisonment fourteen years because he taught the "irreligious doctrine" that the rainbow is caused by the reflection of sunlight. Not for that altogether; and his imprisonment was chargeable to his religious order, and not to the church. Further, when Bacon had been required by his brother Franciscans, whom he had vowed to obey, to surrender his professorship at Oxford University, and had for some years lived in Paris under close supervision, it was none other than the Pope of Rome who bestirred himself and befriended the persecuted man of science. By order of the Pope, and despite the opposition of his fellow Franciscans, Bacon wrote his great work, and in 1268 sent the manuscript to the Holy Father himself. That same year it seems that Clement further bestirred himself in behalf of his friend, for we find Bacon back in his old post at Oxford. Had he been content thereafter to pursue quietly his studies and his work as professor, he might have been permitted to spend the rest of his life in peace.

Galileo is the crack battery. The public is often reminded of the sufferings of that renowned scientist, is under the painful impression that Galileo was an humble, pious, brave and truthful man of learning, who while quietly pursuing the peaceful paths of science, was set upon and hung, drawn and quartered by the church. In spite, however, of all the tears, the indignation and the eloquence that have been poured out over his case, justice demands that the following facts be acknowledged:

The condemnation of Galileo and of the Copernican theory was due to the scientists of Galileo's day. His enemies were his fellow astronomers, jealous of his waxing fame, indeed, but exasperated to fury by his attacks upon them. Had he possessed the gentle, non-combative spirit of Charles Darwin, he might have gone down to his grave untroubled at any time by any storm of persecution. He had been warned by eminent churchmen to avoid controversy, but after having been protected for years by the authorities of the church, he drew down a storm of wrath upon his own head by printing a religio-scientific polemic directed against his fellow scientists.

After repeatedly refusing to prosecute him the Inquisition, forced by his fellow scientists to consider his case, refused to pronounce him a heretic, and contented itself with forbidding him to "hold, teach or defend" the Copernican theory. However, they did not intend that he might maintain Copernicanism as "scientifically likely in the highest degree," but not as absolutely proven. Which demonstrates that they were simply "sparring for time," trying to arrange for the peaceful acceptance of scientific truth and the support and protection Galileo received was from ecclesiastics, the Pope being his warm friend.

After his first arraignment Galileo was deemed to have gotten off so lightly. He was permitted to go in peace. The Pope himself, he was informed by his friend Campanolli, disapproved the prohibitory decree. After this rather dubious condemnation, under cover of it, the Inquisition stood by Galileo and his enemies for seventeen

All the terrible (?) suffering inflicted upon him did not materially shorten his life. He was about seventy-eight when he died.

And what about Isaac Newton? If anybody charged him with atheism, it is certain that no attention was paid to his accusers. He was known of all men to be a man of humble, child-like piety. He lived a long life of virginal innocence. He prayed, and he studied his Bible as few men have studied it, believing it to be the Word of God. As long as he lived he was honored by the highest and noblest in Church and State. Twice a member of Parliament, he held an important public office when he died. His body lay in state in the Jerusalem chamber and was buried with England's royalties in Westminster Abbey. He can hardly be counted a martyr.—Presbyterian of the South.

TOBACCO MAN GIVES GOOD ADVICE. Will H. Brown.

J. M. Drew, in a letter to the Rural New Yorker, issue of December 6, 1924, says that in 1887 he attended a farmers' institute at Syracuse, N. Y., and that the secretary of the New England Tobacco Growers' Association read a paper on "Growing and Curing Tobacco." At the conclusion of the paper, the presiding officer gave an opportunity for asking questions. An old gentleman in the audience arose and said he would like to ask one question, which was this:

"In case a young man had never learned to use tobacco, at what age would you advise him to begin?"

The tobacco man seemed baffled for a moment, then squared himself and said frankly: "I WOULD ADVISE HIM NEVER TO BEGIN."

The old gentleman who asked the question was the senior member of the noted firm of Holstein breeders, Smiths, Powell & Lamb.

Some may think the tobacco man was inconsistent, to be engaged in a business the product of which he would advise young men never to use, which shows that some men are engaged in the business who care more for the good of young manhood than for the dollar.

Every friend of boys and young men should give them the same advice. It is in line with the trend of the times among employers. J. C. Penny, originator of the chain stores bearing his name, in speaking of the rule for choosing men for the Penny stores, declares: "We will not employ a man who drinks, smokes cigarettes, or gambles." By the way, kind reader, did you ever know a man who drinks and gambles, and did not use tobacco in some form? Think it over.

THE MOTHER OF JESUS.

It is written in Gal. 4:4: "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law."

This fulness of the time may have one of three meanings, or it may embrace all three. The statement most assuredly refers to the dispensation of the law. This dispensation served its purpose. It had banished an idolatry among the chosen people. It had produced and set forth high ideals of moral and religious conduct. It had created a deep longing for, and a large expectation of, the Messiah of prophecy.

Or "the fulness of the time" might have reference to the time of worldwide peace in which Jesus was born. It became the Prince of Peace to make His appearance in a time of peace.

Or this statement might refer to the qualifications of motherhood. No ordinary woman could qualify to become the mother of the Son of God. It might have taken God more than four thousand years to develop a woman of sufficient physical, mental, moral and spiritual qualifications to become the instrumentality of the incarnation.

At any rate Mary, the mother of Jesus, was a woman of intense and deep consecration. To the angel of the annunciation she said, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word." She was completely yielded up to God for this, or any, sacred service.

She lived in constant fellowship with the Most High. This is set forth in the angel's salvation, "Hail, thou art highly favored, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women." This blessing must have embraced a very deep experience of the grace of God.

And Mary exercised a large and triumphant faith. At the wedding at Cana, when the wine gave out, she came to Jesus with the simple request that He furnish more wine. The request was expressed in a simple statement of need: "They have no wine." Jesus tested her faith in a seemingly rude statement of discouragement: "Woman, what have I to do with thee? for mine hour is not yet come." Undaunted by this rebuff, she said to the servants, "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." Her faith gave assurance that Jesus was going to make wine, and she admonished the servants to do what Jesus said for them to do.

And this noble and world-renowned woman exercised a spirit of devotion that has never been excelled. Her magnificat is the most inspiring poem of devotion ever given to the world. It is short but most comprehensive. It is the language of a great heart.

"My soul doth magnify the Lord. And my spirit hath rejoiced in God, my Savior.

For he hath regarded the low estate of his handmaiden: for, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed.

For he that is Mighty hath done to me great things; and holy is his name.

And his mercy is on them that fear him from generation to generation.

He hath shewed strength with his arm; he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

He hath put down the mighty from their seats; and exalted them of low degree.

He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich hath he sent empty away.

He hath holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy.

As he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed forever." Luke 1:46-55.

To have been the mother of the Messiah of the race was an honor that brightens with the years. But it is a more distinguished honor to be a devoted and faithful follower of this glorified Son of God. This is declared in a statement of Jesus. To a certain woman who said, "Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou has sucked," Jesus replied, "Yea, rather, blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it."

MARJORIE'S PARTY.

The seventh-grade room was terribly excited. Marjorie Brewster was giving a party—a big, grand party, and she was inviting seventh-grade girls.

"Who are you going to invite, Marjorie?" asked one of the girls on the playground.

Marjorie looked around and then, leaning over to the girl, answered, "I am going to invite every girl in this seventh grade except Lois Brown. She hasn't a decent thing to wear."

"Me?" chorused several girls. "Are you going to invite me?"

"Every one in the room," called Marjorie, and then under her breath, "except Lois."

And Lois was not invited.

The day of the party came. Girls in lovely frocks passed Lois' home. "Going to the party?"

"No thank you," smiled back Lois. "I am not invited."

She smiled when the girls were talking to her, but after they passed she went indoors and cried. It was hard to be left out of a party.

Next day at school Lois met Marjorie face to face on the steps. Marjorie would have passed without speaking, but Lois stopped her, again smiling, "You had a lovely day for the party, Marjorie," she said. "I am glad you invited little Susan Hare. She does not often go to a party."

"And other girls would have been mad," she said.

Later that morning Marjorie had trouble with an arithmetic problem. She called the teacher, but she was busy. The teacher asked the room, "Who has problem forty in today's lesson? Will some one help Marjorie with it?"

Lois Brown stood up. "I will help her with the problem," she said, and smiling went to Marjorie's desk.

Around went the whisper, "And she never invited Lois to the party. Good of Lois I'll say. I'd be so mad I wouldn't speak to her."

Lois helped Marjorie with the problem and that afternoon she found on her desk a note.

"I am sorry I did not invite you to my party, Lois. Please pardon me. You are the sweetest girl in the room, Marjorie."

Lois looked up from the note, caught Marjorie's eye, smiled and formed with her lips the words "It's all right."—Kind Words.

WHAT DO YOU MEAN, A HAPPY NEW YEAR?

By Luther K. Long.

During the Holiday season we say to our friends, "I wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year." The adjectives "Merry" and "Happy" are well chosen.

"Merry"—Overflowing with good humor and good spirits; Hilarious, glad.

"Happy"—Enjoying good of any kind, peace, tranquility and comfort: Contented in mind, delighted, satisfied.

Very fittingly we wish our friends a day of merriment—a year of happiness.

When I wish the readers of The Herald a year of happiness, what are some of the things I have in mind?

Good Health.

I wish for every reader twelve months of good health. A few people seem to enjoy poor health—the vast majority greatly prefer good health. Fortunately this is possible for many people by using very simple means easily within their reach.

Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, writing on "The Lady who does her own Work," speaks disparagingly of the custom, then beginning to prevail, of employing masseurs to give the women exercise. "Would it not be quite as cheerful and less expensive a process," she asks, "if young girls from early life developed the muscles in sweeping, dusting, ironing, rubbing furniture, and all the multiplied domestic processes which our grand-mothers knew of?" and then adds: "I will venture to say that our grand-mothers in a week went over every movement that any gymnast has invented, and went over them to some productive purpose, too."

An Absorbing Occupation.

I wish for every one a year of faithful work at some absorbing and useful occupation. Happiness is more dependent on our interests than on our possessions. Not what we have nor what we hope to gain, but what arouses and leads on our interest and enthusiasm—contributes to the real joy of living.

Getting an education, learning a trade, developing a farm, building up a business, practicing a profession, mastering an accomplishment, bringing up a family, building a church, promoting a school, helping to make fine men and women out of boys and girls—these are some of the absorbing occupations and interests that will help fill to overflowing our cup of happiness.

Good Reading.

I wish for every one who can be prepared for it, twelve months with worth-while literature. This fills the hours with happiness, and makes the reader worthy as he becomes able to appreciate the society and thoughts of worthy writers.

I suppose that the most outstanding quality of an educated person is the ability to get from a book the living soul of its author, to look through his eyes at history, science, philosophy, art, religion, life. Doubtless the greatest achievement of any man is to so put his ideas, ideals, facts, principles, outlook, spirit, into a book—that he continues to live through ages and minister to succeeding generations of inquiring minds. We know little concerning the life of Shakespear—but that a life he is living now with countless minds all over the world! And there seems to be no end to the influence he is to continue to exert. Ralph Waldo Emerson did not often leave his native New England—but in his books he has traveled far and dwells in many lands in the homes of the rich and in the cottages of the poor, a welcome guest.

Be A Practical Christian.

I wish that every one, young and old, might during this New Year live an earnest Christian life—including in that the effort to bring as many others as possible into loving union with God through Jesus Christ.

The poise and peace so manifest in the person and life of Jesus were largely due to his oneness with the Father. He makes the impression on us that goodness and truth are at the center of the universe. His steadiness that was the outcome of his union with the Father may be ours. This is not merriment for a day, it is happiness for a year. If we get into it, we shall want to help others—for real happiness is unselfish, it wants to share its joys. What a happy year there is before us all if we honestly endeavor to make ourselves, our homes, our churches, our communities, our nation, and the world truly Christian!

Because the way will sometimes be rough, it is well to take with us the words of Jesus: "In the world ye have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

AN ECHO FROM THE COLLEGE MEETING.

On a very cold morning at four o'clock, Mrs. G. P. Younginer, Mr. Bates and I left Asheville for High Point in our Ford in answer to a call from Mr. J. Norman Wills in the interest of the college.

We arrived very cold and hungry in time for a good dinner prepared by the ladies of the High Point Church.

After dinner reports were made concerning the financial state of affairs and an open discussion followed. We could plainly see that there was an urgent, immediate need of $100,000 to meet bills that were pressing.

I had taken with me the last ten dollars on my pledge to turn over to the college Treasurer, but instead of leaving that we brought home with us a note for $1,000, and on the following Sunday the church authorized the Board of Trustees to borrow that amount from a local bank.

The Asheville pledges are fairly well paid up. Some we can't hope to collect. We have a membership of less than two hundred, all working people and any new pledges we might secure will be small.

If we are to go forward as a denomination in North Carolina (and our success or failure in North Carolina will be felt by the entire denomination) we must meet the thing squarely. Each member must do his or her part.

Mrs. Younginer nor I was able to give largely, so we decided to enlarge our gift by a "gift of service." We each invested ten dollars in materials for cakes, then began taking orders and filling them, this work to last through the four months that the note runs.

On December twenty-fourth we were happy to be able to turn over to the Treasurer of this fund a check for thirty dollars, representing our profit to date.

Was it easy, not altogether. Mrs. Younginer is the mother of eight children ranging in age from five years up, and a very busy woman. It has required a lot of hard work and since they were all baked in my kitchen Mr. Bates has had to exercise much patience. It sometimes meant very late meals. It has meant aching arms and shoulders on Saturday night. We have baked as much as forty pounds in one day and as much as seventy six pounds in one week. It has taken almost two hundred pounds to clear that amount. This has been our best month because of Christmas orders but it has also meant the greatest sacrifice for us. We did not have time to make our own Christmas plans, in fact I did not have time to send greeting cards to friends.

Why did we do it? We believe in our denomination, we have faith in its undertakings. We believe the college is a worth-while undertaking and in order to enjoy its success we must help to make it a success. I have faith in the Asheville church and want to do all I can to make up for the uncollectable pledges.

Mrs. C. W. Bates.

Draper.—You might think that the little M. P. Church of Draper is dead, but we are getting along just fine, to be as small as we are. We are just fine spiritually. We have a fine Sunday school, we have 111 scholars on roll and had 71 present Sunday. Every one seems to enjoy coming out.

We had a fine time at the Christmas tree.

Everyone seemed to enjoy the program. We all hope that all of the children of God will not forget to pray for the M. P. Church at Draper that we may do all in the future that we have neglected to do in the past. May God bless you all. Nellie Farmer, Rep.

Liberty Church.—Regardless of the zero weather we had a good Sunday December the 27th. The Sunday school had over fifty present. Mr. Boyd Reitzell has proved himself a very good superintendent. The morning preaching service found us with a good many visitors in our midst, also some of our young people home for the holidays.

The Christian Endeavor Society, under the leadership of Miss Ward, was well attended, there being over thirty present. At the evening service the subject was "The Characteristics of a Good Christian." Another subscription to the church paper was reported, making a total of eleven. F. L. Gibbs.

High Point.—The observance of the happy Christmas season began on Sunday, December 20th, when at the morning service the pastor, Dr. Brown, delivered a beautiful sermon on "What Meaneth This," appropriate to the day. Then at the evening service the choir, directed by Prof. Dan W. Smith, presented an exquisite Cantata, "The Adoration," which was greatly enjoyed. The congregation is very fortunate in having two fine leaders in the choir, Miss Novella McIntyre and Prof. Dan W. Smith of the College, and their lovely selections are most enjoyable, and add greatly to the beauty of the church services.

One of the best and most enjoyable entertainments ever given by our Sabbath school was that of last Wednesday evening in the Sunday school assembly room. Mr. Lester Teague deserves much praise for his faithful and painstaking management of the entertainment. The play, "Light of Bethlehem," in five episodes was presented in a most beautiful and attractive manner. Mr. J. W. Hinkle was the Prophet who foretold the birth of a Saviour, and young William Bodenheimer was the Scribe. Miss Mary Shepherd made a lovely Virgin Mary and Miss Juanita Hammer was the beautiful angel. The three Wise Men, Casper, Melchior, and Balthasar, were impersonated by Messrs. Thurman Auman, Wayne Rhodes, and Theodore Ballard. Messrs C. L. Gray, Jr., Wm. Bodenheimer, C. C. Robbins, Jr., George Ridge and James Hinkle, Jr., were the Shepherds, "who watched their flocks by night." Behind the scene a choir rendered lovely Christmas hymns, "Holy, Holy, Holy, the Gloria Patri, "Hark! The Herald Angels Sing," "Silent Night" and "O Little Town of Bethlehem." These beautiful hymns faintly heard in the distance added much to the effectiveness of the solemn scenes. Beautifully colored spot lights were thrown on the stage, and greatly enhanced the beauty of the scenes, especially the one when the Wise Men came to worship Jesus and brought gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh. These lights were ably managed by Mr. Boston, and many thanks are due him. After the rendition of the play, Santa Claus appeared and dispensed a generous treat of candy, oranges, nuts, and apples to all the children of the Sunday school up to and including the Intermediates.

The Mission Study Class held a pleasant meeting at the parsonage on Monday afternoon, and Mrs. Brown served delicious refreshments.

New additions to our membership, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Peace, Mr. Goley, Mrs. Rufus Bodenheimer, Mr. and Mrs. Marsh, who came to us from East End M. E. Church, are heartily welcomed to our communion and fellowship.

It is with great sadness that we note the critical illness of Mrs. T. T. Ferree on Steele St. She is a sister of the late Mrs. J. J. Welch and Mr. W. P. Pickett, and the widow of the late Rev. T. T. Ferree, who was a valued member of the N. C. Conference for many years. Mrs. Ferree has been in failing health for the past year. May our Saviour enfold her and keep her in peace and love.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hutchison of Charlotte, who have been guests of their daughter, Mrs. J. A. Gray, during Christmas, left yesterday for their home.

Wyatt A. Pickens, who is employed temporarily in the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., spent the Christmas holidays with home folks.

Mr. W. P. Bodenheimer is in Baltimore taking treatment at Johns Hopkins Hospital, where an operation will be performed. His many friends are earnestly hoping and praying for a great improvement in his condition.

THE BIRMINGHAM CONVENTION.

The International Council Convention and Conference on Religious Education to be held in Birmingham, Alabama, April 12-19, 1926, promises to be an epoch-making event in the continent-wide movement for religious education. The theme of the convention will be "Building Together a Christian Citizenship," expressing the united purpose of the cooperating forces of Protestantism in America.

It is the quadrennial convention of the International Council of Religious Education whose headquarters are in Chicago, Illinois. Dr. W. O. Thompson, of Columbus, Ohio, president of Ohio State University, is the president of the convention, Dr. Hugh S. Magill of Chicago, Illinois, formerly secretary of the National Education Association is the general secretary, and Dr. Robert M. Hopkins of St. Louis, Missouri, is the chairman of the International Council.

This will be the first great religious education convention held in America officially participated in by the thirty-five cooperating denominations represented in the International Council. The conventions of the past have been largely composed of delegates from state and provincial associations. While the Birmingham Convention will be inspirational and promotional, its purpose will be to bring out the very best educational plans and methods for the Sunday school and for all the different phases of religious education.

The program of the convention will include addresses by leading statesmen of the United States and Canada who recognize the supreme importance of the religious training of childhood and youth, and addresses by the greatest leaders in religious education representing the Protestant forces of the continent. The afternoons of each day will be devoted to educational conferences of the different professional groups or sections. These conferences, which will be participated in by the recognized leaders in the different phases of religious education, and which will bring out the very best plans and methods, will be open to all delegates attending the convention. Another feature of the convention will be a Young People's Congress, for which careful plans are being made.

A special feature of the convention will be an extensive exhibit including not only books and publications, but church school architecture and equipment, church and Sunday school publicity, fine arts in religion, and the best educational materials and methods for the Sunday school, the vacation church school, the week-day school of religion, missionary education, teacher and leadership training, and other departments of the work.

The people of Birmingham are making extensive preparations for the convention. A local Committee of One Hundred, divided into sub-committees, is already actively at work and will be prepared to entertain the delegates with typical southern hospitality. Victor Hanson, editor and publisher of the Birmingham News, has been the financial sponsor for the convention, and many of Birmingham's leading citizens are upon the Committee of One Hundred. Probably no city in the country has more complete church school buildings and equipment. Several churches of Birmingham have church school plants representing the most modern and complete equipment to be found in America.

The convention will be made up of delegates from both the cooperating denominations and from the territorial units. The Convention Committee has allotted approximately 7,000 delegates to the denominations, and 7,000 delegates to the state and provincial Councils. The registration fee will be $3.50, the same as at the Kansas City Convention in 1922, which will entitle the delegate to all the privileges of the convention, including the official program; admission to all the sessions of the convention; special railroad and hotel rates; and the report of the convention.

The significance of this convention is evidenced by the fact that President Coolidge has accepted an invitation to attend and deliver an address. The governors of the southern states recently adopted a resolution calling attention to the convention, expressing appreciation of the President's acceptance, and assuring the President of a hearty reception on the part of the people of the south.

REFLECTIONS—WISHERS.

We will cross over the threshold of another year, in a few days, and are preparing to face all it has in store for us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith.

It is quite natural for us to look backward, because all which went to form our past made possible our present attainments and achievements, whatever may be their character and worth.

Not that we should dwell morbidly upon our many stumblings and mistakes born of our ignorance, self-will, perverseness, nor that we should forever yearn for the other days whose recession from us throws a glamor over the experiences and events now indelibly stamped on our memory; neither that we should ever cease to profit by the sad, and the inspiring lessons taught us by the mishaps and disappointments, and the good impulses and deeds, and all else which entered into our unchangeable record.

But, like the great apostle Paul, we should be "forgetting those things which are behind," lest by dwelling too much, too long on them it become a drawback to larger vision, more loyal devotion, greater effort at self-development and service for others, hence, like him, "and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark."

The true life Christ reveals is to be lived by us, the richness of intimate fellowship he offers, is to be enjoyed, the joy of self-abandonment in service for him is to be realized, and the ultimate prize awaiting every faithful follower will be bestowed.

Beyond doubt, retrospection causes keen regret that we were lukewarm when the warmth of our love for Him and brother men should have flamed out, and that paucity of faith, meagerness of spiritual growth, barrenness of indifferent service, are so far short of what we really pledged to Him.

But, on the other hand, unmeasured comfort is ours that His loving kindness prevailed, that His amazing grace held away, that His guiding hand was not withdrawn, and now, at the beginning of a New Year we are privileged to renew our covenant with Him, and, out of contrition of heart, and acceptance of His pardon and power, let us arise to render a more worthy allegiance and service, and walk humbly and circumspectly before Him.

But our intimate relation to the Christ also relates us to the purposes of His coming into our world, as expressed in His sacrificial death, glorious resurrection, and ascension, and the establishment of His Kingdom, and its mission which He outlined and authorized.

Apart from His Kingdom's work, therefore, we cannot remain allied to Him, for to His service we are solemnly pledged, and its objective we must try to reach, and we vitiate our covenant with Him, are recreant to our sacred trust, and merit His displeasure when we fail to respond to its demands, as we have ability.

We best meet our obligations through our church and its authorized agencies which have the oversight of the great interests of the local church and of the denomination.

As for the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration it has sought to administer to the best possible advantage, in the most economical way, the large and growing work in the three countries occupied, but, while gratifying results have been secured, very important buildings as churches, school houses, missionary homes, etc., could not be built, and very important work could not be taken up, delayed, and needed reinforcements could not be secured, nor were funds available for sending them out.

Why? "All the lilies were not brought into the storehouse," too many forgot their church membership vow "to give as God gives," too little pleasure and kindred things came first, and Christ's call out of the needs of His Kingdom's work was overlooked. Now facing the New Year let us all "Put first things first," and remember what we pledged God, and thus provide, through the payment of the budget, for the work of all our Boards and institutions. Fred C. Klein.

CHINESE REPUBLIC DAY IN SEREMBAM.

Bertie H. Bowmar.

October 10 is China's Republic Day. Despite the fact that the country is in such an upheaval, the day is celebrated in a most effective way by those who still have hopes of better days for their people.

In Malaya, in all the larger cities, the day is spent in final preparations for the Feast of Lanterns. As the sun sinks in the west and darkness falls upon the world, the peculiar clanging of the cymbals, the shrill note of the horn, and the boom of the drum may be heard, and one can see procession after procession of the various Chinese organizations—schools, clubs, carpenter's guilds, bicycle-repairing guilds, and so forth—marching to the appointed place of assembly. After a short patriotic program, these groups, each member of which bears a lantern made of bright-colored paper, form a huge procession and parade through the main streets of the town for hours amid the cheers of the people and the bursting of firecrackers. Several of the guilds are accompanied by bands of various sorts. This year the musicians of one of the vernacular schools played the music to one of the hymns which we sometimes sing in Sunday school and Epworth League "Sound the Battle-Cry." Undoubtedly the words of the chorus were unknown to the players, but they were not at all inappropriate for the day.

"Rouse, then, soldiers!
Rally round the banner!
Ready, steady,
Pass the word along;
Onward, forward,
Shout aloud, hosanna!
Christ is Captain
Of the mighty throng.

Before taking part in the Lantern Procession, the Chinese boys of the Anglo-Chinese School of Seremban served a tea at which they entertained their friends with a patriotic program. They sang the Chinese national anthem, saluted their country's flag, and enjoyed several inspiring speeches. One of the Christian school teachers, Yong Yew Kim by name, gave the boys such a fine talk, full of suggestive thoughts, that it seemed well to share it with the readers of Zion's Herald, that they may know how the Chinese who live outside of their mother country feel in regard to the situation there. The poem included in the speech is the teacher's own composition, and is only one of several which he has written. The address follows:

"Every year for the last few years on the night of October 10, you have seen a huge procession of lanterns wend its way through the streets of Seremban. It may well be asked, 'What is the object of this vast expenditure of time and money?' All of you perhaps know something of the reason, but do you fully understand? In the words of one of my committee, 'it is to honor the memory of those who sacrificed their lives that we might enjoy the liberty, the freedom, and the independence which we are enjoying now, and which we shall enjoy in future years.' It is fitting that the memory of these heroes be made everlasting and that we should celebrate the anniversary of the day on which they made their supreme sacrifice. This annual celebration helps us to remember our debt to these honored dead—a debt which we can never repay.

"I think you will agree with me when I say that every Chinese loves his country. No matter where he is living, however far away from his homeland, when his days are coming to an end, the Chinese emigrant, unless he does not possess the means, invariably returns to his homeland, there to lay down his bones among his ancestors. Of those who happen to die in foreign lands, many request that their bones be taken back to China. The fact that you boys who are studying in an English school have organized a party to join in the Lantern Procession also shows that you have the love of your country within you.

"After what has been said it must not be supposed that the Chinese are without their faults. To the everlasting shame of China's four hundred millions of people, it must be said that the Chinese remain the only opium-smoking nation of the world. And the latest information seems to indicate that, far from being on the decrease, opium-smoking is actually on the increase. It is the opium-smoking that has ever been the curse of China, making her the prey of other nations, and retarding her progress in every direction. Another fault of the Chinese is the illiteracy of the masses. Although education has made giant strides since the days of the revolution, yet it can hardly be expected to educate four hundred millions of people within the space of fifteen years.

"If we would, therefore, live up to our name as those who love their country, there lies a duty plainly ahead of us. We must remedy this existing state of affairs. If we have money, let us use it for the benefit of our countrymen. Of what use is our money if it is locked up and not used? If we have power, let it be used for the welfare of our countrymen. What availeth our power, when we are dead and gone? If we use our power wisely and well, the future generations will honor us even as we are remembering our honored dead this day. But if we abuse our power, even our graves are not secure.

"Again, I repeat, we must remedy this existing state of affairs.

"Of what, then, does true patriotism consist? Does it consist of nothing else than going to this Lantern Procession once a year? You are sadly mistaken if you think so. True patriotism never does consist of empty showiness, but rather lies in the silent effort to improve the lot of your countrymen, in the silent sacrifice which you make that your countrymen may be uplifted, and above all in performing all these acts freely and to the uttermost limit of your power. With your permission I shall read a poem which sets forth what the attitude of a true patriot should be:

"O China dear! my motherland,
What sorrows thou hast still to see,
What battles yet thy sons must face
Ere thou a peaceful land may'st be!
"I cannot but be grieved to view
This trouble that thy sons now raise;
Yet they but do through love of thee.
Mistaken though might be their ways!

"Ah! would that I might know how I
My goods, my life, my all might lend!
"But weak, poor creature that I am,
How little I could do for thee,
My lot forbade thine armies lead,
To the front thy soldiers lead!
Yet, oh I know, I might give
All that I have, but I should dread
Of thee, should I that I should aid
In this my duty plain to thee!

"In regard to the recent troubles in China, I shall not pass any remarks. I cannot pass in silence on the sad events which have taken place there. You will all agree with me, I believe, when I say that the ill treatment of the foreign missionaries—I do not fear of any being killed,—must always remain a sad incident in the history of the republic. We have with us today two representatives of the missionaries, Rev. and Mrs. Thomas W. Bowmar, and I wish to express to them our sorrow in this matter and our hope that when a settlement is finally reached, the unfortunate missionaries may be amply compensated.

"I now have a last word for you students, and the best advice that I can give you, I think, is that you should pursue your studies diligently if you desire to be of any service to your country. For it is now generally admitted that in the student body of China lies the salvation of the country. It is the student who will in later years become the leader of the nation. Therefore, while you are in school apply yourselves diligently to your lessons, take care not to waste your time, try to save your money, and thus prepare to be of service to your countrymen."—Zion's Herald.

OUR OWN.

If I had known in the morning
How wearily all the day
The words unkind
Would trouble my mind
I said when you went away,
I had been more careful, darling,
Nor given you needless pain;
But we wound our own
With look and tone
We may never take back again.
For though in the quiet evening
You may give me the kiss of peace,
Yet it might be
That never for me
The pain of the heart should cease.
How many go forth in the morning
That never come home at night,
And hearts have broken
For harsh words spoken
That sorrow can never set right.
We have careful thoughts for the stranger
And smiles for the some-times guests,
But oft for "our own"
The bitter tone,
Though we love our own the best.
Ah, lips with the curve impatient;
Ah, brow with the look of scorn;
'Twere a cruel fate
Were the night too late
To undo the work of the morn.

The young people of Thomasville Community Church gave "A Drama of the Christmas" from Charles Dickens as dramatized by Prof. Spence of Duke University. It was a elaborate play, requiring many characters. The carols were sung by the church choir under the leadership of Miss Myrtle YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

Published in the interest of our Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, and other organizations among our young people. All articles, items of interest, etc., for publication on this page should be addressed to Rev. Lawrence Little, 310 Bellemeade St., Greensboro, N. C.

Announcement.

The Board of Young People's Work hereby announces this "Young People's Page" as an additional phase of our work for the young people of the Conference. Each week we shall publish suggestions for Sunday school workers, Christian Endeavor leaders, and others interested in our young people. It is our earnest desire to be of the greatest possible service to our youth and their leaders throughout the Conference. We shall aim to be as practical as possible. Instead of lengthy commentaries on the Christian Endeavor topic, which material may be had in abundance from inexpensive books and from comments in such periodicals as "The Christian Endeavor World," we shall publish practical methods of work, suggestive material for leaders, and items of interest from our workers throughout the state. We shall include a question column. Won't you please make this your page? Write us of any good piece of work you are doing for your young people. Perhaps your Sunday school, or some class in your school, is doing some outstanding piece of work. Maybe your C. E. Society is rendering some unique and effective service. Tell us about it. On the other hand, you may be puzzled about some problem that confronts you. Ask us about it through these columns. Perhaps someone else needs the same help. We shall be very glad to help you if we can. If we cannot, we shall try to find someone who can. Please send all items for publication on this page to the address given above.

Yours for the Youth of the Church,

Lawrence Little, President,

Board of Young People's Work.

Universal Week Of Prayer.

Upon the invitation of the World's Evangelical Alliance, Christian people throughout the world have been observing annually a week of prayer beginning the first Sunday in January. Call attention to this in your Sunday school service next Sunday, and urge every officer, teacher, and scholar in your school to observe this week of prayer and communion with the Heavenly Father. Call for a show of hands of those who will observe it in their homes. Place a list of the following suggested topics and Scripture readings on the blackboard, or, better still, typewrite or mimeograph them and hand a copy to each person present in the school.

Suggested Topics And Readings.

Sunday: Texts suggested for Sermons and Addresses: 1 John 2:7-8; Luke 12: 32; Col. 1:12-13; Isa. 53:9-10-11; 1 Cor. 1:2.

Monday: Thanksgiving and Humiliation. Phil. 4:4-9; Heb. 10:16-25 Ps. 85; 1 Thess. 5:15-25.

Try to be duly appreciative of all God's manifold blessings,

Tuesday: The Church Universal. Ex. 19:1-6; Isa. 26: 1-9; Matt. 1:1-16; 1 Cor. 3:6-15. Pray that narrow sectarian differences may be forgotten and that all churches may work together harmoniously for the coming of the Kingdom of Christ.

Wednesday: Nations and their rulers. Dan. 7:9-14; Mark 13:1-13; 1 Cor. 11; 20-2h; Rev. 19:1-16. Pray for President Coolidge and all those associated with him in the government of our nation, also for the rulers of the nations of the earth.

Thursday: Millions. Ps. 64; Isa. 49:1-12; John 10:7-18; John 12:20-33; Rev. 19:4-16. Pray for our missionaries, Rev. J. F. Minnis, of India, and Rev. J. Cyde Auman, of Japan, and for all other missionaries at home and abroad.

Friday: Families, Schools, Colleges, and the young. Deut. 6:1-9; Ps. 78:1-8; Prov. 4:1-13; Matt. 18:1-14. Pray for High Point College, for our Seminary and other colleges, for our Board of Young People's Work, and all other agencies for the youth of the church.

Saturday: The Home Base. Eze. 37:21-23; Amos 9:8-15; Ps. 126; Luke 21:20-33. Pray that God may give the church at home a missionary zeal. Pray that His people may cleanse themselves and consecrate themselves for Christian service. Pray for the Jews of the world, that God may heal and restore them.

Please Report.

Please report to the address above the number of persons who promise to observe this week of prayer. We should like to have a statement in next week's Herald in regard to this number. Individuals are also invited to write a note, if the observance has been helpful.

The Best Sunday School Helps.

The following list of Sunday school lesson commentaries will be found most helpful. All of them may be ordered, postage prepaid, at the prices quoted, from The Methodist Protestant Book Concern, 516 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Md:

Wells, "Select, Notes," $2; Tarbells, "Teachers' Guide," $2; Snowden's, "Notes," $1.25; Arnold's "Commentary," $1.25; Torrey's, "Gist of the Lesson," .35.

Dramatization At Thomasville.

The following interesting sketch of a dramatization of Christmas story by Dickens was clipped from a recent copy of The Greensboro Daily News:

"A Christmas carol, one of the famous stories of Charles Dickens, dramatized by Prof. H. E. Spence, of Duke University, was given on Tuesday night at Community church, under the auspices of the young people of that church, coached by the assistant pastor, Rev. D. L. Fouts, who was in the play at Duke last session when it was staged there for the first time under Prof. Spence. Many of the young people of Community Church were in the cast."

Salem School Takes Banner.

The following very interesting item comes from the live and enthusiastic pastor of Saxapahaw Charge, Rev. H. L. Isley:

"Salem Sunday School won the banner at the recent Alamance County Sunday School Convention for having the largest attendance. This church has the best Sunday School in the history of the church. We are making plans to build two new Sunday School rooms."

Christian Endeavor.

Senior Topic for Jan. 3rd, "How do we show God's Loving Care?" Luke 12:6-11; 1 Peter 5:7; Ps. 23:1-6.

(Consecration Meeting).

Suggested Plan For Meeting.

Since this is the first meeting of the New Year, and a consecration meeting when each member is expected to take some part in response to his name at the roll call, suppose you try a roll call by months. Have each person whose birthday comes in January stand and take some part, while the secretary makes note of the attendance. Then we will follow February, etc., throughout the month of the year.

Use The Blackboard.

As the members take part in this meeting, and mention ways in which God shows His loving care, list on the blackboard all the evidences of God's loving care. Let the leader sum them all up at the close of the meeting.

Appropriate Hymns For Meeting.

The following hymns, selected from The Methodist Protestant Hymnal, are all appropriate for this topic:

No. 116, "God is Love"; No. 119, "The Lord is my Shepherd"; No. 124, "How Gentle God's Commands"; No. 130, "He Leads Me; O Blessed Thought"; No. 353, "Cast thy Burden on the Lord." Also, "God will take care of You" (not in Hymnal).

Item For The Information Committee.

The Young People's Summer Conference will be held at High Point College, next July 19-26—seven full days. The price for the instruction, room, board, and all conference expenses has been reduced from $15 to $10. This will make it possible for a larger number of our young people to attend. Some of the outstanding speakers who have been invited to address the Conference are: Rev. Leonard B. Smith, D. D., Wilmington, Del., President of the Maryland Young People's Union; Rev. Roy I. Farmer, Steubenville, Ohio, President of the Ohio Young People's Union; Rev. Dr. Thomson, of Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J., and a host of others.

Things To Come.

Begin planning now to observe "Christian Endeavor Week," January 31-February 6. Full plans will appear in "The Christian Endeavor World." Nothing will help your Christian Endeavor Society more in your church and community than a full observance of Christian Endeavor Week. Plan something for every night that week. Let us know your plans. They might be of suggestive value to other societies.

Have Paid Their Assessments.

The Senior Societies of Calvary Church, Greensboro, and of First Church, Charlotte, have already sent in to Mr. F. R. Stout, Greensboro, the treasurer of Young People's Board, their $2.00 assessment, ordered by the Annual Conference, for the support of our Board of Young People's Work. Thank you, Calvary and Charlotte. May your tribe increase!

Happy New Year!

The members of the Board of Young People's Work wish to extend to every reader of The Herald and to all the young people and their leaders a hearty greeting and wish for a happy New Year. May God's richest blessing be on you and yours throughout the year 1926.

IN MEMORIAM.

Death Of Wister W. Presnell.

Our community was made sad December 18, 1925, by the death of one of our noble young men, Mr. Wister W. Presnell of Seagrove, Route 2.

He fell off the running board of his car, fracturing his skull, Friday, and died in the hospital at Asheboro.

He will be sadly missed in his home and community. He was a faithful attendant at church and Sunday school. He was at Sunday school every Sunday when nothing prevented. He had been a member of New Hope M. P. Church since early childhood.

He was 31 years of age. He remained at home with his mother and tenderly cared for her. His remains were laid to rest in New Hope Cemetery Sunday P. M. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, D. I. Garner.

The weather was rough, but the church was nearly full, which showed he was highly esteemed.

He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Callie Presnell, two sisters, Mrs. Melvin Pierce and Mrs. Vernon Chriscoe, and two brothers, Dwight and Fitzhugh Presnell.

The pall and flower bearers were his classmates at Sunday school.

The pall bearers were Alton and Thurman Cox, Cecil and Neil Trogdon, William Merritt, Lester Dorsett, Eddie King, Clayson Vancannon and Clarence Hammond.

The flower bearers were Misses Leta and Gertrude Presnell, Rosa and Ada Merritt, Dora and Mattie Vancannon, Allene Trogdon, Hester Cox, and Ollie Sink.

Weep not, dear mother, brothers, sisters and friends. Wister is gone but not forgotten and our loss his eternal gain. A Friend.

Welch Memorial, High Point.—We have received twenty-two new members since our last report, making a total of 69 received from the meeting. Our Sunday school is continuing to grow. The congregations for preaching have been good also, except for last Sunday. The weather was so cold we did not have an average attendance for Sunday school or preaching service, when the weather is not too bad we will have good attendance. We had a fine Christmas. Received many nice presents. The best of all was $75. in gold, which was presented to me by my friends. I also received one five dollar bill, presented by Brother Tomie Jackson from Mrs. Jackson's grand-mother, Mrs. Bundy. I appreciate the money, but appreciated the spirit which prompted the gift, much more. The Sunday school gave me a nice tie and gave Mrs. Pierce a box of nice handkerchiefs. My class gave me a nice gold pencil. I also received several other nice presents from special friends. Our Christmas program was rendered Thursday night, had good program and large crowds. After program was rendered the treats were presented to the entire school. We also had a tree, which was laden with many beautiful presents.

Last Sunday I told my people about Brother Braswell's misfortune in the loss of his home, and asked them to give him a donation; they responded freely, the collection amounted to thirty-two dollars. It would have been much more with average congregations. We are sorry for Brother Braswell. Our heart goes out to him in deepest sympathy. Our prayers are that the Lord may be with him in his troubles. During the Christmas season, we were called upon to perform the ceremony which made Mr. Cecil E. Daily and Miss Sibyl Reddick husband and wife. The ceremony took place at the parsonage on Wednesday, the 23rd, at 2:30 o'clock. Mr. Daily is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Daily of Davidson Co. Mrs. Daily is the youngest daughter of our class leader, Brother C. S. Reddick. The young couple are very popular and have many friends who wish them many years of happiness. T. E. Pierce, Pastor.

Spring Church, Spring Church Charge.—We feel grateful to our recent annual conference for sending into our midst as our leader and pastor for this conference year, Rev. A. D. Shelton. Brother Shelton came to us the last part of November, practically a stranger, as few of our people, if any, knew him previously to this time, but he has already formed strong friendships among us, as he seems much interested in the welfare of our church and our sick ones. He has filled every regular appointment with us since conference, also attended our Sunday school, each Sunday A. M., of which we are glad. His sermons have been very helpful always encouraging us to live for a higher and nobler life, showing us from God's word the real sense thereof. Our first quarterly conference was held on 17th of December, every church on the charge represented.

Our Sunday school is moving on very nicely. We had our Christmas tree and program on the night of the 26th, using "The Christmas Program" as gotten out by our Publishing house; it was said to be quite a success. An offering was taken for the G. C. B. We are very glad to report our brother, J. J. Massey, who for two weeks has been quite ill in Roanoke Rapids Hospital as being much improved; verily we believe God does answer prayers. We are much grieved to report the serious illness from cancer of our beloved sister in Israel, Mrs. Martha Ann Powell. Though physically weak, her faith in God is strong.

Death entered our midst on December 22nd and took from us Mrs. Luna Hale Jordan, wife of S. Mason Jordan, aged 21 years and 20 days. Early in life she united by faith, with Spring Church and remained faithful to the end. Luna always enjoyed attending Sunday school and church. Several months ago she was stricken with that dread disease, T. B., and while unable to attend church for some time, she continued to love it, and selected as her funeral songs, "Jesus, lover of my Soul" and "I love to tell the story," which she requested that Mrs. C. E. Dimick and Mrs. H. E. Vassar (her former Sunday school teacher) sing at her funeral. We are very glad to have with us during the holidays our following young people: Mr. J. W. Crew, Jr., Mr. Leon F. Tucker, and Miss Ethel Crew, of N. U. C. and Miss Elsie Mae Crew of N. C. C. W., and Miss Lucile Key of E. C. T. T. S.

Our deepest sympathy goes out to Brother D. A. Braswell in his great loss by fire. Glad to see such splendid reports for former pastors. Mrs. H. E. Vassar, Rep.

BEGIN AT HOME.

I have read a tract called "In Search of the Beautiful." It sets a person before us who resolved to seek and find the beautiful; and he bethought himself of the mountains of Switzerland, and the sunny plains of Italy, and the forests of America, and ever so many of the wonders of the world. But, before he completed his arrangements, a little bird whispered, "Begin at home." The little bird was wiser than the man. The beautiful is always with us. "Oh, my friend," says one writer, "Make the place where God has put a tent in the desert, make it beautiful. If it be only a cottage in a lonely street, or an attic room in a cottage, or a fireside, or a bench in a workshop, or a berth in a ship, or a seat in a school, or a place on your mother's knee, or a place in her heart, make it beautiful. And the sadder, the darker, the poorer the place is, be the more eager to make it beautiful."—Exchange.

SOME DAY.

The door of the cage will be opened some day, And the bird will fly upward, away, away— Away to its freedom in sunshine and air, Where its plumage will glisten so wondrously fair.

And it will forget, in the day of its night, The time of its loneliness, bondage and night. The summons will come for the Christian some day.

And he will soar upward, away, away— Away to his home in the heavenly land, To join all the ransomed, the glorified band; To be like the Saviour, and no more alone, To bask in the radiance that streams from the throne.

Then patience, sad heart; 'mid thy sorrow and tears, Look on to the future and silence thy fears. Thy Saviour is waiting, and some blessed day

He will say, "'Tis enough, come, My blessed one, away:

I've gone to prepare thee a mansion above, Come, enter thou into it, child of my love."

THE SPITE FENCE NEXT THE PARSONAGE.

Betty Rowe was the only one of the parsonage children who called it a spite-board fence. She did it because she could so well remember the occasion upon which it had been built between the shabby little parsonage and the great house next door. The other parsonage children, all boys of varying ages, accepted it as a matter-of-fact commodity and utilized it as a backstop for their baseballs, a grim fortress in warfare, and a shelter in whatever games one was necessary. Later they tried to vault it.

Betty was busy tying up her morning-glory seed the day the vaulting was begun. There were great quantities of the seed, for she used it to plant along the front part of the high fence in an attempt to cover it and make the landscape more picturesque. She had begun to hunt for a safe storing place for these precious bags, when she happened to look out of the back window and saw her fifteen-year-old brother jump up through the air to a height that made her gasp with incredulity.

The next minute she rushed out of the house and caught him by the shoulder. "Ted Rowe, where did you learn to jump like that?" she demanded, and without waiting for him to answer, she continued: "Why, you can make center on the high school basketball team, if you'll only learn to hit the basket occasionally."

Ted grinned, and the boys watching him frankly approved Betty's assertion. They were all freshmen and sophomores at Ward High, and in their eyes senior Betty was quite a parsonage. Not because she was honor student was she given all this regard, but, as the boys all termed it, she was "square and just full of pep."

Back in the parsonage again, she fairly flew up the stairs to her father's study. "Oh, father," she called through the locked door to the minister who was making missionary reports, "I honestly believe that at last Ted has a chance to make a record at something. He can make about the highest straight jump I ever saw a youngster make. It's up to us to keep after him and see that he gets on the basketball team at Ward High this winter."

Her father's "Bully!" told exactly who was responsible for all Betty's enthusiasm. He, too, liked all sorts of ball games, and often the most staid neighbors of the parsonage had to smile indulgently to each other at the sight of their minister and his one daughter engaging in a lively game of catch or a contest of knocking out flies on the lot next the church.

Next Betty sought her mother. At last she had discovered some good which had come from the spite fence. Had it not been for it, Ted might not have been able to vault so high. Still this one virtue it possessed looked rather small beside its many vices, such as shutting all the sunshine from the parsonage bedroom windows, making a miserable background for their beautifully flowered lawn, and giving the minister's children a sort of black eye to strangers in the town—and dozens of other things quite as bad as these.

Mrs. Rowe smiled over her pie, the edges of which she was crinkling ready for the oven. "Then perhaps you can feel a little more kindly toward the woman who had it built," she hoped.

Betty tried to scowl, but the scowl wouldn't hold, and a smile came in its stead. Liking her neighbor now, since she stayed in the city and left the big house empty all the year round, was not so hard as it used to be when she and her guests and family curled themselves up in the beautiful house and sent servants over to the parsonage to complain to the minister that his children were making unmerciful noises and irritating certain nervous people in the great house.

So now Betty went right to work trying not to dislike the owner of the next-door house so much. A great deal of her time out of school was spent in helping Ted with his lessons, so as to keep him eligible for the school's first team, whenever he should become a fit player, and she could not soliloquize so much. She also had to herd him to the gymnasium for extra practice.

After a time Ted Rowe became quite the most promising member of the Ward scrub team. The coach told him that he was sure he would make the varsity team next season, when Horton, the senior center, left school. How could he hope for more now? Only two boys at Ward had ever played on a first team during their first or second years.

Then Ted was satisfied, but Betty was not. "I'll be out of school next year, clear away at college, and it won't mean half so much to me then as it would now. I want to be in the line of Ward students and root and sing and go mad the way we do, when you play your first game. Now do, for my sake, get busy, Ted, and try to get in for one game at least."

How Ted did try then!

That week brought part of the rich family back to the big house next door to the shabby little parsonage. Their coming was so unusual that the ministerial family figuratively gasped. After which the members began to wonder. Never before had the big house been open during the winter. It had always been used as a summer home. Yet some of them evidently intended to stay all this winter, for there was a whole truckload of boxes and trunks.

The shutters of the big house had been open only three days when Ted discovered the reason for their coming. The Japanese servant had told it to him, and he was sure that it was authentic. Hardly able to contain his pride over having gotten the news, he confided it to his family that night at the supper table.

"They've come down because Leon, their lame son, wanted to come," he explained. "He had another operation this winter, and the doctor thinks he can soon walk without even a crutch. Remember, he was in a wheelchair the last he was here?"

Betty nodded. That had been four years ago. Ever since then he had been sent to some sort of a sanitarium when the family came down to Glenhurst with their guests to spend part of the summer. Betty could remember back even farther than that, to when he had been carried by his father or a servant. It was then his mother had had the spite fence built. She had justified her actions by declaring that the parsonage children were driving him mad with their noise.

Remembering that, Betty made a wry face at the fence. At the same time there came back into her heart a portion of the dislike there had been there before this fall. Still the fence had helped make Ted into a jumper, and—"I just won't be mean to them," she decided to herself. "I'll just avoid them." And then she giggled merrily. "No doubt they will be glad of the avoidance."

"No doubt, no doubt," echoed Teddy prophetically. "I feel the same way you do."

A few days later Betty had every reason to doubt that statement of Ted's. As she was coming home from a class meeting one night she overtook him and the rich boy from next door. The latter hung heavily on Ted's shoulder with one hand; the other gripped his crutch. Awkwardly Ted managed an introduction: frigidly Betty acknowledged it. That night she scolded him vigorously for being with that boy.

"But he wanted to see a good basketball game, and there was a practice one in the gym," protested Teddy hotly. "I couldn't turn him down after that, could I, Betts? And after he got there, it would have been mighty mean of me to have hurried back to our own home and let him limp home alone."

Betty did not comment on his explanation. But after a time she warned him. "Oh, Teddy, don't let anything or any one interfere with your basketball practice. I do want you to play in one game and get your 'W' this year. Then I can," she hesitated a minute for the proper words, and finished triumphantly, "I can graduate happy."

During the next two weeks, however, it began to look as if Betty would not get to graduate happy. First, Ted failed in his Latin examination, and then he refused to try to make it up, so that he would be eligible to play in any of the school games, should the team need him. "No use to work like a dog for something I haven't a chance at getting," he sullenly replied to all her coaxing. "Horton has all the games cinched for the rest of the season. Coach Weston said so."

"But think, Teddy," she pleaded. "What if he should be hurt?"

"He won't," Ted growled back. "Haven't I been ready for an accident this long, and has one happened? No, sir, sis; there's nothing for me this season. I'll work harder next year, when I have a chance."

Then he calmly threw his skates over his shoulder and whistled his way out to a crowd of boys who were going to the old gravel pit. That night she made another attempt to coax him to make up his Latin grade, but instead of studying with her, he climbed the spite-board fence and disappeared into the next-door lame boy's den.

When she saw that, Betty was torn between two desires, both of which her square boyish code told her were despicably unfair.

One minute she vowed she would tell her father, and not give Ted a later chance to bring up his grade before the report cards were sent out. Then, next, she wanted to walk over to the great house next door and tell the whole family how they had brought only humiliation and trouble to the parsonage family ever since they had bought that house.

But she really did neither. She simply ignored the boy next door, refusing even to speak to him. The first day she passed him with averted head, his face went red as fire and he limped at a faster gait down the street toward the shelter of his own yard. Because he, too, had a code of squareness, he did not even mention the affair to Ted.

Gradually there seemed to be a wall between Betty and Ted. Heroically she tried to tear it down, but her hurt pride made it impossible. At first Ted was really glad it was there, because it kept her from reproaching him; but as he missed their chummy walks and talks, he himself, near the end of the second week, began to try to do away with it.

With a jar like that of an earthquake came to Ward High School that never-to-be-forgotten Friday, the thirteenth of March.

On that night, irrespective of its unlucky reputation, Ward's team was to play its biggest game of the season—the game with Norton High School, its worst rival. On Thursday morning the juniors decorated the gymnasium; on Thursday afternoon the senior boys tried to fasten a victory pennant to the top of the tall flag pole. Of course it was agile Tim Horton who scaled the ice-covered pole with the pennant under his arm. No one even so much as dreamed that there was any danger of his falling. He never had fallen; but this time he did, and when they carried him into the school building they found the fractured place in his leg.

Gloom immediately descended upon every heart at Ward High School. The next night was to be their big night, and here, with a broken leg, was a player upon whom they were depending most to win the game. Betty Rowe recovered from her first wailing before any of the others did, and then it was to begin worrying for another reason.

"If Ted had only made up that Latin examination," she wept, "he would have taken Tom's place. He can play almost as well, and with the rest of the team as strong as they are, I'm sure we could have won anyway. But now—"

She gave a gesture of despair, and walked out of the building before any of the other students should begin their condemnation of Ted. Their criticising would soon come. In her heart Betty knew it was deserved, but still she could not bear to hear it. Never before had Rowe failed his school when it needed him as Ward needed Tom.

Half way home, she met Ted and Leon coming out of a drug store. The older boy was clutching at his crutch with one hand and at Ted's shoulder with the other, in order to keep from slipping on the ice-covered pavement. When he saw Betty, his face went as red as a beet.

But Ted radiated joy. "Betts," he began excitedly, pulling a paper out of his pocket, "would you like to take a look at my new Latin paper? Miss Wiles gave me the examination yesterday afternoon."

The next minute Betty had him by both shoulders and was shaking him frantically. "Oh, Ted," she implored, "please tell me right this minute. Did you make it all up? Oh, did you? Please hurry, and talk fast. Did you?"

He pursed his lips in a grimace over her shaking. "Up!" he chuckled, seizing her hands. "You bet I did, and then some. Dad won't see any poor grades on my card this time."

But Betty ignored his last sentence. "Oh, hurry!" she gasped. "Hurry right back to the gym and get ready for practice. Tom Horton broke his leg, and you'll have to play in to-morrow's game. Scoot, I tell you!"

Then Ted scooted. Betty got one glimpse of his face before he ran, but that glance sufficed to tell her that he was quite as glad as she that he had made good with his Latin and could play with his team when it needed him. She watched him all the way down the street.

When she turned to go home, Leon was several feet ahead of her, traveling slowly and painfully with the one crutch and no support. A feeling of pity for him suddenly clutched at her throat. She half ran, intending to catch up with him and help him the rest of the way to his den. But the Jap servant had already seen his lame master and was coming to meet him. He smiled at Leon when he reached them. "Did Theodore pass the zamination?" he asked. "Or do you do all dat study for nodings?"

Betty stopped and stood dead still. "Or do you do all dat study for nodings?" struck in her mind. She clutched Leon's arm with a burst of understanding. "You helped Ted get ready for that examination! You were doing that evenings in your den!" she said.

Slowly came Leon's answering nod. When he started to move on down the walk, she tightene her hold on his arm. "You—you—why, I was angry at you, and wouldn't speak, because I thought you kept him from his work in order to entertain you," she admitted, "and all the time you were boosting him and helping him. Why," her eyes shone earnestly, "I think you're wonderful, and you'll just have to sit with the Ward rooters to-morrow night; for if Ted should help win the game, all the glory would be yours."

A flush of pleasure spread over Leon's face, but he said simply: "Thank you; I would like to sit with the rooters, for never before in my life did I root at a basketball game. I always had to be taken in a chair, you know. Why, it will be wonderful! to really belong to a school, you know."

And the next night he did wonderfully well at rooting, even though he had no experience. Sometimes his voice quite drowned Betty's. Lustily he joined in on school yells, frantically he urged Ted on to harder play. Then, when in the last half Ted outjoined the rival forward and secured the ball and threw a field goal, bringing Ward's total up to Norton's, Leon, along with Betty, fairly went mad.

Betty heard the man behind her say, "That fellow will make a player when he gets a little more body. He's just a youngster now," and smiled more radiantly than ever.

And that was the last bit of coherent speech she heard for nearly an hour. The umpire's revolver cracked ten minutes later, when the score stood 15 to 14 in Ward's favor, and the rooters began to scream the score. While they were singing the school song, they formed a line and began a serpentine march through the main streets of the town. Ted and the other players, wrapped in heavy coats, were with them.

Involuntarily they moved toward the empty lot across from the parsonage. Some one in front started the cry for a bonfire. It passed along the line till it reached Leon. Betty, close behind him, heard him say, "You bet; let's burn our old fence. It would make good kindling, I'm sure."

Across the street he ran limping, and with his own slender hands tore the first plank from the parsonage spite fence. Others followed him, and together they all came back, most of the fence with them. The fire was kindled, and began to blaze merrily.

Then Betty did a queer thing for Betty Rowe. She reached out her hand for one of the smaller boards. "I want to keep it," she said soberly. "If it hadn't been for that fence, Ted would never have learned to jump like he does."

The flames mounted and mounted, and the serpentine march wound slowly around the bonfire, chanting impressively a funeral chant for both the fence and the losing team. It reached the parsonage, and brought a shout of joy from the minister there. His wife smiled indulgently, and the twins capered into the room, one of them carrying a load of bundles. "We're going to throw this rice on Ted when he comes home," they announced. "He's a hero; isn't he, mother?"

Mrs. Rowe took the bags, and burst into laughter. "It's Betty's morning-glory seed, but I gress it will do," she agreed. "I don't believe she'll ever need it again, for the lame boy next door will never stand for another barrier being built between that mansion and our shabby little parsonage."

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Siler City.—Wednesday evening, December 23, was a joyous occasion for us at Siler City. It was the time for our Christmas service which was very good. The small children did nicely with their speeches and songs. Good music was enjoyed. Miss Lucy Boon rendered piano and vocal solos which added to the other music.

The fish pond was especially enjoyed. There were many fish-presents and treats caught by those present. The pastor had extra good luck at this kind of fishing. On the line I thought I had a whale when I pulled out the huge box given by the Christian Endeavor Society. I hardly know how to express my appreciation for the many nice things the box contained.

I wish for each and all a merry Christmas.
F. L. Gibbs.

Liberty Church.—Christmas Eve was the time for our Christmas exercise at the Liberty Church, Liberty, N. C. The entertainment consisted of good Christmas music, pantomime, and a three act drama which portrayed in a clear way the birth of Jesus. Master Shepherd Harding and little Mary Shepherd each gave a very interesting number.

Santa Claus was present and gave all the young people a lovely treat and many received presents. I wish to thank those who have remembered me during the Christmas season, and my sincere wishes go out to all for a merry Christmas and Happy new year.
F. L. Gibbs.

Asheville.—A beautiful Christmas program was rendered at the Methodist Protestant Church, Sunday night. A pageant called "The Christmas Story" was given. Those representing a chorus of angels were: Elmer and Margaret Fawcett, Clarice, Eudora and Mildred Younginer, Patricia Pattison, Vonnice Roberts, Oleta Miller and Bertha Hyatt. Gladys Boling took the part of Mary at the manger. Barbara Younginer took the part of Joseph. Heralds were: Louise Haney, Margaret Tabor, Louise Allison, Evelyn Haney. The carols both by groups and individuals were well sung.

Earnest Ward, Gragg Clouse, Albert McLean represented the Shepherds in costume. Rev. C. W. Bates, I. W. Cashatt, E. H. Pratt sang "The Three Kings of the Orient" very effectively. The lighting effect with the star and candles, etc. was beautiful. Miss Virgie McIntyre was the accompanist.

The New Testament stories of the birth and childhood of Jesus were read by pastor Bates. The program was gotten up by Mrs. Bates.

From Pageland To South Davidson.—This is the first report from the pastor since coming to this work, but no evidence that he has been sleeping on the job. I have visited all the churches twice and two I have visited four or more times. Five churches keep the pastor busy and I have not had much time to report; however, the work is moving on very well. I have been cordially received and the people show a great interest in the work of the kingdom. Our congregations are small at the country churches but the pastor has been greeted with appreciative audiences each service. Our congregation at the West Lexington Church is the largest and is growing rapidly. We hope to make some improvements on our church in West Lexington early in the New Year. Watch our Sunday school grow. We have at present four schools running and doing good work. We hope to organize a Christian Endeavor Society there soon and also Missionary Societies. All our Sunday schools are going to run during the winter months.

Three of the churches rendered Christmas programs. A very good program was rendered at Yadkin College Wednesday night. Unfortunately the pastor had to be absent which I regret very much, but report came today that a good program was enjoyed by a good number of people. The pastor finds a group of very kind people, having had the privilege of being with them in two services. A good program was enjoyed by a number of the good people of Mt. Carmel on Thursday afternoon. After an interesting program by the children the school was given a treat consisting of candy and fruit which was enjoyed very much. A nicely decorated holly tree served as a Christmas tree and was loaded with presents for the school. The pastor received a nice knitted scarf as a gift from the school for which he is very grateful, besides fruit and candy. All enjoyed the afternoon and returned home happy because of the privilege they had enjoyed.

Thursday night our Christmas program was rendered at West Lexington to an appreciative audience which more than filled the house. Every available seat was taken and a number of people stood up in the rear of the church during the program. The children rendered their parts well and everyone enjoyed the evening. After the program the school was given a treat consisting of apples and oranges after which a beautiful Christmas tree was unloaded. It is impossible to mention all the gifts for the pastor; will say that he appreciates very much a nice white shirt as a gift from the school besides a nice lot of fruit. A number of presents were given as tokens of appreciation for interest in the Sunday school. Brother H. C. Koonts, our faithful superintendent, was presented a nice gift by the school for his untiring efforts during the past year. Brother C. L. Hedrick was presented a nice Bible as a token of appreciation for the work he is doing as teacher of the Men's Bible class. These presents were presented by the pastor. Brother Wade Kindley was presented, a Bible a gift from the Men's Bible class for his faithful service until his promotion recently to the office of assistant superintendent. These brethren are held in high esteem by their class. The following were presented gifts for perfect attendance during the past year: Brother Henry Yates, Herman Yates, Paul Umstead, Miss Lizzie Lanning, Louise Hardisty, and Hellen Hardesty. The following received gifts for faithful attendance, the only missed one Sunday each during the year: James Hunt, Vestel Yates, Archie Miller, Miss Myrtle Yates and Miss Francis Cross.

These people are to be commended for the faithful service and interest in their Sunday school work. We wish for them a better record during the coming year. We are proud to have Brother and Sister C. B. Way with us; they will be valuable members to our work here. Our membership is growing here and we are looking forward to report more new members soon. We have taken seven since coming to this work and all have joined our church here in West Lexington (See Bro. Way's report last week.) We are glad to welcome all these members into our fellowship.

Work at Jerusalem and Cid is moving very nicely. Our membership is small at both churches, but we are planning for great things on that part of the work any way. The faithful few are willing to work, so we are working and praying for a good year on this charge. I have received two subscriptions to the Herald since coming to the work and have in hand ten dollars which will be applied to our General Conference Budget and will be in the hands of the Treasurer by the time you read this report.

Bro. C. B. Way has been elected reporter for the West Lexington Church. We are very glad to have him serve as our reporter; he is a very efficient one and the pastor will put this part of the work in his hands feeling sure it will be well taken care of. Pray for us that we may have a good year together.
M. Ivey Crutehfield, Pastor.

Lincolnton.—We have now started in the new conference year, 1926, hoping to do more in the church work than we did last. We are indeed pleased with our new pastor, Rev. W. L. Carson; he delivered an able sermon Sunday morning, the 27th.

Our Sunday school is doing fine; the attendance was off some yesterday owing to the cold weather. The Christian Endeavor and Ladies' Aid are moving on; the interest isn't what it might be, but we are looking forward to them to come on better when the weather gets better.

Spencer Charge.—We held our first quarterly conference December 11th, 2 P. M. at the home of the pastor. Each church was well represented. There were five persons from Charlotte, two from Alison Grove. Counting the children, there were seven from Spencer. The usual business was transacted in a spirit of love. And every one present seemed to be very much interested in the work. I think the conference adopted a very good financial plan. The conference assessment was accepted and divided equally between the three churches. (December 19th the Charlotte church gave the pastor a nice pound of just such things as a pastor needs.

Our people at Charlotte have organized themselves into a paying band and are making weekly payments on a church lot; they are making some progress in these efforts.

The ladies are doing good work. Our people at Spencer are looking out for a lot. I hope we can soon secure a lot on which to build a church.

Our ladies at Spencer are also doing a good work. Spencer and Charlotte have both organized a Sunday school, I trust they may do well. Alison Grove Church had a Christmas tree on the 24th night of December. The children did their part well. The children got a treat. And they remembered the pas-

Brother W. P. Sherrill and his family deserve the praise for the success of this service. The work seems to be starting off very nicely. Brethren, we need your prayers and sympathy.

D. A. Braswell.

S. S. We thank all that sent us letters of sympathy and donations in these trying times. May our Father bless them all. And give us grace to bear it all patiently. D. A. B.

Halifax.—We held our first quarterly conference at Hollister Church on December the 1st. All of the churches were represented but one. The business was transacted in a spirit of love and harmony. A few resolutions were adopted, which if carried out will mean much for the work.

Christmas has come and gone and we are still living in spite of all the good things that have been given to us, and we are glad we are still living to enjoy them.

We have reported the Eden pounding, but we are sure that others have been remembering us in good things. Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Hammil, and Mrs. E. S. Hammil, and little Alta Hammil, Mrs. J. L. Bellamy, Mrs. D. D. Hammil, and Mrs. Henry Evert, sent us sugared goods, pickles, etc.

We also want to thank Mr. Edgar Whitcomb for our Thanksgiving, and Christmas on Wednesday night, December the 16th, when we were at prayer meeting at Hollister Church, some person or persons visited our car, not like I have heard of cars being visited, and tools and extra tires removed, these good people left something. When we opened our car to start home we could hardly get in for the sacks and bundles. But it was so near Christmas we knew what it meant. When we got home we found, flour, rice, coffee, cereals of all kind, pine apple preserves, dried fruit, canned fruit, etc. the things that a preacher and his family need. We want to thank the following people for this kindness, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Hards, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Ellington, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Ellington, Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Hight, Ivey Crawley, Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Hight, Mr. and Mrs. Willey Knight, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hardy, Mrs. T. C. Wilcox, Mrs. W. W. Morris, Mrs. F. N. Porter, Mrs. S. J. Herrin, and others who failed to put their names on the packages, but we know every one just the same.

On Tuesday night, December 22nd, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Lewis came from Union Church, with a real pounding from this Church. meat, potatoes, canned fruit, preserves, fruit, oranges, and four fine chickens, just the thing that a preacher likes. We want to thank W. W. Knight, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Smith, and Miss Westry Harris, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lewis, Mrs. Dora Lewis, and family, Mrs. W. T. Smith, Mr. Hery Lewis, and family, Mrs. Hull, Mrs. E. V. Neville, Mrs. N. W. Cousins.

On Christmas eve Mr. E. V. Neville came with his car loaded from Ringwood Church. We want to thank Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Neville for 10lbs sugar, a lot of canned fruit and preserves, and two chickens, Mr. and Mrs. N. W. Cousins for fresh meat and canned goods, Mr. and Mrs. Y. A. Spivy for a nice present which was highly appreciated, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Barns, flour, and rice, J. A. Harris, sugar, James Laughter, dried fruit, W. N. Aycock a double aluminum boiler, and E. H. Aycock a aluminum tea kettle, we want to thank every one that has so kindly remembered us. We also want to thank Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Neville for a nice present that was put on the Christmas tree for us.

On Sunday, December 20th, the members of Bethesda Church begun to pound us when Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Neville and Mrs. Tom Taylor came and brought us flour, sugar, beef, coffee, coconut, and raisins, and the members are still pounding us. Mrs. H. W. Wilcox came Christmas eve with a nice set of water glasses, and later Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Taylor and family, and Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Taylor and family sent us a nice ham, a fruit cake, oranges, apples, raisins, and canned goods. On Christmas morning Mr. J. H. Vinson, Mrs. Glenn, and Mrs. Emma L. Perry, remembered each one of the family with nice presents, and a nice check as a token of their friendship. We may have left out some names that should appear in this report as some of the packages had no name on them, but we thank you just the same and would be glad to mention your name in the paper.

We have fully decided that the little rumor about Halifax malaria is all a joke any way. If it is not it is just the kind that agrees with us all as we are getting fatter every day.

I will agree with the pastor who stated in the Herald of Dec. 17, that he wouldn't swap churches with any other pastor, has a fine people to serve, for we know some of them, but there isn't any better people any where than is found here on Halifax circuit. They pound their pastor here all the year, and are always ready to stand by their pastor, and cooperate with him.

C. L. Spencer, Pastor.

Orange Charge.—Notwithstanding the rough weather, bad roads, we are still trying to hold our own.

The services have all been kept going since conference.

Christmas exercises were held at Hebron Thursday night (24th). These services consisted of songs and recitations by the children and a Christmas tree for the entire Sunday school and visitors. These exercises were pleasing to the large crowd present. The children were trained by Brother Geo. Crutchfield and Miss Mildred Sykes, (Teachers in the Public School).

At Effland, Friday night (25th) the Pageant by the Budget Council was rendered. This was greatly enjoyed by the congregation present.

The following ladies took the leading part in training for this: Mrs. Grover Bivins, Mrs. O. E. Bivins and Mrs. M. P. Effland. The following ladies led in preparing costumes for the play. Mrs. I. M. Crutchfield, Mrs. J. J. Brown and Mrs. B. M. Williams.

We sincerely thank these leaders and all others who contributed anything towards the success of this Pageant.

We have been remembered with lots of good things to eat since conference, especially fresh meat. We bought very little meats since conference. Our friends have remembered us so regularly. Also during the Christmas season we have been presented with numerous gifts and last, but not least, by Christmas cards in abundance. For all these expressions of kindness we are sincerely thankful and pray that God may use us, and make us a blessing.

Sincerely, B. M. Williams and family.

Bethany, Randolph.—We have been silent for a long time, but are not dead neither asleep. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely under the management of Mr. Gaster. It is wonderful we can have such a faithful leader. We all appreciate the work he is doing.

We are glad to have Brother Lindley with us for another year. We like him better every time he preaches for us.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society held their regular monthly meeting with Mrs. J. M. Aldridge second Saturday afternoon.

Plans were made for raising money to repair and paint our church. Our membership is small but all willing workers. We hope every member of the church will cooperate with us; if they will, we can easily raise the needed amount.

Brother W. T. Ward, aged 76, died at his home near Bethany Saturday.

Funeral services were conducted Sunday by pastor. Interment was made in Gray's Chapel cemetery.

Almost all our real old people are gone. We younger ones should think more about how short our stay is here.

Just think! Friends, we haven't one minute to waste saying harmful things about our neighbors, or even time for one thought of malice toward any one. We have just finished studying the life of Paul: let's all try to profit by it, and live more like him. To live more like Paul is to live more like Christ.

Pleasant Grove.—On Thursday afternoon, December 24, Mr. Clyde Payne and Miss Pauline Newby were united in marriage at the home of our pastor. They are both members of the Pleasant Grove Methodist Protestant Church and two of our best Sunday and C. E. workers. Mrs. Payne has been the church organist for several years. Mr. Payne is church usher. We wish them much happiness as they journey through life together.

The Christmas exercise was splendid considering the sickness of the community. The superintendent, Mr. I. A. Teague's three month old baby is very sick with pneumonia. We hope he will soon be better.

Mrs. Pearl Honeycut and the young people of the C. E. Societies supplied a needy family in High Point with a dressed chicken, two cakes, apples, oranges, candy, toys, and other needs of the family on Thursday afternoon, December 24.

Our church and Sunday school attendance has been very good; let us start the New Year with stronger determinations to do greater things in His service than in the past.

Mrs. Ralph Kennedy, Reporter.

Cedar Falls.—Christmas has come and gone and has brought joy and gladness to many and sadness and sorrow to others. On the night of the 23rd the writer united in marriage at my house Colen Allred and Rosa Cox and on the night of the 24th at Cedar Falls Thomas Wren and Dortha Calicut.

All the churches joined and had a nice Christmas tree and entertainment and a very enjoyable time to all present at the Baptist Church.

Now the sad part with many of us and especially with Mr. and Mrs. Garland Free. Fred Julian Free the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Garland Free, was born March the 8, 1924, died December 25, 1925. Fred was such a sweet little boy, all that knew him loved him, and of course he was the sweetest child on earth to his father and mother. They had got his Christmas toys and like others expecting a happy Christmas, but on Christmas eve pneumonia developed and in spite of all that loving hands and Dr. Redding could do who is the best Dr. I have ever known, just before day death entered the home and took the spirit of dear little Fred back to the God who gave it. When I went into the home Christmas morning the dear young mother laid her head on my shoulder in such agony I felt like crying out, O that my head were waters and mine eyes were a fountain of tears that I might weep day and night for the dear mother. On Saturday eve the little child was laid in the grave in Cedar Falls M. P. cemetery; the service was conducted by the pastor of the church, Rev. C. H. Hill and Rev. G. A. Laughlin. The parents of the deceased child are members of our church. May God help them to live so they will some day meet dear little Fred.

G. A. Laughlin.

West Lexington, South Davidson Charge.—Last Sunday was described by many here as being the coldest day during this winter. Because of the extreme cold weather the attendance in our Sunday school was considerably reduced, there being 78 persons present. The previous Sunday was not a cold day and the attendance was 128. The offering last Sunday was $3.49, which was a very liberal one for the attendance of 78. The Superintendent, Brother H. C. Koonts, expressed his gratitude to the school for the gift which was presented to him on the night of the Christmas entertainment. He has served as superintendent of the Sunday school here for three years and the school has presented him with a gift each year during that time.

The writer was not privileged to be present at the Christmas entertainment and tree on the night of December 24. The superintendent reports a good service and large attendance. The children performed their parts in a most excellent manner and the entire program was a very enjoyable one. The offering amounted to about $7.00, which was for the General Conference Budget. Treats, consisting of apples and oranges, were given to the members of the Sunday school.

The weather continued very cold for the Sunday night service and there was a smaller congregation than usual for this service. Our pastor brought us a very helpful sermon on the subject: "No room for Christ in the Inn." He applied it to present day conditions, and discussed some of the causes of shutting out Christ from the lives of the people.

A sign of progress for the West Lexington Church is the project under consideration by leading members of the church to build Sunday school rooms to the present church building. The Sunday school is greatly in need of more room for the classes and for the increased attendance. If the movement which has been started for the construction of a Sunday school annex is carried forward, we soon may have a new addition to our church. One of our leading laymen has offered a thousand feet of building material for the proposed new annex, and we believe that many others will contribute liberally to the fund for the erection of the new addition. We hope to soon be able to report something definite concerning the improvement which is now being considered.

The mid-week prayer services are held on Thursday night of each week and are conducted by different laymen and laywomen of the church, a plan which was followed during the pastorate of this writer.

Our next preaching service will be held next Sunday night at 7 o'clock at which time our pastor, Rev. M. I. Crutchfield, will preach.

This "scribe" wishes all of the readers of the Herald a very prosperous and happy New Year.

C. B. Way, Reporter.

HawRiver Ct.—We are agreeably surprised to find so many at church at Midway and Fair Grove yesterday. It takes grit and grace to go to church when the cars freeze and your teeth chatter, but they were there though it seemed almost, that "many were cold and few were frozen."

Another Pounding.

About the time we felt that we were recovered from the effect of the blow that Midway had given us, Mizpah people, who won't be excelled in anything, came and hit us worse'n ever. It has been a long time since we've had such a severe pounding.

Splendid Christmas services have been held at Friendship and Brown Summit Churches. Friendship Sunday school presented us with a valuable gift. This, indeed, has been a joyous Christmas to us. The gifts of gold and greenbacks and various other things have been so numerous that our hearts have been made glad and we feel that we owe them a debt of gratitude that pen cannot express.

Quarterly Conference.

Our first quarterly conference will be held at Fair Grove Church on Saturday before the second Sunday in January, at one o'clock.

W. D. Reed.

We have said that our people didn't love each other since but few were being married, but they do now.

On Saturday morning, at Friendship Church, Miss Fannie Gordon and Mr. Fred Rudd were united in marriage.

On the same day P. M. at Reidsville, Mr. Bobb Stanly and Miss Edna Diamond were united in marriage, the writer officiating. All these are splendid young people and many fond wishes follow them as they start on life's voyage.

W. D. Reed.

Mount Pleasant News.—Miss Ruth Payne spent the week with her cousin, Miss Mildred Stone.

Misses Josephine Murphy and Mildred Shoaf spent Saturday and Sunday with Misses Erma and Lema Shoaf. Mr. Fred Green, who was carried to the hospital is getting along nicely.

Sunday school officers were elected last Sunday as follows:

Mr. W. D. Payne, Supt., Mr. Ray Hilton, Secy., Mrs. W. T. Murphy, organist; Miss Josephine Murphy, assistant organist. Teachers.—Mr. Fred Green, Mr. E. S. Welborn, Mr. W. T. Murphy, Mrs. W. T. Murphy, Mrs. E. S. Welborn, Mrs. P. C. Reid.

Preaching ever fourth Sunday at eleven o'clock.

The work on the new church is progressing nicely.

Friday night, December 25, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Murphy an apron evening was given classes no. three and four. Mr. Roy Hilton winning first prize, Mr. Neris Shoaf second prize. Refreshments were served by Mrs. Murphy assisted by little Miss Dorothy Murphy and Miss Ella Murphy. Miss Allen Hilton spent Saturday and Sunday with her grand-parents.

Miss Margret Walker spent Friday night with Miss Josephine Murphy.

Mrs. W. D. Payne spent the week end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Stone.

Bessemer City, Lincolnton.—Christmas eve was a great time for us at Bessemer City.

An excellent program was rendered by the children, giving evidence that they had been carefully instructed by Mrs. Sadie Fostenburg who is very active and loyal to the M. P. Church at Bessemer City. I believe that we will be able to put over the top the entire schedule of program this year.

After the children's exercise a few remarks were made by the pastor, then Santa Claus and his wife came in as the little fellows were making merry the occasion, then the presents were taken from the Christmas tree and the occasion moved off nicely.

Christmas morning at the Lincolnton

Church we had a sunrise service, then the members of the Sunday school were treated.

At seven in the evening a Christmas program was given with so much accuracy and precision that everybody went home saying: "That was indeed a fine program." Many thanks to Brother G. R. Wood and Brother E. E. Eury and wife for the excellent work done in instructing the children, and all others who gave a helping hand.

Wait! there is Mr. Leonard and Mrs. Maggie Hope, who helped make the program a success and all things done in the beauty of holiness.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JAN. 3.

The Son Of God Becomes Man.

Lesson Text: John 1:1-13.

Golden Text: John 1:14.

The Central Truth: The Creator of all the worlds was made flesh, born of a woman, in order to save fallen mankind.

Scriptural Points.

1. "In the beginning was the Word." This term defines the function of the second Person of the triune God. Jesus Christ's preexistence dates back into fathomless eternity. He was the external Agent of the Godhead. As the Word He has given a complete revelation of God, man, redemption, duty and destiny. As the Word He spoke all things into existence. As the Word He speaks life into the dead souls of men.

2. "The Word was with God," a distinct and separate Person from God the Father.

3. "And the Word was God." Jesus Christ possessed all the attributes of the Godhead. He was equal with the God the Father and God the Holy Ghost.

4. "All things were made by him." Therefore He lived before anything was created, that is from eternity.

5. "In him was life." It was he that breathed physical, intellectual, and spiritual life. And it is He that gives life to those dead in trespasses and sins.

6. As the life of the world He became also the light of the world. The dark and dead souls cannot understand the life and light of the eternal Word.

7. He is the "true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." The human conscience is embodied light that has come from Jesus Christ.

8. "The Word knew him not." It was the blindness of unbelief that prevented mankind from recognizing their own Creator, Redeemer, and King.

9. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." As some one has translated this verse: "He came to his own home, and his own family did not welcome him."

10. Those who did receive Him by faith were born into the new family of kings and priests unto God. It is a birth "not of blood,"—natural generation, "nor the will of the flesh"—resolution or reformation, "nor of the will of man"—baptismal regeneration or priestly absolution, "but of God"—by the power of the Holy Spirit.

11. This same eternal Word, Creator, Light of the world, Giver of life, "was made flesh and dwelt among us" for thirty three years. They were years of holy living and inspiring and uplifting service.

12. "Full of grace and truth." Truth for enlightenment and grace for salvation are unlimited in extent, "enough for each, enough for all, and enough for evermore."

13. "Grace for grace," or "grace upon grace." There is a continuous flow of grace into the believer's soul.

14. The law that was given through Moses cannot save. Jesus Christ holds the monopoly of saving, uplifting, and glorifying grace.

15. Jesus Christ in His divine-human personality, ministry, and sacrifice has revealed the Father and all the attributes and glories of the Godhead.

Practical Points.

1. Jesus is the speaking Person of the Godhead. Said the Father, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him."

2. As the Light of the world He floods the souls of all believers and makes them the transmitters and reflectors of His light. Of such He says, "Ye are the Light of the world."

3. He is also the resurrection and the life. He said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have more abundantly."

4. To receive Jesus into your heart is to enthrone Him the hope of glory. It is a great and glorious condescension that the Son of God would consent to dwell in polluted tabernacles of clay. "For thus saith the high and lofty One, that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones." Isa. 57:15.

5. It is in the incarnation where God impresses the race most tenderly and hopefully. "For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."

6. Every son and daughter of Adam is Christ's own by the right of creation, by the right of providence, and by the right of redemption. "Yield yourselves to God." Rom. 6:13.

7. The new birth is indispensable to eternal life. There is no hope of heaven without it. "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." 1 Pet. 1:23.

8. "He giveth more grace." It is the continuous partaking of grace that promotes growth in grace. We must feed in order to grow. "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2. Pet. 3:18.

—From the Word of Life.

We wish to take this method of extending our heartfelt thanks to the many friends for their kindness and sympathy shown us during the illness and death of our dear husband and brother, J. S. Pender.

Mrs. J. S. Pender, Brothers and Sister.

CHRISTMAS FOR THE BIRDS.

Among other delightful traits of the Scandinavian people is their custom in the Yule festivities of thinking not only of the happiness of their little ones, but of teaching these children to bear in mind the happiness of others and in particular of the animals about them. We have seen that they never omit to provide the trusty household nisse with his Yule dinner of porridge. But they also remember the birds. At the Yule-tide season the market-place of Christiania (now Oslo) presents a very gay aspect, filled as it is with spruce trees of all sizes for the children's festival. But there is a feature in the Norse Christmas that I have not heard of in any other country, in that in this market-place there is for each Christmas tree a Julenag, or little sheaf of barley, each person who buys a tree buying also a sheaf. Then, when the tree is set up in the main room of the house at Yule-tide for the bairns (born, as they are called in Norway), the sheaf of grain is fastened on the end of a pole and put out in the yard for a Christmas feast for the birds. If the degree of civilization of a people can be measured by its behavior to the animals about it, then this custom denotes in the Norsemen a very high plane indeed.—Our Dumb Animals.

—"For thirty-eight years," notes Christian Work, "Dr. Francis E. Clark served the Christian Endeavor cause without receiving one penny of salary as president of the United Society." Now Endeavorers are planning to give tangible expression to their appreciation of this service by raising a fund of $100,000, to be known as the Francis E. Clark Recognition Fund, the income from which will go to Dr. and Mrs. Clark as long as they live, and after their death will be a memorial to them, to aid the foreign and home missionary program of Christian Endeavor. The period Jan. 31 to Feb. 6, next, has been set aside for the special effort to secure gifts to establish the fund. That week marks the forty-fifth birthday of the first Christian Endeavor Society and falls in the year of the golden wedding anniversary of Dr. and Mrs. Clark.

—Sudden death last Monday morning took away one of Greensboro's merchants—Mr. William E. Phipps. He died of apoplexy soon after rising from bed seemingly in good health. One of his associates in business is Brother Norman W. Kirkman, for a long time with the Odell Hardware Company. Mr. Phipps had just begun business or his new company about a year ago.

—Last Sunday will be remembered as a very cold day. Attendance at Sunday school and church was greatly reduced. Those that succeeded in being present had special reason for being glad they were alive.

—A man from Connecticut, now employed in Greensboro, was at Calvary church last Sunday, morning and night. He did not seem to mind the cold weather.

—It is an error to say that Franklin's kite experiment led to the construction of lightning rods. We have Franklin's own words that the kite experiment followed the rods.

—With his head pillowed against a corner of the cement box, an Atlanta, Georgia, man went to sleep in a mortar of fresh concrete. He awoke encased in stone and it was necessary for him to visit a hospital to have the covering removed under the directions of surgeons.

A study of Washington's transportation shows that it costs the average car driver there 11.49 cents a mile to run his automobile.

—Victor Henri Berenger, reputed the foremost authority on finance in the French Senate for years, has been named ambassador to the United States, succeeding Emile Daeschner. M. Berenger has been appointed to this post especially for the purpose of effecting a settlement of the French debt question.

—Publicity was given last week to a gift of $1,000,000 by Cyrus H. McCormick and his sons, Cyrus, Jr., and Gordon, to the Young Women's Christian Association, in memory of Mr. McCormick's wife. The money is to be used to build in Chicago a residence hall for women and girls.

—The representative of Turkey in the League of Nations council has declared that Turkey will not accept any decision that gives to Great Britain the mandate for Mosul. The report of the commission that investigated the situation was against Turkey. The council is now trying to mediate between the parties.

—Virginia has its first Negro woman lawyer, L. Marian Poe of Washington, D. C., who recently passed the tests required by the State Board of Law Examiners.

—The death-rate from Bright's disease has fallen from 106.9 per 100,000 of the population in 1917 to 80.6 in 1924, largely as a result of prohibition, according to Dr. F. L. Hoffman, consulting statistician of the Prudential Insurance Company.

—The automobile used by the late President Woodrow Wilson while in the White House is to be preserved at Staunton, Va., in connection with a replacement memorial to the war President. The automobile was presented to the Memorial Association by Mrs. Wilson.

—Despite economics, increased postal rates, and increased business, the Postal Department shows a deficit of $49,453,000 in the past fiscal year, according to Postmaster-General New's annual report. Most of this deficit is caused by recent salary increases.

—The Treasury has made new regulations to prevent sacramental wines, sold to Jews, from reaching illegal channels. Rabbis may now sell only one gallon a year to each person in a family, with five gallons as the limit for a family, and on the rabbis rests responsibility for knowing that the wine will be delivered to persons entitled to receive it.

A GRANDMOTHER'S RULES.

Somebody's grandmother has given to her descendants these admirable rules of conduct:

"Always look at the person to whom you speak. When you are addressed, look straight at the person who speaks to you. Do not forget this.

"Speak your words plainly; do not mutter

HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

College of the Methodist Protestant Church. Co-educational. Fitting for life and for university courses. Just closed a successful year in which one hundred and thirty-four students were enrolled in the freshman and sophomore classes.

Students are being registered for the fall semester, which begins September 15th. For years we have been looking forward to the time when we would have a college in North Carolina, and now that the dream has been realized we are appealing to all Methodist Protestants and friends of the church to stand by the institution in its first years of existence.

Catalogue and application blank will be forwarded upon application. Those desiring further information should address The President, High Point College, High Point, N. C. or mumble. If your words are worth saying, they are worth pronouncing distinctly and clearly.

"Do not say disagreeable things. If you have nothing pleasant to say, keep silent.

"Think three times before you speak once.

"Have you something to do that you find hard, and would prefer not to do? Do the hard thing first, and get over with it. If you have done wrong, go and confess it. If your lesson is hard, master it. If the garden is to be weeded, weed it first, and play afterwards. Do first the thing you don't like to do, and then, with a clear conscience, try the rest."

I AM CALLING YOU.

"I am the best friend of mankind.

To the man who prizes sanity, peacefulness, pure-mindedness, social standing and longevity, I am a necessity.

"I am hung about with sweet memories—memories of brides, memories of mothers, memories of boys and girls, memories of the aged as they grope their way down to the shadows.

"I am decked with loving tears, crowned by loving hands and hearts.

"In the minds of the greatest men on earth I find a constant dwelling-place.

"I live in the lives of the young and in the dreams of the old.

"I safeguard man, with a friendly-hand to the man in fine linen, and the man in homespun.

"I am the essence of good fellowship, friendliness and love.

"I give gifts that gold cannot buy nor Kings take away. They are freely given to all who ask.

"I bring back the freshness of life, the eagerness, the spirit of youth, which feels that it has something ahead for which to live.

"I met you with outstretched arms and with songs of gladness.

"Some time—some day—some hour—in the near or far future you will yearn for the touch of my friendly hand.

"I am your comforter and best friend.

"I am calling you.

"I AM THE CHURCH."

Siler City.—A Christmas program was given by the children Wednesday night.

We were glad to have with us at that time Miss Boone, of Burlington, who played and sang for us. Also our pastor, Mr. Gibbs, who made a good talk to the children.

A fish pond was prepared for the children to fish out their presents, which they enjoyed.

A good number was present at Sunday school Sunday considering the cold weather.

Wishing every one a happy and prosperous new year.

THE ONE WHO WENT.

Somebody went away last night, when all was dim and dark,

The hall clock slow, the lamplight low, the fire but a spark,

The chamber chill, the nursery still, a ghostly moon a gleam,

In every bed a sleepyhead, in every heart a dream.

Somebody tiptoed softly out, his bundle on his back,

And good and glad and queer and sad the contents of that pack.

The things you did, the things I did, the things we hoped and thought,

The things we oughtn't to have said, the other things we ought;

The smiles we smiled, the sighs we sighed, the little schemes we schemed,

The laughs we laughed, the tears we cried, the little dreams we dreamed,

And all the rest a gaunt, gray guest had gathered in his sack—

The Old Year, the bent year, and he never will come back!
